T. N. THE TRANSLATOR TO THE READER.

GOod Reader, here is now offred you the fourth time printed in Englishe, M. Caluines booke of the Institution of Christian Religion, a booke of great labour to the author, and of great profit to the Church of God. M. Caluine first wrote it whē he was a yong man, a booke of small volume, and sithe that season he hath as sundry times published it with new encreases, still protesting at euery edition himselfe to be one of those qui scribendo proficiunt, & proficiēdo scribunt, which with their writing do grow in profiting, and with their profiting do procede in writing. At length hauinge in many his other workes trauailed about exposition of sundry bookes of the Scriptures, & in the same finding occasion to discourse of sundry common places and matters of doctrine, which being handled according to the occasiōs of the texts that were offred him & not in any other methode, were not so ready for the readers vse, he therefore entred into this purpose, to enlarge this booke of Institutions & therein to treate of all those titles and common places largely, with this entent, that whensoeuer any occasiō fell in his other bookes to treate of any such cause, he would not newly amplifie his bookes of Commentaries and expositions therewith, but referre his reader wholly to this storehouse and treasure of that sort of diuine learning. As age and weakenesse grew vpon him, so he hastened his labour, and according to his petition to God, he in maner ended his life with his worke, for he liued not long after. So great a iewell was meete to be made most beneficiall, that is to say, applied to most common vse. Therefore in the very beginning of the Queenes Maiesties most blessed reigne, I translated it out of Latine into Englishe, for the commoditie of the church of Christ, at the speciall requeste of my dere frendes of worthy memory Reginald VVolfe & Edward VVhitchurch, the one her Maiesties Printer for the Hebrewe, Greke, & Latine tongs, the other her Highnes Printer of the bookes of cōmon Prayer. I performed my worke in the house of my sayd frende Edward VVhitchurch, a man well knowen of vpright hart and dealing, an auncient zelous Gospeller, as plaine and true a frend as euer I knew liuing, and as desirous to do any thinge to common good, specially by the aduauncement of true religion. At my ſaid firſt editiõ of this booke, I cõſidered how the author thereof had of long time purpoſely labored to write the ſame moſt exactly, and to packe great plenty of matter in ſmall roome of wordes, yea and thoſe ſo circumſpectly and preciſely ordered, to auoide the cauillations of ſuch, as for enmity to the trueth therein contained, woulde gladly ſeeke and abuſe all aduantages which might be found by any ouerſight in penning of it, that the ſentences were thereby become ſo full as nothinge might well be added without idle ſuperfluity, & againe ſo nicely pared that nothing could be miniſhed without taking away ſome neceſſary ſubſtance of matter therein expreſſed. This maner of writinge, beſide the peculiar tearmes of artes and figures, and the difficulty of the matters themſelues, being throughout enterlaced with the ſchoolemens controuerſies, made a great hardnes in the authors own booke, in that tong wherin otherwiſe he is both plentiful & eaſie, inſomuch that it ſuffiſeth not to read him once, vnleſſe you can be content to read in vaine. This conſideration encombred me with great doutfulneſſe for the whole order & frame of my tranſlation. If I ſhould follow the words, I ſaw that of neceſſity the hardneſſe in the tranſlation muſt nedes be greater than was in the tonge wherin it was originally wrytten. If I ſhould leaue the courſe of wordes, and graunt my ſelfe liberty after the naturall maner of my owne tonge, to ſay that in Engliſh which I conceaued to be his meaning in Latine, I plainely perceiued how hardly I might eſcape errour, & on the other ſide in this matter of faith and religion, howe perillous it was to erre. For I durſt not preſume to warrant my ſelfe to haue his meaninge without his wordes. And they that wote what it is to tranſlate well and faithfully, ſpecially in matters of religion, do know that not the only grammaticall conſtruction of words ſuffiſeth, but the very buildinge and order to obſerue all aduantages of vehemence or grace, by placing or accent of wordes, maketh much to the true ſetting foorth of a wryters minde. In the ende, I reſted vpon this determination, to followe the wordes ſo neere as the phraſe of the Engliſhe tonge would ſuffer me. VVhich purpoſe I ſo performed, that if the Engliſhe booke were printed in ſuch paper and letter as the Latine is, it ſhould not exceede the Latine in quantity. VVhereby, beſide all other commodities that a faithfull tranſlation of ſo good a worke may bring, this one benefit is moreouer prouided for ſuch as are deſirous to attaine ſome knowledge of the Latine tongue (which is at this time to be wiſhed in many of thoſe men for whoſe profeſſion this booke moſt fitly ſerueth) that they ſhall not finde any more Engliſh than ſhall ſuffice to conſtrue the Latine withal, except in ſuch fewe places, where the great difference of the phraſes of the languages enforced me: ſo that comparing the one with the other, they ſhall both profit in good matter, and furniſhe themſelues with vnderſtanding of that ſpeach, wherin the greateſt treaſures of knowledge are diſcloſed. In the

doing hereof, I did not only truſt mine owne wit or ability, but examined my whole doinge from ſentence to ſentence throughout the whole booke with conference & ouerlooking of ſuch learned men, as my tranſlation being allowed by their iudgement, I did both ſatisfie mine owne conſcience that I had done truly, & their approuing of it might be a good warrant to the reader, that nothing ſhould herein be deliuered him but ſound vnmingled and vncorrupted doctrin, euē in ſuch ſort as the author himſelf had firſt framed it. All that I wrote, the graue, learned & vertuous mā M. Dauid VVhitehed (whom I name with honorable remembrāce) did among other, compare with the Latine, examining euery ſentence throughout the whole booke. Beſide all this, I priuately required many, & generally all men with whom I euer had any talke of this matter, that if they found any thing either not truly tranſlated, or not plainly Engliſhed, they would enforme me thereof, promiſinge either to ſatisfie them or to amende it. Since which time I haue not bin aduertiſed by any man of any thing which they would require to be altered. Neither had I my ſelfe, by reaſon of my profeſſion beinge otherwiſe occupied, any leaſure to peruſe it. And that is the cauſe, why not only at the ſecond & third time but alſo at this impreſſion, you haue no change at all in the worke, but altogether as it was before. In dede I perceiued many mē wel minded & ſtudious of this booke, to require a table for their eaſe and furtherance. Their honeſt deſire I haue fulfilled in the ſecond edition, & haue added thereto a plentifull table, which is alſo here inſerted which I haue tranſlated out of the Latine, wherin the principall matters diſcourſed in this booke are named by their due titles in order of Alphabet, and vnder euery title is ſet forth a briefe ſumme of the whole doctrine taught in this booke, concerning the matter belonging to that title or cōmon place: and therwith is added the Booke, Chapter, and Section or diuiſion of the Chapter, where the ſame doctrine is more largely expreſſed and proued. And for the redier finding thereof, I haue cauſed the number of Chapters to be ſet vpon euery leafe in the booke, and quoted the Sections alſo by their due numbers with the vſuall figures of Algoriſme. And nowe at this laſt publiſhinge, my friendes by whoſe charge it is nowe newely imprinted in a Romaine letter and ſmaller volume, with diuerſe other Tables, which ſince my ſecond edition were gathered by M. Marlorate, to be tranſlated and here added for your benefite. Moreouer, whereas in the firſt edition the euill maner of my ſcriblinge hande, the enterlininge of my Copy, and ſome other cauſes well knowen amonge workemen of that faculty, made very many faultes to paſſe the Printer, I haue in the ſecond impreſſion cauſed the booke to be compoſed by the printed copy, and corrected by the written: whereby it muſt needes be that it was much more truely done than the other was, as I my ſelfe do knowe aboue three hundred faultes amended. And now at this laſt Printinge, the composinge after a printed copy bringeth some ease, and the diligence vsed about the correction, hauing bin right faithfully looked vnto, it can not be but much more truely set forth. This also is performed, that the volume being smaller, with a letter fayre and legible, it is of more easie price, that it may be of more common vse, and so to more large communicatinge of so great a treasure to those that desire Christian knowledge for instructiō of their faith, & guiding of their dueties. Thus on the printers behalfe and mine, your ease and commodity (good readers) is prouided for. Now reſteth your owne diligence for your own profit in studying it. To spend many words in cōmending the worke it selfe, were nedelesse: yet thus much I thinke I may both not vntruely and not vainely say, that though many great learned men haue written bookes of common places of our religion, as Melanchton, Sarcerius, and other, whose workes are very good and profitable to the Church of God: yet by the consensing iudgemēt of those that vnderstande the same, there is none to be compared to this worke of Caluine, both for his substantiall sufficience of doctrine, the sounde declaration of trueth in articles of our religion, the large and learned confirmation of the same, and the most deepe and stronge confutation of all olde and new heresies: so that (the holy Scriptures excepted) this is one of the most profitable bookes for all students of Christian diuinity. VVherein (good readers) as I am glad for the glory of God, and for your benefit, that you may haue this profit of my trauell, so I beseech you let me haue this vse of your gentlenesse, that my doings may be construed to such good end as I haue meant them: & that if any thinge mislike you by reason of hardnes, or any other cause that may seeme to be my default, you will not forthwith condemne the worke, but read it after: in which doing you shall finde (as many haue confessed to me that they haue found by experience) that those thinges which at the first readinge shall displease you for hardnes, shall be founde so easie as so hard matter would suffer, & for the most part more easie than some other phrase which should with greater loosenes & smoother sliding away deceiue your vnderstandinge. I confesse in dede it is not finely & pleasantly written, nor carieth with it such delitefull grace of speech as some great wise men haue bestowed vpon some foolisher things, yet it containeth sound truth set forth with faithfull plainnes without wrong done to the authors meaninge: and so if you accept & vse it, you shall not faile to haue great profit thereby, and I shall thinke my labour very well employed.

Thomas Norton.

TO

TO THE MOST MIGHTY AND NOBLE PRINCE, FRANCISCE THE MOST CHRISTIAN KING THE FRENCH KING his ſoueraigne Lorde, Iohn Caluine wiſheth peace and ſaluation in Chriſt.

WHEN I did firſt ſet my hand to this worke, I thought nothing leſſe (moſt noble King) than to write any thing that afterwarde ſhould be preſented to your maieſtie. Onely my minde was to teache certaine introductions whereby they that are touched with ſome zeale of religion might be inſtructed to true godlineſſe. And this trauaile I tooke principally for my contremen the Frenchemen, of whom I vnderſtode very many to hunger and thirſt for Chriſt, but I ſawe very few that had rightly receiued ſo much as any litle knowledge of him. And that this was my meaning, the boke it ſelfe declareth, being framed after a ſimple and plaine maner of teaching. But when I perceiued, that the furious rage of ſome wicked men hath ſo farre preuailed in your realme, that in it there is no roome for ſounde doctrine: I thought I ſhould do a thing worth my trauaile, all in one worke both to geue an inſtruction for them, and to declare a confeſſion to you: whereby ye may learne what maner of doctrine ỳ is, againſt which thoſe furious men burne in ſo great rage, who at this day trouble your realme with ſweard and fier. For I will not feare to cõfeſſe, that I haue in this worke comprehended in maner the ſumme of that ſelfe ſame doctrine, againſt which they crie out, that it ought to be puniſhed with priſonment, baniſhement, condemnation without iudgement, and with fier, that it ought to be chaced away by lande and ſea. I knowe in deede with howe hainous informations they haue filled your minde and eares, to make our cauſe moſt hatefull vnto you: but this of your clemencie ought you to wey, that there ſhalbe no innocence, neither in wordes nor deedes, if it may be enough to accuse. Truely if any, to bring the same in hatred, shall allege that this Doctrine whereof I nowe go about to yelde accompt vnto you, hath bene long ago condemned by consente of all degrees, and atteinted by many iudgements already geuen in iudiciall courtes: all that he saith shall amount to no more but that it hath partly bin violently throwen downe by the bandinge and power of the aduersaries thereof, and partly bene traitorously and fraudulently oppressed with their lies and suttle practises and sclaunders. Herein is violence shewed, that without hearing the cause bloody sentences are pronounced against it: here in is fraude, that it is without deseruing accused of sedition and euell doing. And that none may thinke that we wrongfully complaine of these things, you your selfe can beare vs witnesse, most noble king, with howe lieng sclaunders it is dayely accused vnto you: as, that it tēdeth to no other ende but to writh from kings their scepters out of their handes, to throwe, downe all iudges seates and iudgements, to subuerte all orders and ciuile gouernements, to trouble the peace and quiete of the people, to abolish all lawes, to vndo all proprieties and possessions, finally to turne all things vpside downe. And yet you heare ỹ smallest portion. For horrible things they spreade abroade among the people: which if they were true, the whole world might worthily iudge it with the mainteiners thereof, worthy of a thousande fiers and gallowes. Who can nowe maruell that a common hatred is kindled against it, where such most wrongfull accusations are beleued. Lo, this is the cause that all degrees agree and conspire to the condemning of vs & our doctrine. They that sit to iudge, being rauished with this affectiō pronounce for sentences their foreconceiued determinatiōs which they brought from home with them: and thinke that they haue well enough discharged their duties if they commaunde no man to be drawen to execution, but such as are founde gilty either by their owne confession or by sufficient witnesse. But of what fault? of that condemned doctrine, say they. But by what lawe condemned? Herein should haue stande the succor of defense for them, not to denie the doctrine it selfe, but to mainteine it for true. But here is all libertie ones to mutter vtterly cut of from vs.

Wherefore I do not vniustly require, most victorious King, that it may please you to take into your owne hande the whole hearing of the cause which hetherto hath bene troublesomly handled or rather carelesly tossed without all order of lawe, more by outragious heate than iudiciall grauitie. Neither yet thinke, that I here go about to make mine owne priuate defense, whereby I may procure to my selfe

a ſafe returne into my natiue cõtree, to which although I beare ſuch affection of naturall loue as becometh me: yet as the caſe nowe is, I not miſcõtentedly want it. But I take vppon me the common cauſe of all the godly, yea and the cauſe of Chriſt himſelf, which at this day hauing bene by all meanes torne & troden downe in your kingdome, lieth as it were in deſpeired caſe, and that in deede rather by the tyranny of certaine Phariſees, than by your owne knowledge. But howe that cometh to paſſe, it is not here needefull to tell: truely it lieth in great diſtreſſe. For thus farre haue the vngodly preuailed, that the trueth of Chriſt, if it be not deſtroyed being chaced away and ſcattered abrode, yet it lieth hidden as buried and vnregarded: as for the ſilly poore Church, it is either waſted with cruell ſlaughters, and ſo driuen away with baniſhments or diſmayed with threatens and terrors that it dare not ones open her mouth. And yet ſtill they cõtinue with ſuch rage and fercneſſe as they are wont, thruſting ſtrongly againſt the wall already bending & the ruine which themſelues haue made. In the meane time no man ſtepperh fourth, to ſet himſelfe in defenſe againſt ſuch furies. And they, if there be any ſuch, that will moſt of all ſeeme to fauor the truth, ſay no more but that it were good to pardon the error and vnſkilfulneſſe of ignorante men. For thus the good natured men forſooth do ſpeake, calling that error and vnſkilfulneſſe which they knowe to be the moſt certaine trueth of God: calling them ignorante men, whoes wit they ſee that Chriſt hath not ſo deſpiſed but that he hath vouchesaued to communicate to them the miſteries of his heauenly wiſedome. So much are all aſhamed of the Goſpell. It ſhalbe your office (moſt noble King) not to turne away your eares nor your minde from ſo iuſt a defenſe: ſpecially when ſo great a matter is in queſtion: namely howe the glorie of God may be mainteined ſafe in earth, howe the trueth of God may kepe her honor, howe Chriſt may haue his kingdome preſerued whole among vs. This is a matter worthy for your eares, worthy for your iudgemẽt, worthy for your royall throne. For, euen this thought maketh a true king: to acknowledge himſelf in the gouernance of his kingdome to be the miniſter of God, Neither doth he nowe vſe a kingdome but a robberie, which reigneth not to this ende that he may ſerue the glorie of God. And he is deceiued that loketh for a lõg proſperitie of that kingdome, which is not ruled by the ſcepter of God, that is, by his holy word: foraſmuch as the heauenly Oracle can not proue vaine, whereby it is proclaimed, that the people ſhalbe ſcattered abrode where prophecie faileth. Neither ought the contempt of our baſeneſſe to withdrawe you frõ this purpoſe. We verily knowe Prouer. 29. 18.

right well, howe poore and abiect silly men we be, namely in the sight of God miserable sinners, in the sight of men most despised persones, yea and (if you will) certaine excrements and outcastes of the world, or whatsoeuer viler thing may be named: so that there remaineth nothing for vs to glorie vpon before God, but his onely mercie whereby we are without any our deseruing receiued into the hope of eternall saluation: and before men, nothing but our weakenesse, which amõg them it is taken for a most great shame to cõfesse so much as in countenãce. But our doctrine must be auãced hy aboue all glorie of the world, must stande vnuanquishable aboue all power; becausse it is not oures, but the doctrine of the liuing God and of his Dan. 2. 33. Christ, whom the Father hath appointed king to beare rule euen Esa. 11. 4. from sea to sea, and from the riuers euen to the endes of the earth: and so to beare rule, that striking the whole earth with the only rod Psa. 2. 9 of his mouth, he may breake it with all the iron and brasen strength, with all the golden and siluer glistering thereof, as it were potters vessells: as the Prophets prophecie of the royaltie of his kingdome. Our aduersaries in deede do crie out to the contrary, and say that we falsly pretende the word of God, whereof we be most wicked corrupters. But how this is not onely a malicious sclaunder, but also a notable shameleſſneſſe, you your selfe by reading our confession, may according to your wisedome iudge. Yet here it is also good to say somwhat, either to moue you to willingneſſe and heedefulneſſe, Rom. 12 6. or at the least to prepare you a way to the reading of it. Paule, when he willed all prophecie to be framed to the agreableneſſe of faith, hath set a most sure rule whereby the expoũding of Scripture ought to be tried. Nowe if our doctrine be examined by this rule of faith, the victorie is already in our handes. For, what doth better or more fitly agree with faith, than to acknowledge our selues naked of all vertue, that of God we may be clothed? empty of all good, that of him we may be filled? the bonde seruantes of sinne, that of him we may be made fre? blinde, that of him we may be enlightened? lame, that of him we may be made streight? feble, that of him we may be vpholdẽ? to take from our selues all matter of glorieng, that he alone may be glorious on hy, and in him we may glorie? When we say these and such like things, they interrupt vs & cry out, that by this meane is ouerthrowen I wote not what blind light of nature, fained preparations, freewill, workes meritorious of eternall saluation, together with their supererogatiõs: becausse they can not abide that the whole praise & glorie of all goodneſſe, vertue, righteousneſſe, and wisdome Iere. 2. 13. should remaine in God. But we reade not that they were blamed that

haue drawen to much out of the fountaine of liuing water: on the contrary side they are sharply rebuked which haue digged to themselues pittes, broken pittes, which are not able to holde water. Againe what is more agreable with faith, than to promise to themselues that God will be to them a fauorable Father, where Christ is acknowledged to be a brother and procurer of fauor? than assuredly to loke for al things ioiful & prosperous at his hād, whose vnspekable loue toward vs hath proceded so farre, that he hath not spared his onely begotten sonne, but that he gaue him for vs? than to rest in sure loking for saluation & eternall life, where we thinke vpon Christ geuen of the Father, in whom such treasures are hidden? Here they steppe in against vs, and crie out that this certainty of affiance is not without arrogance and presumption. But as nothing of our selues, so all things ought we to presume of God: and we are for none other reason spoiled of vaine glory, but that we should learne to glorie in the Lorde. What is there more? Consider (most mighty Prince) all the partes of our cause, and thinke that we are worse than any kinde of wicked men, vnlesse you plainly finde that we are in trouble and railed at, bycause we put our trust in the liuing God: becaus we beleue that this is the eternall life, to knowe one trewe God, and him whom he hath sent Iesus Christ. For this hope, some of vs are bounde in irons, some are whipped, some are caried about in mockage, some are condemned without iudgement, some are most cruelly tormented, some escape away by flight: but all are distressed with trouble, all are most terribly accursed, torne with slaunders, and handledin most hainous wise. Nowe loke vpō our aduersaries (I speake of the degree of Priests, at whose becke and will the other exercise ennimities against vs) and consider with me a little while, with what zeale they be caried. As for the trewe religion, which is taught in the Scriptures, and which ought to be holden certaine among all men, they easily geue leaue both to themselues and other to be ignorant of it, to neglect and despise it: and they thinke that it maketh small matter what euery man beleue or not beleue concerning God and Christ, so that he do with an vnexpressed faith (as they call it) submit his minde to the iudgement of the Church: neither are they much moued, if it happen that the glorie of God be defiled with manifest blasphemies, so that no man lift vp his finger against the supremacie of the Apostolike sea, and authority of our holy mother the Church. Why therefore do they with so great crueltie & feirceneſſe fight for the Masse, Purgatorie, Pilgremages, and such trifles, so farre forth, that they say that without most expressed faith (as I may so call it) of theſe things, godlineſſe can not ſtande, whereas yet they proue not that any of theſe things come out of the word of God? Why ſo, but bycauſe their belly is their God, their kitchen is their religion: which being taken away, they thinke that they ſhall not onely be no Chriſtians, but alſo no men? For though ſome of them do plenteouſly glutt themſelues, & other ſome liue with gnawing of poore cruſtes: yet they liue all of one pot, which without theſe warming helpes ſhould not onely waxe colde, but alſo throughly freeſe. Therefore how much more euery of thē is carefull for his belly, ſo much more earneſt warrier he is for their faith. Finally they all endeuor themſelues to this, to kepe ſtill either both kingdome ſafe, and their belly full: but of pure zeale none of them ſheweth any token, be it neuer ſo little. Neither yet ſo do they ceaſe to ſlaunder our doctrine, and by al the colours that they can, to accuſe and defame it, whereby they may bring it into hatred or ſuſpicion. They call it newe, and lately forged: they cauill that it is doubtfull, & vncertaine: they demaunde by what miracles it is confirmed: they aſke whether it be meete that it ſhould preuaile againſt the conſente of ſo many holy Fathers, and the moſt auncient cuſtome: they preſſe vpon vs to confes it to be ſchiſmaticall, which moueth warre againſt the Church, or that the Church hath lien dead in many ages in which no ſuch thing hath bene hearde of. Laſt of all they ſay, that there neede no arguments, for (ſay they) it may by the frutes be iudged of what ſorte it is, namely which hath bredde ſo huge a heape of ſectes, ſo many turmoiles of ſeditions, ſo great licentiouſneſſe of vices. Trewly full eaſy it is, for them, to triumph vpō a forſaken cauſe before the light boleuing and ignorant multitude. But if we might alſo haue our turne likewiſe allowed vs to ſpeake, verily this ſharpe heate would ſone be cooled wherewith they do ſo with full mouth and as licentiouſly as vnpuniſhedly fome againſt vs.

Firſt, wheras they call it newe, they do great wrong to God, whoſe holy word deſerued not to be accuſed of newneſſe. To them in dede I nothing dout that it is new, to whom Chriſt is newe, & his Goſpel is newe. But they which knewe that preaching of Paule to be olde, that Ieſus Chriſt died for our ſinnes, and roſe againe for our iuſtification, ſhall finde nothing newe among vs. Wheras it hath long lien hidden vnknowen, and buried: that is the fault of the vngodlineſſe of men. Nowe ſith it is by the bountifulneſſe of God reſtored to vs, it ought at leaſt by right of full reſtitution to receiue againe the title of auncientie.

Rom. 4. 25.

Out of the ſame fountaine of ignorance ſpringeth this, that they take take it for doubtfull and vncertaine. This verely is it which the Lord by his Prophet complaineth, that the oxe knewe his owner, and the asse his maisters stall, but his people knewe not him. Esa.1.3.

But howesoeuer they mocke at the vncertainty of it: if they were driuen to seale their owne doctrine with their owne blood, and with losse of their life, men might see howe much thy set by it. But farre other is our affiance, which dreadeth neither the terrors of death, nor yet the very iudgement seate of God.

Wheras they require miracles of vs, they deale vnreasonably with vs. For we coyne no new Gospell, but hold fast the selfe same Gospel for confirming of the truth wherof al the miracles do serue that euer Christ & his Apostles haue done. But this thing they haue special aboue vs, that they can euen to this day cõfirme their faith with continuall miracles. Yea but rather they alleage miracles, which may weaken a minde otherwise well stablished: they are so either trifling & worthy to be laughed at, or vaine & lying. And yet, although they were neuer so mõstruous, they ought not to haue bin of any value against the word of God: forasmuch as the name of God ought both in euery place & at euery time to be hallowed, whether it be by miracles or by natural order of things. This false colour might paraduẽture haue made thebetter shew, if the Scripture did not informe vs of ẏ lawful end & vse of miracles. For, Marke teacheth that the signes which followed the preaching of the Apostles were set forth for the confirming of it: Likewise Luke also saith ẏ the Lord did beare witnes to the worde of his grace, when signes and wonders were shewed by the handes of the Apostles. Wherwith wholly agreeth that saying of the Apostle, that when the Gospell was preached, saluation was cõfirmed by this, that the Lord did beare witnesse to it with signes, and wõders, & diuerse powers. Mar.16.20. Act.14.3. Heb.2.4.

But those things which we heare to be the sealings of the Gospell, shall we turne to the destroyinge of the credit of the Gospell? those things which are appointed only to stablish the trueth, shall we apply to confirming of lyes? Therfore it is mete that the doctrine, which (as the Euangelist sayth) goeth before miracles, be first examined and tried. If that be allowed, then it may lawfully take confirmation of miracles. But of a true doctrine (as Christ teacheth) this is the marke, if it tende not to the seekinge of the glory of men, but of God. Sith Christ affirmeth this to be the proofe of doctrine, miracles are wrongefully esteemed which are drawen to any other end than to glorifie the name of God alone. And we ought to remẽber that Sathan hath his miracles which although they be iugglingdeceites rather thã true powers, yet are such as may deceiue the Iohn.7.18. and 8.50.

ignorant and vnskilfull. Magicians and enchaunters haue bin alway famous in miracles: wonderfull miracles haue nouriſhed idolatrie: which yet do not proue to vs, that the ſuperſtition of Magicians and idolaters is lawefull. And with this battringe ramme in olde time the Donatiſtes did ſhake the ſimplicity of the common people, for that they excelled in miracles. Therefore we do now make the ſame anſwere to our aduerſaries, which Auguſtine then made to the Donatiſtes: that the Lord hath made vs ware againſt ſuch miracle workers, when he foretolde that there ſhould come falſe prophets, which with lying ſignes and diuerſe wonders, ſhould, if it were poſſible, bring the elect into errour. And Paule hath giuen warning that the kingdome of Antichriſt ſhould be with all power, and ſignes, and lying wonders. But theſe miracles (ſay they) are done not of idols, not of ſorſerers, not of falſe prophets, but of the Saintes. As though we knew not that this is the craft of Satan, to transfigure himſelfe into an Angel of light

In Ioh. tract. 13. Mat. 24. 24. 1. Theſ. 2. 9. 2. Cor. 11. 14.

In olde time the Ægyptians worſhipped Ieremy which was buried among them, with ſacrifices and other diuine honors. Did not they abuſe the holy Prophet of God to idolatry? And yet by ſuch worſhipping of his tombe they obtained that they thought the healing of the ſtinging of ſerpentes to be the iuſt reward thereof. What ſhall we ſay: but that this hath bin and euer ſhall be the moſt iuſt vengeaunce of God, to ſend ſtrength of illuſion to them that haue not receaued the loue of trueth, that they may beleue lyinge? Therefore we want not miracles, and thoſe certaine, & not ſubiect to cauillations. As for miracles which they bring forth for themſelues, they are meere illuſions of Satan, foraſmuch as they lead away the people from the true worſhipping of their God to vanity.

Hieron. in præfa. Ierem. 2. Theſ. 2. 11.

Moreouer, they do ſlaũderouſly ſet the Fathers againſt vs (I meane the auncient Fathers and the writers of the age as yet more vncorrupted) as though they had thẽ for maintainers of their vngodlineſſe: by whoſe authority if the debate were to be ended, the better parte of the victory (to ſpeake euen moſt modeſtly) would bend to our ſide. But whereas many thinges haue bin excellently well and wiſely written of thoſe Fathers, and in ſome thinges, that hath happened to them which is wont to happen to men: theſe good naturall children forſooth, according to the rightnes that they haue, both of wit, iudgement, and minde, do worſhip only their faultes and errours: and thoſe things which are wel ſpoken, they either marke not, or faine as if they knew them not, or do corrupt them: ſo as a man may ſay that their care was altogether to gather dunge in of the golde of the Fathers. Then they oppreſſe vs with importunate cryinge out againſt vs, as

despisers & enemies of the Fathers. But we do so not despise them, that if it were the matter of my present purpose, I could very easily proue by their consenting voices, the greater part of these things that we say at this day. But we so reade their writings, that we alway remember, that all things are ours, to serue vs, not to haue dominion ouer vs: and that we are Christes alone, whom we must obey in all things without exception. Who so keepeth not this choise, shall haue nothing certaine in religion: forasmuch as those holy men were ignorant of many things, do oftentimes striue one with an other, yea and sometimes fight with themselues. Not without cause (say they) we are warned of Salomon, that we passe not the olde boundes which our Fathers haue set. But there is not all one rule in the boundinge of fieldes, and the obedience of faith, which ought to be so framed that it forget her people and the house of her Father. If they haue so great delite to vse allegories, why do they not rather expounde the Apostles, than any other, to be their Fathers, whose appointed bouds it is not lawfull to plucke vp? for so did Hierome expounde it, whose wordes they haue registred among their Canōs. But if they will haue the boundes of the same Fathers, whom they meane, to be steedfastly kept: why do they, so oft as they list, so licentiously passe them? Of the number of the Fathers were they, of whom the one said, that our God eateth not, nor drinketh, and that therfore he needeth neither cuppes nor dishes: the other said, that the holy things require not golde, and that those things please not with golde which are not bought with golde. Therefore they passe the bounde, which are in the holy things so much delited with golde, siluer, iuorie, marble, precious stones & silkes, and thinke that God is not rightly worshipped, vnlesse altogether they be dissolutely set out with exquisite gorgeousnes, or rather with outragious excesse. A Father was he, which said, that he therefore did freely eate flesh on the day in which other abstained, because he was a Christian. Therefore they passe the boundes, when they accurse the soule that tasteth flesh in Lent. Fathers were they, of whom the one said that a Monke which laboureth not with his handes, is iudged as euill as a violent taker, or (if you wil) a robber: The other said, that it is not lawful for Monkes to liue of other mens goods, although they be continually busied in contemplations, in prayers, in studie. This bounde also they haue passed, when they placed the idle and barrell-bellies of Monkes in stewes and brothelhouses to be fatted with other mens substaunce. A Father was he, which said, that it is a horrible abhomination to se any image painted, either of Christ or of any Sainte in the temples of Christians. Neither was this pronounced by the mouth of one man alone, but also decreed by an Ecclesiasticall Councell, that that which is worshipped should not be painted on walles. They are farre from holdinge themselues within these boundes, when they leaue not one corner without images. An other Father counselled, that hauinge done the dutie of naturall kindenesse toward the deade in burying them, we should let them rest. These boundes they breake, when they cast into men a continuall carefulnesse of the deade. One of the Fathers was he, which testifieth that the substance of breade and wine in the sacrament of the Supper so remaineth and ceaseth not, as in the Lorde Christ remaineth the substance and nature of man ioined with the substance of God. Therefore they passe measure, which faine that after the wordes of the Lorde rehearsed, the substance of bread and wine ceaseth, that it may be transubstantiate into his body and blood. Fathers were they which as they deliuered to the whole Church but one Sacrament of Thankesgeuing, and as they debarred from it wicked & hainous euill doers: so did greuously condemne all those which being present, did not communicate of it. How farre haue they remoued those boundes, whē they fill not onely Churches, but also priuate houses with their masses, and admitte all men to loke vpon them, and euery man so much more gladly as he more largely payeth, howe vncleane and wicked soeuer they be: but allure no man to faith in Christ and faithfull communicating of the Sacramēts: yea rather do boastingly set out to sale their owne worke for the grace and merite of Christ? Fathers were they, of whom the one decreed, that they should be altogether debarred from the vse of the holy Supper of Christ, which holding themselues contented with partaking of ỹ one kinde, abstained frō the other: And the other Father stoutly maintaineth, that to the christian people the blood of the Lord ought not to be denied, for the confession wherof they are commaunded to shedde their owne blood. These boundes also they haue taken away. when they haue by an inuiolable lawe cōmaunded the selfe same thing which the one of these Fathers punished with excommunication, and the other reproued with a strong reason. A Father was he, which affirmed it to be rashenes to determine any thing of a doubtfull matter on the one side or the other, without cleare & euident witnessings of the Scripture. This bonde they forgot, when they stablished so many constitutions, so many canons, so many maisterly determinations, without any word of God. A Father was he, which among other heresies reproched Montanus with this, that he was the first that had charged men with lawes of Fastinges.

This

This bounde alſo they haue farre paſſed, when they commaunded faſting with moſt ſtrait lawes. A Father was hee, which denied that mariage ought to be forbidden to miniſters of the Church, and pronounced a mans lieng with his owne wife to be chaſtitie: & Fathers were they, which agreed to his authoritie. Beyonde theſe bounds haue they gone, when they ſeuerely enioined vnmaried life to their ſacrificers. A Father was he which iudged, that onely Chriſt ought to be heard, of whom it is ſaid, Heare him: and that wee ought not to haue regarde, what other men which were before vs, haue ſaid or done, but what Chriſt (which is the firſt of all) hath commaunded. This bounde neither do they appointe to themſelues, nor do ſuffer other to haue it appointed them, when they ſet both ouer themſelues and other any maiſters whatſoeuer they be rather than Chriſt. A Father was he, which affirmed that the Church ought not to ſet it ſelfe before Chriſt, bycauſe he alway iudgeth trewly: but the iudges of the Church, as men, are commonly deceaued. They breaking through this bound alſo, ſticke not to affirme that the whole authoritie of the Scripture, hangeth vppon the awardement of the Church. All the Fathers haue with one heart accurſed, & with one mouth pronounced it abhominable, that the holy word of God ſhould be entangled with the ſubtilties of Sophiſters, and brawlings of Logitiãs. Do they holde themſelues within theſe boundes, when they go about nothing elſe in their whole life, but with endles ſtriues, and more then Sophiſticall brablinges to wrappe and encombre the ſimplicitie of the Scripture? ſo that if the Fathers were nowe raiſed to life againe, and ſhould heare ſuch an arte of brawling, which theſe men call Speculatiue Diuinitie, they would beleue that nothing leſſe is done than any diſputation had of God. But my talke ſhould ſpred it ſelfe beyond due boundes, if I woulde recken vp howe boldly theſe men ſhake of the yoke of the Fathers, whoſe obedient children they would ſeeme to be. Trewly both monethes and yeares would be to little for me. And yet they are of ſo extreme and deſperate ſhameleſneſſe, that they dare blame vs for that we ſticke not to paſſe the ancient boundes.

But now whereas they cal vs to Cuſtome, they nothing preuaile. For we ſhould be moſt vniuſtly dealt with, if we ſhould be driuen to yelde to cuſtome. Truely if the iudgementes of men were right, Cuſtome ſhould be taken of the good. But it oftẽtimes happeneth that men do otherwiſe. For, that which is ſeene to be done of many, by and by obtaineth the right of a Cuſtome. But the ſtate of men hath ſcarcely at any time bin in ſo good caſe, that the better things pleaſed the greater number. Therfore for the moſt part of the priuate vices of many hath bin made a publike errour, or rather a cõmon conſent of vices, which now theſe good men would haue to ſtand for a lawe. Who ſo haue eyes do ſee that not only one ſea of euils hath ouerflowed, many poyſonous peſtilences haue inuaded the world, that all thinges runne headlong to ruine: ſo that either the matters of men muſt be vtterly deſpeired, or we muſt lay hand vnto, or rather vſe violence vppon ſo great euils. And remedy is by no other reaſon driuen away, but becauſe we haue now longe time accuſtomed vs to euils. But be it that publike errour haue place in matters of cõmon weale: yet in the kingdom of God his only trueth is to be heard and regarded, to which by no ſucceeding courſe of yeares, by no cuſtome, by no conſpired agreement, may any preſcription be limited. So in olde time Eſay taught the elect of God, that they ſhould not ſay Conſpiringe, to all thinges in which the people ſaid Cõſpiring: that is to ſay, that they ſhould not conſpire together to the wicked agreemẽt of the people, nor ſhould feare and dread the peoples feare: but rather that they ſhould ſanctifie the Lord of hoſtes, & he ſhould be their feare & dread. Now therefore let them as much as they liſt obiect againſt vs both paſſed and preſent ages, if we ſanctifie the Lord of hoſtes, we wil not be much afraid. For whether it be that many ages haue conſented to like vngodlines, he is ſtrong to take vengeance to the third & fourth generation: or if the whole world together conſpire into one ſelfe ſame wickedneſſe, he hath by experience taught what is the end of them that offende with the multitude, when he did with a generall ouerflowing deſtroy the whole kinde of mẽ, preſeruing Noe with a ſmal houſehold, which ſhould by his faith being but one man condemne the whole world. Finally an euill cuſtome, is none other than a common peſtilence, in which they do neuertheleſſe dye that dye with company of a multitude. Moreouer they ought to haue conſidered that which Cyprian ſayth in certaine places, that they which ſinne by ignorance, although they can not cleare themſelues from al fault, yet may ſeeme after ſome maner excuſable: but who ſo obſtinatly refuſe the trueth offred by the grace of God, they haue nothing to pretend for their excuſe.

As for their double horned argument, they do not driue vs to ſo hard a ſtreight with it, to cõpell vs to confeſſe, that either the Church hath lyen dead a certaine time, or that we haue controuerſie againſt the Church. Truely the Church of Chriſt hath liued and ſhall liue, ſo long as Chriſt ſhall reigne at the right hande of the Father: by whoſe hande ſhe is vpholden, by whoſe ſuccour ſhe is defended, by whoſe power ſhe keepeth her ſafetie. For he will vndoutedly performe that which

which he hath once promiſed, that he will be preſent with his euen vntill the endinge of the worlde. Againſt it nowe we haue no warre at all. For we do with one conſent together with all the people of the faithfull honor and worſhip the one God and Chriſt the Lorde, in like ſorte as he hath alway been worſhipped of all the godly. But they themſelues not a litle way erre from the trueth, when they acknowledge no Church, but which they ſee with preſent eie, and go about to compaſſe it about with thoſe boundes in which it is not encloſed. Vpon theſe pointes hangeth our controuerſie: Firſt that they affirme that the forme of the Church is alway appearinge and to be ſeene: then, that they ſet the ſame forme in the ſee of the Church of Rome, & in the order of their prelates. We on the contrary ſide affirme, both that the Church may conſiſt of no appearinge forme, and that the forme it ſelfe is not contained in that outward ſhining ſhewe, which they fooliſhly haue in admiration, but hath a farre other marke, namely the pure preachinge of the worde of God, and the right miniſtration of Sacramentes. They are in a rage, vnleſſe the Church may be alwayes pointed out with a finger. But how oft happened it in the people of the Iewes to be ſo deformed, that there appeared no forme at all? What forme thinke we to haue ſhined, when Helias bewailed that he alone was left? How long ſince the comming of Chriſt hath it lyen hidden without forme? Howe ſince that time hath it bin ſo oppreſſed with warres, ſeditions, and hereſies, that it ſhined out on no ſide? If they had liued at ỹ time, would they haue beleued that there was any Church? But it was ſayd to Helias, that there were preſerued ſeuen thouſand mẽ, which had not bowed their knee before Baal. Neither ought it to be doutful to vs but that Chriſt hath alway reigned in earth ſince he aſcended into heauen. But if the godly had then ſought any diſcernable forme with their eies, ſhould they not byandby haue bin diſcouraged? And verily Hylarie accompted it euen alreàdy in his time for a moſt great fault, that beinge occupied with the fooliſh admiration of the dignity of Biſhops, they marked not a deadly peſtilence lurking vnder that viſor. For thus he ſayth: One thinge I warne you, beware of Antichriſt: for you are ill taken with the loue of wals: ye do ill worſhip the Church of God in houſes and buildinges: vnder them ye do ill thruſt in the name of Peace. It is doutfull that in thoſe Antichriſt ſhall ſitte? Mountaines and woods, and lakes, and priſons, and caues are ſafer for me. For in theſe the Prophetes when they were either abiding or throwen into them, did prophecy. But what doth the worlde at this day honor in his horned Biſhoppes, but that it thinketh them to be holy prelates of religion, whom it seeth to be heades ouer great cities? Away therefore with

2. Tim. 2 19. such fooliſh eſteming. But rather let vs leaue this to the Lord, forasmuch as he alone knoweth who be his, & ſomtime alſo taketh away from the ſight of men the outward knowledge of his Church. That is (I graunt) a horrible vengeance of God vpon the earth. But if the wickednes of men ſo deſerue, why do we ſeeke to withſtand the iuſt vengeance of God? In ſuch wiſe the Lord hath in times paſt taken vengeance of the vnthankefulneſſe of men. For becauſe they would not receiue his trueth, and had quenched his light, he ſuffred them being blinded in ſenſe, both to be mocked with lyes full of abſurdity, & to be drowned in deepe darkenes, ſo that there was no face of the true Church to be ſene. Yet in the meane time he ſaued his both, being ſcattered abroade & lying hidden in the middeſt of errours & darkeneſſe, from deſtruction. And no maruel. For he can skill to ſaue both in the very confuſion of Babylon, & in the flame of the burning ouen. But whereas they would haue the forme of the Church to be iudged by I wote not what vaine pompous ſhew: how perillous that is, I will rather point vnto than declare, leaſt I ſhoulde drawe out my tale into infinite length. The Pope (ſay they) which holdeth the Apoſtolike ſee, and the Biſhoppes that are annointed and conſecrate by him, ſo that they be trimmed with fillets and miters, do repreſent the Church, and ought to be taken for the Church: & therefore they can not erre. How ſo? becauſe they are paſtors of the church, & cõſecrate to the Lord. And were not Aaron and the other rulers of Iſraell alſo Exo. 32 4. Paſtors? But Aaron & his ſonnes after that they were made prieſtes, did yet erre when they made the calfe. After this reaſon, why ſhould
1. Kin. 22 11. not the foure hundred Prophets which lyed to Achab, haue repreſented the Church. But the Church was on Micheas ſide, beinge in Ier. 18 16. deede but one man alone, and vnregarded, but out of whoſe mouth came trueth. Did not the falſe prophetes in reſemblance beare both the name and face of the Church, when they did with one violent aſſault riſe vp againſt Ieremy, & with threatning boaſted that it was not poſſible that the law ſhould periſh from the prieſt, counſell from the wiſeman, the word from the Prophet? Ieremy alone was ſent againſt the whole company of the Prophetes, to declare from the Lorde, that it ſhould come to paſſe, that the law ſhould periſhe from the prieſt, counſell from the wiſeman, and the worde from the Prophet. Did not ſuch a gliſteringe ſhewe ſhine in that Councell which the biſhops, Scribes, and Phariſees aſſembled, to take aduiſes together for the killing of Chriſt. Now let them go and ſticke faſt in the outward viſour, that they may make Chriſt and all the Prophetes of God,

God, ſchiſmtikes: and on the other ſide make the miniſters of Sathan, the inſtrumẽts of the holy Ghoſt If they ſpeake as they thinke, let them faithfully anſwere me, in what nation and place they thinke that the Church remained ſince the time that by the decree of the Councel at Baſile, Eugenius was thruſt downe and depriued from the eſtate of Pope, and Aymee ſet in his place. They can not, though they woulde burſt for it, deny that the Councell, for ſo much as conceerneth outward ſolemnities, was lawfull, and ſummoned not onely of one Pope, but of two. Eugenius was there condemned of ſchiſme, rebellion, and obſtinacy, with the whole flocke of Cardinals and Biſhops, which had with him practiſed the diſſolution of the Councell. Yet afterward beinge borne vp by the fauour of Princes, he recouered his papacy ſafe againe. That election of Aymee, which had bin orderly made by the authority of a generall and holy Synode, vaniſhed away in a ſmoke: ſauinge that he himſelfe was appeaſed with a Cardinalls hat, as it were a barking dog with a pece of bread caſt vnto him. Out of the boſome of theſe heretikes, rebels, & obſtinates, are proceeded all the Popes, Cardinalls, Biſhops, Abbots, & Prieſtes that haue bin ſince. Here they are taken and can go no further. For, to whether ſide will they giue the name of the Church? Will they deny that the Councell was generall, which wanted nothinge to the outwarde maieſtie: namely, which beinge ſolemnely ſummoned by two bulles, and well framed in the order of all thinges, continued in the ſame dignitie to the laſt ende? Will they confeſſe Eugenius with all his company a ſchiſmatike, by whom they are all ſanctified? Therefore either lette them otherwiſe define the forme of the Church, or they all as many as are of thẽ ſhalbe of vs accompted ſchiſmatikes, which wittingly & willingly haue bin ordered of heretikes. If it had neuer before bin knowen, that the Church is not bounde to outward pompes, they themſelues may be to vs a large proofe, which vnder that glorious title of the Church haue ſo longe ſo proudly boaſted thẽſelues, whereas yet they were the deadly peſtilences of the church. I ſpeake not of their maners, and thoſe tragicall doinges wherewith their whole life ſwarmeth full: becauſe they ſay that they be the Phariſees which are to be heard, not to be followed. But if ye will ſpare ſome of your leaſure to read our writings, you ſhall plainly know that the very doctrine, ẏ dꝛctrine it ſelfe, for the which they ſay that they be the Church, is a deadly butchery of ſoules, the firebrand, ruine, & deſtruction of the Church.

Finally they do not vprightly enough, when they do ſpitefully rehearſe howe great troubles, vprores, and cõtentions the preaching of our doctrine hath drawē with it, and what fruites it nowe beareth in many. For the blame of theſe euels is vnworthily laide vpon it, which ought rather to haue bene imputed to ỹ malice of Satan. This is as it were a certaine naturall propretie of the word of God, that whenſoeuer it riſeth vp, Satan is neuer quiet or ſleeping. This is the moſt ſure and moſt truſty marke, whereby it is diſcerned from lieng doctrines, which do eaſily ſhewe forth themſelues when they are receiued with fauorable eares of all men, and are heard of the world reioiſing at them. So in certaine ages paſt, when all thinges were drowned in deepe darkeneſſe, the Lorde of this world made a ſport and a play in maner of all men, and lay idle and toke his pleaſure like a certaine Sardanapalus in ſounde peace. For, what ſhould he els do but laugh and play being in quiet and peaſible poſſeſſion of his kingdome? But when the light ſhining from aboue ſomwhat ſcattered abrode his darkneſſe, when that ſtrong man troubled and aſſailed his kingdom, then he began to ſhake of his wonted drowſines, & haſtily to arme himſelfe. And firſt he ſtirred vp the force of men, whereby he might violently oppreſſe the truth beginning to ſhine. By which whē he nothing preuailed, he turned to ſutle entrappings. He ſtirred vp diſſentions and diſagreements of doctrines by his Catabaptiſtes, and other monſtruous lewde men, whereby he might darken it and at length vtterly quenche it. And nowe he cōtinueth to aſſaile it with both engines. For he trauaileth both by the force and power of men to plucke vp that ſeede, & with his darnell (as much as in him lieth) to choke it, that it may not growe & beare frute. But all this he doth in vaine, if we heare the warning of God, which both hath long before opened his craftes vnto vs, that he ſhould not take vs vnware, & hath armed vs with ſufficient defences againſt all his engins. But how great maliciouſneſſe is it to lay vpon the word of God the hatred either of the ſeditions, which noughty and rebellious men do ſtirre vp, or of the ſectes which deceiuers do raiſe againſt it? Yet it is no new example. Elias was aſked whether it were not he that troubled Iſrael, Chriſt was eſteemed of the Iewes a ſeditious man. The Apoſtles were accuſed of making a cōmotion among the people. What other thing do they which at this day do father vpon vs all the troubles, vprores and cōtentions that boile vp againſt vs? But what is to be aunſwered to ſuch. Elias hath taught vs: namely that it is not we that ſcatter errors or ſtirre vp vprores: but it is they thēſelues that wraſtle againſt the power of God. But as that one thing alone is ſufficient to beate backe their raſheneſſe, ſo againe we ought to mete with the weakeneſſe of other, who oftētimes happen to be moued with ſuch offences,

and in their diſmayeng to wauer. But let them, to the ende that they may not faint with this diſmayeng and be diſcoraged, knowe that the Apoſtles in their time felte by experiẽce the ſame things that nowe happen vnto vs. There were vnlerned and vnſtedfaſt men, which wreſted to their owne deſtruction, thoſe things the Paul had written by the inſpiration of God, as Peter ſaith. There were deſpiſers of God, which when they heard that ſinne abounded to the end that grace might more abounde, by and by obiected, We will then abide in ſinne, that grace may abound. When they heard that the faithfull are not vnder the lawe, they by and by, anſwered, We will then ſinne, becauſe we are not vnder the lawe, but vnder grace. There were that accuſed him as an exhorter to euell. There entred priuily many falſe Apoſtles to deſtroy the Churches which he had builded. Some by enuie and contention, and not purely, yea and malicioufly preached the Goſpell, thinking to adde more affliction to his bandes. Somwhere the Goſpell not much profited. All ſought their owne, and not the thinges of Ieſus Chriſt. Some wente backwarde, dogges to their vomite, and ſwine to their wallowing in the mire. The moſt parte did drawe the liberty of the Spirit to the licentiouſneſſe of the fleſh. Many brethren crept in, by whom there came afterwarde great dangers to the godly. Amõg the brethren themſelues were many ſtriues raiſed vp. What ſhould the Apoſtles haue done in this caſe? Should they not either haue diſſembled for a time, or rather altogether haue geuen ouer and forſaken the Goſpell which they ſawe to be the ſedeplott of ſo many contentions, the matter of ſo many dangers, the occaſion of ſo many offences? No. But for helpe in ſuch diſtreſſes this came in their minde that Chriſt is the ſtone of ſtombling and rocke of offence, ſet vnto the ruine and riſing againe of many, and for a ſigne that ſhould be ſpoken againſt. With which affiance they being armed went forward boldly through all dangers of vprores and offences. With the ſame thought we alſo ought to be vpholden, forаſmuch as Paul teſtifieth that this is the perpetuall propretie of the Goſpell, to be the ſauor of death vnto death to thẽ y periſh, although it were ordeined to this vſe that it ſhould be the ſauor of life vnto life, and the power of God vnto the ſaluation of the faithfull: which verily we ſhould alſo feele, if we did not with our vnthãkfulnes corrupt this ſo ſingular a benefit of God, & turne y to our owne deſtruction which ought to haue bin to vs the only defence of our ſafetie.

2.Pet.3 16. Rom.6. 1.&.15. Philip. 1.15. Luk.2. 34. 2.Cor. 2.16.

But nowe I returne to you, my ſoueraigne Lorde. Let thoſe falſe reportes nothing moue you, by which our aduerſaries trauaill to caſt you in feare of vs, with ſaying that by this newe Goſpell (for ſo they call it) nothing is hunted for and ſought but fit occaſion of ſeditions, and vnpuniſhed libertie of vices. For our God is not the author of diuiſion, but of peace: and the ſonne of God is not the miniſter of ſinne, which came to deſtroy all the workes of the Deuill. And we are vnworthily accuſed of ſuch deſires, whereof we neuer gaue any ſuſpition were it neuer ſo ſmall. It is likely that we forſoth do practiſe the ouerthrowing of kingdomes, of whom there hath neuer bene heard any one ſedicious word, whoes life hath euer bene knowen quiet and ſimple, when we liued vnder you, and which nowe being chaced from home yet ceſſe not to pray for all things proſperous to you and your kingdome. It is likely forſoth that we hunt for licentiouſneſſe of vices, in whoes behauors although many thinges may be founde faulty, yet there is nothing worthy of ſo great reproching: neither haue we with ſo ill ſucceſſe (by the grace of God) profited in the Goſpell, but that our life may be to theſe backbyters an examplar of chaſtitie, liberalitie, mercy, temperance, patience, modeſtie, and whatſoeuer other vertue. Verily it is by the proofe it ſelfe euidēt that we do vnfainedly feare and worſhippe God, foraſmuch as we deſire that his name be halowed both by our life and our death, and enuy it ſelfe is compelled to beare of ſome of vs a witneſſe of innocence & ciuile vprightneſſe, in whom this onely thing was puniſhed with death which ought to haue bene accōpted for a ſingular praiſe. But if any vnder pretence of the Goſpell do ſtirre vp tumultes (as hetherto it hath not bene founde that there haue bene any ſuch in your Realme) if any pretende the libertie of the grace of God to defende the licētiouſneſſe of their vices (of which ſort I haue knowen many) there be lawes and penalties of lawes, by which they may accōrding to their deſeruinges be ſharpely puniſhed: yet ſo that in the meane time the Goſpell of God be not euell ſpokē of for the wickedneſſe of naughty men. Thus haue you (O King) the venimous vniuſtice of the ſclaunderors largely enough declared, that you may not with an eare of to eaſy beliefe bende to their reportes. I feare me alſo leaſt it be to largely ſet out, foraſmuch as this preface is in a maner come to the quantitie of a whole boke of defenſe. whereby I entended not to make a defenſe in deede, but onely to mollify your minde aforehande to geue audience to the diſcloſing of our cauſe: which your minde, though it be now turned away and eſtranged from vs, yea and enflamed againſt vs, yet we truſt that we ſhall be able to recouer the fauor thereof, if you ſhall ones haue without diſpleaſure and troublous affection red ouer this our confeſſion, which we will to be in ſteede of a defence for vs to your maieſty. But if the whiſperinges inges of the malicious do ſo poſſeſſe your eares, that there is no place for accuſed men to ſpeake for themſelues: and if thoſe outragious furies do ſtill with your winking at them, exerciſe cruelty with priſonning, tormenting, cutting, and burning: we ſhall in dede, as ſhepe appointed to the ſlaughter, be brought to all extremities, yet ſo that in our patience we ſhall poſſeſſe our ſoules, and waite for the ſtronge hande of the Lord: which ſhall without dout be preſent in time, and ſtretch forth it ſelfe armed, both to deliuer the poore out of affliction, and to take vengeance on the deſpiſers, which now triumphe with ſo great aſſuredneſſe.

The Lord the King of Kings ſtabliſh your throne with righteouſneſſe, and your ſeate with equity, moſt noble King.

IOHN CALVINE TO THE READER.

AT the firſt ſetting out of this worke, becauſe I did not loke for that ſucceſſe, which the Lorde of his vnmeaſurable goodnes hath giuẽ, I had (as mẽ vſe to do in ſmal workes) for the more part lightly paſſed it ouer. But whẽ I vnderſtode that it was receiued with that fauor of al the godly, which I neuer durſt haue deſired, much leſſe haue hoped for: as I verily felt in my hart that much more was giuen to me than I had deſerued, ſo I thought it ſhould be a great vnthankefulnes if I ſhoulde not at the leaſt after my ſclẽder abilitie endeuor to anſwere ſo fauorable affections toward me, & which of themſelues prouoked my diligẽce. And this I attempted not only in the ſecond ſetting forth of it: but how oft ſince that time the worke hath bin emprinted, ſo oft it hath bin enriched with ſome encreaſe. But although I did not then repent me of the labor that I had employed: yet I neuer held my ſelfe contented till it was diſpoſed into that order which is now ſet before you. Now I truſt I haue giuẽ you that which may be allowed by all your iudgementes. Truely with how great endeuor I haue applied my ſelfe to the doinge of this ſeruice to the Church of God, I may bring forth for an euident witneſſe, that this laſt winter, when I thought that the feuer Quartane had ſummoned me to death, how much more the ſickenes enforced vpon me, ſo much leſſe I ſpared my ſelfe, till I might leaue this booke to ouerliue me, which might make ſome part of thankefull recompenſe to ſo gentle prouoking of the godly. I had rather in dede it had bin done ſoner: but it is ſoone enough if well enough. And I ſhall then thinke that it is come abroade in good ſeaſon, when I ſhall perceiue that it hath brought yet more plentifull frute thã it hath done heretofore to the Church of God. This is my only deſire. And truely full ill it were with me, if I did not, holding my ſelfe contented with the allowance of God alone, deſpiſe the iudgements of men, whether they be the fooliſh & froward iudgementes of the vnskilfull, or the wrõgfull & malicious of the wicked. For although God hath throughly ſettled my minde to the endeuor both of enlarging his kingdome, and of helping the common profit: & though I am cleare in mine owne conſcience, & haue himſelfe & the Angels to witneſſe with me, that ſince I tooke vpon me the office of a teacher in the Church, I haue tended to none other purpoſe

but that I might profit the Church in maintaining the pure doctrine of godlines: yet I thinke there is no man, that hath bin snatched at, bitten, & torne in sunder with moe sclaũders than I. VVhen my epistle was now in printing, I was certainly enformed that at Augsburgh where the assebly of the states of the Empire was holden, there was a rumor spread abroad of my reuoltinge to the Papacy, and the same was more greedely receiued in the courtes of Princes than was meete. This forsooth is their thankefulnes who are not ignorant of many trialls had of my stedfastnes, which trialls as they shake of so fowle a sclaunder, so they should with all indifferẽt & gẽtle iudges haue defended me from it. But the Deuill with his whole route is deceiued if in oppressing me with filthy lies, he thinke that by his vniust dealinge I shalbe either the more discouraged or made the lesse diligent: because I trust that the Lord of his vnmeasurable goodnes will graunt me that I may with euen sufferance continue in the course of his holy calling. VVhereof I giue to the godly readers a new proofe in this settinge foorth of this booke. Now in this trauaill this was my purpose so to prepare and furnish them that be studious of holy Diuinity to the reding of the word of God, that they may both haue an easie entry into it, and go forward in it without stumblinge: for I thinke that I haue in all pointes so knit vp together the summe of religion, and disposed the same in such order, that whosoeuer shall well haue it in minde, it shal not be hard for him to determine both what he ought chiefly to seeke in the Scripture, and to what marke to apply whatsoeuer is contained in it. Therefore, this as it were a way being once made plaine, if I shall hereafter set forth any expositions of Scripture, because I shall not neede to enter into long disputations of articles of doctrine, & to wander out into common places: I will alway knit them vp shortly. By this meane the godly reader shalbe eased of great paine and tediousnesse, so that he come furnished aforehande with the knowledge of this present worke as with a necessary instrument. But because the entent of this purpose, doth clearely as in mirrors appeare in so many commentaries of mine, I had rather to declare in deede what it is, than to set it out in wordes. Farewell frendly Reader, and if thou receiue any frute of my labors, helpe me with thy prayers to God our Father.

I professe my selfe to be one of the number of them, which wryte in profiting, and profit in writing.

VVHAT CHAPTERS ARE CONtained in the bookes of this Institution.

In the first booke which entreateth of the knowledge of God the Creator: Are contained xviij. Chapters.

1 THat the knoweledge of God, & of our selues, are thinges conioyned: & how they be lincked the one with the other.

2 What it is to knowe God, & to what ende tendeth the knowledge of him.

3 That the knowledge of God is naturally planted in the mindes of men.

4 That the same knowledge is either choked or corrupted, partely by ignorance, & partly by malice.

5 That the knoweledge of God doth shiningely appeare in the making of the world, and in the continuall gouernment thereof.

6 That to attaine to God the creator, it is needefull to haue the Scripture to be our guide and maistresse.

7 By what testimonie the Scripture ought to be stablished, that is, by the witnesse of the holy Ghost, that the authority thereof may remaine certain: And that it is a wicked inuention to say that the credit thereof doth hange vppon the iudgement of the Church.

8 That so faras mans reason may beare, there are sufficient proues to stablish the credit of the Scripture.

9 That those fantasticall menne, which forsakinge Scripture, resorte vnto reuelation, do ouerthrowe all the principles of godlinesse.

10 That the Scripture, to correct all superstition, doth in comparison set ỹ true God against all the Gods of the Gentils, reckeninge him for none of them.

11 That it is vnlawful to attribute vnto God a visible forme, and that generally, they forsake God, so many as do erect to themselues any images.

12 That God is seuerally discerned from idols, that he may be only & wholly worshipped.

13 That there is taught in ỹ Scriptures one essence of God from the very creation, which essence containeth in it three persons.

14 That the Scripture euen in the creatiō of the world & of al things, doth by certaine markes put difference betwene the true God, and fained Gods.

15 What a one man was created: wherein there is entreated of the powers of the soule, & of the image of God, of free will, and of the first integritie of nature.

16 That God by his power doth nouriſh and maintaine the worlde, which himselfe hath created, & by his prouidence doth gouerne al the

partes thereof.
17 Whereto and to what end this doctrine is to be applied, that we may be certaine of the profit therof.
18 That God doth so vse the seruice of wicked men, and so boweth their mindes to put his iudgement in execution, that yet still himselfe remaineth pure from all spot.

In the second Booke which entreateth of the knowledge of God the Redemer in Christ, vvhich knovvledge vvas first opened to the fathers in the time of the lavve, and then to vs in the Gospell: Are conteined xvij. Chapters.

1 THat by Adamas sin and falling away, mankind became accursed, and did degenerate from his first estate: wherin is entreated of Originall sinne.
2 That man is nowe spoiled of the freedome of will, and made subiect to miserable bondage.
3 That out of the corrupt nature of mā procedeth nothing but damnable.
4 How God worketh in the hartes of men.
5 A confutation of the obiectiōs that are wont to be brought for the defence of free will.
6 That man being lost, must seke for redemption in Christ.
7 That the lawe was geuen, not to holde still the people in it, but to nourishe the hope of saluation in Christ vntill his comming.
8 An expositiō of the Moral law.
9 That Christ although he was knowē to the Iewes vnder the law, yet was he deliuered onely by the Gospell.
10 Of the likenesse of the olde and newe Testament.
11 Of the difference of the one Testament from the other.
12 That it behoued, that Christ to performe the office of the Mediator, should be made man.
13 That Christ tooke vpon him the true substāce of ỹ flesh of man.
14 Howe the natures of the Mediator do make one person.
15 That we may knowe to what ende Christ was sent of his father, & what he brought vs: three things are principally to be considered in him, his Propheticall office, his kingdome, & his Priesthode.
16 Howe Christ hath fulfilled the office of Redemer, to purchase saluation for vs, wherein is entreated of his Death and Resurrection, and his Ascending into heauen.
17 That it is truely and properly sayd, ỹ Christ hath deserued Gods fauour and saluation for vs.

In the third Boke which entreateth of the maner howe to receiue the grace of Christ, and vvhat fruites come thereof to vs, and vvhat effectes followe of it: Are conteined xxv. Chapters.

1 THat those things which are spoken of Christ do profit vs, by secret working of the holy Ghost.

2 Of faith, wherin both is the definition of it, & the properties that it hath are declared.

3 That we are regenerate by faith, wherein is entreated of Repentance.

4 That all that the Sophisters babble in their Schooles of penance, is farre from the purenes of the Gospell: where is entreated of confession and Satisfaction.

5 Of the supplyings which they adde to satisfactions, as Pardons and Purgatory.

6 Of the life of a Christian man. And first by what arguments the scripture exhorteth vs thereunto.

7 The summe of a Christian life: where is entreated of the forsaking of our selues.

8 Of the bearing of the Crosse, which is a parte of the forsaking of our selues.

9 Of the meditation of the life to come.

10 Howe we ought to vse this present life, and the helpes therof.

11 Of the Iustification of faith, & first of the definitiō of the name and of the thing.

12 That to the ende we may be fully perswaded of the free Iustification, we must lifte vp our mindes to the iudgement seate of God.

13 That there are two things to be marked in free Iustification.

14 What is the beginning of Iustification, and the continuall proceding thereof.

15 That those things that are cōmonly boasted cōcerning the merites of workes, do ouerthrowe as well the praise of God in geuing of righteousnesse, as also the assurednesse of saluation.

16 A cōfutation of the slaunders, whereby the Papistes go about to bring this doctrine in hatred.

17 The agreemēt of the promises of the Lawe and the Gospell.

18 That of the reward, the righteousnesse of workes is ill gathered.

19 Of Christian liberty.

20 Of Prayer which is the chiefe exercise of faith, and whereby we daily receiue the benefites of God.

21 Of the eternall electiō, whereby God hath predestinate some to saluation, some other to destruction.

22 A cōfimation of this doctrine by the testimonies of Scripture.

23 A confutation of the slaunders, wherewith this doctrine hath alway bene vniustly charged.

24 That Election is stablished by the calling of God: & that the reprobate do bring vpō thēselues the iust destruction, to which they are appointed.

25 Of the last Resurrection.

In the fourth Booke which entreateth of the outward meanes or helpes vvhereby God calleth vs into the fellovvship of Christ, and holdeth vs in it: Are contained xx. Chapters.

1 OF the true Church with which we ought to keepe vnitie, bicause it is the mother of all the godly.

The Table

2 A cõpariſon of ỹ falſe Church with the true Church.

3 Of the teachers and miniſters of the Church, & of their Election and office.

4 Of the ſtate of ỹ olde Church, and of the maner of gouerning that was in vſe before the Papacy.

5 That the old forme of gouernment is vtterly ouerthowen by the tyranny of the Papacy.

6 Of the Supremacy of the See of Rome.

7 Of the beginning & encreaſing of ỹ Papacy of Rome, vntill it aduãced it ſelfe to this height, wherby both ỹ libertie of the Church hath bene oppreſſed, and all the right gouernment thereof ouerthrowen.

8 Of the power of the Church as touching the articles of faith: and with howe vnbrideled licentiouſneſſe it hath in the Papacy bene wreſted to corrupt all pureneſſe of doctrine.

9 Of Councells and of their authoritie.

10 Of the power in making of lawes wherein the Pope and his haue vſed a moſt cruell tyranny & butchery vpon ſoules.

11 Of the iuriſdiction of the Church, and the abuſe thereof, ſuch as is ſene in the Papacie.

12 Of ỹ diſcipline of ỹ Church, whereof the chiefe vſe is in the cenſures and excommunication.

13 Of vowes, by raſhe promiſing whereof eche man hath miſerably entangled himſelfe.

15 Of Baptiſme.

16 That the Baptiſme of Infants doth very well agree with the inſtitution of Chriſt, & the nature of the ſigne.

17 Of the holy Supper of Chriſt: and what it auaileth vs.

18 Of the Popiſhe Maſſe, by which ſacrilege ỹ ſupper of Chriſt hath not onely bene prophaned, but alſo brought to nought.

19 Of the fiue falſely named Sacramentes: where is declared, that the other fiue which haue bene hitherto commonly taken for Sacramentes, are not Sacramentes: and then is ſhewed what maner of things they be.

20 Of Ciuile gouernement.

THE FIRST BOOKE OF THE INSTITVTION OF CHRISTIAN RELIGION, WHICH intreateth of the knowledge of God the Creator.

The first Chapter.

That the knowledge of God, and of our selues are things conioyned: and howe they be linked the one with the other.

THE whole summe in a maner of all our wisdom, which onely ought to be accompted true and perfect wisdome, consisteth in two parts, that is to say, the knowledge of God, & of our selues. But wheras these two knowledges be with many bonds linked togither: yet whether goeth before or engendreth the other, it is hard to discerne. For first no man can looke vpō him selfe, but he must needes by and by turne all his senses to the beholding of God, in whom he liueth & is moued: becausе it is playne that those giftes wherwith we be indued are not of our selues, yea euen that that we haue being is nothing els but an essence in the one God. Finally, by these good thinges that are as by dropmeale powred into vs from heauen, we are led as it were by certaine streames to the spring head. And so by our owne needinesse, better appeareth that infinite plentie of good thinges that abideth in God. Specially that miserable ruine, wherеinto the fall of the firste man hath throwen vs, compelleth vs to set vp our eyes, not onely beyng foodeles and hungry, to craue from thence that which we lacke, but also being awakened with feare, to learne humilitie. For as there is found in man a certaine world of all miseries, & since we haue bene spoyled of the diuine apparell, our shamefull nakednesse discloseth an infinite heape of filthy disgracements: it must needes be that euery man be pricked with knowledge & conscience of his own vnhappinesse to make him come at least vnto some knowledge of God. So by the vnderstanding of our owne ignorance, vanitie, beggery weakenes, peruersnes, and corruption, we learne to reknowledge that no where else but in the Lord abideth the true light of wisdom, sound vertue, perfecte aboundance of all good thinges, and puritie of righteousnes. And so by our owne euils we are spurred to cōsider the good things of God: and we cannot earnestly aſpire towarde him, vntill we beginne to miſlike our ſelues. For of a men what one is there, that would not willingly reſt in him ſelfe? ye who doth not reſt, ſo longe as he knoweth not him ſelfe, that is to ſay ſo long as he is contented with his owne gifts, and ignorãt or vnmind-full of his owne miſery? Therfore euery man is by the knowledge o him ſelfe, not onely pricked forward to ſeeke God, but alſo led as were by the hand to finde him.

2 Agayne it is certaine, that man neuer commeth vnto the true knowledge of himſelfe, vnles he haue firſt beholden the face of God, and from beholding therof do deſcend to looke into himſelfe. For (ſuch is the pride that is naturally planted in vs) we alway thinke our ſelues righteous, innocent, wiſe and holy, vntill that with manifeſt proues we be cõuinced of our vnrighteouſnes, filthines, folly and vn-cleannes. But we are not conuinced therof, if we looke vpon our ſelues onely, & not vpon God alſo, who is the only rule wherby this iudge-ment ought to be tryed. For becauſe we are naturally inclined to hy-pocriſie, therfore a certaine vayne reſemblance of righteouſnes doth aboundantly content vs in ſtead of righteouſnes in deede. And becauſe there appeareth nothing among vs, nor about vs, that is not defiled with much filthines, therfore that which is ſomewhat leſſe filthy plea-ſeth vs as though it were moſt pure, ſo long as we holde our ſelues within the boundes of mans vnclennes. Like as the eye that is vſed to ſee nothing but black, thinketh that to be pure white, which yet is but darkiſh white, or browne. Yea, we may yet more playnely diſcerne by our bodily ſenſe how much we are blinded in conſidering the powers of the ſoule. For if at midday we either looke down vpon the ground or behold thoſe thinges that rounde about lye open before our eyes, then we thinke our ſelues to haue a very aſſured and percing force of ſight: but when we looke vp to the ſunne, & behold it with fixed eyes, then that ſame ſharpneſſe that was of great force vpon the ground, is with ſo great brightnes byandby daſeled and confounded, that we are compelled to confeſſe that the ſame ſharp ſight which we had in conſidering earthly things, when it commeth to the ſunne is but meere dulneſſe. Euen ſo commeth it to paſſe in weying our ſpirituall good things. For while we looke no further then the earth, ſo longe beyng well contented with our own righteouſnes, wiſdom and ſtrength, we do ſweetely flatter our ſelues, and thinke vs in maner halfe gods. But if we once beginne to rayſe vp our thought vnto God & to wey what a one he is, and howe exact is the perfection of his righteouſnes, wiſedom and power, after the rule wherof we ought to be framed: then that which before dyd pleaſe vs in our ſelues with falſe pretence of righte-

ghteouſnes, ſhall become lothſom to vs as greateſt wickednesse: nē that which did marueilouſly deceiue vs vnder colour of wiſdom, hall ſtinkē before vs as extreme folly: then that which did beare the ace of ſtrength, ſhal be proued to be moſt miſerable weaknes. So ſlenderly doth that which in vs ſeemeth euen moſte perfect, anſwere in roportion to the purenes of God.

3 Hereof proceedeth that trembling & amaſednes, wherewith the cripture in many places reciteth that the holy men were ſtriken and ſtoniſhed ſo oft as they perceyued the preſence of God. For when we ee that they which in his abſence did ſtād aſſured & vnmoued, ſo ſone s he diſcloſeth his glory, begin ſo to quake and are ſo diſmayd, that hey fall downe, yea are ſwalowed vp & in maner as deſtroyed with eare of death: it is to be gathered therby that man is neuer ſufficiently ouched and inwardly moued with knowledge of his owne baſenes, ntill he haue compared himſelfe to the maieſtie of God. But of ſuch diſmaying we haue often examples both in the Iudges & in the Prophets: ſo that this was a common ſaying among the people of God: We ſhall dye becauſe the Lord hath appeared vnto vs. And therfore he hiſtory of Iob, to throw men downe with knowledge of their owne olly, weaknes, & vnclennes, bringeth alway his principall proofe from deſcribing Gods wiſdom, ſtrength and clennes. And that not without cauſe. For we ſee how Abraham, the nerer that he came to behold the glory of God, the better acknowledged himſelfe to be earth and duſt. We ſee how Elias could not abide to tary his comming to him with vncouered face: ſo terrible is the beholding of him. And what maie man do that is but corruption & a worme, when euē the Cherubins for very feare muſte hide their faces? Euen this is it that the Prophet Eſay ſpeaketh of: The ſunne ſhall bluſhe, & the moone ſhall be aſhamed, when the Lord of hoſtes ſhall raigne, that is to ſay, when he diſplayeth his brightnes, and bringeth it nearer to ſight, then in comparison thereof the brighteſt thing of all ſhall be darkened. But howſoeuer the knowledge of God and of our ſelues, are with mutuall knotte linked together, yet the order of right teaching requireth that firſt we intreate of the knowledge of God, and after come downe to ſpeake of the knowledge of our ſelues.

The ſecond Chapter.

VVhat it is to knowe God, and to vvhat ende tendeth the knowledge of him.

I Meane by the knowledge of God, not only that knowledge, wherby we conceiue that there is ſome God, but alſo that, wherby we learne ſo much as behoueth vs to know of him, & as is profitable for his glorie, finally ſo much as is expedient. For, to ſpeake properly, we can not ſay that God is knowen where there is no religion nor godlineſſe. But heere I do not yet touch that ſpeciall kinde of knowledge whereby thoſe men that are in themſelues reprobate and accurſed do conceiue God the redeemer in Chriſt the mediator: but I ſpeake onely of that firſt and ſimple maner of knowledge, whervnto the very order of nature would haue led vs, if Adam had continued in ſtate of innocẽcie. For although no man, ſith mankinde is in this ruine, can perceiue God to be eyther a father, or author of ſaluation, or in any wiſe fauourable, vnles Chriſt come as a meane to pacifie him towarde vs: yet it is one thing to feele that God our maker doth by his power ſuſtaine vs, by his prouidence gouerne vs, by his goodnes nouriſh vs, & endue vs with all kinds of bleſſings: & an other thing to embrace the grace of reconciliatiõ offered vs in Chriſt. Wheras therfore the Lord firſt ſimply appeareth as well by the making of the world, as by the generall doctrine of the ſcripture, to be the Creator, & then in the face of Chriſt to be the redeemer: hervpõ ariſe two ſorts of knowing him, of which the former is now to be intreated of, & then the other ſhall orderly follow in the place fit for it. For although our mind can not conceiue the knowledge of God, but that it muſt giue to him ſome kind of worſhip, yet ſhall it not be ſufficient ſimply to know that it is he only that ought to be honored & worſhipped of all men, vnles we be alſo perſwaded that he is the foũtaine of all good things, to the end that we ſhould ſeeke for no thing elſewhere but in him. I meane hereby, not only for that as he hath once created this world, ſo by his infinite power he ſuſteineth it, by his wiſdom he gouerneth it, by his goodnes he preſerueth it, & ſpecially mankind he ruleth by his righteouſnes & iudgement, ſuffreth by his mercy, & ſauegardeth by his defence: but alſo becauſe there can no where be found any one drop either of wiſdom, or of light, or of righteouſnes, or of power, or of vprightnes, or of ſincere truth, which floweth not frõ him or whereof he is not the cauſe: to this end verely, that we ſhould learne to looke for & craue all theſe things at his hand, & with thankſgeuing accompt them receiued of him. For this feeling of the powers of God is to vs a meane ſcholemaſter of godlines, out of which ſpringeth religion: Godlines I call a reuerence of God ioined with loue of him which is procured by knowledge of his benefits. For men will neuer with willing obedience ſubmit thẽ ſelues to God, vntill they perceiue that they owe all things to him, that they are nouriſhed by his fatherly care, that he is to them the author of all good things, ſo that nothing is to be ſought elſewhere than in him. Yea they will neuer yeld thẽſelues truely & with all their

2 Therfore they do but trifle with vaine ſpeculations, which in entreating of this queſtion, do make it their purpoſe to diſcuſſe, what thing God is, where it rather behoueth vs to know what maner one he is, and what agreeth with his nature. For to what end ſerueth it to confeſſe as Epicure doth, that ther is a God which doth only delight him ſelfe with idlenes, hauing no care of the worlde? Finally, what profiteth it to knowe ſuch a God with whom we may haue nothing to do? But rather the knowledge of him ought to ſerue to this ende, firſt to frame vs to feare & reuerence: then that by it guiding and teaching vs, we may learne to craue all good things at his hand, & to accompt them receiued of him. For how can any thought of God enter into thy mind, but that thou muſt therwithall byandby thinke, that forſmuch as thou art his creature, therfore thou art of right ſubiect and bound to his authoritie, that thou oweſt him thy life, that whatſoeuer thou enterpriſeſt, whatſoeuer thou doeſt, ought to be directed to him? If this be true, then truely it foloweth that thy life is peruerſely corrupted if it be not framed to obeying of him, foraſmuch as his will ought to be our law to liue by. Agayn, thou canſt not cleerely ſee him, but that thou muſt needes know that he is the fountain and originall of all good things, wherevpon ſhould grow both a deſire to leaue vnto him, and an aſſured truſt in him, if mans owne corruptnes did not drawe his minde from the right ſearching of him. For firſt of all, the godly minde doth not as by a dreame imagine to her ſelfe any God at aduenture, but ſtedfaſtly beholdeth the onely one and true God: and doth not falſely forge of him whatſoeuer her ſelfe liketh, but is content to beleeue him to be ſuch a one as he diſcloſeth himſelfe, and doth alway with greate diligence beware that with preſumptuous raſhneſſe ſhe paſſe not beyond his wil, and ſo wander out of the way. And when ſhe ſo knoweth him, becauſe ſhe vnderſtandeth that he gouerneth all thinges, ſhe aſſuredly truſteth that he is her ſafekeeper and defender, and therefore wholely committeth her ſelfe to his fayth? Becauſe ſhe vnderſtandeth that he is the author of all good things, therefore if any thing trouble her, or if ſhee want any thing, byandby ſhe flyeth to him for ſuccour, looking for helpe at his hand. Becauſe ſhee is perſwaded that he is good and merciſull, therefore with aſſured confidence ſhee reſteth on him, and doubteth not in all her euills to finde readie remedy in his merciſull kindneſſe. Becauſe ſhee knoweth him to be her Lord and father, therefore ſhee determineth that he is worthy that ſhee ſhould in all thinges haue regard to his authoritie, reuerence his maieſtie, procure the aduauncement of his glorie, and obey his commaundements. Becauſe ſhee ſeeth that he is a ryghteous Iudge, & armed with his ſeueritie to puniſh ſinners, therefore ſhe alway ſetteth his iudgement ſeate before her eyes, and with feare of him withdraweth & reſtrayneth her ſelfe from prouoking his wrath. Yet is ſhe not ſo afraide with the feeling of his iudgement, that ſhee would conuey her ſelfe from it, although there were a way open to eſcape it: but rather ſhee doth no leſſe loue him, whyle he extendeth vengeance vpon the wicked, than while he is beneficiall to the godly, foraſmuch as ſhe vnderſtãdeth that it doth no leſſe belong to his glory that he hath in ſtore puniſhment for the wicked and euill doers, than that he hath reward of eternal life for the righteous. Moreouer ſhee doth not for onely feare of puniſhment refraine her ſelfe from ſinning: but becauſe ſhee loueth and reuerenceth him as her father, attendeth on him and honoreth him as her Lord, therefore although there were no hell at all, yet ſhee dreadeth his only diſpleaſure. Nowe behold what is the pure and true religion, euen faith ioyned with an earneſt feare of God: ſo that feare may contayne in its willing reuerence, and drawe with it a right forme of worſhipping ſuch as is appointed in the lawe. And this is the more heedfully to be noted, becauſe all men generally do worſhip God, but fewe doe reuerence him, while ech where is great pompous ſhewe in Ceremonies, but the purenes of hart is rare to be found.

3 Truely, they that iudge rightly, will alway hold this for certaine, that there is grauen in the mindes of men a certaine feeling of the Godhead, which neuer can be blotted out. Yea that this perſwaſion, that there is a God, is euen from their generation naturally planted in them, and deepely rooted within their bones, the very obſtinacie of the wicked is a ſubſtantiall witneſſe, which with their furious ſtriuing yet can neuer winde themſelues out of the feare of God. Although Dirigoras and ſuch other doe ieſt and laugh at all that hath in all ages bene beleeued concerning religion: although Dyoniſius doe ſcoffe at the heauenly iudgemẽt: yet that is but a laughter from the teeth forward, becauſe inwardly the worme of conſcience gnaweth thẽ much more ſharpely than all hot fearing irons. I alleage not this that Cicero ſayth, that errors by continuance of time growe out of vſe, & religion daily more and more encreaſeth and waxeth better. For the world (as a litle hereafter we ſhall haue occaſion to ſhew) trauaileth as much as in it lieth to ſhake of all knowledge of God, and by all meanes to corrupt the worſhipping of him But this only I ſay, that whẽ the dulnes, which the wicked doe deſirouſly labor to get to deſpiſe God

ithall, doth lie piningly in their harts, yet the same feeling of God, hich they woulde most of all desire to haue vtterly destroyed, liueth ill, and sometime doth vtter it selfe: whereby we gather that it is no ch doctrine as is first to be learned in schooles, but such a one wher- f euery man is a teacher to himselfe euen from his mothers womb, such a one as nature suffreth none to forget, although many bend ll their endeuoure to shake it out of their minde. Now, if all men be orne & do liue to this end, to know God, & the knowledge of God but fickle and lightly vanisheth away, vnlesse it proceede thus farre: is euident, that they all swarue out of kinde from the lawe of theyr reation, that doe not direct to this marke all the whole thoughts & oings of their life. Of which the Philosophers themselues were not gnorant. For Plato ment nothing else, when he oftentimes taught, hat the soueraign good of the soule is the likenesse of God, when he soule hauing throughly cõceiued the knowledge of him is whole- y transformed into him. Therefore very aptly doth Grillus reason in Plutarche, where he affirmeth, that men, if religion be once taken frõ heir life, are not only nothing better than brute beasts, but also many waies much more miserable, for that being subiect to so many sorts of uils they continually draw forth a troublesome vnquiet life: and that herfore the worshipping of God is the only thing that maketh them better than brute beastes, by which alone they aspire to immortality.

In Phedrone & theetero.

The iij. Chapter.

That the knowledge of God is naturally planted in the mindes of men.

WE hold it out of controuersie, that there is in the mind of man, euen by naturall instinction, a certaine feeling of the Godhead. For to the ende that no man should flee to the pretence of ignorãce, God himselfe hath planted in all men a certaine vnderstanding of his diuine maiestie: the remembrance whereof, with powring in now and then as it were new droppes, he continually reneweth: that when all, not one excepted, do know that there is a God, and that he is their maker, they may all be condemned by their owne testimonie, for that they haue not both worshipped him, and dedicate their life to his will. But truely if the not knowing of God be any where to be found, it is likely that there can no where else be any example of it more thã among the grossest sorts of peoples and furthest from ciuill order of humanitie. But (as the heathen man sayeth) there is no nation so barbarous, no kinde of people so sauage, in whom resteth not this persuasion that there is a God. And euen they that in other parts of their life seeme very litle to differ from brute beaſtes, yet do continually keepe a certaine ſeede of Religion. So throughly hath this common principle poſſeſſed all mens mindes, and ſo faſt it ſticketh within all mens bowels. Sith then from the beginning of the world there hath bin no countrey, no Citie, yea no houſe, that could be without religion, in this is emplied a certaine ſecret confeſſion that a feeling of the Godhead is written in the hearts of all men. Yea and idolatrie it ſelfe is a ſubſtantiall proofe of this perſuaſion. For we know how vnwillingly man abaſeth himſelfe to honor other creatures aboue himſelfe. Therefore when he had rather worſhip a block and a ſtone, than he would be thought to haue no God, it appeareth that this imprinted perſuaſion of God is of moſt great force, which is impoſſible to be raced out of the mind of man, that it is much more eaſie to haue the affectiō of nature broken, as in deede it is broken whē mā from his own natural ſwelling pride of his own will ſtoupeth downe euen to the baſeſt creatures to honor God.

2 Wherfore it is moſt vayne which ſome doe ſay, that religion was deuiſed by the ſutteltie and craft of a few, by this policie to keepe the ſimple people in awe, whereas they them ſelues that procured other to worſhip God, beleeued nothing leſſe than that there was any God at all. I graunt in deede that ſuttle men haue inuented many things in religion, whereby to bring the people to a reuerēce, and caſt them in a feare, to make their minds the more pliable to obedīēce: But this they could neuer haue brought to paſſe, vnles the mindes of men had bin already before hand perſwaded that there was a God, out of which perſuaſion as out of ſeede ſpringeth that ready inclinatiō to religion. Neither is it likly that euē they which ſuttelly deceiued the ſimple ſort with colour of religion, were them ſelues altogether without knowledge of God. For though in times paſt there haue bene ſome, and at this day there ariſe vp many, that denie that there is any God: yet whether they will or no, they oftentimes feele that which they are deſirous not to know. We reade of none that euer did breake forth into more preſumptuous and vnbridled deſpiſing of God, than Caius Caligula: yet none more miſerably trembled when any token of Gods wrath appeared. And ſo agaynſte his will he quaked for feare of him whom of wilfull purpoſe he endeuored to deſpiſe. And the ſame may a man commonly ſee to happen to ſuch as he was. For the bolder deſpiſer of God that any man is, the more is he troubled at the very noyſe of the falling of a leafe. And whence commeth that, but from the reuengement of Gods maieſtie, which doth ſo much the more vehemently ſtrike their conſciences as they more labor to flie away from it? They do in deede looke about for all the ſtarting holes that

ay be, to hide them ſelues from the preſence of the Lord: but whe-er they will or no, they are ſtill holden faſt tyed. For howſoeuer metime it ſeemeth to vaniſh away for a moment, yet it oft returneth gaine, and with new aſſault doth runne vpon them: ſo that the reſt hich they haue, if they haue any at all, from torment of conſcience, much like to the ſleepe of drunkards or frantike men, which euen hile they ſleepe do not quietly reſt, becauſe they are at euery momẽt exed with horrible and dreadfull dreames. Therefore the very vnodly themſelues ſerue for an example to proue that there alway lyeth in all mens mindes ſome knowledge of God.

The iiij. Chapter.

That the ſame knowledge is eyther choked, or corrupted, partly by ignorance, and partly by malice.

BVt as experience teacheth that God hath ſowen the ſeede of religion in all men, ſo ſcarcely may be founde the hundreth mã, that hauing it conceyued in his heart doth cheriſh it, but no mã in whom it ripeneth, ſo far is it of that any frute appeareth in due time. Therefore whether it be that ſome become vaine in theyr owne ſuperſtitions, or that ſome do of ſet purpoſe maliciouſly reuolt from God, yet all doe runne out of kind from the true knowledge of him. So commeth it to paſſe that there remaineth no true godlineſſe in the worlde. But whereas I ſayd that ſome by error fall into ſuperſtition, I meane not thereby as though their ſimplicity might excuſe them from blame, becauſe the blindneſſe that they haue, is commonly alway mingled both with proud vanity, & with ſtubborneſſe. Vanity and the ſame ioyned with pride appeareth in this, that they miſerable men both in the ſeeking of God do not climbe aboue thẽſelues as they ought to haue done, but meaſure him according to the proportion of their owne fleſhly dulneſſe, and alſo neglecting the ſound manner of ſearching for him, do curiouſly fly to vayne ſpeculations. And ſo they conceiue him not ſuch a one as he offreth himſelfe, but do imagine him ſuch a one as of their owne raſhe preſumption they haue forged him. Which gulfe being once opened, what way ſoeuer they ſtirre their feete, they muſt needes alway run hedlong into deſtruction. For whatſoeuer afterward they goe about toward the worſhipping or ſeruice of God, they can not accompt it done to him, becauſe they worſhip not him, but rather the deuiſe of their own heart, & their owne dreame in ſteade of him. This peruerſnes doth Paule expreſſely touche, where he ſayth, that they were made fooles when they coueted to be wiſe. He had before ſayd, that they were Rom. 1. 22.

2 As for this that Dauid ſayth, that the wicked & mad mē think in their hearts, that there is no God: Firſt that is meant only of thoſe Pſa. 13. 1. that choking the light of nature, do of purpoſe make themſelues ſenſeleſſe, as we ſhall ſee againe a litle hereafter. Euen as we ſee that many after that they haue bin hardened with boldeneſſe and cuſtome of ſinning, do furiouſly put from them all the remembrance of God which yet is by very feeling of nature inwardly miniſtred vnto their mindes. Nowe Dauid, to make their madnes the more deteſtible, bringeth them in as though they preciſely denied, that there is any God: although they take not from him his being, but becauſe in taking from him his iudgement and prouidence, they ſhut him vp idle in heauen. For whereas nothing les agreeth with the nature of God, than to throw away the gouernement of the world, and leaue it to fortune, to winke at the ſinnes of men, ſo as they may liue in licentious outrage vnpuniſhed: whoſoeuer he be that quenching the feare of the heauenly iudgement, doth careleſly folow his owne affections, he denieth that there is a God. And this is the iuſt vengeance of God, to draw a fatnes ouer their hartes, ſo that the wicked when they haue once cloſed their eyes, euen in ſeeing may not ſee. And Dauid Pſa. 30. 6. 2. in an other place is the beſt expounder of his owne meaning, where he ſayeth: That the feare of God is not before the eyes of the wicked. Pſa. 10. 11. Again, that in their euill doinges they proudly reioyce at themſelues, becauſe they perſuade themſelues, that God doth not loke vpon them. Therfore although they be compelled to acknowledge ſome God, yet they do rob him of his glorie, in withdrawing frō him his power. For 2. Tim. 1. 13. as God (as Paule witneſſeth) cannot denie himſelfe, becauſe he continually abideth like himſelfe: ſo is it truely ſayd, that theſe men in faining God to be a dead and vaine image doe denie God. Moreouer it is to be noted that although they wraſtle againſt their own naturall feeling, and do deſire not onely to ſhake out God from thence, but alſo to deſtroy him in heauen: yet their dull hardnes can neuer ſo farre preuaile, but that God ſometime draweth them backe to his iudgement ſeat. But foraſmuch as they are not withholden with any fear

om running violently againſt God:therefore it is certaine that there gneth in them a brutiſh forgetfulnes of God, ſo long as that blind ng of rage doth ſo forcibly carie them.

3 So is that vaine defenſe ouerthrowne, which manie are wont pretende for excuſe of their ſuperſtition. For they thinke, that any uotion to religion ſuffiſeth, whatſoeuer it be,though it be neuer ſo uch contrarie to order and truth. But they conſider not, that true ligion ought to be framed according to the will of God,as by a per-tuall rule:and that God himſelfe abideth alway like himſelfe,and is o imagined Ghoſt or fantaſie,that maie be diuerſly faſhioned after ery mannes liking. And truely we may plainly ſee with how lying ecites ſuperſtition mocketh God, while ſhe goeth about to do him eaſure. For catching holde of thoſe thinges in a manner only,which od hath teſtified that he careth not for, ſhe eyther contemptuouſly ſeth, or openly refuſeth thoſe things that he appoynteth and ſayeth be pleaſant vnto him. Therfore whoſoeuer do ſet vp new inuented rmes of worſhipping God,they worſhip & honor their own doting uiſes: becauſe they durſt not ſo trifle with God, vnles they had firſt yned aGod agreeing with the follies of the trifeling toyes. Where-re the Apoſtle pronounceth,that that vnſtayed and wandering opiion of the maieſtie of God, is a very not knowing of God. When ſayeth he)ye knewe not God,ye ſerued them that in nature were no Ga.4.8.
ods. And in an other place he ſayeth that the Epheſians were without God at ſuch time as they ſtrayed from the right knowledge of the Ep.2.12 ne God. And at leaſt in this caſe,it differeth not much,whether thou eleue one God or many, becauſe in both caſes thou departeſt from & forſakeſt the trueGod:whom whē thou haſt once forſaken,there is othing left with thee but a deteſtable Idol. It ſoloweth therfore,that e muſt determine with Lactantius, that there is no lawfully allowa-le religion,but that which is ioyned with truth.

4 There is alſo a ſecond fault, that they neyther haue at any time ny conſideration of God,but againſt their wills,nor do approche to-ard him, till for all their holding backe they be forcibly drawen to im: and euen then alſo they haue not a willing feare that proceedeth om reuerence of Gods maieſtie,but onely a ſeruile and conſtrayned eare, which the iudgement of God wringeth out of them: which udgement becauſe they can not eſcape, therfore they dread it,but yet o as therwithall they abhorre it. And ſo that ſaying of Statius, that eare firſt made gods in the world,may be fitly ſpoken of vngodlineſſe, nd of this kinde of vngodlines onely. They that haue a minde abhoring from the iuſtice of God, do hartily wiſh to haue his throne of iudgement ouerthrowen, which they know to ſtand for punishmen offences agaynſt his iuſtice by which affectiō they warre againſt Go who can not be without his iudgement. But when they vnderſtand th his power impoſſible to be auoyded, hangeth ouer them. becauſe th can neyther by force remoue it, nor by flight eſcape it, therefore th feare it. So leaſt they ſhould in all things ſeeme to deſpiſe him, who maieſtie ſtill preſſeth vpon them, they vſe a certaine outward forme religion, ſuch as it is: but in the meane tyme they ceaſe not to deli them ſelues with all kinde of vices, to ioyne outragious miſcheues

Lord, and deſtroyed his whole ryghteouſneſſe or at leaſt they are no reſt in their ſinnes, and flatter themſelues, and had rather to folc wth intemperāce of their fleſh than reſtraine it with the bridle of the ho Ghoſt. But foraſmuch as the ſame is but a voyde and lying ſhadowe religion, yea ſcarcely worthy to be called a ſhadow: hereby againe eaſily gathered howe much the true godlines, which is powred ond into the heartes of the faithfull, I meane that out of which religio ſpringeth, doth differ from this confuſe knowledge of God. And y the hypocrites would obtaine by crooked compaſſes to ſeeme nyg bin one continuall vnbroken courſe of obedience in their whole li becauſe they truſt that they may be diſcharged againſt him with th owne mockeries of propiciatory ſatisfactions. Finally whereas th affiaunce ought to haue bin faſtened in him, they neglecting him with ſuch a heape of errors, that the darke miſt of malice doth cho and at laſt vtterly quench thoſe ſparkes, that glimmeringly ſhined make them ſee the glory of God. Yet that ſeede ſtill remaineth wh can by no meane be plucked vp by the roote, to beleue that there a certaine godhead: but the ſame ſeede is ſo corrupted, that it bri geth forth of it none other but very euill frutes. Yea therby is t which I trauaile to proue more certainly gathered, that there is a f

The fifth Chapter.

That the knowledge of God doth ſhiningly appeare in the making of the vvorld and in the continuall gouernement thereof.

MOreouer becauſe the furtheſt ende of bleſſed life ſtandeth in the knowledge of God: that the way to felicitie ſhould be ſtopped to none, therfore God hath not only planted in the minds of men that ſeede of religion which we haue ſpo- n of, but alſo hath ſo diſcloſed himſelfe in the whole workemanſhip the world, and daily ſo manifeſtly preſenteth himſelfe, that men n not open their eyes but they muſt needs behold him. His ſubſtāce deede is incomprehenſible, ſo that his diuine maieſtie farre ſurmoū- h all mens ſenſes: but he hath in all his works grauen certaine marks his glorie, and thoſe ſo plaine and notably diſcernable, that the ex- ſe of ignorance is taken away from mē, be they neuer ſo groſſe and ll witted. Therefore the Prophet rightfully crieth out, that he is thed with light as with a garment: as if he ſhould haue ſayd, that n he firſt began to come forth to be ſeene in viſible apparel, ſince time that he firſt diſplaied his enſignes in the creatiō of the world, which euen now what way ſoeuer we turne our eies, he appeareth rious vnto vs. In the ſame place alſo the ſame Prophet aptly com- reth the heauens as they be diſplaied abrod, to his royall pauillion: ſayth that he hath framed his parlours in the waters, that ỹ cloudes his chariots, that he rideth vpon the wings of the windes, that the nds and lightnings are his ſwift meſſengers. And becauſe the glory his power and wiſdom doth more fully ſhine aboue, therefore nmonly the heauen is called his pallace. And firſt of all, what way uer thou turne thy eyes, there is no peece of the world be it neuer ſmall, wherein are not ſeene at leaſt ſome ſparkles of his glory to ne. But as for this moſt large and beutifull frame, thou canſt not h one viewe peruſe the wide compaſſe of it, but that thou muſt ds be on euery ſide ouerwhelmed with the infinite force of the ghtnes thereof. Wherefore the author of the Epiſtle to the Hebrues h very well call the ages of the worlde the ſpectacle of inuiſible nges, for that the ſo orderly framing of the worlde ſerueth vs for a rror wherein we may behold God which otherwiſe is inuiſible.

2 As for his wonderfull wiſdom, there are innumerable proue both in heauen and in earth that witneſſe it: I meane not only that ſe creter ſort of thinges, for the nerer marking whereof Aſtrologie, Ph thruſt them ſelues in ſight of euerie one, euen of the rudeſt vnlearne man, ſo that men can not open their eyes but they muſt needs be wi neſſes of them. But truely they that haue digeſted, yea or but taſted th liberall arts, being holpen by the ayd thereof do proceede much fu ther to looke into the ſecrets of Gods wiſdom. Yet is there no ma ſo hindred by lacke of knowledge of thoſe arts, but that he through ſeeth abundantly enough of conning workemanſhip in Gods work to bring him in admiration of the workeman thereof. As for exampl to the ſearching out of the mouings of the ſtarres, appointing of the places, meaſuring of their diſtances, & noting of their properties, the needeth art and an exacter diligence: by which being throughly pe ceiued, as the prouidence of God is the more manifeſtly diſcloſed, ſo is conuenient, that the mind riſe ſomewhat the hier thereby to be hold his glory. But foraſmuch as the vnlearned people, yea and th rudeſt ſort of them, ſuch as are furniſhed with the only helpe of the eyes, can not be ignorant of the excellencie of Gods cunning worke manſhip, which in this innumerable and yet ſo ſeuerally well ordere and diſpoſed variety doth of it ſelfe ſhewe forth it ſelfe: it is euide that there is no man to whom God doth not largely open his wi ll of him? Againe, out of the mouth of infantes and ſucking babes ou haſt ſtabliſhed ſtrength. For ſo he pronounceth that not only in e whole kinde of man is a mirror of the workes of God, but alſo at the very infantes, while they yet hang on their mothers breſtes, aue tongues eloquent enough to preache his glory, ſo that there edeth no other orators. And therefore he douteth not to ſet their outhes in the vauwarde, as being ſtrongly armed to ſubdue their adneſſe that would according to their deuiliſh pride couet to extinuiſh the name of God. And hervpon riſeth that which Paul allegeth Act. 17.

hane Poets called him the father of men. And truly no mã will aſſenngly and willingly yeelde him ſelfe to ſerue God, but he that hauing aſted his fatherly loue, is mutually allured to loue and worſhip him.

4 And here is diſcloſed the foule vnthankfulneſſe of men, which hile they haue within them ſelues a workehouſe glorioufly furniſhed ith innumerable workes of God, and alſo a ſhop ſtuffed with ineſti-able plentie of riches, and whẽ they ought to burſt forth into pray-ng of him, are contrariwiſe puffed vp and doe ſwell with ſo much the gifts they poſſeſſe by his liberalitie: whether they will or no, they e enforced to knowe that theſe are the tokens of his godhead: and t they ſuppreſſe it cloſe within them. Truely they nede not to goe ut of them ſelues, ſo that they would not in preſumptuouſly taking pon them ſelues that which is giuen from heauen, bury within the round that which brightly giueth light to their minds to ſee God. ut euen at this day the earth beareth many mõſterous ſpirites, which chaunce made different from brute beast. But they pretend a cloke nature, whom they accompt the maker of all things, and so do co uey God away. They see that exquisite workmāship in all their me bers, from their mouth and their eyes euen to the nailes of th toes, and yet here also they put nature in place of God. But specia the so swift motions, the so excellent powers, the so rare gifts of soule, do represent a diuine nature that doth not easily suffer itse to be hid: vnlesse the Epicureans like the Giauntes Cyclopes wo so meete together, to rule a worme of fiue feete long: and shall whole vniuersalitie of the world be without this prerogatiue? F to agree that there is a certaine instrumental thing that aunswereth all the parts of man, doth so serue nothing at all to obscure the h nour of God, that it rather doth more gloriously set it out. Let E cure aunswere me, what meeting of vndiuisible bodies, boiling meat and drinke in man, doth dispose part into excrements and p into blood, and bringeth to passe that there is in all the member man such an endeuoring to do their office, euen as if so many seue closed in those exercises that serue the body. For what pertaineth the body, for a man to measure the skie, to gather the number of Truely the manifold nbleneſſe of the ſoule, by which it ſurueieth both heauen & earth, yneth things paſt with things to come, kepeth in memorie things ard long before, and expreſſeth ech thing to it ſelf by imagination, o the ingeniouſnes by which it inueteth things incredible, & which he mother of ſo many maruelous arts, are ſure tokens of diuine ture in man. Beſide that, euen in ſleeping it doth not onely roll and ne it ſelfe, but alſo conceiueth many thinges profitable, reaſoneth many thinges, and alſo prophecieth of thinges to come. What ſhal in this caſe ſay, but that the ſignes of immortalitie that are emnted in man, can not be blotted out? Now what reaſon may beare t man ſhalbe of diuine nature, and not acknowledge his Creator: all we forſoth by iudgement that is put into vs diſcerne betweene ht and wrong, and ſhall there be no iudge in heauen? Shall we euen our ſleepe haue abiding with vs ſome remnant of vnderſtanding, & ll no God be waking in gouerning the world? Shall we be ſo comd the inuenters of ſo many artes and profitable things, that God lbe defrauded of his praiſe, whereas yet experience ſufficiently teeth, that from an other and not from our ſelues, all that we haue, is liuerſe wiſe diſtributed amõg vs? As for that, which ſome do babble he ſecret inſpiration that geueth liuelines to the world, it is not only ake, but alſo vngodly. They like well that famous ſaying of Vergile:

Firſt heauen and earth, and flowing fields of ſeas,
The ſhining globe of Moone, and Titans ſtars, Aen. 6.
Spirite feedes within, and throughout all the lims, -- -- Infuſed minde the whole huge maſſe doth moue, And with the large bigge bodie mixe it ſelfe.
Thence come the kindes of men and eke of beaſts, And liues of flying foules, and monſters ſtrange, That water beares within the marble Sea.
A firye liuelineſſe and heauenlie race there is Within thoſe ſedes. &c.

Forſoth, that the world which was created for a ſpectacle of the rie of God, ſhould be the creator of it ſelfe. So in an other place ſame author folowing the common opinion of the Greeks and ins, ſayeth:

Some ſay that bees haue parte of minde diuine, And heauenly draughts. For eke they ſay that God Geo. 4.

And through depe skie. And hence the flocks and herdes:
And men, and all the kindes of ſauage beaſts,

Ech at their birth receiue their ſuttle liues.
And therto are they rendered all at laſt,
And all reſolued are retourned againe.
No place there is for death: but liuely they,

God haue this way of seeking God common to them both, that is, ollow these first draughts which both aboue and beneth do as shadow set forth a liuely image of him. And now the same po- leadeth vs to consider his eternitie. For it must needs be that he m whom all things haue their beginning, is of eternall continu- e, and hath his beginning, of himselfe. But now if any man enquire cause whereby he both was once lead to create all these things, & ow moued to preserue them: we shall finde that his only goodnes it that caused him. Yea and although this only be the cause, yet ght the same aboundantly to suffice to allure vs to the loue of him, asmuch as there is no creature (as the Prophet sayth) vpon which mercy is not poured out. Psa. 145. 9.

Also in the second sort of his works, I meane those that come asse beside the ordinary course of nature, there doth appeare no e euident proofe of his powers. For in gouerning the fellowship of n he so ordereth his prouidence, that wheras he is by innumerable ans good and bountifull to all men, yet by manifest and daily to- s he declareth his fauorable kindnesse to the Godly, and his seue- to the wicked and euell doers. For not doutfull are the punish- nts that he layeth vpon haynous offences: like as he doth openly w himselfe a defendor and reuenger of innocencie, while he pro- reth the life of good men with his blessing, helpeth their necessity, wageth and comforteth their sorowes, relieueth their calamities, by all meanes prouideth for their safety. Neither ought it any ng to deface the perpetuall rule of his iustice, that he oftentimes mitteth wicked men and euell doers for a time to reioice vnpuni- d: and on the other side suffereth good and innocent to be tossed h many aduersities, yea and to be oppressed with the malice and ust dealing of the vngodly. But rather a much cõtrary consideratiõ ght to enter into our mindes: that when by manifest shew of his th be punisheth one sinne, we should therefore thinke that he ha- all sinnes: and when he suffereth many sinnes to passe vnpuni- d, we should thereupon thinke that there shalbe an other iudge- nt to which they are differred to be then punished. Likewise howe at matter doth it minister vs to consider his mercy, while he often- es cesseth not to shew his vnwearied bountifulnesse vpon misera- sinners in calling them home to him with more than fatherly derneſse, vntill he haue subdued their frowardnesse with doing m good?

And here againe is to be noted, that we are called to knowledge of God, not such as contented with vaine speculatiõ, th but flie about in the braine, but such as shalbe sound and frute-l, if it be rightly conceiued and take roote in our harts. For the Lord declared by his powers, the force whereof becauſe we feele within and doe enioy the benefits of them, it muſt nedes be that we be in-rdly moued much more liuely with such a knowledge, than if we ulde imagine God to be such one, of whom we should haue no ling. Wherby we vnderstand that this is the righteſt way and fitteſt der to seek God, not to attempt to enter depely with presumptuous riositie throughly to discusse his substance, which is rather to be erently worshipped then scrupulously serched: but rather to be-ld him in his workes, by which he maketh himselfe nere and fami-, and doth in a maner communicate himselfe vnto vs. And this the Act. 17. postle meant, when he sayd, that God is not to be sought a farre of, 27. asmuch as he with his most present power dwelleth within euery Pſa. 145 e of vs. Wherfore Dauid, hauing before confeſſed his vnspeakea-greatneſſe, when he descendeth to the particular rehersall of his rkes, protesteth that the same will shew forth it selfe. Therefore also ought to geue our selues vnto such a searching out of God, may so hold our wit suspended with admiration, that it may there-In Pſal. hall throughly moue vs with effectuall feeling. And, as Auguſtine 144. cheth in an other place, becauſe we are not able to cõceiue him, behoueth vs as it were fainting vnder the burden of his greatneſſe, looke vnto his workes, that we may be refreshed with his goodnes.

Then such a knowledge ought not only to stirre vs vp to the rshipping of God, but also to awake vs, and raise vs to hope of the to come. For when we consider that such examples as God she-th both of his mercifulneſſe, and of his seueritie, are but begun not halfe full: without dout we muſt thinke, that herein he doth make a shew aforehand of those things, whereof the open disclo-g and full deliuerance is differred vnto an other life. On the other e, when we see that the godly are by the vngodly greued with af-tions, troubled with iniuries, oppreſſed with sclaunders, and vexed h despitefull dealings and reproches: contrarywise that wicked ers do florish, prosper, and obteine quiet with honor, yea and that punished: we muſt byandby gather that there shalbe an other life, erin is layd vp in store both due reuenge for wickedneſſe, and re-rd for rightuousneſſe. Moreouer when we note that the faithfull often chastised with the roddes of the Lord, we may most cer-nly determine that much leſſe the vngodly shal escape his scourges.

De ciui. dei cap. 8. For very well is that ſpoken of Auguſtin. If euery ſinne ſhould be puniſhed with open peine, it would be thought that nothing reſerued to the laſt iudgement. Again, if God ſhould now openly niſh no ſinne, it would be beleued, that there were no prouiden

God, but principally in the vniuerſall generalitie of them, the po of God are ſette forth as it were in painted tables, by which all kinde is prouoked and allured to the knowledge of him, and knowledge to full and perfect felicitie. But where as theſe his po in this point we all are moſt like together, that we all, not one excepted, doe depart from the one true God to monſtruous trifles. To which diſeaſe not onely common and groſſe wits are ſubiect: but alſo the moſt excellent and thoſe that otherwiſe are endued with ſingular ſharpnes of vnderſtanding, are entangled with it. How largely hath the whole ſect of Philoſophers bewraied their owne dullnes and beaſtly ignorance in this behalfe? For, to paſſe ouer all the reſt, which are much more vnreaſonably fooliſh, Plato himſelfe the moſt religious & moſt ſober of all the reſt, vainly erreth in his round globe. Now what might not chance to the other, when the cheefe of them, whoſe parte was to geue light to the reſt, do themſelues ſo erre and ſtumble? Likewiſe where Gods gouernance of mens matters doth ſo plainly proue his prouidence, that it can not be denied, yet this doth no more preuail with men, than if they beleued that all things are toſſed vp and down with the raſh will of Fortune: ſo great is our inclination to vanity and error. I ſpeake now altogether of the moſt excellent, and not of the common ſort, whoſe madnes hath infinitely wandered in profaning the truth of God.

11 Heereof proceedeth that vnmeaſurable ſink of errors, wherewith the whole world hath bin filled and ouerflowne. For ech mannes wit is to himſelfe as a maze, ſo that it is no maruell that euery ſeuerall nation was diuerſly drawen into ſeuerall deuiſes, and not that only, but alſo that ech ſeuerall man had his ſeuerall gods by himſelfe. For ſince that raſh preſumption and wantonnes was ioined to ignorance & darkeneſſe, there hath bin ſcarcely at any time any one man found, that did not forge to himſelfe an idole or fanſie in ſteede of God. Truely euen as out of a wide and large ſpring do iſſue waters, ſo the infinite number of Gods hath flowed out of the wit of man, while euery man ouer licenciouſly ſtraying, erroneouſly deuiſeth this or that concerning God himſelfe. And yet I nede not here to make a regiſter of the ſuperſtitions, wherewith the world hath bin entangled: becauſe both in ſo doing I ſhould neuer haue end, and alſo though I ſpeake not one word of them, yet by ſo many corruptions it ſufficiently appeareth how horrible is the blindnes of mans minde. I paſſe ouer the rude & vnlearned people. But amõg the Philoſophers, which enterpriſed with reaſon & learning to pearce into heauẽ, how ſhamefull is the diſagreement? With the higher wytte that any of thẽ was endued, and filled with arte and ſcience, with ſo much the more glorious coloures he ſeemed to paint out his opinion. All which notwithſtanding, if one do narowly looke vpon, he ſhall finde them to be but vaniſhing falſe colours. The Stoickes ſeemed in their owne con-ceite to ſpeake very wiſely, that out of all the partes of nature m be gathered diuers names of God, and yet that God being but one not thereby torne in ſunder. As though we were not already mo than enough enclined to vanity, vnleſſe a manifold plenty of gods this ſo confuſe diuerſity emboldned the Epicures & other groſſe def when they ſaw the wiſeſt of all to ſtriue in contrary opiniōs, they ſt ked not out of their diſagreements, & out of the fooliſh or apparan erroneous doctrine of ech of them, to gather, that men do in vain fondly procure torments to themſelues while they ſerche for G which is none at all. And this they thought that they might freely without puniſhment, becauſe it was better breefely to deny vtte that there is any God, than to fayne vncertaine Gods, and ſo to r vp contentions that neuer ſhould haue ende. And to much fondly they reaſon, or rather caſt a miſt, to hide their vngodlineſſe by ig rance of men, whereby it is no reaſon that any thing ſhould be ta away from God. But foraſmuch as all do confeſſe, that there is thing, about which both the learned and vnlearned do ſo much d to worſhip. And truly the beſt lawmakers that euer were, proceded no further, than to ſaie that religion was grounded vpon common conſent. Yea and in Xenophon Socrates praiſed the anſwere of Apol-lo, wherin he willed that euery man ſhould worſhip gods after the maner of the countrey, and the cuſtome of his owne citie. But how come mortall men by this power, of their owne authoritie to deter-mine that which farre ſurmounteth the world? or who can ſo reſte in the decrees of the elders, or common ordinaunces of peoples, as to ceaue without douting a God deliuered by mannes deuiſe? Euery man rather will ſtand to his owne iudgement, than yeld him ſelfe to the will of an other. Sith therfore it is to weake and feble a bonde godlineſſe, in worſhipping of God to folow either a cuſtom of a co or the conſent of antiquitie, it remaineth that God him ſelfe muſt ſtifie of him ſelfe from heauen.

13 In vaine therfore ſo many lampes lightned do ſhine in the fice of the world, to ſhew forth the glory of the creator, which do euery way diſplay their beames vpon vs, that yet of them ſelues th can not bring vs into the right way. In the ages paſt (ſaith he) God ſuffred the nations to wal their owne waies: yet he left not him ſelfe without teſtimonie, d good from heauen, geuing ſhowres and fruitfull ſeaſons, fillyng hartes of men with foode & gladneſſe. Howſoeuer therfore the l be not without teſtimonie, while with his greate and manyfold b tyfulneſſe he ſweetly allureth men to the knowledge of him: yet all that, they ceſſe not to folow their owne waies, that is to ſay, damnable errors.

14 But although we want natural power, wherby we can not cli vp vnto the pure and cleare knowledge of God, yet bycauſe the of our dulneſſe is in our ſelues, therfore all colour of excuſe is cut way from vs. For we can not ſo pretende ignorance, but that euen conſcience doth ſtill condemne vs of ſlouthfulneſſe and vnthank neſſe. It is a defenſe forſooth right worthy to be receiued, if man allege that he wanted eares to heare the truth, for the publiſ wherof the very dombe creatures haue lowde voices: if man ſhal that he can not ſee thoſe thinges with his eyes, which the creat without eyes do ſhew him: if man ſhall lay for his excuſe the fe neſſe of his wit, where all creatures without reaſon do inſtruct herefore ſith all things do ſhew vs the right way, we are worthily from all excuſe of our wandering and ſtraying out of the way. how ſoeuer it is to be imputed to the fault of men, that they do ndby corrupt the ſeede of the knowledge of God, ſowen in their ndes by maruelous workmanſhip of nature, ſo that it groweth not good & cleane fruite: yet it is moſt true, that we are not ſufficiently ructed by that bare and ſimple teſtimony, that the creatures do ho- rably declare of Gods glory. For ſo ſoone as we haue taken by the holding of the world a ſmale taſt of the Godhead, we leauing the e God do in ſteade of him raiſe vp dreames and fanſies of our own yne, and do conuey hither and thither from the true fountaine the iſe of righteouſnes, wiſdom, goodneſſe and power. Moreouer we ſo either obſcure, or by ill eſteeming them, depraue his daily do- gs, that we take away both from them their glory, and from the au- or his due praiſe.

The vj. Chapter.

That, to attaine to God the Creator, it is nedefull to haue the Scripture to be our guide and maiſtreſſe.

THerefore although that ſame brightneſſe, which both in hea- uen and earth ſhineth in the eyes of all men, doth ſufficiently take away all defence from the wickedneſſe of men, euen ſo as God, to wrap all mankind in one giltines, doth ſhew his di- ne maieſtie to all without exception as it were portrayed out in s creatures: yet is it neceſſary that we haue alſo an other & a better lpe that may rightly direct vs to the very creator of the world. herfore not in vaine he hath added the light of his word, that ther- y he mought be knowen to ſaluacion. And this prerogatiue he hath ouchesaued to giue to vs, whom it pleaſed him more nerely and ore familiarly to draw together to himſelfe. For becauſe he ſaw the indes of all men to be caried about with wandering and vnſtedfaſt otion, after he had choſen the Iewes to his peculiar flocke, he com- aſſed them in as it were with barres, that they ſhould not wander out vanity as other did. And not without cauſe he holdeth vs with the me meane in the true knowledge of himſelfe. For otherwiſe euen ey ſhould quickly ſwarue away that ſeeme to ſtand ſtedfaſt in com- riſon of other. For as old men, or poore blind, or they whoſe eyes e dimme ſighted, if you lay a fayre booke before them, though they erceiue that there is ſomwhat wrytten therin, yet can they not read o words together: but being holpē with ſpectacles ſet betwene thē it, they begin to read diſtinctly: ſo the Scripture gathering vp together in our minds the knowledge of God, which otherwiſe is bu fuſed, doth remoue the miſt, and plainly ſhew vs the true God. T therfore is a ſingular gift, that to the inſtructiō of his church god not only dumme teachers, but alſo openeth his own holy mouth only publiſheth that there is ſome God to be worſhipped, but therwithall pronounceth that he himſelfe is the ſame God whom ought to worſhip : and doth not only teache the elect to looke God, but alſo preſenteth himſelfe vnto them to be looked vpon. T order hath he kept frō the beginning toward his church, beſide th common inſtructions to giue them alſo his word. Which is the ter & certainer marke to know him by. And it is not to be douted, th Adam, Noe, Abraham and the reſt of the fathers by this helpe att ned to that familiar knowledge, which made them as it were ſeuer different from the vnbeleuers. I ſpeake not yet of the proper doctr of faith, wherewith they were enlightened into the hope of eter life. For, that they might paſſe from death to life, it was nedefull them to know God not onely to be the creator, but alſo the redee as doutleſſe they obteined both by the word. For that kinde of kno ledge wherby was giuen to vnderſtand who is the God by whom world was made and is gouerned, in order came before the other then was that other inward knowledge adioyned, which onely qui neth dead ſoules, whereby God is knowen not only to be the ma of the world and the only author & iudge of all things that are do but alſo to be the redemer in the perſon of that mediator. But bec I am not yet come to the fall of the world and corruption of nat I will omit alſo to entreate of the remedy thereof. Therefore let readers remember that I do not yet ſpeake of the couenaunt whe God hath adopted to himſelfe the children of Abrahā, & of that cial parte of doctrine whereby the faithfull haue alway bin pecul ſeuered from the prophane natiōs: becauſe that doctrine was four vpon Chriſt : but I ſpeake how we ought to learne by the Script that God which is the creator of the world, is by certaine marke uerally diſcerned from the counterfait multitude of falſe Gods. then the order it ſelfe ſhall conueniently bring vs to the redeme although we ſhall alleage many teſtimonies out of the newe T ment, & ſome alſo out of the law & the Prophets, wherein is exp mencion made of Chriſt : yet they ſhall all tend to this end, to p that in the ſcripture is diſcloſed vnto vs God the creator of the w & in the Scripture is ſet foorth what we ought to think of him, t end that we ſhould not ſeke about the buſh for an vncertain godh

2 But whether God were knowen to the fathers by oracles & or whether by the mean & miniſtration of mé he informed them at which they ſhould from hand to hand deliuer to their poſte-yet it is vndoutedly true that in their harts was engrauen a ſtedfaſt ainty of doctrine, ſo as they might be perſwaded & vnderſtād, that hich they had learned came frō God. For God alwayes made vned aſſurance for credit of his word, which farre exceeded all vn-aine opinion. At length that by cōtinuall proceeding of doctrine, rueth ſuruiuing in all ages might ſtill remaine in the worlde, the e oracles which he had left with the fathers, his pleaſure was to e as it were enrolled in publike tables. For this entent was the law liſhed, whereunto after were added the Prophets for expoſitors. though there were diuerſe vſes of the law, as herafter ſhall better eare in place conuenient: and ſpecially the principall purpoſe of iſes and all the Prophets was to teach the manner of recōciliation wene God and men, for which cauſe alſo Paule calleth Chriſt the Ro.10.4 of the law: yet, as I ſay once againe, beſide the proper doctrine of h and repentance which ſheweth forth Chriſt the mediatour, the pture doth by certaine marks and tokens paint out the onely and God, in that that he hath created and doth gouerne the world, he end he ſhould be ſeuerally knowen and not reckned in the falſe nber of fained Gods. Therefore although it behoueth man early to bend his eyes to conſider the works of God, foraſmuch as he t as it were in this gorgeous ſtage to be a beholder of them: yet ncipally ought he to bend his eares to the word, that he may bet-profit thereby. And therefore it is no maruell that they which are me in darkneſſe do more & more waxe hard in their amaſed dulnes, auſe very fewe of thē do giue themſelues pliable to learne of the d of God, whereby to kepe them within their boundes, but they er reioiſe in their own vanity. Thus thē ought we to hold, that to end true religion may ſhine amōg vs, we muſt take our beginning he heauenly doctrine. And that no man can haue any taſt be it neſo little of true and ſound doctrine, vnleſſe he haue bin ſcholer to Scripture. And from henſe groweth the originall of true vnderding, that we reuerently embrace whatſoeuer it pleaſeth God ther-o teſtifie of himſelfe. For not only the perfect & in all pointes ab-te faith, but alſo all right knowledge of God ſpringeth from obe-nce. And truely in this behalfe God of his ſingular prouidēce hath uided for men in and for all ages.

For if we conſider how ſlippery an inclinatiō mans minde hath lide into forgetfulnes of God, how great a redines to fall in to all de of errors, how great a luſt to forge oftentimes new & coūterfait religions, we may therby perceiue how neceſſarie it was to haue heauenly doctrine ſo put in writing, that it ſhould not either pe by forgetfulnes, or grow vaine by errour, or be corrupted by bold of men. Sith therefore it is manifeſt that God hath alway vſed helpe of his word, toward all thoſe whom it pleaſed him at any frutefully to inſtruct, becauſe he forſaw that his image emprinted moſt beautiful forme of the world was not ſufficiētly effectuall: The fore it behoueth vs to trauaile this ſtraight way, if we earneſtly co to attaine to the true beholding of God. We muſt, I ſay, come to word, wherin God is well and liuely ſet out by his workes, when workes be weyed not after the peruerſneſſe of our owne iudgeme but according to the rule of the eternall trueth. If we ſwarue fr that word, as I ſaied euen now, although we runne neuer ſo faſt, we ſhall neuer attain to the marke, becauſe the courſe of our runn is out of the way. For thus we muſt thinke, that the brightneſſe of 1. Tim. 6 16. face of God, which the Apoſtle calleth ſuch as cannot be atteined to, is vnto vs like a maze, out of which we cannot vnwrap our ſel therfore this is the peculiar ſchoole of the children of God. The meaning hath the xxix. Pſalme, where the Prophet hauing prea of the terrible voice of God, which in thunder, windes, ſho whirlewindes and ſtormes, ſhaketh the earth, maketh the mount to tremble, and breaketh the cedre trees: in the ende at laſt he g ther and ſaith, that his praiſes are ſong in the ſanctuarie, becauſe unbeleuers are deafe and heare not all the voices of God that re-ſounde in the aire. And in like manner in an other Pſalme, after that he had deſcribed the terrible waues of the Sea, he thus concludeth: Pſa. 93. 5. Thy teſtimonies are verified, the beauty of thy temple is holyneſſe for euer. And out of this meaning alſo proceded that which Chriſt ſaid to the woman of Samaria, that her nation and the reſt did honor that which they knew not, and that onely the Iewes did worſhip the true God. For wheras the wit of man by reaſon of the febleneſſe therof can by no meane attain vnto God, but being holpen and lifted vp by the holy word, it folowed of neceſſitie, that all men, excepte the Iewes, did wander in vanite and errour, becauſe they ſought God without his word. Iohn 4. 22.

By what teſtimonie the Scripture ought to be eſtabliſhed, that is by the witneſſe of the holy Ghoſt, that the authoritie therof may remaine certain. And that it is a wicked inuention to ſay that the credit therof doeth hang vpon the iudgement of the Church.

BVT before I go any further, it is nedefull to ſay ſomwhat of the authoritie of the Scripture, not only to prepare mens mindes to reuerence it, but alſo to take away all dout therof. Now, when it is a matter confeſſed that it is the word of God that is here ſette forth, there is no man of ſo deſperate boldneſſe, vnleſſe he be voide of all common ſenſe and naturall wit of man, that dare debate the credit of him that ſpeaketh it. But becauſe there are not onely oracles geuen from heauen, and the only Scriptures remaine therin it hath pleaſed the Lord to preſerue his truth to perpetual memorie, the ſame Scripture by none other meanes is of full credit among the faithfull, but in that they do beleue that it is as verely come from heauen as if they heard the liuely voice of God to ſpeake therin. This matter in deede is right worthy both to be largly entreated of and diligently weyed. But the readers ſhall pardon me if herein I rather regarde what the proportion of the worke which I haue begon may beare, than what the largeneſſe of the matter requireth. There is growen vp among the moſt part of men a moſt hurtfull error, that the Scripture hath only ſo much authority as by common conſent of the Church is geuen vnto it: as if the eternall and inuiolable truethe of God did reſt vpon the pleaſure of men. For ſo, to the great ſcorne of the holy Goſt, they aſke of vs who can aſſure vs that theſe Scriptures came from God: or who can aſſertaine vs that they haue continued vnto our age ſafe and vncorrupted: who can perſwade vs, that this one booke ought to be reuerently receiued, and that other to be ſtriken out of the number of Scripture, vnles the church did appoint a certaine rule of all theſe things? It hangeth therfore (ſay they) vpon the determination of the church, both what reuerence is due to the Scripture, & what bookes are to be reckened in the canon therof. So theſe robbers of Gods honor, while they ſeeke vnder colour of the church to bring in an vnbrideled tyránny, care nothing with what abſurdities they ſnare both themſelues and other, ſo that they may enforce this one thing to be beleued among the ſimple, that the church can do all thinges. But if it be ſo: what ſhall become of the poore conſciences that ſeeke ſtedfaſt aſſurance of eternall life, if all the promiſes that remaine thereof ſtand and be ſtaied onely vpon the iudgement of men? When they receiue ſuch anſwere, ſhall they ceaſe to wauer and tremble? Again to what ſcornes of the vngodly is our faith made ſubiect? into how great ſuſpicion with all men is it brought, if this be beleued that it hath but as it were a borowed credit by the fauour of men.

2 But ſuch bablers are well confuted euen with one word of the Apoſtle. He teſtifieth that the church is builded vpon the foundation of the Prophets and Apoſtles. If the doctrine of the Prophets, and Apoſtles be the foundacion of the Church: then muſt it needes be, that the ſame doctrine ſtode in ſtedfaſt certaintie, before that the Church began to be. Nether can they well cauil, that although the Church take her firſt beginning therof, yet it remaineth doutfull what is to be ſayed the writinges of the Prophetes and Apoſtles, vnleſſe the iudgement of the Church did declare it. For if the Chriſtian Church were at the beginning builded vpon the writinges of the Prophetes and preaching of the Apoſtles: whereſoeuer that doctrine ſhalbe foũd, the allowed credite therof was ſurely before the Church, without which the Church it ſelfe had neuer bin. Therfore it is a vaine forged deuiſe, that the Church hath power to iudge the Scripture, ſo as the certaintie of the Scripture ſhould be thought to hang vpon the will of the Church. Wherfore when the Church doth receiue the Scripture and ſealeth it with her conſenting teſtimonie, ſhe doth not of a thing doutfull, and that otherwiſe ſhould be in controuerſie, make it authentike and of credit: but becauſe ſhe acknowledgeth it to be the truth of her God, according to her dutie of godlineſſe without delay ſhe doth honor it. Wheras they demaũd, how ſhall we be perſwaded that it came from God, vnleſſe we reſort to the decree of the Church? This is all one as if a man ſhould aſke, how ſhall we learne to know light from from darkneſſe, white from blacke, or ſwete from ſower. For the Scripture ſheweth in it ſelfe no leſſe apparaunt ſenſe of her trueth, than white and blacke things do of their colour, or ſwete & ſower things of their taſt.

3 I know that they commonly alleage the ſaying of Auguſtine, where he ſayth that he would not beleue the Goſpell, ſaue that the authority of the church moued him therto. But how vntruely & cauillouſly it is alleged for ſuch a meaning, by the whole tenor of his wryting it is eaſy to perceiue, He had to do with the Manichees, which required to be beleued without gaineſaying, when they vaunted that they had the truth on their ſide, but proued it not. And to make their Manicheus to be beleued, they pretēded the Goſpel. Now Auguſtine asketh thē what they would do, if they did light vpō a man that would not beleue the Goſpell it ſelfe, with what maner of perſwaſion they would draw him to their opiniō. Afterward he ſayeth. I my ſelf would not beleue the Goſpell. &c. ſaue that the authority of the church moued me therto. Meaning that he himſelfe, when he was a ſtraunger frō the faith, could not otherwiſe be brought to embrace the Goſpel for the aſſured trueth of God, but by this that he was ouercom with the authority of the church. And what maruell is it, if a man not yet knowing Chriſt, haue regarde to men? Auguſtine therfore doth not there teach that the faith of the godly is grounded vpō the authority of the church nor meaneth that the certainty of the goſpel doth hang therpō: but ſimply & only, that there ſhould be no aſſurednes of the Gospell to the infidels, whereby they might be won to Chriſt vnleſſe the conſent of the church did driue them vnto it. And the ſame meaning a little before he doth plainly cōfirme in this ſaying. Whē I ſhall praiſe that which I beleue, & ſcorne that which thou beleueſt, what thinkeſt thou mete for vs to iudge or do? but that we forſake ſuch men as firſt call vs to come & know certaine truethes and after commaunde vs to beleue things vncertaine: and that we follow them that require vs firſt to beleue that which we are not yet able to ſee, that being made ſtrōg by beleuing we may attaine to vnderſtād the thing that we beleue: not then now, but God himſelfe inwardly ſtrengthning and giuing light to our minde. Theſe are the very words of Auguſtine: wherby euery mā may eaſely gather, that the holy man had not this meaning, to hang the credite that we haue to the Scriptures vpon the will and awarde-ment of the church, but onely to ſhew this, (which we our ſelues alſo do confeſſe to be true) that they which are not yet lightned with the ſpirite of God, are brought by the reuerēce of the church vnto a willingneſſe to be taught, ſo as they can finde in their hartes to learne the faith of Christ by the Gospell: and that thus by this meane the authority of the church is an introduction, whereby we are prepared to beleue the Gospell. For, as we see, his minde is that the assurance of the godly be stayed vpon a far other foundation. Otherwise I do not deny but that he often presseth the Manichees with the consent of the whole church, when he seketh to proue the same Scripture which they refused. And from hence it came, that he so reproched Faustus for that he did not yeld himselfe to the trueth of the Gospel so groūded, so stablished, so gloriously renomed, & from the very time of the Apostles by certaine successions perpetually commended. But he neuer trauaileth to this end, to teach that the authority which we acknowledge to be in the Scripture, hangeth vpon the determination or decree of men. But only this, which made much for him in the matter ẏ he disputed of, he bringeth forth the vniuersall iudgement of the church, wherin he had the auaũtage of his aduersaries. If any desire a fuller profe herof, let him reade his booke cõcerning the profit of beleuing. Where he shall finde that there is no other redinesse of belefe commended vnto vs by him, but that which only giueth vs an entrance, and is vnto vs a conuenient beginning to enquire, as he termeth it: but yet not that we ought to rest vpon bare opinion, but to leane to the certaine and sound trueth.

Contra Faustũ lib. 32.

Aug. de vtilitate cred.

4 We ought to holde, as I before sayd, that the credit of this doctrine, is not established in vs, vntil such time as we be vndoutedly perswaded that God is the author thereof. Therfore the principall proofe of the Scripture is commonly taken of the person of God the speaker of it. The Prophetes and Apostles bost not of their owne sharpenesse or any such things as procure credit to men that speake: neither stay they vpon proues by reason, but they bring foorth the holy name of God, therby to cõpell the whole world to obedience. Now we have to see how not only by probable opinion, but by apparant trueth it is euidẽt, that in this behalfe the name of God is not without cause nor deceitfully pretended. If then we will prouide well for consciences that they be not cõtinually caried about with vnstedfast douting, nor may wauer, nor stay at euery smale stop, this maner of persuasion must be fetched deper then from either the reasons, iudgements or the coniectures of men, euen from the secrete testimony of the holy Ghost. True in deede it is, that if we listed to worke by way of argument many thinges might be alleged that may easily proue, if there be any God in heauen, that the law, the prophecies and the Gospell came from him. Yea although men learned and of depe iudgement would stand vp to the contrary, and would employ & shew foorth the whole force of their wits in this disputation: yet if they be not so hardened as to become desperatly shameless, they would be compelled to cõfesse, that there are seene in the Scripture manifest tokens that it is God that speaketh therin: whereby it may appeare that the doctrine therof is frõ heauẽ. And shortly herafter we shal see, that all the books of the holy Scripture do far excel all other writings what soeuer they be. Yea if we bring thither pure eyes & vncorrupted senses, we shall foorthwith finde there the maiestie of God, which shall subdue all hardnesse of gainesaying and enforce vs to obey him. But yet they do disorderly, that by disputation trauel to establish the perfect credit of the Scripture. And truely although I am not furnished with great dexterity, nor eloquence: yet if I were to cõtend with the most suttle despisers of God, that haue a desire to shew themselues witty and pleasaũt in febling the authority of Scripture, I trust it should not be hard for me to put to silẽce their bablings. And if it were profitable to spẽd labour in confuting their cauillations, I would with no great businesse shake in sunder the bragges that they mutter in corners. But though a man do deliuer the sound word of God from the reproches of men, yet that sufficeth not foorthwith to fasten in their harts that assuredhesse that godlines requireth. Prophane men becausse they thinke religion standeth only in opiniõ, to the end they would beleue nothing fondly or lightly, do couet and require to haue it proued to them by reason, that Moises & the Prophetes spake from God. But I answere that the testimony of the holy Ghost is better than all reason. For as only God is a conuenient witnesse of himselfe in his owne worde, so shall the same word neuer finde credit in the hartes of men, vntill it be sealed vp with the inward witnes of ỹ holy Ghost. It behoueth therefore of necessity that the same holy Ghost which spak by the mouth of the Prophetes, do enter into our hartes to perswade vs that they faythfully vttered that which was by God commaunded them. And this order is very aptly set foorth by Esay in these wordes. My spirite Esay 51. which is in thee and the words that I haue put in thy mouth & in the 16.

mouth of thy sede shall not faile for euer. It greueth some good men, that they haue not ready at hand some cleare prose to allege, when the wicked do without punishmẽt murmure against the word of God: As though the holy Ghost were not for this cause called both a seale and a pledge, becausse vntill he do lighten mens mindes they do alway wauer among many doutings.

5 Let this therfore stand for a certainly perswaded truth, that they whom the holy Gost hath inwardly taught, do wholely rest vppon the Scripture, and that the same Scripture is to be credited for it selfe ſake, and ought not to be made ſubiect to demonſtration & reaſon but yet that the certainety which it getteth among vs, it atteineth by the witneſſe of the holy Ghoſt. For though by the only maieſty of it ſelfe it procureth reuerẽce to be giuen to it: yet then only it through-ly perceth our affections, when it is ſealed in our hartes by the holy Ghoſt. So being lightened by his vertue, we do then beleue, not by our owne iudgement, or other mens, that the Scripture is from God but aboue all mans iudgement we hold it moſt certainly determined, euen as if we beheld the maieſty of God himſelfe there preſent, that by the miniſtery of men it came to vs frõ the very mouth of God. We ſeeke not for argumentes & likelihodes to reſt our iudgement vpon but as to a thing without all compaſſe of cõſideration, we ſubmit our iudgement & wit vnto it. And that not in ſuch ſorte as ſome are wont ſometime haſtily to take holde of a thing vnknowen, which after being throughly perceiued diſpleaſeth them: but becauſe we are in our conſciences well aſſured that we hold an inuincible trueth. Neither in ſuch ſorte, as ſilly men are wont to yeld their minde in thraldom to ſuperſtitions: but becauſe we vndoutedly perceiue therin the ſtrength & breathing of the diuine maieſtie, wherewith we are drawen & ſtirred to obey, both wittingly and willingly, and yet more liuely and Eſa. 43. effectually than mans will or witte can attaine. And therfore for good 10. cauſe doth God cry out by Eſay, that the Prophetes with the whole people do beare him witneſſe, becauſe being taught by prophecies they did vndoutedly beleue without guile or vncertainty that God himſelfe had ſpoken. Such therfore is our perſwaſion, as requireth no reaſons: ſuch is our knowledge, as hath a right good reaſon to maintaine it, euẽ ſuch a one, wherein the minde more aſſuredly & ſtedfaſt-ly reſteth thã vpõ any reaſons: ſuch is our feeling, as can not proceede but by reuelation from heauen. I ſpeake now of none other thing but that which euery one of the faithfull doth by experiẽce finde in him-ſelfe, ſauing that my words do much want of a full declaration of it. I leaue here many things vnſpokẽ, becauſe there wil be elſwhere again a cõuenient place to entreate of this matter. Only now let vs know, that only that is the true faith which the ſpirite of God doth ſeale in our harts. Yea with this only reaſon will the ſober reader and willing Eſa. 54. to learne, be contented. Eſay promiſeth, that al the children of the re-13. nued church ſhalbe the ſcholers of God. A ſingular priuilege there doth God vouchſaue to graunt to his elect onely, whom he ſeuereth from all the reſt of mankinde. For what is the beginning of true doctrine, but a ready cherefulneſſe to here the voice of God? But God requireth to be heard by the mouth of Moiſes, as it is wrytten ſay not n thy harte, who ſhall aſcend into heauen, or who ſhall deſcend into he depe? the word is euen in thine owne mouth. If it be the pleaſure of God that this treaſure of vnderſtanding be layd vp in ſtore for his children, it is no maruell nor vnlikely, that in the common multitude of men is ſeene ſuch ignorance and dulneſſe. The common multitude I call euen the moſt excellent of thē, vntil ſuch time as they be graffed into the body of the church. Moreouer Eſay giuing warning that the Prophets doctrine ſhould ſeeme incredible not only to ſtrangers but alſo to the Iewes that would be accompted of the houſehold of God addeth this reaſon: becauſe the arme of God ſhal not be reueled to all men. So oft therfore as the ſmallneſſe of number of the beleuers doth trouble vs, on the other ſide let vs call to minde, that none can comprehende the miſteries of God but they to whom it is giuen.

Deu. 30 12. Ro. 10. 6 Eſa. 53. 1

That ſo farre as mans reaſon may beare, there are ſufficient proues to ſtablish the credit of Scripture.

VNleſſe we haue this aſſurance, which is both more excellent & of more force than any iudgement of man, in vaine ſhall the authority of Scripture eyther be ſtrengthened with argumentes, or ſtabliſhed with conſent of the church, or confirmed with any other meanes of defence. For vnleſſe this fundation be layd, it ſtill remayneth hanging in doute. As on the other ſide when exempting it from the common ſtate of thinges, we haue embraced it deuoutly and according to the worthineſſe of it: then theſe things become very fit helpes, which before were but of ſmall force to graffe and faſten the aſſurance thereof in our mindes. For it is marueloſus, how great eſtabliſhement groweth hereof, when with earneſt ſtudy we conſider howe orderly and well framed a diſpoſition of the diuine wiſdom appeareth therein, how heauenly a doctrine in euery place of it, and nothing ſauoring of earthlyneſſe, how beautifull an agreement of all the partes among themſelues, and ſuch other thinges as auaile to procure a maieſty to wrytings. But more perfectly are our hartes confirmed when we conſider, howe we are euen violently caried to an admiration of it rather with dignity of matter, than with grace of words. For this alſo was not done without the ſingular prouidēce of God, that the hye miſteries of the heauēly kingdom ſhould for the moſt part be vttered vnder a contemptible baſenes of wordes, leaſt if it had bin beautified with more glorious ſpeache the wicked ſhould cauill that the onely force of eloquence doth raigne therein. But when that rough and in a maner rude ſimplicity doth raiſe vp a greater reuerence of it ſelfe than any Rhetoricians eloquence, what may we iudge, but that there is a more mighty ſtrēgth of truth in the holy Scripture, than that it nedeth any art of wordes? Not without cauſe therefore the Apoſtle maketh his argument, to proue that the 1.Cor.2 faith of the Corinthians was grounded vpon the power of God and

4. not vpon mans wiſdom, becauſe his preaching among them was ſet forth not with enticing ſpech of mans wiſdom, but in plaine euidence of the ſpirite and of power. For the trueth is then ſette free from all douting, when not vpholden by foraine aides it ſelfe alone ſuffiſeth to ſuſteine it ſelfe. But how this power is properly alone belonging to the Scripture, hereby appeareth, that of all the wrytinges of men, be they neuer ſo cunningly garniſhed, no one is ſo farre able to pearce our affections. Read Demoſthenes or Cicero, read Plato, Ariſtotle, or any other of all that ſorte: I graunt they ſhall maruelouſly allure, delite, moue, and rauiſh thee. But if from them thou come to this holy reading of Scriptures, wilt thou or not, it ſhall ſo liuely moue thy affections, it ſhall ſo pearce thy hart, it ſhall ſo ſettle within thy bones, that in cōpariſon of the efficacy of this feeling, all that force of Rhetoricians and Philoſophers ſhall in manner vaniſh away: ſo that it is eaſie to perceiue that the Scriptures, which do far excell all gifts and graces of mans induſtrie: do in deede breath out a certayne diuinitie.

2 I graunt in deede, that ſom of the Prophets haue an elegāt cleanſe yea & a beautifull phraſe of ſpeeche, ſo as their eloquence giueth not place to the prophane wryters: & by ſuch examples it pleaſed the holy Ghoſt to ſhew that he wanted not eloquence, though in the reſt he vſed a rude and groſſe ſtile. But whether a man reade Dauid, Eſay, and ſuch like, who haue a ſwete and pleaſant flowing ſpeech, or Amos, the heardman, Hieremie and Zacharie, whoſe rougher talke ſauoreth of countrey rudeneſſe: in euery one of them ſhall appeare that maieſtie of the holy Ghoſt that I ſpake of. Yet am I not ignorāt, that as Sathan is in many things a counterfaiter of God, that with deceitfull reſemblance he might the better creepe into ſimple mens mindes: ſo hath he craftily ſpread abroade with rude and in maner barbarous ſpeech Schole men & Cano niſtes. thoſe wicked errours wherewith he deceiued ſely men, and hath of times vſed diſcontinued phraſes, that vnder ſuch viſour he might hide his deceites. But how vaine and vncleanly is that curious counterfaiting, all men that haue but meane vnderſtanding do plainely ſee. As for the holy Scripture, although froward men labour to bite at many thinges, yet is it full of ſuch ſentences as could not be conceiued by man. Let all the Prophetes be looked vpon, there ſhall not one be found among them, but he hath farre excelled all mans capacity, in such sorte that those are to be thought, to haue no iudgement of tast to whom their doctrine is vnsauorie.

3 Other men haue largely entreated of this argument, wherfore at this time it suffiseth to touch but a fewe thinges, that chiefly make for the principall summe of the whole matter. Beside these points that I haue already touched, the very antiquity of the Scripture is of great weight. For how soeuer the Greke wryters tell many fables of the Ægyptian diuinity: yet there remaineth no monument of any religion, but that is farre inferiour to the age of Moses. And Moses deuiseth not a new God, but setteth foorth the same thing which the Israelites had receiued in long processe of time, conueied to them by their fathers as it were from hand to hand concerning the euerlasting God. For what doth he else but labour to call them backe to the couenaunt made with Abraham. If he had brought a thing neuer hearde of before, he had had no entrie to begin. But it must needs be that the deliueraunce from bondage, wherein they were deteyned, was a thing well and commonly knowen among them, so that the hearing of the mention thereof did foorthwith raise vp all their mindes. It is also likely that they were informed of the number of the CCCC. yeares. Now it is to be considered, if Moses which himselfe by so long distance of time was before all other wryters, do from a beginning so long before himselfe fetch the originall deliuerance of his doctrine: how much the holy Scripture then is beyonde all other wrytinges in antiquity.

4 Vnlesse perhappe some liste to beleue the Ægyptians, that stretch their auncienty to sixe thousand yeares before the creation of the world. But sith their vaine babbling hath bin alway scorned euen of all the prophane wryters themselues, there is no cause why I should spend labour in confuting of it. But Iosephus against Apion, alleageth testimonies worthy to be remembred out of auncient wryters, whereby may be gathered, that by consent of all nations the doctrine that is in the lawe hath bin famous euen from the first ages, although it were neither redde nor truely knowen. Now, that neither there should remaine to the malicious any cause of suspicion, nor to the wicked any occasion to cauill, God hath for both these daungers prouided good remedies. When Moises reherseth what Iacob almost three hundred yeares before had by heauenly inspiration pronounced vpon his owne posterity, how doth he set foorth his owne tribe? yea in the person of Leui he spotteth it with eternall infamie. Symeon (sayth he) & Leui the vessels of wickednesse. Ge. 49. 5 as an Angell of God.

iect agaynſt me, that I take theſe thinges as confeſſed, which are not out of controuerſie, it is eaſie to anſwere this cauillation. For ſeeing that Moſes in open aſſembly publiſhed all theſe thinges, what place was there to fayne before thoſe witneſſes that had themſelues ſeene the thinges done? It is likely forſooth that he would come among them, & rebuking the people of infidelity, ſtubbornes, vnthankfulnes & other ſinnes, would haue boſted that his doctrine was eſtabliſhed their own ſight with ſuch miracles, which in deede they neuer ſaw.

6 For this is alſo worthy to be noted, ſo ofte as he telleth of any miracles, he therwithall odiouſly ioyneth ſuch thinges as might ſtirre the whole people to crie out againſt him, if there had bin neuer ſo litle occaſion. Wherby appeareth, that they were by no other meane brought to agree vnto him, but becauſe they were euer more than ſufficiently conuinced by their owne experience. But becauſe the matter was plainlier knowen, than that the prophane coulde deny that miracles were done by Moſes: the father of lyeng hath miniſtred them other cauillation, ſaying that they were done by Magicall artes and ſorcerie. But what likely proofe haue they to accuſe him for a ſorcerer, which ſo farre abhorred from ſuch ſuperſtition, that he commaundeth to ſtone him to death, that doth but aſke counſell of ſorcerers and ſoothſaiers? Truely no ſuch deceiuer vſeth his iugglinge caſtes, but that he ſtudieth to amaſe the mindes of the people to get himſelfe a fame. But what doth Moſes? by this that he crieth out, that himſelfe and his brother Aaron are nothing, but doth onely execute thoſe thinges that God hath appointed, he doth ſufficiently wipe away all blottes of thinking euil of him. Now if the thinges themſelues be conſidered, what enchantement coulde bring to paſſe that Manna dayly raining from heauen, ſhould ſuffiſe to feede the people? and if any man keept in ſtore more than his iuſte meaſure, by the very rotting therof he ſhould be taught, that God did puniſh his want of beleefe? Beſide that, with many great proues God ſuffred his ſeruaunt ſo to be tried, that now the wicked can nothing preuayle with prating againſt him. For how oft did ſometime the people prowdely and impudently make inſurrections, ſometime diuers of them conſpiryng among them ſelues wente about to ouerthrow the holy ſeruaunt of God: how could he haue begyled their furour with illuſions? And the end that folowed plainly ſheweth, that by this meane his doctrine was ſtabliſhed to continue to the ende of all ages.

And when there were in the ſame houſe ſeuen brethren, who would haue ſaid that that honour ſhould light vpon the yongeſt? By what meane came he to hope to be a king? who can ſay that this annoitement was gouerned by any art, trauaile or policie of man, and not rather that it was a fulfilling of the heauenly prophecie? Likewiſe thoſe thinges that Moſes afore ſpeaketh, albeit darkely, concerning the Gentiles to be adopted into the conuenaunt of God, ſeing they came to paſſe almoſt two thouſand yeres after, do they not make it plaine that he ſpake by the inſpiration of God? I ouerſkip his other tellinges aforehand of thinges, which do ſo euidently ſauoure of the reuelation of God, that all men that haue their ſounde wit may plainly perceiue that it is God that ſpeaketh. To be ſhorte, that ſame one ſong of his, is a clere looking glaſſe, wherin God euidently appeareth.

Deuter. 32.

8 But in the other prophetes the ſame is yet alſo much more plainely ſeene. I will chooſe out only a few examples, becauſe to gather them all together were to greate a laboure. When in the time of Eſaie the kingdom of Iuda was in peace, yea when they thought that the Chaldees were to them ſome ſtay and defence, then did Eſaie prophecie of the deſtruction of the citie and exile of the people. But admitte that, yet this was no token plaine enough of the inſtinct of God, to tell long before of ſuch thinges as at that time ſeemed falſe, and afterward proued true: yet thoſe prophecies that he vttereth concerning their delyueraunce, whenſe ſhall we ſay that they proceded but from God? He nameth Cyrus by whom the Chaldees ſhould be ſubdued, and the people reſtored to libertie. There paſſed more than a hundred yeares from the time that Eſaie ſo prophecied before that Cyrus was borne: for Cyrus was borne in the hundreth yeare or thereaboutes after the death of Eſaie. No man could then geſſe that there ſhould be any ſuch Cyrus, that ſhould haue warre with the Babylonias, that ſhould bring ſubiect ſo mightie a monarchie vnder his dominion, and make an ende of the exile of the people of Iſraell. Doth not this bare tellyng without any garniſhment of wordes euidently ſhew, that the thinges that Eſaie ſpeaketh, are the vndoubted oracles of God, and not the coniectures of men? Again, when Ieremie a little before that the people was caried awaie, did determine the ende of the captiuitie within threſcore and tenne yeares, and promiſed returne and libertie, muſt it not needes be that his tongue was gouerned by the ſpirite of God? What ſhameleſneſſe ſhall it be to denie, that the credit of the prophetes was ſtabliſhed by ſuch proues, & that the ſame thing as fulfilled in dede, which they them ſelues do reporte to make their yinges to be beleued? Beholde, the former thinges are come to paſſe, d new thinges do I declare: before they come forth, I tell you of em. I leaue to ſpeake how Hieremie and Ezechiell beyng ſo farre onder, yet prophecying both at one time, they ſo agreed in all their yinges as if either one of them had endited the wordes for the other write. What did Daniel? Doth he not write continuing prophees of thinges to come for the ſpace of ſixe hundred yeares after, in ch ſorte as if he had compiled an hiſtorie of thinges already done nd commonly knowen? Theſe thinges if godly men haue well condered, they ſhall be ſufficiently well furniſhed, to appeaſe the baringes of the wicked. For the plaine proofe hereof is to cleare to be abiect to any cauillations at all.

9 I know what ſome learned men do prate in corners, to ſhew the uickneſſe of their witte in aſſaltyng the truth of God. For they denande, who hath aſſured vs that theſe thinges which are red vnder itle of their names, were euer written by Moſes and the prophetes.
Yea, they are ſo hardy to moue this queſtiō, whether euer there were ny ſuch Moſes or no. But if a manne ſhould call in doubt whether uer there were any Plato, or Ariſtotle, or Cicero, who would not ſay, hat ſuch madneſſe were worthy to be corrected with ſtrokes and rypes? The law of Moſes hath bin meruaylouſly preſerued rather y heauenly prouidence then by diligence of men. And though y the negligence of the Prieſtes it laie buried a littell while: yet ſins he time that the godly king Ioſias found it, it hath ſtill by continuall ucceſſion from age to age bin vſed in the handes of men. Neyther id Ioſias bring it forth as an vnknowen or new thing, but ſuch a thing s had bin euer commonly publiſhed, and wherof the remembraunce was at that time famous. The originall booke it ſelfe was appointed o be ſacredly kept in the temple, and a copie written out thereof, to emaine with the keepers of the kinges Recordes. Only this had hap-ened, that the Prieſtes had ceaſſed to publiſh the law according to he old accuſtomed maner, and the people them ſelues had neglected heir wounted reading of it. Yea there in maner paſſed no age wherin he eſtabliſhment therof was not confirmed and renued? They that had Dauid in their handes, knew they not of Moſes? But to ſpeake of them all at ones, it is moſt certaine that their writings came to poſte-ritie none otherwiſe but from hand to hand (as I may terme it) by continuall orderly courſe of yeres deliuered from their fathers, which had partly heard them ſpeake, & partly while the remembraunce was freſh of it, did lerne of them which herd them that they had ſo ſpoken.

1.Mac.1 10 As for that which they obiect out of the hiſtorie of the Ma-chabees, to miniſh the credite of ſcripture, it is ſuch a thing as nothin can be deuiſed more fitte to ſtabliſh the ſame. But firſt let vs wipe a way the colour that they lay vpon it, and then let vs turne vpon the 2. Mac. ſelues the engine that they raiſe vp againſt vs. When Antiochus (ſa theſe copies that we now haue? On the other ſide I aſke them, a what ſhop they could ſo ſone be made? It is euident, that after th crueltie appeaſed they were immediatly abrode again, and were with out controuerſy knowen to be the ſame of all godly men, that hauin bin brought vp in the doctrine of them did familiarly know them. Ye when all the wicked men beyng as it were conſpired togither, did n ſolently triumphe with reproches vpō the Iewes, yet neuer was there any that durſt lay to their charge falſe changing of their bookes. Fe what ſoeuer they thinke the Iewes religion to be, yet ſtill they think Moſes to be the authour of it. What then do theſe praters els, but bu wraie their owne more then doggiſh frowardeneſſe, while they falſe ly ſay that theſe bookes are chaunged, and new put in their place whoſe ſacred antiquitie is approued by conſente of all hiſtories? Be to ſpende no more labour vainly in cōfuting ſuch fooliſh cauillations let vs rather hereby conſider how great a care God had for the pre ſeruation of his word, when beyonde the hope of all men, he ſaued from the outrage of the moſt cruell tyrant, as out of a preſent fire that he endewed the godly prieſtes and other with ſo great cōſtancie that they ſticked not to redeeme this booke euen with loſſe of their life if neede were, and ſo to conuey it ouer to poſteritie: that he disappointed the narow ſearch of ſo many gouernours and ſouldiours.

Who can but acknowledge the notable and miraculous worke of God, that theſe ſacred monumētes which the wicked verely thought to haue bin vtterly deſtroyed, byandby came abroade againe as fully reſtored, and that with a greate deale more honour. For byandby folowed the tranſlating of them into Greke, to publiſh them throughout the world. And not in this only appeared the miraculous work-king, that God preſerued the tables of his couenaunt from the bloudy proclamations of Antiochus: but alſo that among ſo manyfold mi-ſerable afflictions of the Iewes, wherwith the whole nation was ſom-time worne to a fewe and waſted, and laſt of all, brought in maner to vtter deſtruction, yet they remained ſtill ſafe and extant. The Hebrue tongue lay not only vneſteemed, but almoſt vnknowen. And ſurely had not bin Gods pleaſure to haue his religion prouided for, it had periſhed altogether. For how much the Iewes that were ſince their retourne tourne from exile, were ſwarued from the naturall vſe of their mo-er tongue, appeareth by the Prophetes, that liued in that age, which therefore worthy to be noted, becauſe by this compariſon the an-quitie of the law and the prophetes is the more plainely perceyued. nd by whom hath God preſerued for vs the doctrine of ſaluation onteyned in the law and the prophetes, to the end that Chriſt might his appointed time be openly ſhewed? euen by the moſt cruelly ente enemies of Chriſt, the Iewes, whom Sainct Auguſtine doeth erefore woorthyly call the keepers of the Librarie of Chriſtian hurch, becauſe they haue miniſtred vnto vs that thing, to reade herof, themſelues haue no vſe.

11 Now if we come to the new Teſtament, with how ſounde llers is the trueth thereof vpholden? The three Euangeliſtes write e hiſtorie in baſe and ſimple ſpeach. Manie prowde menne do loeth at ſimplicitie, becauſe they take no heede to the chiefe pointes of octrine therin, whereby it were eaſie to gather, that they entreate of eauenly miſteries aboue mannes capacitie. Surely who ſo euer haue ut one droppe of honeſt ſhame will be aſhamed if they reade the ſt chapter of Luke. Now, the ſermons of Chriſt, the ſumme wherof ſhortly compriſed by theſe three Euangeliſtes, do eaſely deliuer eir writinges from all contempte. But Ihon thundering from on ie, thoſe whom he cõpelleth not to obedience of faith, he throweth owne their ſtubbourneſſe more mightily than any thũderbolt. Now t come forth all theſe ſharpnoſed faultfinders, that haue a great plea-re to ſhake the reuerence of ſcripture out of their owne and other ens heartes, let them reade Iohns Goſpell: Will they or no, they all there finde a thouſande ſentences that may at leaſt awaken their uggiſheneſſe, yea that may printe a horrible brande in their con-iences to reſtraine their lawghyng. The ſame is to bee thought of eter and Paul, in whoſe writings although the more part be blinde, t the very heauenly maieſtie in them holdeth all men bounde, and it were faſt tied vnto it. But this one thing doth ſufficiently aduance eir doctrine aboue the world, that Mathew being before all geuen o the gaine of his money boorde, Peter & Iohn brought vp in their ther boates, all groſſe vnlearned men, had learned nothing in mens hoole that they might deliuer to other. Paule, not onely from a rofeſſed, but alſo from a cruell and blouddy ennemy conuerted to a ew man, with ſodaine and vnhoped chaunge doeth ſhew, that being ompelled by heauenly authoritie he now maintaineth that doctrine, hich before he had fought againſt. Now let theſe dogges denie, that e holy Ghoſt came downe vpon the Apoſtles, or let them diſcredite the historie: yet still the trueth it selfe openly crieth out, that th were taught by the holy Ghost, which beyng before time despi men among the raskall people, sodeinly began so gloriously to e treate of heauenly misteries.

12 There be yet also furthermore many very good reasons, w the consente of the Church should not be esteemed without weig For it is to be accompted no smalle matter, that sins the Scripture w first published, the willes of so many ages haue constantly agreed obey it. And that how soeuer Sathan with all the worlde hath e uayled by maruaylous meanes, either to oppresse it, or ouerthrow or vtterly to blotte and deface it out of mennes remembraunce, w euer still like a palme tree, it hath risen vp aboue, and remained inc cible. For there hath not lightly bin in old time any sophister or Rh torician that had any more excellēt wit than other, but he hath be his force against this Scripture: yet they all haue nothing preuayl The whole power of the earth hath armed it selfe to destroy it, a yet all their enterprises are vanished away, as in smoke. How could haue resisted being so mightyly on eche side assailed, if it hadde h none other defence but mannes? Yea rather it is hereby proued, th it came from God himselfe, that all the trauailes of men striuing gainst it, yet it hath of her owne power still risen vp. Beside that, n one citie alone, nor one onely nation hath agreed to receiue and em brace it: but so farre as the worlde extendeth in length and breadt the Scripture hath atteined her credite, by one holy conspiracie of d uers nations, which otherwise were in nothing agreable one with other. And forasmuch as such agreement of mindes so diuers and d agreyng in maner in all thinges elles, ought much to moue vs, be cause it appeareth, that the same is brought about none other wa but by working of the heauenly maiestie: no small estimatiō growe vnto it, when we beholde their godlinesse, that do so agree, I mea not of them all, but only of those, with whom as with lightes it ple sed God to haue his Church to shine.

13 Now with what assuredneſſe of minde ought we to submi vs to that doctrine which we see stablished and witnessed with th bloude of so many holy menne? They when they had but ones rece ued it, sticked not boldely without feare, yea and with great cheerf nesse to die for it: how should it then come to passe, that we, hauing conueyed to vs with such an assured pledge, should not with certa and vnmouable persuasion take holde of it? It is therfore no small co firmation of the Scripture, that it hath bin sealed with the bloud of many witnesses, specially when we consider that they suffred death bear

re witneſſe of their faith: and not of a frentike diſtemperaunce of ine, as ſometime the erroneous ſpirites are wont to do, but with a ne and conſtant and yet ſobre zeale of God. There be other reas and thoſe not fewe nor weake, whereby the Scripture hath her nitie and maieſtie not onely aſcertained vnto godly hartes, but alſo nourably defended againſt the ſubtilties of cauillers, yet be they h as be not of them ſelues ſufficiently auaylable to bring ſtedfaſt dite vnto it, vntill the heauenly father diſcloſing therin his maie-, doth bring the reuerence therof out of all controuerſie. Where then onely the ſcripture ſhall ſuffiſe to that knowledge of God t bringeth ſaluation, when the certaintie therof ſhall be grounded on the inwarde perſuaſion of the holy Ghoſt. So thoſe teſtimonies men that ſerue to confirme it ſhall not be vaine, if as ſeconde helpes our weakneſſe they follow that chiefe & hyeſt teſtimony. But they fondly that will haue it perſwaded by proofe to the vnfaithfull, t the ſcripture is the woorde of God, which can not be knowen t by faith. For good reaſon therfore doth Auguſtine geue warning, Devtilitate credendi. t godlineſſe and peace of minde ought to go before, to make a man deſtand ſomewhat of ſo greate matters.

That thoſe fanaticall men, vvhich forſaking Scripture, reſort vnto reuelation, do ouerthrovv all the principles of godlineſſe.

NOw they that forſaking the Scripture do imagine I wote not what waie to attaine vnto God, are to be thought not ſo much to be holden with errour, as to be caried with rage. For there haue ariſen of late certaine giddy brained men, ich moſt preſumptuouſly pretending a ſchoole of the ſpirite, both em ſelues do forſake all reading, & alſo do ſcorne their ſimplicitie ich ſtill follow the dead & ſlaying letter, as they call it. But I would ine know of theſe men, what ſpirite that is, by whoſe inſpiration ey are caried vp ſo hie, that they dare deſpiſe the doctrine of the ripture as childiſh and baſe. For if they aunſwere that it is the ſpirite Chriſt, then ſuch careleſneſſe is woorthy to be laughed at. For I inke they will graunte, that the Apoſtles of Chriſt and other faith-ll in the primitiue Church were lightned with none other ſpirite. t none of them did learne of that ſpirite to deſpiſe the word of God: t rather euery one was moued more to reuerẽce it, as their writings moſt plainely witneſſe. And ſurely ſo was it foretold by the mouth Eſaie. For where he ſaith, My ſpirite that is vpon thee, and my Eſa. 59. 21.

The x. Chapter.

That the Scripture, to correct all ſuperſticion, doth in comparifon ſet the true God againſt all the gods of the Gentiles, reckening him for none of them.

BVt becauſe we haue ſhewed, that the knowledge of God wh in the frame of the world and all the creatures is ſome plainely ſet forth, is yet more familiarly and plainely decl in the worde: now is it good to conſider, whether the L ſhew himſelfe ſuch in the Scripture as it pleaſed him firſt to be rep ſented in his workes. But I ſhall at this time be contented onely point vnto it, wherby the godly mindes being admoniſhed may k what is chiefely to be ſearched in the Scriptures concerning God, be directed to one certaine marke in their ſeking. I do not yet to the peculiar conuenaũte, wherby God ſeuered the flocke of Abra from other nations. For euen then he appeared the redemer in rec g to his children by free adopcion thoſe that before were enne-

s. But we are yet about that knowledge that reſteth in the creatiō the worlde and aſcendeth not to Chriſt the mediatour. And alugh byandby it ſhalbe good to allege certaine places out of the w Teſtament, foraſmuch as euen out of it both the power of God Creator and his prouidence in preſeruing of the firſt nature is apoued, yet I warne the readers before, what is now my purpoſe to to the ende that they paſſe not the appointed boundes. So for this ſent, let it ſuffice vs to learne, how God the maker of heauen and th doth gouerne the worlde by him created. Euery where is reno-d both his fatherly bountie and enclined will to do good, and there alſo exemples rehearſed of his ſeueritie, which ſhew him to be a hteous puniſher of wicked doinges, ſpecially where his ſufferaunce thing preuaileth with the obſtinate.

In certaine places are ſet forth more plaine deſcriptions wherin naturall face is as in an image repreſented to be ſeen. For in the Exo. 34. ce wher Moſes deſcribeth it, it ſemeth that his meaning was ſhort- 6. to comprehende all that was lawfull for men to vnderſtand of God. e Lord (ſayeth he) the Lord, a mercyfull God, and gracious, pante and of much mercy, and true, which keepeſt mercy, vnto thou-des which takeſt away iniquitie and wicked doinges, before whom innocente ſhall not be innocent, which rendreſt the wickedneſſe the fathers to the children and childrens children. Where let vs rke, that his eternitie & being of himſelfe is expreſſed in the twiſe eting of that honorable name: and that then his vertues are rearſed, in which is deſcribed vnto vs, not what he is in reſpect to nſelfe, but what a one he is towarde vs: that this knowledge of him y rather ſtand in a liuely feling, than in an empty and ſupernaturall culation. And here we do heare recited thoſe vertues of his which noted to ſhine in the heauen and earth, that is to ſay, clemencie, untie, mercie, iuſtice, iudgement and trueth. For might and power conteined vnder this name Elohim God. With the ſame names of lition do the Prophetes ſet him forth when they meane fully to nt out his holy name. But, becauſe I would not heape vp to many mples together, at this preſent let one Pſalme ſuffice vs, wherin Pſa. 145 ſo full, but yet comming all to one effect. He that gloryeth, saieth h let him glory in this that he knoweth me to be the Lord that do m cie, iuſtice, and iudgement on the earth. Surely theſe three thinges very neceſſary for vs to know: mercy, in which alone conſiſteth all ſaluacion: Iudgement, which is dayly executed vpon euill doers, more greuous is prepared for them to eternall deſtruction: Iuſt wherby the faithful are preſerued and moſt tenderly cheriſhed. Wh thinges when thou haſt conceiued, the prophecy ſaith thou haſt ciently enough wherof thou maieſt glory in God. And yet here not omitted either his trueth or his power, or his holineſſe or goo neſſe. For how ſhould the knowledge ſtand ſure which is here rec red of his iuſtice, mercy and iudgement, vnleſſe it did reſt vpon hi mouable trueth? And how ſhould we beleue that he doeth goo the earth with iuſtice & iudgement, but vnderſtāding his powe? A whence cōmeth his mercy but of his goodneſſe? If then all his w be mercy, iudgement and iuſtice, in them muſt holineſſe alſo nede ſeen. And to none other end is directed that knowledge of God is ſet forth vnto vs in the Scriptures, thā is that knowledge alſo wh appeareth emprinted in his creatures, that is to ſay: it firſt moueth w the feare of God, and then to put confidence in him, to the ende may learne firſt to honor him with perfect innocency of life and fained obedience, and then to hang altogether vpon his goodneſſe.

3 But here I meane to gather a ſumme of generall doctrine. A firſt let the readers note, that the Scripture to the ende to direct the true God, doth expreſly exclude and caſt away all the gods o Gentiles, becauſe commonly in a manner in all ages religiō hath corrupted. True it is in deede that the name of one God was where knowen and renomed. For euen they that worſhipped a g nomber of gods, ſo oft as they did ſpeake according to the pro ſenſe of nature, they ſimply vſed the ſingular name of God as were contented with one God alone. And this was wiſely marked

The xj. Chapter.

That it is vnlawfull to attribute vnto God a viſible forme, and that generally they forſake God, ſo many as do erect to themſelues any images.

BVt as the Scripture prouiding for the rude and groſſe wit of mã vſeth to ſpeake after the common maner: ſo when it meaneth to make ſeuerally knowen the true God from the falſe gods, it chiefly compareth him with idoles: not that it doth allow theſe uentions that are more ſubtelly and finely taught by the Philoſo-ers, but the plainlier to diſcloſe the foliſhneſſe of the world, yea ra-er their madneſſe in ſeking God ſo long as they cleaue euery one their owne imaginations. Therfore that excluſiue definition which e commonly heare, bringeth to nought all that maner of Godhead at men frame to themſelues by their owne opinion, becauſe God mſelfe is the onely conueniente witneſſe of himſelfe. In the meane uet viſible ſhapes of God, and ſo to forge themſelues Gods of tim-r, ſtone, golde, ſiluer, & other dead and corruptible matter, we ought holde this principle, that with wicked falſhod the glorie of God is Whe againe plainly appeareth, that it is a fonde cauillacion wherewith t defenders of images seke to escape, which say that the Iewes were f bidden images, because they were inclinable to superstitiō. As tho that thing perteined to one nation onely which God bringeth fo of his eternall being and the continuall order of nature. This, that God appeared ſometimes in me of a mã, was a foreſhewing of the reueling that was to be made him in Chriſt. And therefore it was not lawfull for the Iewes to uſe this pretenſe to erect to themſelues a repreſentaciõ of the godad in the ſhape of man. Alſo the mercy ſeate wherin God ſhewed rth the preſence of his power in the time of the law, was ſo made it might teach that the beſt beholding of the godhead is this, when ens mindes are caried beyond them ſelues with adminiſtration of it. or the Cherubins with their winges ſtretched abrode did couer it, Exo. 25. 17.

For, I pray you, what meant eſe litle images, but to ſhew that images are not mete to repreſent e miſteries of God? foraſmuch as they were made for this purpoſe, at hiding the mercy ſeate with their winges they ſhould not onely pe backe the eyes of man, but alſo all his ſenſes from the beholding God, and ſo to correct his raſh hardineſſe. For this purpoſe maketh that the Prophetes deſcribed the Seraphins ſhewed thẽ in viſiõ, with Eſa. 6. 2. eir face vncouered: wherby they ſignifie, that ſo great is the brightneſſe of the glory of God that the Angels themſelues are kept from reſt beholding it, and the ſmall ſparkes therof that ſhine in the Anels are withdrawen from our eyes. Although yet ſo many as rightly dge, do acknowledge that the Cherubins of whom we now ſpeake, rteined only to the old maner of introduction as it were of children ſed in the law. So to draw them now for an example to our age, is an absurditie. For that childish age, as I may so terme it, is passed, in the which such rudimentes were appointed. And it is much shame that the painime writers are better expounders of the law of God than the Papistes are. Iuuenale reprocheth the Iewes as it were in scorne that they honor the white cloudes & the deitie of the heauen. I graunt he speaketh peruersly and wickedly: & yet he speaketh more truely in saying that they haue among them no image of God, than the Papistes do which prate that they had a visible image of God. And wheras that people with a certaine hote hastinesse, brake out oftētimes to seke them idols, euen as waters out of a great fresh spring boile out with violent force: hereby rather let vs learne how great is the inclination of our nature to idolatry, least throwing vpon the Iewes the blame of that fault which is common to all, we slepe in deadly slepe vnder vaine alluramentes to sinne.

4 To the same purpose serueth this saying. The idols of the Gentiles are golde and siluer, euen the workes of mens handes. Because Ps. 115. b. & 13. 5. 15. the Prophete doth gather of the stuffe it selfe, that they are no gods that haue a golden or siluer image: and he taketh it for cōfessed truth that it is a foolish fained inuencion whatsoeuer we cōceiue of our own sense concerning God. He nameth rather gold and siluer than clay or stone, that the beautie or the price should not serue to bring a reuerence to idols. But he cōcludeth generally that nothing is lesse allowable, than gods to be made of dead stuffe. And in the meane while he standeth as much vpon this point, that men are caried away with so mad a rashnesse, which themselues bearing about with them but a borrowed breath, ready to vanish away at euery moment, yet do giue the honor of God to idols. Man must nedes confesse that himselfe is but a creature of a daies continuance, and yet he will haue a pece of metall to be compted God to which himselfe gaue the beginning to be a God. For whense came the beginning of idols but from the will of men? Very iustly doeth the heathen Poet geue them this taunt:

Horat. serm. 1. sat. 8.

I was sometime a fig tree log, a blocke that serud for nought:

hatſoeuer men learne by images concerning God. If any man take ception, and ſay that the Prophetes reproue them only which abu-d images to wicked ſuperſtition: I graunt that to be true. But I adde rther that which is eaſie for all men to ſee, that they condemne that ing wholely which the Papiſtes take for an aſſured principle, that images are in ſtede of bookes. For they do in compariſon ſet ima againſt God as thinges directly contrary & ſuch as neuer can a together. This compariſon I ſay is made in thoſe places which I alleged. Sith there is but one true God whom the Iewes did wo ſhip, it is amiſſe & falſely don to forge viſible ſhapes to repreſent G and men are miſerably deceiued, that thereby ſeeke for knowledg God. Finally if it were not true that it is a deceitfull & corrupt know ledge of God that is learned by images, the Prophetes would not generally condemne it. At leaſt thus much I winne of them when ſhew that it is vanity & lying that men do attempt to repreſent G with images, we do nothing but rehearſe word for word that wh the Prophetes haue taught.

6 Let be red what Lactantius and Euſebius haue wrytten of t moſt notable is that which in an other place Auguſtine allegeth o of Varro, and confirmeth it with his owne aſſent, that they wh firſt brought in the images of Gods, both tooke away the feare God, and brought in errour. If Varro alone ſhould ſay this, par uenture it ſhould be but of ſmale authority. Yet ought it of right make vs aſhamed that a heathen man groping in darkeneſſe came this light, to ſee that bodily images are therefore vnmete for the m ieſty of God, becauſe they diminiſh the feare of God and encrea errour in men. The proofe it ſelfe witneſſeth that this was no le truly than wiſely ſpoken. But Auguſtine hauing borrowed it of Va ro, bringeth it foorth as of his own minde. And firſt he admoniſhe that the firſt errours wherwith men were entangled cõcerning Go beganne not of images; but as with newe matter added encreaſed them. Secondly he expoundeth that the feare of God is therfore m niſhed or rather taken away therby, becauſe his maieſty may eaſely the fooliſhneſſe and in the fond and abſurde forging of images gro to contẽpt. Which ſecond thing I would to God we did not by pro find to be ſo true. Whoſoeuer therfore wil couet to be rightly taugh let him elſewhere learne than of images, what is mete to be know concerning God.

7 Where

Wherfore if the Papiſtes haue any ſhame, let them no more vſe ſhift to ſay that images are lay mens bookes, which by many te-monies of Scripture are ſo openly confuted. And although I graũt ſo much, yet ſhould they not much get therby for defenſe of their ols. What monſters they thruſt in, in the place of God, is well kno-en. The pictures and images that they dedicate to Sainctes, what are ey but examples of extreme riot and vnclenneſſe, whereunto if any ould faſhiõ himſelfe, he were worthy to be beatẽ with ſtaues? Surely e brothelhouſes, can ſhew harlots more chaſtly and ſoberly attyred, ã their temples ſhew images of theſe whom they would haue cal-d virgins. Euen as vncomly array giue they to the martirs. Let them erfore faſhiõ their idols at leaſt to ſome honeſt ſhew of ſhamefaſt-es, that they may ſomwhat more colourably lye in ſaying, that they e the books of ſome holineſſe. But if it were ſo, yet then would we ſwere, that this is not the right way to teach the faithfull people in oly places, whom God would haue there inſtructed with farre other octrine than with theſe trifles. God commaunded in the churches a mmon doctrine to be ſet forth to all men in preaching of his word d in his holy miſteries: whereunto they ſhew them ſelues to haue a linde not very hedefull, that caſt their eyes about to behold images. at whom do the Papiſtes call lay and vnlearned men whoſe vnskil-lneſſe may beare to be taught only by images? forſooth euen thoſe hom the Lord knowledgeth for his diſciples, to whom he vouchesa-eth to reuele the heauẽly wiſdom, whom he willeth to be inſtructed ith the holſome miſteries of his kingdom. I graũt in dede as the mat r ſtandeth that there are at this day many which cannot be without ch boks. But whenſe I pray you groweth that dulneſſe but that they e defrauded of that doctrine which only was mete to inſtruct them ith? For it is for no other cauſe that they which had the cure of urches gaue ouer their office of teaching to idols, but becauſe thẽ-lues were dumme. Paul teſtifieth that Chriſt is in the true preaching of the Goſpell, painted out and in a maner crucified before our eyes. o what purpoſe then were it to haue commonly ſet vp in churches many croſſes of wood, ſtone, ſiluer & gold, if this were wel & faith-lly beatẽ into the peoples heads, that Chriſt died to beare our curſe pon the croſſe, to cleanſe our ſinnes with the Sacrifice of his body, d to waſh them away with his bloud, and finally to reconcile vs to od the father? Of which one thing they might learne more than of thouſand croſſes of wood or ſtone. For parhaps the couetous do t their mindes & eyes faſter vpon the golden and ſiluer croſſes than pon any wordes of God.

that they were the first authors of them, which gaue this honor the deade, superstitiously to worship their memory. And truly I grathat this euil custome was very auncient, & I deny not that it was fierbrād wherwith the rage of men being kindled to idolatry did mo-and more burne therein. Yet do I not graunt that this was the first riginal of this mischiefe. For it appereth by Moises that images wevsed before that this curiosity in dedicating the images of dead mewherof the prophane wryters make often mention, were come in Gen. 31. 19. When he telleth that Rachell had stolē her fathers idols, he speak-it as of a common fault. Whereby we may gather that the wit of mis, as I may so call it, a continuall worship of idols. After the genestoud, there was as it were a new regeneration of the world, and there passed not many yeares but that men according to their owlust fained them Gods. And it is likely that the holy Patriarch yet uing, his childrens children were giuen to idolatry, so that to his b-ter griefe he saw the earth defiled with idols, whose corruptions Ios. 24. 2. Lord had but late purged with so horrible iudgement. For Thare Nachor euē before the birth of Abraham were worshippers of Gods, as Iosue testifieth. Seeing the generation of Sem so soone ued, what shall we iudge of the posterity of Cham, who were alre-cursed in their father? The minde of men, as it is full of pride and boldnesse, presumeth to imagine God according to her owne conce-and as it is possessed with dullnesse, yea ouerwhelmed with gross-gnorance, so it cōceiueth vanity and a fond fantasie in stede of G-And to these euils is added a new mischiefe, that man attempteth expresse in workemanshippe such a God as he inwardly conceiue-Thus the minde begetteth the idole, and the hand bringeth it forth.
The example of the Israelites proueth that this was the beginn-of idolatry, that men do not beleue that God is among them, vnle-he shew himselfe carnally present. We know not (sayd they) what become of this Moses: make vs Gods that may go before vs. The-Ex. 31. 1. knew that there was a God whose power they had had experience in so many miracles: but they did not beleue that he was nie vnto vnlesse they did see with their eyes a corporall representation of face, to be a witnesse vnto them of the God that gouerned thē. Theminde was therefore to know by the image going before them, th-God was the guide of their iourney. This thing daily experience te-cheth, that the flesh is alway vnquiet till it hath gotten some cou-terfaite deuise like it selfe, wherein it may vainly delite as in an ima-

God. In a manner in all ages since the creation of the world, men obey this blinde desire haue erected signes wherein they imagi- d God to be present before theyr carnall eyes.

After such inuention forged, byandby followeth worshipping. r whē men thought that they beheld God in images, they did also orship him in them. At length being both with mindes and eyes al- gether fastened theron, they beganne to waxe more and more bru- n, and to wonder at them and haue them in admiration, as if there ere some nature of godhead in them. So appeareth that men brake t out into the worshipping of images, till they were perswaded in me grosse opinion: not to thinke the images to be Gods, but to i- agine that there did a certaine force of Godheade abide in them. herfore whether thou represent to thy selfe either God or a crea- re in the image, when thou fallest downe to worship, thou art alrea- bewitched with some superstition. For this reason the Lord hath rbidden not onely images to be erected that are made to expresse likenesse of him, but also any titles or stones to be dedicated, that ould stand to be worshipped. And for the same reason also in the maundement of the law, this other point is added concerning wor- pping. For so soone as they haue forged a visible forme for God, ey also tye the power of God vnto it, So beastly foolish are men, at there they fasten God where they counterfaite him, and therfore ust they needes worship it. Neither is there any difference whether ey simply worship the idole, or God in the idole. This is alway ido- try when honoures due to God are giuen to an idole, vnder what lour soeuer it be. And because God will not be worshipped super- tiously, therefore whatsoeuer is giuen to idols is taken from him. ette them take heede hereunto that seeke for pretenses to defende e abhominable idolatry, wherewith, these many ages past, true reli- on hath bin drowned and ouerthrowen. But (say they) the images e not taken for Gods. Neither were the Iewes themselues so vn- uised to forgette that it was God by whose hande they hadde bin rought out of Ægypt before they made the calfe. Yea when Aaron yd, that those were the Gods by whom they were deliuered out of e land of Ægypt, they boldly assented, shewing a plaine tokē of their eaning, that they would still kepe that God that was their deliuerer, that they might se him go before them in the calfe. Neither is it to beleued that the heathē were so grosse as to beleue, that God was other thing but stocks and stones. For they changed their images their pleasure, but still they kept the same Gods in their minde: & ere were many images of one God, and yet they did not according to the multitude of images faine them many God. Beſide that th did daily cõſecrat new images, yet did they not thinke that they m pretended by the Idolaters of his age. When they were rebuked, common ſorte aunſwered, that they did not worſhippe that vi thing, but the deity that did in it inuiſibly dwell. And they that w of ſomwhat better religiõ, as he calleth it, did ſay that they did nei worſhippe the image nor the ſpirite in it, but by the corporall im

How then? All idolaters, whether they were of the Iewes, or of gentiles, were none otherwiſe minded than as I haue ſayd: being n contẽted with a ſpirituall vnderſtanding of God, they thought by images he ſhould be more ſure & nerer imprinted in thẽ. After on that ſuch diſordered counterfaiting of God well liked them, they uer ended, till daily more and more deluded with new deceites th imagined that God did ſhew foorth his power in images. And neue theleſſe, both the Iewes were perſwaded that vnder ſuch ima they did worſhippe the one true Lord of heauen and earth: and li wiſe the gentiles, their falſe Gods, whom yet they fayned to dwe heauen.

10 Whoſoeuer deny that it hath thus bin done in time paſt, y within our owne remembraunce, they impudently lye. For, why they down before them? And when they pray, why turne they tow in pſal. 113. them as to the eares of God? For it is true that Auguſtine ſayeth, th noman prayeth or worſhippeth when he ſo beholdeth an image b he is ſo affected in minde that he thinketh himſelfe to be heard of or that it wil do for him what he deſireth. Why is there ſuch differe betwene the images of one God, that paſſing by one image with reuerence or none done to it they honor an other ſolemnly? Why they wery themſelues with vowed pilgremages to viſite thoſe ima whereof they haue like at home? Why do they at this day in defe of them as it were for their religion and countrey, fight to ſlaugh & deſtructiõ, in ſuch ſorte as they would better ſuffer to haue the o only God than their idols to be taken from them? And yet I do n recken vp the groſſe errours of the cõmon people, which are almo infinite, & do in maner poſſeſſe the hartes of all men. I do only ſhe what themſelues do confeſſe when they meane moſt of all to exc themſelues of idolatry. We do not call them (ſay they) our Gods. N more did the Iewes nor the Gentiles call them theirs in time paſt yet the Prophetes ech where ceſſe not to caſt in their teeth their fo nication with ſtockes and ſtones, for doing no more but ſuch thin re daily done by them that would be compted Christiãs, that is to that they carnally worshipped God in stocks and stones.

Although I am not ignoraunt, nor thinke good to passe it o- as if I knewe it not, how they seeke to escape with a more sut- distinction, wherof I shall againe make mention more at large her- r. For they pretend that the worship which they giue to images dolodulia which is seruice of images, and not Idololatria which is rship of images. For so they tearme it when they teach that they y lawfully without any wrong done to God giue vnto images and tures that worshippe which they call Doulia or seruice. And so y thinke themselues without blame if they be but the seruaunts & also the worshippers of idols: as though it were not a litle lighter tter to worship than to serue. And yet while they seeke a hole to e them in the Greeke word, they childishly disagree with themsel- s, For seeing Latreuein in greeke signifieth nothing but to worship, ir saying commeth but to this effect, as if they would say that they rship in dede their images, but without any worshipping. And ther o cause why they should say that I seeke to catch them in words: t they themselues while they seke to cast a mist before the eyes of simple, do bewray their owne ignoraũce. And yet though they be uer so eloquent, they shall not atteine by their eloquence to proue o vs that one selfe same thing is two sundry things. Let them (say shew me a differẽce in ỹ thing it selfe wherby they may be thought differ from the old idolaters. For as an adulterer or a murderer can- t escape giltinesse of his fault, by giuing his sinne a newe deuised me: so it is a very absurdity to thinke that these men be quit by new uise of a name, if in the matter it selfe they nothing differ frõ those olaters whom they themselues are compelled to cõdemne. But so are they frõ prouing that their case differeth frõ the case of those olaters, that rather the fountaine of all this whole mischiefe is an orderly counterfaiting, wherin they haue striued with them while ch with their owne wit they deuise, & with their owne handes they me them signifying formes to expresse them a fashion of God.

And yet am I not so superstitious that I thinke no images may suffred at all. But forasmuch as caruing and painting are the giftes God, I require that they both be purely and lawfully vsed. Least se things which God hath giuẽ vs for his glory & for our own be- fit, be not only defiled by disordered abuse, but also turned to our n destructiõ. We thinke it vnlawful to haue God fashioned out in ible forme, becausse himself hath forbiddẽ it, & because it cãnot be ne without some defacemẽt of his glory. And least they thinke that it is onely we that are in this opinion, they that haue bin trauel their workes shall finde that all sound wryters did alway repro same thing. If thē it be not lawfull to make any bodily image of G much lesse shall it be lawfull to worship it for God, or God in remayneth therefore lawfull that onely those thinges be painted grauen whereof our eyes are capable: but that the maiesty of G which is farre aboue the sense of our eyes, be not abused with comly deuised shapes. Of this sorte are partely histories and th done, partely images and fashions of bodies, without expressing o ny thinges done by them. The first of these haue some vse in teach or admonishing a man: but what profit the second can bring saue o delectatiō, I see not. And yet it is euident, that euen such were al all the images that heretofore haue stand vp in churches. Whe we may iudge that they were there set vp not by discrete iudgem or choise, but by fooliſh and vnaduised desire. I speake not how m amisse & vncomely they were for the most parte fashioned, nor h licentiously Painters and Caruers haue in this point shewed th wantonnesse, which thing I haue already touched. Onely I speak this end, that though there were no fault in them, yet do they not auaile to teach.

13 But leauing also that difference, let vs by the way consider w ther it be expedient in Christian temples to haue any images a that do expresse either things done or the bodyes of men. First if authority of the auncięt church do any thing moue vs, let vs rem ber that for about v.C. yeares together, while religion yet better rished, and sincere doctrine was in force, the Christian churches w vniuersally without images. So they were thē first brought in for garnishment of churches, when the sincerity of ministration was a little altered. I will not now dispute what reason they had with that were the first authors therof. But if a mā compare age with he shall see that they were much swarued from that vprightnes them that were without images. What? do we thinke that those fathers would haue suffered the church to be so long without thing which they iudged profitable & good for them? But rather cause they saw either little or no profit in it, & much daunger to vnderneth it, they did rather of purpose and aduisedly reiect it, Epi. 49. by ignorance or negligence omitte it. Which thing Augustine also in expresse words testifie. When they be set in such places (s he) honorably on hye, to be seene of them that pray & do Sacr although they want both sense and life, yet with the very likenesse they haue of liuely members and senses, they so moue the mi

ndes, that they ſeeme to liue & breath. &c. And in an other place. that ſhape of members doth worke and in manner enforce thus ch, that the minde liuing within a body doth thinke that body to e ſenſe, which he ſeeth like vnto his owne. And a litle after, I- ges do more auaile to bow downe an vnhappy ſoule, by this that y haue mouth, eyes, eares, and feete, than to amend it by this that y neither ſpeake nor ſee nor heare nor go. This truely ſeemeth to the cauſe why Iohn willed vs to beware not onely of worſhipping images, but alſo of images themſelues. And we haue found it to ch in experience, that through the horrible madneſſe which hath retofore poſſeſſed the world, to the deſtruction in manner of all dlineſſe, ſo ſoone as images be ſet vp in churches, there is as it were gne ſet vp of idolatry, becauſe the folly of men cannot refrayne it ſe, but it muſt foorthwith runne on to ſuperſticious worſhippinges. if there were not ſo much daunger hanging thereby: yet when I ſider for what vſe temples are ordayned, me thinkes it is very ill eeming the holineſſe thereof to receiue any other images than ſe liuely and naturall images, which the Lord by his word hath ſecrate, I meane Baptiſme and the Lordes ſupper, and other cere- onies wherewith our eyes ought both more earneſtly to be occu- d and more liuely to be moued, than that they ſhould nede any o- r images framed by the witte of men. Loe this is the incomparable mmodity of images, which can by no value be recompenſed, if we eue the Papiſtes.

1. Ioh. 5 21.

I thinke I had ſpokē enough of this thing already, but that the cene Synode doth as it were lay hand on me to enforce me to ake more. I meane not that moſt famous Synode which Conſtan- e the Great aſſembled, but that which was holden eight hundred res ago, by the commaundement and authority of Irene the Em- ſſe. For that Syno dedecreed, that images ſhould not only be had hurches, but alſo worſhipped. For whatſoeuer I ſhould ſay, the hority of the Synode would make a great preiudice on the other . Although to ſay truth, that doth not ſo much moue me, as make ppeare to the readers howe farre their rage extended, that were re deſirous of images than became Chriſtians. But firſt leite vs di- che this. They that at this day maintaine the vſe of images, allege decree of that Nicene Synode for their defenſe. But there is extāt ooke of confutation bearing the name of Charles the Great, which the phraſe we may gather to haue bin wrytten at the ſame time. erein are recited the ſentences of the Biſhoppes that were preſent hat councell, and the argumentes wherewith they contended.

Iohn the Legate of the east partes sayed : God created manne his owne image : and thereupon gathered that we ought to hau mages. The same man thought that images were commended vs in this sentence: shew me thy face because it is beautifull. An o to proue that images ought to be sette vppon altares, cited this stimony : no man lighteth a candell and putteth it vnder a bu An other, to shew that the beholding of them is profitable for brought foorth a verse out of the Psalme : the light of thy cou naunce is sealed vpon vs. An other tooke this similitude : As the triarches vsed the Sacrifices of the Gentiles, so must Christian

To the same purpose haue they wrythed this saying: Lord, I hau ued the beauty of thy house. But specially witty is the exposition this place, As we haue heard so haue we seen, that God is not kno by onely hearing of his word, but also by looking vppon images. L is the sharpe deuise of Bishoppe Theodore. Maruelous (sayeth h is God in his Saintes. And in an other place : In the Saintes are in the earth : therefore this ought to be referred to images. nally so filthy are their vnsauory follies that it greueth me to rehe them.

15 When they talke of the worshipping: then are brought foo the worshipping of Pharao, and of the rod of Ioseph, & of the p that Iacob set vp. Albeit in this last example, they do not only dep the meaning of the Scripture, but also bring in that which where to be read. Then these places seeme to them marue strong and meete proues. Worship his footestole. Againe worsh on his holy hill. Againe all the richemen of the people shall wor thy counrenaunce. If a man would in scorne putte the person a riding foole vppon the patrones of Images, could he gather gether greater and grosser follies? But to putte all out of doute, Th dosius Bishoppe of Mira, doth so earnestly confirme by the drea of his Archedeacō, that images ought to be worshipped, as if he an oracle from heauen to shewe for it. Now lette the fauourers o mages go and presse vs with the decree of that Synode. As tho those reuerend fathers do not altogether discredit themselues, either so childishly handeling, or so vngodly and fowly tearing Scriptures.

16 Now come I to those monstrous impieties, which it is ma that euer they durst vomit, and twise maruellous that they were cried out agaynst with hie detestation of all men. And it is that this outragiously wicked madnesse be bewrayed, that at leas e colour of antiquity may be taken away, which the Papiſtes pred for the worſhipping of images. Theodoſius the Biſhop of Amon pronounceth curſe againſt all them that will not haue images ſhipped. An other imputeth all the calamities of Grecia and the part to this, that images were not worſhipped. What puniſhment n were the Prophetes, the Apoſtles and the Martirs worthy to er in whoſe time there were no images? They adde further. If the peroures image be met with perfume and cenſing: much more is s honor due to the images of Saintes. Conſtantius Biſhop of Con-nce in Ciprus, profeſſeth that he reuerently embraceth images, and rmeth that he will giue to them the ſame honorable maner of ſhippe that is due to the Trinity that giueth life. And whoſoeuer iſeth ſo to do, he curſeth him and ſendeth him away with the Ma-hees and Marcionites. And, that ye ſhould not thinke that this was priuate ſentence of one man, they did all aſſent vnto it. Yea Iohn Legate of the eaſt partes being further caried with heate, ſayed it e better to bring all brothelhouſes into the city than to deny the rſhipping of images. At length by conſent of them all it was deed, that worſe than all Hereticks are the Samaritans, and worſe the Samaritans are the enemies of images. And becauſe the play uld not be without his ſolemne farewell, this clauſe was added, let be glad & reioyſe that hauing the image of Chriſt do offer Sacri-vnto it. Where is now the diſtinction of Latria and Duha, where-h they are wont to ſeeke to blinde the eyes both of God & men? the councell without any exception doth giue euen as much vnto ges as vnto the liuing God himſelfe.

The xij. Chapter.

That God is ſeuerally diſcerned from idols, that he may be only and vvholely vvorshipped.

WE ſayed in the beginning that the knowledge of God ſtandeth not in bare ſpeculation, but draweth with it the worſhipping of him, and by the way we touched howe he is rightly worſhipped, which point ſhalbe in o-places more largely to be ſette foorth. Now I do but ſhortly re-te, that ſo oft as the Scripture affirmeth that there is but one d, it ſtriueth not for the bare name of God, but withall com-underh this, that whatſoeuer belongeth to the Godhead be not en to any other. Whereby alſo appeareth what pure religion doth er from ſuperſtition. Euſebeia, in Greeke ſignifieth as much as true nesse haue found that this rule ought to be holden, that God be not vnorderly worshipped. The name of religion although Cicero trans and well deriueth from relegere, to recorde, or gather vp together yet is the reason that he assigneth inforced and farre fette, that godly worshippers did often recorde and diligently wey what was the true I rather thinke that that name is sette as a contrary to wandring berty, because the greater parte of the world vnaduisedly taketh hold of that which they first mete withall, and flieth about hither and thither: but true godlinesse, to the end it may stand in stedfast Religit, that is to say doth gather vp it self together within her bou Like as I thinke superstition to haue her name hereof, that not be contented with the maner and order prescribed, she heapeth vp toge ther a superfluous nomber of vaine thinges. But to leaue the wor it hath alway bin agreed by consent of all ages, that religion is false errours corrupted and peruerted. Whereupon we gather that is a very fond colour which the superstitious do pretend, when vndiscrete zeale we giue our selues leaue to do all thinges. And though this confession sound in the mouthes of all men: yet here shamefull ignoraunce bewrayeth it selfe, that neither they cleaue the one God, nor haue any regarde of order in the worshippinges him, as we haue already shewed. But God, to claime his owne r vnto himselfe, crieth out that he is ielous, and that he will be a seu reuenger if he be mingled with any fayned God. And then he sett forth the lawful maner of worshipping, to hold mākinde in obedi He conteineth both these pointes in his law, when first he bind the faithfull vnto himselfe that he only may be their lawmaker: then he prescribeth a rule whereby to be worshipped after his ow minde. Of the law, because the vses and endes thereof are many, I entreate in place fitte for it. Now I only touch this point, that the by mē are brideled that they run not out of the way to wrong w shippinges. Now as I first sayd, we must hold in minde, that if all euer properly belongeth to godhead do not rest in God alone, b spoyled of his honor, and his worshippe broken. And there must somewhat hedefully marke with what suttelties superstitiō decei For it doth not so reuolte vnto straunge gods that it seemeth to for sake the hiest God, or to bring him downe into the number of o gods: but while she graūteth vnto him the hiest place, she setteth about him a number of lesser gods, among whom she diuideth offices? And so (albeit clokedly and craftily) the glory of the godh is cut in partes, that it remaineth not whole with him. So in the time, as well they of the Iewes as of the Gentiles did set beneth fa ther & iudge of gods a great rout of gods which ſhould euery one cording to his degree in cõmon haue with ỹ hieſt God the gouern-nt of the heauen and earth: So the Saintes that in a few ages paſt parted this life, are aduaunced to the fellowſhip of God, to be wor-pped, called vpon, & honored in ſteade of him. And yet with ſuch nomination we thinke that the maieſty of God is not ſo much as ided, when in deede it is a great parte ſuppreſſed and extinguiſhed, ing that we retaine ſtill a poore opinion of his ſupreme power: & the meane time deceiued with entangled ſutteltes we are ſunderly ied to diuers gods.

For this purpoſe alſo was inuented the diſtinction of Latria d Dulia, as they terme them, that is worſhippe and ſeruice, where-they might freely ſeeme to giue away the honors of God to an-s and dead men. For it is euident, that the worſhippe which the Pa-es giue vnto ſaintes differeth nothing in deede from the wor-ppe of God. For all alike without diuerſity they worſhip both God d them: ſauing that when they be charged with it, they winde away h this exception, that they kepe ſtill for God the honor that is due o him inuiolate, becauſe they leaue vnto him the worſhippe that y call Latria. But ſith the queſtion ſtandeth vpon the matter, and the word, who would permitte them ſo careleſſely to mocke in a tter of all matters moſt weighty? But to lette that alſo paſſe, yet nne they nothing by this diſtinction, but to proue, that they giue rſhippe to one God and ſeruice to an other. For Latria in greeke nifieth as much as in Latin Cultus, and in Engliſh worſhippe. Du-, properly ſignifieth ſeruice. And yet ſometime in ſcripture this dif-ence is confounded together without diuerſity. But graunt it be a rpetuall difference, then muſt we ſearch what both the words may ane. Dulia is ſeruice, Latria is worſhippe. Now no man douteth t to ſerue, is more then to worſhip. For many times a man could rdly beare to ſerue him whom he would not ſticke to worſhippe. is it an vnegall dealing to giue to the ſaintes that which is the eater, and to leaue to God that which is the leſſer. But many of auncient authors haue vſed this diſtinction. What maketh that tter, if all men do perceiue it to be not onely vnfit, but all together y fond?

Now leauing nice ſutteltes, let vs wey the matter it ſelfe. When ule putteth the Galathians in remembrance what they were be- Cal. 4. 8 e that they were lightened in the knowledge of God, he ſaieth that y gaue Duliam ſeruice to thoſe that of nature were no gods. Al-ough he name not Latriam or worſhip, is therfore their ſuperſtitiõ excuſable? He doth neuertheleſſe condemne their peruerſe ſuper-

And although this ciple remained among them, to honour the ſoueraigne deity, grewe it in vſe indifferently to offer ſacrifices to ſpirites, leſſer s, or deade men of honor. So ſlippery is the way to ſlide into this t, to make common to a number that which God ſeuerely cha-eth to himſelfe alone.

The xiij. Chapter.

That there is taught in the Scriptures one eſſence of God from the very creation, vvhich eſſence containeth in it three perſons.

That which is taught in the Scriptures concerning the incomprehenſible and ſpirituall eſſence of God, ought to ſuffiſe not onely to ouerthrow the fooliſh errours of the common people, but alſo to confute the fine ſutteltıes of prophane phiſophie. One of the old wryters ſeemed to haue ſayd very well, at God is all that we do ſee, and all that we do not ſee. But by this ane he hath imagined the godheade to be powred into all the tes of the world. Although God, to the intent to kepe men in ſo-minde, ſpeaketh but ſparely of his owne eſſence, yet by thoſe two nes of addition that I haue reheatſed, he doth both take away all oſſe imaginations, and alſo repreſſe the preſumptuous boldneſſe of ns minde. For ſurely his immeaſurable greatneſſe ought to make afraide, that we attempt not to meaſure him with our ſenſe: and his rituall nature forbiddeth vs to imagine any thing earthly or fleſhly him. For the ſame cauſe he often aſſigneth his dwelling place to in heauen. For though, as he is incomprehenſible, he tilleth the th alſo: yet becauſe he ſeeth our mindes by reaſon of their dullſe to lye ſtill in the earth, for good cauſe he lifteth vs vp aboue the rld, to ſhake of our ſlouth and ſluggiſhneſſe. And here falleth to ound the errour of the Manichees, which in appointing two oriall beginninges haue made the diuell in a manner egall with God. rely this was as much as to breake the vnity of God and reſtraine vnmeaſurableneſſe. For where they haue preſumed to abuſe raine teſtimonies: that ſheweth a fowle ignoraunce, as their erur it ſelfe ſheweth a deteſtable madneſſe. And the Anthropomorites are alſo eaſily confuted which haue imagined God to conſiſt a body, becauſe oftentimes the Scripture aſcribeth vnto him a outh, eares, eyes, handes, and feete. For what man yea though he ſclenderly witted dooth not vnderſtand that God doth ſo with vs eake as it were childiſhly, as nurſes do with their babes? Therefore ch maners of ſpeeche do not ſo plainly expreſſe what God is, as they do apply the vnderſtanding of him to our ſclender capaci Which to do, it behoued of neceſſity that he deſcended a grea three perſons: which except we learne, a bare & empty name o without any true God flieth in our braine. And that no man ſho thinke that he is a threfold God, or that the one eſſence of God uided in three perſons, we muſt here ſeeke a ſhort and eaſie defin to deliuer vs from all errour. But becauſe many do make much about this word Perſon, as a thing inuented by man: how iuſtly do ſo, it is beſt firſt to ſee. The Apoſtles naming the ſonne, the en

For to take it for Eſſence (as ſome expoſitours haue done, as if C like a peece of waxe printed with a ſeale did repreſent the ſubſt Eſſence of God is ſingle or one and vndiuiſible, he that in him contayneth it all and not by peecemeale, or by deriuation, but in w perfection, ſhould very vnproperly yea fondly be called the engr forme of him. But becauſe the father although he be in his o property diſtinct, hath expreſſed himſelfe wholely in his ſonne, for good cauſe ſayd, that he hath giuen his Hypoſtaſis, to be ſeen him. Wherwith aptly agreeth that which byandby followeth, that is the brightneſſe of his glory. Surely by the Apoſtles wordes we ther, that there is a certaine proper Hypoſtaſis in the father, that neth in the ſonne: whereby alſo againe is eaſely perceiued the Hyp ſtaſis of the ſonne that diſtinguiſheth him from the Father. Like or is in the holy ghoſt. For we ſhall byandby proue him to be God, yet he muſt nedes be other than the father. Yet this diſtinctiō is no the eſſence, which it is vnlawfull to make manifold. Therefore if Apoſtles teſtimony be credited, it followeth that there be in G three Hypoſtaſes. This terme ſeeing the Latines haue expreſſed w the name of Perſō, it were to much pride & waywardneſſe to bra about ſo cleare a matter. But if we liſt word for word to tranſlate, may call it Subſiſtence. Many in the ſame ſenſe haue called it ſubſtā And the name of Perſon hath not bin in vſe among the Latines o ly: but alſo the Greeians, perhaps to declare a conſent, haue ta that there are three Proſopa, that is to ſay Perſons in God. But the whether they be Grekes or Latins that differ one from an other in word

de, do very well agree in the ſumme of the matter.

Now howſoeuer the heretikes barke at the name of perſone, or e ouermuch preciſe men do carpe that they like not the worde ed by deuiſe of men: ſith they can not get of vs to ſay, that there hree, wherof euery one is wholly God, nor yet that there be many des: what vnreaſonableneſſe is this, to miſlike wordes, which exſe none other thing but that which is teſtified and approued by Scriptures? It were better (ſay they) to reſtraine not only our meages but alſo our wordes within the boundes of Scripture, than to iſe ſtraunge names that may be the beginninges of diſagrement brawling: ſo do we tier our ſelues with ſtrife about wordes: ſo the h is loſt in contending: ſo charitie is broken by odiouſly brawling ether. If they call that a ſtraunge worde, which can not be ſhewed cripture, as it is written in nombre of ſillables: then they binde vs hard law, wherby is condemned all expoſition that is not pieced ether, with bare laying together of textes of Scripture. But if they ane that to be ſtraunge, which beyng curiouſly deuiſed, is ſuperiouſly defended, which maketh more for contention than edifica-, which is either vnaptly, or to no profite vſed, which withdraweth m the ſimplicitie of the word of God, then with all my hart I emce their ſobre minde. For I iudge that we ought with no leſſe det reuerence to talke of God than to thinke of him, for as much as at ſoeuer we do of our ſelues thinke of him, is fooliſh, and what ſo r we ſpeake is vnſauory. But there is a certaine meaſure to be kept. ought to learne out of the Scriptures a rule both to thinke and ake, wherby to examine all the thoughtes of our minde & wordes our mouth. But what withſtandeth vs, but that ſuch as in Scripture to our capacitie doutfull and entangled, we may in plainer wordes reſſe them, being yet ſuch wordes as do reuerently and faithfully ue the truth of the Scripture, and be vſed ſparely, modeſtly, and without occaſion. Of which ſort there are examples enow. And ere as it ſhal by proofe appere that the Church of great neceſſitie enforced to vſe the names of Trinitie, and Perſones, if any ſhall n finde fault with the newneſſe of woordes, ſhall he not be iuſtly ught to be greeued at the light of the truth, as he that blameth y this that the truth is made ſo plaine and cleare to diſcerne?

Such newneſſe of wordes, if it be ſo to be called, commeth then efly in vſe, when the truth is to be defended againſt wranglers that mocke it out with cauillations. Which thing we haue at this day much in experience, who haue great buſineſſe in vanquiſhing the mies of true and ſounde doctrine. With ſuch folding and crooked winding these slippery snakes do slide away, vnlesse they be stro griped and holden hard when they be taken. So the old fathers be troubled with contending against false doctrines, were compelled shew their meaninges in exquisite plainnesse, least they should le any crooked bywayes to the wicked, to whom the doutefull const tions of wordes were hidingholes of errours. Arrius confessed Ch to be God, and the sonne of God, because he coulde not against euident wordes of God, and as if he had bin so sufficiently discha did faine a certaine consent with the rest. But in the meane whil ceassed not to scatter abroade that Christ was create, and had a beg ning as other creatures. But to the ende they might draw forth winding sutteltie out of his denne, the auncient fathers went furth pronouncing Christ to be the eternall sonne of the father and co substanciall with the father. Hereat wickednesse began to boile, wh the Arrians began to hate and detest the name Omoousion, consubs ciall. But if in the beginning they had sincerely and with plaine m ning confessed Christ to be God, they would not now haue dem him to be consubstantial with the father. Who dare now blame the good men as brawlers and contentious, bycause for one litle word sake, they were so whote in disputatiō, and troubled the quiete of t Church? But that little worde shewed the differēce betwene the m beleuing Christians, and the Arrians that were robbers of God. Af ward rose vp Sabellius which accompted in a maner for nothing names of the Father, the Sonne, and the Holy ghost, saying in dis tation that they were not made to shew any maner of distinction, onely were seuerall additions of God, of which sorte there are ma If he came to disputatiō, he confessed, that he beleued the father G the sonne God, the Holy ghost God. But afterward he would re slippe away with saying that he hadde in no otherwise spoken tha if he had named God, a strong God, iust God, and wise God: and so song another song, that the Father is the Sonne, and the Holy ghos the father, without any order, without any distinctiō. The good d tours which then had care of godlinesse, to subdew his wicked dec cried out on the other side that there ought to be acknowleged in God three propreties. And to the end to sense themselues against crooked writhē suttleties with plaine and simple truth, they affirm that there did truely subsist in one God, or (which came all to one e fect) that there did subsist in the vnitie of God a Trinitie of perso

5 If then the names haue not bin without cause inuēted, we ou to take hede, that in reiecting thē we be not iustly blamed of pro presumptuousnesse. I would to God they were buried in dede, so faith were agreed of all men, that the Father and the Sonne, and Holy ghoſt be one God: and yet that the Father is not the Sonne, the Holy ghoſt the Sonne, but diſtinct by certaine propretie. Yet I not ſo preciſe, that I can finde in my harte to ſtriue for bare des. For I note, that the olde fathers, which otherwiſe ſpeake very giouſely of ſuch matters, did not euery where agree one with an er, nor euery one with himſelfe. For what formes of ſpeech vſed he councels doth Hilarie excuſe? To how greate libertie doth guſtine ſometime breake forth? How vnlike are the Grekes to the ins? But of this variance one example ſhall ſuffiſe for this time. é the Latins mẽt to expreſſe the worde Omoouſion, they called it nſubſtanciall, declaring the ſubſtance of the Father and the Sonne e one, ſo vſing the word ſubſtance for eſſence. Whervpõ Hierome Damaſus ſaith, it is ſacrilege to ſay, that there are three ſubſtances God: and yet aboue a hundred times you ſhall finde in Hilarie, that re are three ſubſtances in God. In the worde Hypoſtaſis, how is rome accombred? For he ſuſpecteth that there lurketh poiſon in ning three Hypoſtaſes in God. And if a man do vſe this word in a lly ſenſe, yet he plainly ſaith that is an impropre ſpeech, if he ſpake ainedly, and did not rather wittingly and willingly ſeeke to charge bishoppes of the Eaſtlandes, whom he ſought to charge with an uſt ſclaunder. Sure this one thing he ſpeaketh not very truely, that ll prophane ſchooles, ouſia, eſſence is nothing els but hypoſtaſis, ch is proued falſe by the common and accuſtomed vſe. Auguſtine More modeſt and gentill, which although he ſay, that the worde hy- ſtaſis in that ſenſe is ſtrange to latine eares, yet ſo farre is it of that taketh from the Grekes their vſuall maner of ſpeaking, that he alſo tly beareth with the Latins that had followed the Greke phraſe. d that which Socrates writeth in the ſixte booke of the Tripartite torie, tendeth to this end, as though he ment that he hadde by vn- lful men bin wrongfully applied vnto this matter. Yea and the ſame arie himſelfe layeth it for a great fault to the heretikes charge, that their waywardneſſe he is compelled, to put thoſe thinges in perill the ſpeech of men, which ought to haue bin kept in the religiouſ- ſe of mindes, plainly confeſſing that this is to do thinges vnlau- , to ſpeake that ought not to be ſpoken, to attempt thinges not li- ced. A little after, he excuſeth himſelfe with many wordes, for that was ſo bolde to vtter new names For after he had vſed the naturall mes Father, Sonne, and Holy ghoſt, he addeth that what ſoeuer is ght further, is beyond the compaſſe of ſpeach, beyond the reach ſenſe, and beyonde the capacitie of vnderſtanding. And in an other place he ſaith, that happy are the biſhops of Gallia, which neither nor receiued nor knew any other confeſſion, but that olde and

And much like is the excuſe of Auguſtine, that this worde was out of neceſſitie by reaſon of the imperfectiō of mens language great a matter: not to expreſſe that which is, but that it ſhould

This modeſtie of the holy menne ought to warne vs, that we do forthwith ſo ſeuerely like Cenſors, note them with infamie that to ſubſcribe and ſweare to ſuch wordes as we propounde them: ſo they do it not of pride, of frowardneſſe, or of malicious crafte. But them againe conſider, by how great neceſſitie we are driuen to ſo, that by little and little they may be enured with that maner of ſpeach. Let them alſo learne to beware, leaſt ſith we mete on the one ſide with the Arrians, on the other ſide with Sa lians, while they be offended that we cut of occaſion from them to cauill, they bring themſelues in ſuſpicion, that they be the diſci either of Arrius or of Sabellius. Arrius ſaith that Chriſt is God, but muttereth that he was create, and had a beginning. He ſaith Chri one with the Father, but ſecretely he whiſpereth in the eares of diſciples, that he was made one as the other faithfull be, although ſingular prerogatiue. Say ones that Chriſt is Conſubſtanciall with father, then plucke you of his viſour from the diſſembler, and yet adde nothing to the Scripture, Sabellius ſaith, that the ſeuerall na Father, Sonne, and Holy ghoſt ſignifie nothing in God ſeuerally ſtinct: ſay that they are three: and he will cry out that you name gods. Say that there is in one eſſence a Trinitie of perſons, then you in one word both ſay, what the Scripture ſpeaketh, and ſtop vaine babbling. Now if any be holden with ſo curious ſuperſtitio that they can not abide theſe names: yet is there no man, though would neuer ſo faine, that can deny but that when we heare of we muſt vnderſtand an vnitie of ſubſtance: when we heare of three one eſſence, that it is ment of the perſons in the trinitie. Which being without fraude confeſſed, we ſtay no longer vpon wordes.
I haue long ago found, and that often, that who ſoeuer do obſtre ly quarell about wordes, do keepe within them a ſecrete poiſon: that it is better willingly to prouoke them, than for their pleaſure ſpeake darkly.

6 But leauing diſputation of wordes I will now begin to ſpeak the matter it ſelfe. I call therfore a Perſone, a ſubſiſtence in the eſſe of God, which hauing relatiō to the other is diſtinguiſhed from vncõmunicable propretie. By the name of Subsistẽce we meane ther thing than the essence. For if the worde had simply bin God, in the meane time had nothing seuerally propre to it selfe, Iohn le said amisse, that is was with God. Where he forthwith addeth, God himselfe was the same worde, he calleth vs backe againe to Iohn.1. e single essence. But because it coulde not be with God, but that 2. ust rest in the father: hereof ariseth that subsistẽce, which though ioyned to the essence with an vnseparable knot, yet hath it a spe-marke, wherby it doth differ from it. So of the three subsistẽces, that eche hauing relation to other is in propretie distinguished. tion is here expressely mencioned. For when there is simple and finite mencion made of God, this name belongeth no lesse to the ne and the Holy ghost, than to the Father. But when the Father mpared with the Sonne, the seueral propretie of either doth dise him from the other. Thirdely, what soeuer is propre vnto eue-f them is vncõmunicable. For that which is geuen to the Father Lib. cõmarke of difference, can not agree with, nor be geuen to the tra Pra-ne. And I mislike not the definition of Tertullian, so that it be xeam. tly taken, That there is in God a certaine dispositiõ or distribu-, which yet chaungeth nothing of the vnitie of the essence.

But before that I go any further, it is good that I proue the God-d of the Sonne and of the Holy ghost. Then after we shal see, how y differ one from an other. Surely whẽ the Worde of God is spoof in the Scripture: it were a very greate absurditie to imagine it y a fading and vanishing voice, which sente into the ayre, cometh of God himselfe, of which sort were the oracles geuen to the fas, and all the prophecies: when rather the worde is mente to be the petuall wisdom abiding with the Father, from whens all the ora-and prophecies proceded. For as Peter testifieth, no lesse didde the 1. Pet.1. prophetes speake with the spirite of Christ, than did the Apo- 11.
and all they that after them did distribute the heauenly doctrine. becaus Christ was not yet openly shewed, we must vnderstand the Worde was before all worldes begotten of the Father. And if Spirite was of the Worde, whose instrumentes were the prophe-
, we do vndoutedly gather that he was true god. And this doth ses teach plainly enough in the creation of the worlde, when he eth the worde as the meane. For why doth he expressely tell, that d in creating of all his workes said. Be this done: or that done: but the vnserchable glory of god may shiningly appere in his images? e suttlenosed & babbling men do easily mocke out this, with saying the name Worde, is there taken for his bidding or commaunde-

Heb.1. 2. mente. But better expositors are the Apostles, which teach that worldes were made by the same, and that he susteineth them all by his mighty Worde. For here we see that the Worde is taken for bidding or commaundement of the Sonne, which is himselfe the e- nall and essentiall Worde to the Father. And to the wise and sobre

For in saying, That from beginning of the worlde he was continually working with his fa- ther, he doth more openly declare that which Moses hadde m- shortely touched. We gather then that the meaning of Goddes w- king was this, that the Worde hadde his office in the doing of th- ges, and so they both had a common woorking togither. But m- plainly of all doth Iohn speake, whē he sheweth that the same Wo- which from the beginning was God with God, was together w- God the Father the cause of all thinges. For he both geueth to Iohn.1. 3. Worde a perfect and abiding essence, and also assigneth vnto it so- thing peculiar to it selfe, and plainly sheweth how God in speak- was the creator of the worlde. Therefore as all reuelacions proce- from God do well beare the name of the worde of God, so ought yet to set in the hyest place that substanciall Worde, the welspr- of all Oracles, which being subiect to no alteracion, abideth alw- one and the selfe same with God, and is God himselfe.

8 Here many dogges do barke against vs, which when they d- not openly take from him his Godhead, do secretly steale from h- his Eternitie. For they say, that the Worde then began first to b- when God in the creation of the world opened his holy mouth. B- verie vndiscretly do they to imagine a certaine innouacion of the s- staunce of God. For as those names of God that haue relacion to a- outward worke, began to be geuen vnto him after the being of t- worke, as for example, this that he is called the creator of hea- and earth: so doth Godlinesse know or admitt no name that sho- signifie any new thing in himselfe to haue chaunced vnto God. For any should come to him from els where than in himselfe, then t- saying of Iames should faile, that euery good geuing and euery p- fect gift is from aboue, and commeth downe from the Father

g to eate bread, commandeth Sacrifice to be offered to Iehouah. then he proueth that himſelfe in deede was the ſame Iehouah, herefore Manoah and his wife by this token did gather, that had ſeen not an only Angel but God. And thence came it that ed: we ſhall die becauſe we haue ſeen God. And when his wife wereth, if Iehouah would haue ſlayen vs, he would not haue re- d Sacrifice at our handes: in this ſhe doth confeſſe that he was which before was called the Angell. Beſide this, the aunſwere of ngell himſelfe taketh away all doubt of it, ſaying: why doeſt aſke me of my name, which is marueilous? So much the more table was the wickedneſſe of Seruetto, when he affirmed that neuer appeared to Abraham and the other fathers, but that an ell was worſhipped in place of him. But truely and wiſely haue rue teaching doctors of the Church expounded, that the ſame cipall Angell was the worde of God, which then as aforehande n to execute the office of Mediatour. For though he was not lothed with fleſh, yet he came downe as a meane betwene God nen, to come more familiarly to the faithfull. Therefore his nie municating himſelfe made him to be called an Angell: yet ſtill e meane time he reteined that which was his own, to be the God ſpeakable glory. The ſame thing meaneth Oſeas, which after he recited the wraſtling of Iacob with the Angell, ſayeth: Iehouah God of hoſtes, Iehouah, worthy of memory is his name. Here e Seruetto carpeth, that God did beare the perſon of an Angell. hough the Prophete did not cõfirme that which Moſes had ſaied: doeſt thou aſke me of my name? And the confeſſion of the holy arche doeth ſufficiently declare that he was not a created Angell, one in whom the full godhead was reſidente, when he ſaid: I haue God face to face. And for this cauſe Paule ſayeth, that Chriſt guide of the people in the wilderneſſe. For though the time was yet come of his abacemente: yet that eternall worde ſhewed a e of that office to which he was appointed. Now if the ſeconde pter of Zacharie be weyed without contencion, the Angell that an other Angell was byandby pronounced to be the God of s, & to him is ſouteraigne power aſcribed. I omitte innumerable nonies on the which our Faith ſafely reſteth, although they do nuch moue the Iewes. For when it is ſaied in Eſaie. But our beſt proufe, as I haue ſaid, ſhalbe by familiar vſe. For t which the Scriptures impute vnto it, is farre from the propertie creatures, and ſuch a thing as we our ſelues do learne by aſſured e

For it is as much in effect as to be baptiſed in the name of one God, which with perfect brightneſſe hath appeared in the ther, the Sonne and the Holy ghoſt. Wherby is euident that in eſſence of God abide three Perſons in which the one God is know And ſurely, foraſmuch as our Faith ought not to looke hether & ther, nor diuerſly to wāder about, but to haue regard to the one G to be applied to him, & to ſticke faſt in him: it is hereby eaſily prou that if there be diuerſe kindes of faith, there muſt alſo be many go Now wheras baptiſme is a Sacrament of faith: it proueth vnt the vnitie of God, becauſe it is but one. And hereof alſo follow that it is not lawfull to be baptiſed but into one God, bycauſe we e brace the Faith of him, into whoſe name we are baptiſed. What me Chriſt then, when he commaunded to be baptiſed, in the name of t Father, the Sonne, and the Holy ghoſt, but that we ought with Faith to beleue in the Father, Sonne, and the Holy ghoſt? There ſithe this remaineth certain, that there is but one God, and not ma we determine that the Worde and the Spirite are nothing els but very ſelfe eſſence of God. And very fooliſhly did the Arrians pr which confeſſing the godhead of the Sonne did take from him ſubſtance of God. And ſuch a like rage vexed the Macedonias, wh would haue to be vnderſtāded by the Spirite, only the giftes of g that are poured forth into men. For as wiſdom, vnderſtanding, p dence, fortitude, feare of God do procede from him: ſo he once the ſpirite of wiſdom, prudence, fortitude, and godlineſſe. Yet a he diuided according to the diſtribution of his graces: but how ſoe they be diuerſely dealt abroade, yet he remaineth one and the ſa as the Apoſtle ſaith.

1. Cor. 12. 11.

18 But to borow ſimilitudes from matters of men, to expreſſe the rce of this diſtinction, I know not whether it be expedient. In dede e olde fathers are wont ſo to do ſomtime: but withall they do con-ſſe, that whatſoeuer they bring foorth for like, doth much differ. or which cauſe I am much afraid to be any way bold, leaſt if I bring orth any thing vnfittely, it ſhould giue occaſion either to the ma-ious to cauill, or to the vnskilfull to be deceiued. Yet ſuch diſtinion as we haue marked to be ſette out in Scriptures, it is not good haue left vnſpoken. And that is this, that to the Father is giuen the eginning of working, the fountayne and ſpring of all thinges: to the onne wiſdom, counſell, & the very diſpoſitiō in the doing of things: the holy Holy ghoſt is aſſigned power and effectuall working. And though eternity belong vnto the Father, and eternity to the Sonne nd to the Holy ghoſt alſo, for as much as God could neuer haue n without his wiſdom & power, and in eternity is not to be ſought, hich was firſt or laſt: yet this obſeruation of order is not vayne or perfluous, wherein the Father is reckened firſt, and then of him the onne, & after of them both the Holy ghoſt. For euery mans minde f it ſelfe enclineth to this, firſt to conſider God, then the wiſdom rising out of him, and last of all the power wherwith he putteth the decrees of his purpose in execution. In what sorte the Sonne is sayd to be of the Father onely, and the Holy ghost both of the Father and the Sonne, is shewed in many places, but nowhere more plainly than in the viii. chapter to the Romanes, where the same Spirite is without difference sometime called the Spirite of Christ, & sometime of him that raised vp Christ from the dead: and that not without cause. For Peter doth also testifie that it was the Spirite of Christ wherewith the Prophetes did prophecy, where as the Scripture so often teacheth that it was the Spirite of God the Father.

19 Now this distinctiō doth so not stand against the single vnity of God, that thereby we may proue that the Sonne is one God with the father, because he hath one Spirit with him, & that the Holy Spirit is not a thing diuers from the Father and the Sonne. For in ech Hypostasis is vnderstanded the whole substance, with this that euery one hath his own proprety. The Father is whole in the Sonne, & the Sonne is whole in the Father, as himselfe affirmeth. I am in the Father & the Father is in me. And the Ecclesiasticall wryters do not graunt the one to be seuered frō the other by any differēce of essence. By these names that betoken distinction (sayth Augustine) that is ment wherby they haue relation one to an other, & not the very substance wherby they are all one. By which meaning are the sayinges of the old wryters to be made agree, which otherwise would seeme not a little to disagree. For sometime they say that the Father is the beginning of the Sonne, & somtime that the Sonne hath both godhead & essence of himselfe, and is all one beginning with the Father. The cause of this diuersity Augustine doth in an other place wel & plainly declare, whē he sayth Christ hauing respect to himselfe, is called God, & to his Father is called the Sonne. And againe, the Father as to himselfe is called God, as to his Sonne is called the Father, where hauing respect to the Sonne he is called the Father, he is not the Sonne: & where as to the Father he is called the Sonne, he is not the Father: & where he is called as to himselfe the Father, and as to himselfe the Sonne: it is all one God. Therefore when we simply speake of the Sonne: without hauing respect to the Father, we do well & properly say, that he is of himselfe: & therfore we call him but one beginning: but when we make mention of the relation betwene him and his Father, then we rightly make the Father the beginning of the Sonne. All the whole fifth booke of Augustine concerning the Trinity doth nothing but set foorth this matter. And much safer it is to rest in that relation that he speaketh of, than in to suttelly pearsing vnto the hie mistery to wander abroad by

Let them therefore that are pleaſed with ſoberneſſe, and con-ed with meaſure of Faith, ſhortly learne ſo much as is profitable e knowen: that is, when we profeſſe that we beleue in one God, er the name of God, we vnderſtand the one onely & ſingle eſſence which we comprehend three Perſons or Hypoſtaſes. And therfore oft as we do indefinitely ſpeake of the name of God, we meane no e the Sonne and the Holy ghoſt than the Father. But when the nne is ioyned to the Father, then commeth in a relation, and ſo make diſtinctiō betwene the Perſons. And becauſe the propreties he Perſons bring an order with them, ſo as the beginning and onall is in the Father: ſo oft as mention is made of the Father and Sonne, or the Holy ghoſt together, the name of God is peculiarly en to the Father. By this meane is retayned the vnity of ỹ eſſence, regarde is hadde to the order, which yet doth miniſh nothing of godhead of the Sonne and of the Holy ghoſt. And whereas we ue already ſeene that the Apoſtles do affirme, that the Sonne of d is he, whom Moſes and the Prophetes do teſtifie to be Ieho-h the Lord, we muſt of neceſſity alway come to the vnity of the ence. Wherefore it is a deteſtable ſacrilege for vs to call the nne a ſeuerall God from the Father, becauſe the ſimple name God, doth admitte no relation, and God in reſpect of himſelfe not be ſayd to be this or that, Now, that the name of Iehouah 1. Cor.

ſolute ſentēce that compareth not the Father with the Sonne. And know that after the accuſtomed maner of the Greekes, the Apoes do commonly ſette the word Kyrios, Lord, in ſteede of Ieho-lutely prayed to God, he byandby bringeth in the name of Chriſt. uen ſo is the whole God called by Chriſt himſelfe the Spirite.

For there is no cause against it, but that the whole essence of G may be spirituall, wherin the Father, the Sonne & the Holy ghos comprehended. Which is very playne by the Scripture. For eue there we heare God to be made a Spirite : so we do heare the H ghost, for so much it is an Hypostasis of the whole essence, to be led both God, and proceeding from God.

21 But for as much as Sathan, to the end to roote out our Fa essence of the Sonne, and of the holy Ghost, and partly concer theyr distinction of Persones. And as in a maner in all ages he h therefore here it is good to answere the peruerse foolish errou some. Hitherto it hath bin our purpose, to leade as it were by with the obstinate and contentious. But now the trueth which haue already peaseably shewed, must be reskued from the cauillati of the wicked. All be it my chiefe trauaile shall yet be applied to t end, that they which giue gentill and open eares to the word of G may haue whereupon stedfastly to rest their foote. In this point, s ny where at all in the secrete mysteries of Scripture, we ought to spute soberly, and with great moderation, and to take great hede t neither our thought nor our tongue proceede any further than t boundes of Gods word do extende. For how may the minde of m by his capacity define the immeasurable essence of God, which n uer yet could certainly determine how great is ỹ body of the Sun which yet he daily seeth with his eyes? yea how may she by her ow guiding attaine to discusse the substaunce of God, that can not reac to know her owne substaunce? Wherefore let vs willingly giue ou vnto God the knowledge of himselfe. For he only, as Hilarie say is a conuenient witnesse to himselfe, which is not knowē but by h selfe. We shall giue it ouer vnto him, if we shall both conceiue him be such as he hath opened himselfe vnto vs, and shall not else wh search to know of him, than by his owne word. There are to this e wrytten fiue homelies of Chrysostome against the Anomei. Yet t boldnesse of Sophisters could not be restrayned by them from la bling vnbridledly. For they haue behaued themselues in this beh no whit more modestly than they are wonted in all other. By the w happie successe of which vndiscretion, we ought to be warned to t haue in our minde either to ſearch for God any where elſe than is holy Worde, or to thinke any thing of him, but hauing his orde going before to guide vs, or to ſpeake any thinge but that ch is taken out of the ſame Word: The diſtinction that is in one Godheade of the Father, the Sonne, and the holy Ghoſt, is very hard to know, ſo doth it bring more buſineſſe and com-ance to ſome wittes than is expedient. Lette them remember that mindes of men do enter into a maſe when they follow their owne ioſity, and ſo lette them ſuffer themſelues to be ruled with the uenly oracles, how ſoeuer they can not attaine the height of the ſtery.

To make a regiſter of the errours, wherewith the pureneſſe of h in this point of doctrine hath in times paſt bin aſſailed, were to g and full of vnprofitable tediouſneſſe: and the moſt parte of he-ickes haue ſo attempted to ouerwhelme the glory of God with ſſe doting errours, that they haue thought it enough for them to ke and trouble the vnskilfull. And from a few men haue ſprong vp ny ſectes, whereof ſome do teare in ſunder the eſſence of God, ne do confound the diſtinction that is betwene the Perſons. But if hold faſt that which is already ſufficiētly ſhewed by the Scripture, t the eſſence of the one God which belongeth to the Father, the nne, and the Holy ghoſt, is ſingle and vndiuided. Againe, that the her by a certaine proprety differeth from the Sonne, & the Sonne m the Holy ghoſt: we ſhal ſtop vp the gate not only againſt Arrius l Sabellius, but alſo the other old authors of errours. But becauſe our time there be riſen vp certaine phrenetike men, as Seruetto & er like, which haue encombred all things with new deceites: It is od in few wordes to diſcuſſe their falſehoodes. The name of the inity was ſo hateful, yea ſo deteſtable to Seruetto, that he ſayd, that the Trinitaries, as he called them, were vtterly godleſſe. I omit the liſh words that he had deuiſed to raile withall. But of his opinions was the ſumme. That God is made Tripartite, when it is ſayd, there abide three Perſons in his eſſence, and that this Trinity is a thing imagined, becauſe it diſagreeth with the vnity of God. In meane time the Perſons he would haue to be certaine outward nceptions of Forme, which are not truely ſubſiſting in the eſſence God, but do repreſent God vnto vs in this or that faſhion. And at beginning that there was in God nothing diſtinct becauſe ones Word and the Spirite were all one: but ſins that Chriſt aroſe God of God, the holy Ghoſt ſprong alſo an other God out of him. d though ſomtime he colour his follies with allegories, as whē he then appeared, that the eternall Spirite was alwayes in God, when preſerued and ſuſteined the confuſed matter of heauen and earth, till beauty and order were added vnto it.Surely he could not yet be image or repreſentation of God as Seruetto dreameth. But in oth pointes he is compelled more openly to diſcloſe his wickednesſe, ſaying that God by his eternall purpoſe appointing to himſelfe a ſible Sonne, did by this meane ſhew himſelfe viſible. For if that true there is no other godhead left vnto Chriſt, but ſo far as he is the eternall decree of God ordeined his Sonne.Moreouer he ſo tra formeth thoſe imagined ſhapes that he ſticketh not to faine new cidents in God. But this of all other is moſt abhominable,that he fuſely mingleth as well the Sonne of God,as the Holy ghoſt, with creatures.For he plainely affirmeth, that there be partes and parti ons in the Eſſence of God,of which euery portiō is God.And na ly he ſayth, that the Spirites of the faithfull are coeternall and co ſubſtantiall with God: albeit in an other place he aſſigneth the ſtantiall Deity,not onely to the ſoule of man, but alſo to other cr m the Sonne and the Holy ghoſt, that he is the only eſſentiatour naker of the eſſence. Firſt they pretende this colour, that Chriſt is ewhere called the Sonne of God: whereof they gather, that re is none other properly God but the Father. But they marke , that though the name of God be alſo common to the Sonne, yet reaſon of preeminence it is ſometime giuen to the Father onely, auſe he is the fountaine and originall of the Deity, and that for inconuenient to haue him reckened the Sonne of a Perſon. I an-re that both are true: that is, that he is the Sonne of God, beſe he is the Word begotten of the Father before all worldes (for come not yet to ſpeake of the Perſon of the Mediatour) and yet explications ſake we ought to haue regard of the Perſon, that the ne of God ſimply be not taken, but for the Father onely. For if meane none to be God but the Father, we plainely throw downe Sonne from the degree of God. Therefore ſo oft as mention is de of the godhead, we muſt not admit a compariſon betwene the ne and the Father, as though the name of God did belong one-o the Father. For truely the God that appeared to Eſay was the e and onely God, and yet Iohn affirmeth that the ſame was riſt. And he that by the mouth of Eſay teſtified, that he ſhould a ſtumbling ſtone to the Iewes, was the onely God: and yet Paule nounceth that the ſame was Chriſt. He that crieth out by Eſay, e, and to me all knees ſhall bowe, is the onely God: and yet Paul oundeth that the ſame was Chriſt. For this purpoſe ſerue the te-nonies that the Apoſtle reciteth: Thou O God haſt layd the foun-ions of heauen & earth. Againe, let all the angels of God worſhip

Now if we graunt that the whole eſſence is in the Father onely, ther it muſt be made partable, or be taken from the Sonne, and ſo the Sonne be ſpoyled of his eſſence, and be a God only in name ſtract from the eſſence of God, or a deriuation of a parte out of whole. Now muſt they needes graunt by their owne principle, the holy ghoſt is the Spirite of the Father only. For if he be a der he can not be accompted the Spirite of the Sonne: which is con

It is easie by many places to proue that it is false which they , that so oft as there is in Scripture mention made absolutely of , none is ment thereby but the Father. And in those places that themselues do allege, they fowly bewray their owne want of cõ- ation, because there is also sette the name of the Sonne. Where- ppeareth, that the name of God is there relatiuely take, and ther- restrained to the Person of the Father. And their obiectiõ where say, If the Father were not only the true God, he should himself s owne Father, is answered with one word. It is not inconuenient egree and orders sake, that he be peculiarly called God which not onely of himselfe begotten his wisdom, but also is the God e Mediatour, as in place fitte for it, I will more largely declare. ith Christ was openly shewed in the flesh, he is called the Sonne od, not onely in respect that he was the eternall Word before oldes begotten of the Father: but also because he tooke vppon he Person and office of the Mediatour to ioyne vs vnto God. because they do so boldly exclude the Sonne from the honor of , I would fayne know whether the Sonne when he pronoun- that none is good but God, do take goodnesse from himselfe? Mat. 19. 17. not speake of his humaine nature, least perhappes they should exception, and say, that whatsoeuer goodnesse was in it, it came e gift. I aske whether the eternall Word of God be good or If they say nay, then we hold their vngodlinesse sufficiently cõ- d: in saying yea, they confound themselues. But where as at the ght, Christ seemeth to put from himselfe the name of Good, loth the more confirme our meaning. For sith it is the singular f God alone, forasmuch as he was after the common maner d by the name of Good, in refusing false honor, he did admo- hem, that the goodnesse wherein he excelled, was the good- that God hath. I aske also, where Paule affirmeth that onely 1 Tim. 11. 17. is immortall, wise, and true, whether by these wordes Christ ought into the number of men mortall, foolish, and false? Shall e then be immortall, that from the beginning was life to giue rtality to angels? Shall not he be wise that is the eternall wise- of God? Shall not the trueth it selfe be true? I aske furthermore, Phil. 2. 10. her they thinke that Christ ought to be worshipped or no? For imeth this vnto himselfe, to haue all knees bowe before him: oweth that he is the God which did in the law forbid any other worshipped but himselfe. If they will haue that meant of the

Esa. 44. 6. Father only which is spoken in Esay: I am, and none but I: this monie I turne against themselues, for as much as we see, that soeuer pertayneth to God is giuen to Christ. And their cauil hath no place, that Christ was exalted in the flesh, wherein he bin abased, and that in respect of the flesh, all authority is him in heauen and in earth: because although the maiestie and Iudge extende to the whole Person of the Mediatour, he hadde not bin God openly shewed in flesh, he could not bin auaunced to such heigth, but that God should haue

Nowe howe coulde this tie haue stande together, vnlesse he hadde bin the same God name is Iah and Iehouah: that rydeth vppon the Cherubin, kinge of all the earth and Lord of the worldes? Nowe howe they babble against it, it canne not be taken from Christ who

Esa. 25. 9. saie sayeth in an other place: He, he, is our God, for haue wayted, whereas in these wordes he describeth the com of God the redeemer, not onely that shoulde bring home the ple from the exile of Babylon, but also fully in all poyntes reflo Church. And with theyr other cauillation they nothinge pre in saying, that Christ was God in his Father. For though we fesse that in respect of order and degree the beginning of the heade is in the Father, yet we say that it is a detestable inuen say that the essence is onely propre to the Father, as thou were the onely Godmaker of the Sonne. For by this mean ther he shoulde haue moe essence than one, or else the Christ God onely in title and imagination. If they graun Christ is God, but next after the Father, then shall the be in him begotten and fashioned, which in the Father is vn ten and vnfashioned. I knowe that many quicke nosed m laugh at this that we gather the distinction of Persons out wordes of Moses, where he bringeth in God speaking thus:

Gen. 1. 26. vs make manne after our image. But yet the godly rea see how vaynely and fondely Moses should bring in this as of diuerse together, if there were not in God moe Person one. Nowe certayne is it, that they whom the Father spak were vncreate: but nothing is vncreate but God himselfe one onely God. Nowe therefore vnlesse they graunt that wer of creating was common, and the authoritie of comm common, to the Father, the Sonne, and the Holy ghost:

uenient to be reſtrayned to the Father onely, as if the Worde ſelfe were not of Spirituall nature. If then the name of Spirite as well agree with the Sonne as with the Father, I ga-that the Sonne is alſo comprehended vnder the indefinyte of himſelfe begotten his wiſdom, therefore rightfully as is ae ſayd, he is counted the originall and fountayne of all the god-d. So God indefinitely ſpoken, is vnbegotten, and the Father alreſpect of Perſon is vnbegotten. And fooliſhly they thinke that gather, that by our meaning is made a quaternity, becauſe falſe-d cauillouſly they aſcribe vnto vs a deuiſe of their owne brayne, ough we did fayne that by deriuation there come three Perſons of one eſſence: whereas it is euident by our wrytinges that we do draw the Perſons out of the eſſence, but although they be abi-in the eſſence we make a diſtinctiō betwene them. If the Perſons ſeuered from the eſſence, then paraduenture theyr reaſon were to be true. But by that meane it ſhould be a Trinity of goddes not of Perſons, which one God conteyneth in him. So is their e queſtion aunſwered, whether the eſſence do mete to make vp Trinity as though we did imagine that there deſcende three gods of it. And this exception groweth of like fooliſhneſſe where ſay, that then the Trinity ſhould be without God. For though te not to make vppe the diſtinction as a parte or a member, yet ner are the Perſons without it nor out of it. Becauſe the Father were not God could not be the Father, and the Sonne is otherwiſe the Sonne but becauſe he is God. We ſay therefore, that the godhead is absolutely of it selfe. Whereby we graunt the Sonne in so much as he is God, is of himselfe without respect his Person, but in somuch as he is the Sonne, we say that he is of Father. So his essence is without beginning, but the beginning of Person is God himselfe. And the true teaching wryters that in time haue spoken of the Trinity, haue onely applied this name the Persons, for somuch as it were not onley an absurde error also a grosse vngodlinesse to comprehend the essence in the distinction. For they that will haue these three to mete, the essence, Sonne and the Holy ghost, it is playne that they do destroy the sence of the Sonne and the Holy ghost, for else the partes ioyned gether would fall in sunder, which is a fault in euery distinction. nally if the Father and the Sonne were Synonimes or seuerall signifying one thing, so the Father should be the Godmaker nothing should remayne in the Sonne but a shadowe, and the nity should be nothing else, but the ioyning of one God with creatures.

1 John. 4. 24.

26 Whereas they obiect, that if Christ be properly God, not rightfully called the Sonne, to that we haue already answ that because in such places there is a comparison made of the Person to the other, the name of God is not there indefinitely but restrayned to the Father onely, in so much as he is the beg ning of the Godheade, not in making of essence as the madde do fondly imagine, but in respect of order. In this meaning is strued that saying of Christ to the Father: this is the eternall life, Ioh.17. men beleue in thee ỹ one true God, & Iesus Christ whom thou 3. sent. For speaking in the Person of the Mediatour, he keepeth degree that is meane betwene God and men: and yet is not his fly thereby diminished. For though he abaced himselfe, yet he not with the Father his glory that was hidden before the world. the Apostle in the second Chapter to the Hebrues, though he fesseth that Christ for a shorte time was abaced beneth the A yet he sticketh not to affirme withall, that he is the same eternal that founded the earth. We must therefore hold, that so oft as C in the Person of the Mediatour speaketh to the Father, vnder name of God is comprehended the godhead which is his also. So Iohn.16 he sayed to the Apostles: it is profitable that I go vp to the Fa 7. because the Father is greater. He giueth not vnto himselfe onely second degree of godhead to be as touching his eternall essence feriour to the Father, but because hauing obtayned the heauenly ry, he gathereth together the faithfull to the partaking of it. He his Father in the hier degree, insomuch as the glorious perfen of brightnesse that appeareth in heauen, differeth frō that mea-of glory that was seene in him being clothed with flesh. After maner in an other place, Paul sayth: that Christ shall yeld vp the 1.Cor. dom to God and his Father, that God may be all in all. There is 15.24. ning more absurd than to take away eternall continuance from godhead of Christ. If he shall neuer ceasse to be the Sonne of , but shall alway remayne the same that he was from the begin-g, it followeth that vnder the name of the Father is compreheded one essence that is common to them both. And surely therefore Christ descende vnto vs, that lifting vs vppe vnto his Father, he ht also lift vs vp vnto himselfe, inasmuch as he is all one with his er. It is therefore neither lawfull nor right so exclusiuely to rene the name of God to the Father, as to take it from the Sonne.

, Iohn doth for this cause affirme that he is true God, that no Ioh.1.1 should thinke that he resteth in a second degree of godhead be-his Father. And I maruell what these framers of new Gods do ne, that while they confesse Christ to be true God, yet they forth exclude him from the godhead of his Father. As though there d any be a true God but he that is the one God, or as though the head powred from one to an other, be not a certaine new forged gination.

Whereas they heape vp many places out of Ireneus, where he meth that the Father of Christ is the onely and eternall God of l: that is either done of a shamefull ignoraunce, or of an extreme edneſſe. For they ought to haue considered, that then the holy hadde to do in disputation with those frentike men that denyed the Father of Christ was the same God that in old time spake Moses and the Prophetes, but that he was I wote not what ima-d thing brought out of the corruption of the world. Therefore ltogether trauaileth in this point, to make it playne that there o other God preached of in the Scripture but the Father of ist, and that it is amisse to deuise any other, and therefore it is maruell if he so oft conclude that there was no other God of Is-, but he that was spoken of by Christ and the Apostles. And ke manner now, whereas we are to stand against an other sorte rour, we may truely say that the God which in old time appeao the Fathers, was none other but Christ. But if any manne ct that it was the Father, our aunswere is in redinesse, that n we striue to defende the Godhead of the Sonne, we exclude the Father. If the readers take heede to this purpose of Ire-neus, all that contention ſhall ceaſſe. And alſo by the ſixt Chapter the third booke, this whole ſtriſe is ended, where the good man ha deth all vpon this point, to proue that he which is in Scripture ab lutely and indefinitely called God: is verely the one onely God, a that Chriſt is abſolutely called God. Let vs remember that this the principall point whereupon ſtode all his diſputation, as by whole proceſſe thereof doth appeare: and ſpecially the 46 Chapter the ſecond booke, that he is not called the Father by darke ſimili onely the Father is the God of Iſrael, I will turne againe vppon h that which the ſame wryter playnely teacheth, that Chriſt is all onely God.

28 And with no more trueth do they bring in Tertullian theyr defender. For though he be rough ſometime and crabbe his manner of ſpeech, yet doth he plainely teach the ſumme of doctrine that we defende. That is to ſay, where as he is the God, yet by diſpoſition and order he is his Worde: that the but one God in vnity of ſubſtance, and yet that the ſame vnit miſtery of orderly diſtribution is diſpoſed into Trinity, that t are three, not in ſtate, but in degree, not in ſubſtance, bu forme: not in power, but in order. He ſayeth that he defen the Sonne to be a ſeconde next to the Father, but he meaneth to be none other than the Father, but by way of diſtinction. ſome places he ſayeth that the Sonne is viſible. But when he reaſoned on both partes he defineth that he is inuiſible in ſo muc he is the Worde. Finally where he affirmeth that the Father is mined in his owne perſon, he proueth himſelfe farre from that h we confute. And though he doth acknowledge none other but the Father, yet in the next peece of his wryting expounding elfe, he ſayth, that he ſpeaketh not excluſiuely in reſpect of the e, becauſe he denieth that ỹ Sonne is any other God beſide the er, and that therefore their ſole gouernement is not broken by ction of Perſon. And by the perpetuall courſe of his purpoſe it ie to gather the meaning of his words. For he diſputeth againſt eas, that though God be diſtinguiſhed into three perſons, yet are not made many gods nor the vnity torne in ſunder. And becauſe e imagination of Praxeas Chriſt could not be God, but he muſt e the Father, therefore he ſomuch laboureth about the diſtin-. Wheras he calleth ỹ Word & the Spirite a portiõ of the whole ugh it be a hard kinde of ſpeech, yet is it excuſable, becauſe it is eferred to the ſubſtaunce, but only ſheweth the diſpoſition & or-hat belongeth only to the Perſons, as Tertulliane himſelfe wit-th. And herof hangeth that. How many Perſons thinkeſt thou are, O moſt frowarde Praxeas, but euen ſo many as there be es? And ſo a little after that, they may beleue the Father and the e ech in their names and perſons. Hereby I thinke may be ſuffi-ly cõſuted their impudency that ſeeke to begyle the ſimple with ur of Tertullians authority.

And ſurely whoſoeuer ſhall diligẽtly compare together ỹ wry-s of the old authors, ſhall finde no other thing in Ireneus, than which hath bin taught by other that came after. Iuſtine is one e auncienteſt, and he in all things doth agree with vs. Yet lette obiect that he as the reſt do, calleth the Father of Chriſt the God. The ſame thing doth Hilary teach, yea and ſpeaketh more y, that the eternity is in the Father. But doth he that to take away ſſence of God from the Sonne? And yet is he altogether in de-of the ſame Faith that we followe. Yet are they not aſhamed to out certaine mangled ſentences whereby they would perſwade Hilary is a Patrone of their errour. Wher they bring in Ignatius: y will haue that to be of any authority, let them proue that the ſles made a law for lent & ſuch like corruptions of religion. No-is more vnſauery than thoſe fonde trifles that are publiſhed vn-e name of Ignatius. Wherfore their impudence is ſo much leſſe able that diſguiſe themſelues with ſuch viſers to deceiue. More-the conſent of the auncient Fathers is plainely perceiued by that at the councell of Nice, Arrius neuer durſt allege for him-he authority of any one allowed writer. And none of the Greks tius doth excuſe himſelfe and ſay, that he diſſenteth from them that were before. It needeth not to be ſpoken how Auguſtine, w theſe loſells do moſt hate, hath diligently ſearched the wrytinge them all, and how reuerently he did embrace them. Truely cu matters of leaſt weight he vſeth to ſhew what compelleth him m ſent from them. And in this matter, if he haue read any thing d full or darke in other, he hydeth it not. But the doctrine that thei ſtriue againſt, he taketh it as confeſſed, that from the fartheſt tim antiquity it hath bin without cõtrouerſie receiued. And by one w it appeareth that he was not ignorant what other had taught be him, where he ſayeth that in the Father is vnity, in the firſt book Chriſtian doctrine, will they ſay that he then forgate himſelfe? Be an other place he purgeth himſelfe from ſuch reproch, where he leth the Father the beginning of the whole godhead, becauſe he none: conſidering in dede wiſely that the name of God is ſpeciall ſcribed to the Father, becauſe if the beginning ſhould not be reck at him, the ſingle vnity of God can not be conceiued. By this I the godly reader will perceiue that all the cauillations are con wherwith Satan hath hitherto attẽpted to peruert or darken the trueth of doctrine. Finally I truſt that the whole ſumme of doctri this pomt is fully declared, if the readers will temper them of cu ty, and not more gredely than mete is ſeke for comberſome & en gled diſputations. For I take not in hand to pleaſe them, that do d in an vntemperate deſire of ſpeculation. Truely I haue omitted thing of ſuttle purpoſe that I thought to make againſt me. But I ſtudy to edifie the church, I thought it beſt, to leaue many thi vntouched which both ſmally profited, and would greue the rea with ſuperfluous tediouſneſſe. For to what purpoſe were it to diſp whether the father do alway beget? Foraſmuch as it is folly to a continuall act of begetting, ſith it is euident that from eternity haue bin three Perſons in God.

The xiiij. Chapter.

That the Scripture euen in the creation of the vvorld and of all things doth by certayne markes put difference betvvene the true God, and fayned Gods.

Eſa. 40. 21. ALthough Eſay doth worthily reproche the worſhippe falſe Goddes with ſlouthfullneſſe, for that they haue learned by the very foundations of the earth, and ro compaſſe of the heauens, which is the true God: ſuch is the dullneſſe and groſſeneſſe of our witte, that leaſt faythfull ſhoulde fall away to the inuentions of the Gentiles, it neceſſ ſſary to haue God more expreſly painted out vnto them. For eas the ſaying that God is the minde of the worlde, which mpted the moſt tolerable deſcription that is founde among Philoſophers, is but vaine, it behoueth vs more familiarly to y him, leaſt we alway wauer in doutefulneſſe. Therfore it was his ure to haue an hiſtory of the creacion remaining, wherupon the of the Church might reſte, and ſeke for no other God but him, m Moſes hath declared to be the maker and bilder of the world. e is firſt ſet forth the time, that by continuall proceding of yeres aithfull might come to the firſt original of mankinde, and of all ges. Which knowledge is very neceſſary, not onely to confute e monſtruous fables that ſometime were ſpred in Egypte & other s of the worlde, but alſo, that the beginning of the worlde ones g knowen, the eternitie of God may more clerely ſhine forth and h vs in admiracio of it. Neither ought we to be any thing moued that vngodly mocke, that it is maruell why it came no ſoner in minde of God to make the heaue and the earth, & why he ſitting did ſuffer ſo immeaſurable a ſpace to paſſe away, ſith he mought made it many thouſande ages before: wheras the whole con-unce of the worlde that now draweth to an end, is not yet come e thouſande yeres. For why God ſo long differred it, is nether l nor expedient for vs to enquire. Becauſe if mans minde will tra-to atteine thereunto, it ſhall faile a hundred times by the way, her were it profitable for vs to know that thing which God himto proue the modeſtie of our Faith, hath of purpoſe willed to be en. And well did that godly olde man ſpeake, which when a wan-fellow did in ſcorne demaunde of him, what God had done be-the creatio of the world, anſwered that he builded hel for curious es. Let this graue & ſeuere warning repreſſe the wantonneſſe that eth many yea and driueth them to euill and hurtefull ſpeculatios. lly let vs remember that the ſame inuiſible God whoes wiſdom Moſes as a loking glaſſe, wherin his liuely imagine appeareth. For e eyes that either are growen dimme with age, or dulled with any ſe, do not diſcerne any thing plainly vnleſſe they be holpen with acles: ſo, ſuch is our weakeneſſe, that vnleſſe the Scripture direct ſeking of God, we do forthwith runne out into vanitie. And they follow their owne wantonneſſe, becauſe they be now warned in e, ſhall all to late fele with horrible deſtruction, how much it had etter for them reuerētly to receiue the ſecrete counſels of God, to vomite out blaſphemies, to obſcure the heauen with all. And rightly doth Auguſtine complaine that wrong is done to God w further cauſe of thinges is ſought for, than his onely will. The man in an other place doth wiſely warne vs, that it is no leſſe enc how brode ſoeuer the circuit of the heauen is, yet is there ſome ſure of it. Now if one ſhould quarel with God for that the empt wherin nothing is conteined, is a hundred times more, ſhall no the godly abhore ſuch wãtonneſſe? Into like madneſſe runne they buſie them ſelues about Gods ſitting ſtill, becauſe at their appoi he made not the worlde innumerable ages ſoner. To ſatiſfie owne gredineſſe of minde, they couet to paſſe without the com of the worlde, as though in ſo large a circuite of heauen & earth, coulde not finde thinges enough that with their ineſtimable bre neſſe may ouerwhelme all our ſenſes: as though in ſix thouſand y God hath not ſhewed examples in continuall conſideracion, wh our mindes may be exerciſed. Let vs therfore willingly abide en ſed within thoſe boundes wherwith it pleaſed God to enuiron vs, as it were to penne vp our mindes that they ſhould not ſtray ab with liberty of wandring.

2 For like reaſon is it that Moſes declareth, that the worke of G was not ended in a moment but in ſix dayes. For by this circumſt we are withdrawen from forged inuẽcions to the one onely God diuided his worke into ſix dayes, that it ſhould not greue vs to be cupied all the time of our life in conſidering of it. For though eyes, what way ſoeuer we turne them, are compelled to looke vp the workes of God, yet ſee we how fickle our hede is, and if any g ly thoughtes do touch vs, how ſone they paſſe away. Here ag mãs reaſon murmureth as though ſuch procedinges were diſagre from the power of God, vntill ſuch time as being made ſubiect to obedience of Faith, ſhe learne to kepe that reſte wherunto the lowing of the ſeuen day calleth vs. But in the very order of thinges diligently to be conſidered the Fatherly loue of God towarde m kinde, in this: that he did not create Adam vntill he had ſtored world with all plenty of good thinges. For if he had placed him earth while it was yet barren and emptie, if he had geuen him life fore that there was any light, he ſhoulde haue ſemed not ſo wel prouide for his commoditie. But now where he firſt diſpoſed the tions of the Sunne and the Planets for the vſe of man, and furni the earth, the waters and the aire with liuing creatures, and bro forth aboundance of fruites to ſuffice for foode, taking vpon him care of a diligent & prouident houſeholder, he ſhewed his marue bou tie towarde vs. If a man do more hedefully weye with himselfe thinges that I do but shortly touch, it shall appeare that Moses he sure witnesse & publisher of the one God the creator. I omitt that which I haue already declared, that he speaketh not there of the bare essence of God, but also setteth forth vnto vs his all Wisdom and Spirite, to the ende we should not dreame that is any other, than such as he will be knowen by the image that th there expressed.

But before that I begin to speake more at large of the nature of I must say somewhat of Angels. Becausse though Moses applying elfe to the rudenesse of the common people reciteth in his hiof the creacio no other workes of God but such as are seen with yes, yet wheras afterwarde he bringeth in Angels for ministers od, we may easily gather that he was the creator of them in s seruice they employ their trauaile and offices. Though there-Moses speakeing after the capacity of the people doth not at the beginning rehearse the Angels among the creatures of God: yet is no cause to the contrary, but that we may plainly and expressly e those thinges of them, which in other places the Scripture co-ly teacheth. Becausse if we desire to know God by his workes, so e and excellente an example is not to be omitted. Beside that this te of doctrine is very necessary for the confuting of many errors. excellence of the nature of Angels hath so daselled the mindes any, that they thought the Angels had wrong offred them, if should be made subiect to the authoritie of one God, & brought were in obedience. And herevpon were they fained to be Gods. re rose vp also one Manicheus with his secte, which made them-s two originall beginninges of thinges, God, and the Deuell, and od he assigned the beginning of good thinges, and of thinges of nature he determined the Deuill to be the author. If our mindes ld be entangled with this error, God should not kepe whole his y in the creacion of the world. For where as nothing is more pro-o God than eternitie and a being of himselfe as I may so terme ey which geue that vnto the Deuill, do they not in a maner geue the title of Godhead? Now where is the almightinesse of God me, if such authoritie be graunted to the deuill, that he may put ecucion what he will though God say nay and withstande it? As he onely fundation that the Manichees haue, that it is vnlawfull scribe vnto God that is good, the creation of any thing that is euil: nothing hurteth the true Faith, which admitteth not that there y thing naturally euill in the whole vniuersalitie of the worlde, becauſe neither the frowardneſſe and malice both of man and the uell, nor the ſinnes that procede therof, are of nature, but of the ruption of nature. Neither was there any thing from the begi wherin God hath not ſhewed an example both of his wiſdom iuſtice. Therfore to aunſwere theſe peruerſe deuiſes: it behou to liſt vp our mindes hier than our eyes can atteine to ſee. For w cauſe it is likely, that where in the Nicene crede God is calle creator of all thinges, thinges inuiſible are expreſſed. Yet will w careſull to kepe the meaſure that the rule of godlineſſe appoin leaſt the readers with ſearching to vnderſtande further than is e dient, ſhould wander abroade, being ledde awaie from the ſimp of Faith. And ſurely for as much as the Holy ghoſt teacheth vs for our profite, and ſuch thinges as are ſmally auaylable to edifi doth either leaue wholly vnſpoken, or but lightly, and as it were o runningly touch them: it ſhall be alſo our duetie to be content m know thoſe thinges that do not profite vs.

4 That the Angels, for as much as they are the miniſters of G ordeined to execute his commaundementes, are alſo his creatur ought to be certainly out of all queſtion. To moue doute of the and order that they were created in, ſhoulde it not rather be a l waywardneſſe than diligence? Moſes declareth that the earth becauſe I will not be long: let vs, as in the whole doctrine of reli ſo here alſo remembre that we ought to kepe one rule of modeſ ſobrietie, that of obſcure thinges we neither ſpeake, nor thinke, yet deſire to know any other thinges than that hath bin taught the worde of God: and an other point, that in reading of Scrip we continually reſt vpon the ſearching and ſtudying of ſuch thing pertaine to edification, and not geue our ſelues to curioſitie or ſtu thinges vnprofitable. And becauſe it was Gods pleaſure to inſtruc not in triflyng queſtions, but in ſounde godlineſſe, feare of his m true confidence, and duties of holineſſe: let vs reſt vpon ſuch k ledge. Wherfore, if we will be rightly wiſe, we muſt leaue thoſe v ties that ydle men haue taught without warrāt of the worde of G concerning the nature, degrees, and multitude of Angels. I know ſuch matters as this, are by many more gredily taken holde of, and more pleaſant vnto them thā ſuch thinges as lie in dayly vſe. But greue vs not to be the ſcholers of Chriſt, let it not greue vs to ſo that order of learning that he hath appointed. So ſhall it ſo com that being contented with his ſcholing, we ſhall not onely for-but alſo abhorre ſuperfluous ſpeculations, from which he cals away. No man can deny, that the ſame Denyſe, what ſoeuer he was, hath diſputed many thinges both ſubtilly and wittyly in ierarchie of heauen: but if a man examine it more neerely, he inde that for the moſt parte it is but mere babbling. But the dutiurpoſe of a diuine is, not to delite eares with prating, but to ſtaconſciences with teaching thinges true, certaine, and profitable. e ſhould reade that booke, he would thinke that the man were d downe from heauen, and did tell of thinges not that he had ed by hereſay, but that he had ſeen with his eies. But Paule which 1. Cor. uiſhed aboue the thirde heauen, hath vttered no ſuch thing, but 12.2. roteſteth, that it is not lawful for man to ſpeake the ſecretes that d ſeen. Therfore bidding farewell to that triflyng wiſdom, let vs der by the ſimple doctrine of the Scripture, what the Lord would vs know concerning his Angels.

It is cõmonly read in the Scripture, that the Angels are heauen-irites, whoſe miniſtration & ſeruice God vſeth for putting in exen of thoſe thinges that he hath decreed. For which reaſon that is geuen them, becauſe God vſeth them as meſſangers, to ſhewe elfe vnto men. And vpõ like reaſon are deriued the other names hey are called by. They are named armies, becauſe they do like de enuirõ their prince, and do adorne and ſet forth the honourahew of his maieſtie, and like ſouldiours they are alway attending the enſigne of their capitaine, and are euer ſo prepared and in neſſe to do his commaundementes, that ſo ſone as he doth but n to them, they prepare thẽ ſelues to worke, or rather be at their e alredy. Such an image of the throne of God to ſet out his roialhe other prophetes do deſcribe, but principally Daniel where he Dan. 7. that when God ſate him down in his throne of iudgement, there 10.

ſandes of Angels. And becauſe God doth by them marailouſly forth and declare the might and ſtrength of his hand, therfore are named ſtrengths, bicauſe he exerciſeth & vſeth his authorite e worlde by them, therfore they are ſometime called Principali- Coloſſ. ometime powers, ſometime Dominions. Finally becauſe in them 1.16. were fitteth the glory of God, for this cauſe alſo they are called Ephe.1. nes: though of this laſt name I will not certainly ſay, becauſe an 21. expoſition doth either as well õr better agree with it. But (ſpea-nothing of that name) the Holy ghoſt often vſeth thoſe other er names to auaunce the dignitie of the miniſterie of Angels. For it were not reason that those instrumentes should be let passe wi honor, by whom God doth specially shew the presence of his ma Yea for that reason they are many times called Gods, because th

Gen 18. 1.32. Ioſ. 5. 14. Iudi. 6. 14. and 13 22. Pſa. 82 6. head. Although in deede I mislike not this that the olde writ expound, that Christ was the Angel, wher the Scripture saith, tha angel of God appered to Abraham, Iacob, Moses, & other, yet o times where mention is made of all the Angels in deede this ta geuen vnto them. And that ought to seme no meruaile. For if tha nour be geuen to princes and gouernors, that in their office they in the stede of God that is soueraigne king and iudge, much g cause there is why it should be geuen to the Angels, in whom brightnes of the glory of God much more abundantly shineth.

6 But the Scripture standeth most vpon teaching vs that, w

But whether to euery of the faithfull be a seuerall Angell assig- for their defence, I dare not certainely affirme. Surely when Da- bringeth in the Angel of the Persians, and the Angel of the Gre-, he sheweth that he mente, that there are to kingdomes and pro- es certaine Angels appointed as gouernours. And when Christ that the Angels of children do alway beholde the face of the er, he seemeth to meane, that there are certaine Angels to whom preseruation of them is geuen in charge. But I can not tell whe- we ought thereby to gather, that euery one hath his Angell set him. But this is to be holden for certaintie, that not one Angell hath care of euery one of vs, but that they all by one consent do he for our safetie. For it is spoken of all the Angels togither, that more reioyce of one sinner cõuerted to repẽtance, than of nyntie nine iust that haue stande still in their righteousnesse. And it is of mo Angels than one, that they conueyed the soule of Lazarus the bosome of Abrahã. ſt teſtifieth of him, that from the beginning he was a murtherer, 44. lier, we finde by experience in all his doinges. For he aſſaileth rueth of God with lies, obſcureth the light with darkeneſſe, en-eth the mindes of men with errors, raiſeth vp hatredes, kindleth ntions and ſtrifes, doth all thinges to this ende to ouerthrow the lome of God, and drowne men with himſelfe in eternall deſtru-. Wherby appereth, that he is of nature froward, ſpitefull and ious. For nedes muſt there be great frowardneſſe in that witte, is made to aſſaile the glory of God and ſaluation of men. And loth Iohn ſpeake of in his epiſtle, when he writeth, that he ſin-from the beginning. For he meaneth that he is the author, cap-and principall workeman of all malice and wickedneſſe.

But foraſmuch as the deuill was created by God, let vs rememhat this malice which we aſſigne in his nature, is not by creation y deprauatiō. For what ſo euer damnable thing he hath, he hath n to himſelfe by his owne reuolting and fall. Which the Scripherefore geueth vs warning of, leaſt thinking that he came out a one from God, we ſhould aſcribe that to God himſelfe which heſt frō him: For this reaſon doth Chriſt ſay that Sathā ſpeaketh n that beleue the word of the Lord, and little good is done with monies of Scripture among thoſe vayne ſtudentes of ſpecula, whom nothing pleaſeth but that which is new: I ſuppoſe I haue formed that which I purpoſed, that is that the godly mindes uld be furniſhed againſt ſuch fond errours, wherewith vnquiet mẽ rouble both themſelues and other that be more ſimple. But it was d to touch this, leaſt any entangled with that errour, while they ke they haue none to ſtand againſt them, ſhould waxe more ſlow vnprouided to reſiſt.

In the meane time lette it not be weryſome vnto vs, in this ſo utifull a ſtage to take a godly delight of the manifeſt and ordinaorkes of God. For, as I haue elſewhere already ſayd, though this ot the chiefe, yet is it in order the firſt doctrine of Faith, to renber that what way ſoeuer we turne our eyes, all that we ſee are workes of God, and with godly conſideration to wey for what God did make them. Therefore that we may conceiue by Faith uch as behoueth vs to know of God, it is good firſt of all to ne the hiſtory of the creation of the world, how it is ſhortly rerſed by Moſes, and afterward more largely ſette out by holy men, cially by Baſile and Ambroſe. Out of it we ſhall learne that God by the power of his word and Spirite created heauen and earth of thing, and thereof brought foorth all liuing creatures and th without life, with maruellous order diſpoſed the innumerable ty of thinges, to euery thing he gaue the propre nature, aſſigned offices, appointed their places and abidinges, and where all th are ſubiect to corruption, yet hath he ſo prouided that of all ſome ſhalbe preſerued ſafe to the laſt day; and therefore ſome he riſheth by ſecrete meanes, and powreth now and then as it new liuelineſſe into them, and to ſome he hath giuen the encreaſe by generation, that in their dying that whole kinde not dye together. So hath he maruellouſly garniſhed the heaue the earth, with ſo abſolutely perfect plenty, variety and beauty thinges as poſſibly might be, as it were a large and gorgeous furniſhed and ſtored with aboundance of moſt finely choſen laſt of all how in framing man and adorning him with ſo godly ty, and with ſo many and ſo great giftes, he hath ſhewed in him moſt excellent example of all his workes. But becauſe it is not purpoſe at this preſent to ſet forth at large the creation of the let it ſuffice to haue ones agayne touched theſe few thinges by way. For it is better, as I haue already warned the readers, to fuller vnderſtanding of this matter out of Moſes and other, that faithfully and diligently conueyed the hiſtory of the world by to perpetuall memory.

21 It is to no purpoſe, to make much a do in diſputing, to end this conſideration of the workes of God ought to tende, what marke it ought to be applied: foraſmuch as in other place ready a great parte of this queſtion is declared, and ſo much as longeth to our preſent purpoſe may in few wordes be ended. T if we were minded to ſet out as it is worthy, how ineſtimable wiſ power, iuſtice and goodneſſe of God appeareth in the framing o world, no eloquence, no garniſhmēt of ſpeech, could ſuffice the neſſe of ſo great a matter. And no dout it is Gods pleaſure tha ſhould be continually occupied in ſo holy a meditatiō, that whil behold in his creatures as in looking glaſſes the infinite riche his wiſdom, iuſtice bountie and power, we ſhould not runne ouer as it were with a flying eye, or with a vayne wandring looke as I ſo call it, but that we ſhould with conſideration reſt long vpon th caſt them vp and downe earneſtly and faithfully in our mindes, oft repeate them with remembrance. But becauſe we are now in that kinde that pertayneth to order of teaching, it is mete th omit thoſe thinges that require long declamations. Therefore, t, let the readers know, that then they haue conceiued by Faith, t this meaneth, that God is the creator of heauen & earth, if they follow this vniuerſall rule, that they paſſe not ouer with not con-ring or forgetfulneſſe of thoſe vertues, that God preſenteth to be e in his creatures, then, that they ſo learne to apply themſelues they may therwith be throughly moued in their hartes. The firſt hoſe we do when we conſider how excellent a workmans worke as, to place and aptly ſet in ſo well diſpoſed order the multitude of ſtarres that is in heauen, that nothing can be deuiſed more beau-l to behold: to ſette and faſten ſome of them in their ſtandings ſo they can not moue, and to otherſome to graunt a free courſe, but hat in mouing they wander not beyond their appointed ſpace, ſo emper the motion of them all that it may diuide in meaſure the es and nightes, monethes, yeares and ſeaſons of the yeare, and to g this inequality of dayes which we dayly ſee to ſuch a tempered r that it hath no confuſion. Likewiſe, when we marke his power ſteyning ſo great a body, in gouerning the ſo ſwift whirling about he engine of heauen, and ſuch like. Fot theſe few examples do ciently declare what it is to record the power of God in the creaof the world. For elſe if I ſhould trauaile as I ſayed to expreſſe l in wordes, I ſhould neuer make an end, foraſmuch as there are many miracles of the power of God, ſo many tokens of his goode, ſo many examples of his wiſdom, as there be formes of thinges he world, yea as there be things either great or ſmale.

Now remaineth the other part which commeth nerer to Faith, while we conſider that God hath ordayned all thinges for our le and ſafety, and therewithall do fele his power and grace in our es, and in ſo great good things that he hath beſtowed vpon vs: we y thereby ſtirre vp our ſelues to the truſt, inuocation, prayſe and e of him. Now as I haue before ſayd, God himſelfe hath ſhewed he very order of creation, that for mans ſake he created all thinges. it is not without cauſe that he diuided the making of the world o ſix dayes, whereas it had bin as eaſie for him in one moment to e in all pointes accompliſhed his whole worke, as it was by ſuch ceeding from peece to peece to come to the end of it. But then it aſed him to ſhew his prouidēce & fatherly carefulneſſe toward vs, before he made man he prepared all that he foreſaw ſhould be ſitable for him, and fitte for his preſeruatiō. How great vnthanke-

The xv. Chapter.

VVhat a one man vvas created: vvherein there is entreated of the powers of the ſoule, of the image of God, of free vvill & of the firſt integrity of nature

NOw muſt we ſpeake of the creation of man, not onely cauſe he is among all the workes of God the moſt noble moſt excellent example of his iuſtice, wiſdom and good but alſo becauſe as we haue ſayd in the beginning, we c not plainly and perfectly know God, vnleſſe we haue withal a knowledge of our ſelues. Although ỹ ſame knowledge be of two the one to know what we were created at the firſt beginning, th ther to know what our eſtate began to be after the fall of Adam it were but to ſmall profit for vs to know our creation, vnleſſe we alſo in this lamentable fall know what is the corruption and de mity of our nature:) yet at this time we will be content with de ption of our nature when it was pure. And before we deſcend to miſerable eſtate whereunto man is now in thraldome, it is goo learne what a one he was created at the beginning. For we muſt hede that in preciſely declaring onely the naturall euils of man, ſeme not to impute thē to the author of nature. For vngodlines ma ner proceede from God, and ſticketh not if ſhe be accuſed, to ll with God, and to lay the fault vpon him whereof ſhe is woraccuſed. And they that would ſeeme to ſpeake ſomwhat more étly of the maieſty of God, yet do willingly ſeeke to excuſe their e wickedneſſe, by nature, not conſidering that therin though not y they blame God alſo, to whoſe reproch it ſhould fall if it were ed that there is any fault in nature. Sith then we ſee that our fleſh th for all the wayes to eſcape, wherby ſhe thinketh the blame of owne euils may any way be put of from her, we muſt diligently ull to mete with this miſchiefe. Therefore we muſt ſo handle the nity of mankinde that we cut of all excuſe, and deliuer the iuſtice od from all accuſation. Afterward in place conuenient we ſhall ow far men be now from that pureneſſe that was giuē to Adam. firſt we muſt remember, that in this that man was taken out of and clay, a bridle was put vpon his pride, for there is no greater rdity, than for them to glory in their excellency that do not onvell in a cotage of clay, but alſo are themſelues in parte but earth aſhes. But foraſmuch as God did not onely vouchſaue to giue life an earthen veſſell, but alſo it was his pleaſure that it ſhould be dwelling houſe of an immortall Spirite, Adam might iuſtly glory great liberality of his maker.

Now it is not to be douted that man conſiſteth of ſoule and bo-and by the name of ſoule I meane an immortall eſſence, and yet ted, which is the nobler parte of him. Sometime it is called the
ite. Albeit when theſe two names Soule and Spirite are ioyned ther, they differ one from the other in ſignificatiō, yet when Spis ſette by it ſelfe it meaneth as much as Soule. As, when Salo- Eccl.12 perpetuall keper of it. As for them that imagine that the Soule is 59. fore called a Spirite becauſe it is a breath or a power by God ind or poured into bodies which yet hath no eſſence: both ỹ thing ſe & all the Scripture ſheweth that they do to much groſly erre.

e it is that while men are faſtened to the earth more than they ht to be, they waxe dull, yea becauſe they are eſtranged from the er of lightes they are blinded with darkeneſſe, ſo that they do not ke vpon this, that they ſhall remaine aliue after death. And yet is that light ſo quenched in darkeneſſe, but that they be touched ſome feling of immortality. Surely the conſcience which diſcerning betwene good and euill answereth the iudgement of God, a vndouted signe of an immortall Spirite. For how could a motiō without essence attaine to come to the iudgement seate of God, & the it selfe into feare by finding her owne giltinesse? For the body is moued with feare of a Spirituall peine, but that falleth onely vpon the soule. Wherby it followeth that the soule hath an essence. Moreuer the very knowledge of God doth proue that the soules which ascende vp aboue the world are immortall: for a vanishing liuelihood were not able to attayne to the fountayne of life. Finally forasmuch as so many excellent gifts wherewith mans minde is endued, do cry that there is some diuine thing engrauen it, there are euen so many testimonies of an immortall essence. For that sense which is in the beastes, goeth not out of the body, or at least extendeth no further than to things presently set before it. But the nimblenesse of the mind of man which veweth the heauen and earth and secretes of nature, comprehending all ages in vnderstanding and memory, digesteth euery thing in order and gathereth thinges to come by things past doth plainly shew that there lyeth hidden in man a certaine thing ouerall from the body. We conceiue by vnderstanding the immortal God and Angells, which the body can not do. We know thinges to be right, iust, & honest, which are hidden frō the bodily senses. Therfore it must needes be that the Spirite is the seate of this vnderstanding. Yea and our sleepe it selfe, which astonieth a man and seemeth to take life away from him, is a plaine witnesse of immortality, for so much as it doth not only minister vnto vs, thoughtes of those things that neuer were done, but also foreknowinges of thinges for time to come. I touch these things shortly which euen prophane wrytes haue excellently sette out with more gorgeous garnishment of wordes: with the godly readers a simple putting in minde of them shall be sufficient. Now if the soule were not a certaine thing by it selfe seuered from the body, the Scripture would not teach that we dwell in houses of clay, that by death we remoue out of the Tabernacle of the flesh, that we do put of that which is corruptible, that finally at the last day we may receiue reward euery man as he hath behaued himselfe in the body. For these places and other that we do ech where cōmonly vrge vpon, do not only manifestly distinguish the soule from the body, but also in giuing to the soule the name of man do shew that it is the principall parte. Now whereas Paule doth exhort the faithfull to cleanse themselues from all defiling of the flesh and the Spirite, he maketh two partes of man wherein abideth the filthinesse of sinne. And Peter where he calleth Christ the shepeherde & bishop of soules, shewobſcure, I will adde only this out of Luke, that it is reckened athe errours of the Sadduces that they did not beleue that there any Spirites and Angels.

Alſo a ſtrong prouſe hereof may be gathered of this where yd, that man is create like to the image of God. For although Ge.1.27 lory of God do appeare in the outwarde ſhape of man, yet is it ut that the propre ſeate of the image of God is in the ſoule. I t deny that as concerning our outward ſhape, in aſmuch as the doth diſtinguiſh and ſeuere vs from brute beaſtes, we do alſo in more nerely approch to God than they: neither will I much gainſt thē which thinke that this is to be accōpted of the image d, that where al other liuing creatures do grouellingwiſe behold ound, to man is giuen an vpright face, and he is commaunded to vppon the heauen, and to aduaunce his countenance towarde arres: ſo that this remayne certaine, that ỹ image of God which e appeareth in theſe outward ſignes, is ſpirituall. For Oſiander n his writings declare to haue bin in fickle imaginations fondly ) referring the image of God without difference as well to the as to the ſoule, mingleth heauen & earth together. For he ſayth, that the Father, the Sonne, and the Holy goſt did ſettle their im man, becauſe though Adam hadde ſtand without falling, yet Chriſt haue become man. And ſo by their opinion the body tha appoynted for Chriſt, was but an example or figure of that ſhape which then was formed. But where ſhall he finde that C the image of the Spirite? I graunt in deede that in the Perſon Mediatour ſhineth the glory of the whole Godheade. But ho the eternall worde be called the image of the Spirite whom he before in order? Finally it ouerthroweth the diſtinction betwe Sonne and the Holy ghoſt, if he do here call him his image. M uer I would fayne learne of him how Chriſt doth reſemble the ghoſt in the fleſh that he tooke vppon him, and by what marke features he doth expreſſe the likeneſſe of him. And where as th Gene. 1 ing: Let vs make man after our image, doth alſo belong to the 16. of the Sonne, it followeth, that he muſt be the image of him which is againſt all reaſon. Beſide that, if Oſianders inuention leued, man was faſhioned onely after the figure and pateme of in that he was man, and ſo that forme out of which Adam was was Chriſt, in that that he was to be clothed with fleſh, where Scripture in a farre other meaning teacheth, that he was create image of God. But their ſuttle inuention is more colourable wh thus expound it, that Adam was create in the image of God, be he was faſhioned like vnto Chriſt, which is the onely image o But that expoſition alſo is not ſound. Alſo ſome interpreters great diſputation about Image and Likeneſſe, while they ſeeke ference betwene thoſe two wordes, where is no difference at ing that this word Likeneſſe is added to expound the other. F know that among the Hebrues ſuch repetitions are common, in they expreſſe one thing twiſe: and in the thing it ſelfe there dout, but that man is therefore called the image of God, becauſe like to God. Wherby appeareth that they are to be laughed a do ſo ſuttelly argue about the wordes, whether they appoint Z that is to ſay, Image in the ſubſtaunce of the ſoule, or Demuth, to ſay, Likeneſſe in the qualities, or what other thing ſoeuer it they teach. For where as God determined to create man after image, this being ſomewhat darkely ſpoken he doth as by way plicatiõ repete it in this ſaying, After his likeneſſe, as if he would ſayd, that he would make man, in whom he would repreſent him as in an image, becauſe of the markes of likeneſſe grauen in him therfore Moſes a little after reciting the ſame thing, doth repea Image of God twiſe, leauing out the name of Likeneſſe. And ng obiection that Oſeander maketh, that not a parte of man, or ſoule only with the giftes therof, is called the Image of God, but whole Adam which had his name giuen him of the earth, from nce he was taken. Triflings I ſay, will all readers that haue theyr d wit iudge this obiection. For where whole man is called moryet is not y ſoule therby made ſubiect to mortality. Againe where called a liuing creature endued with reaſo, it is not therby meant the body hath reaſon and vnderſtanding. Although therfore the is not the whole man, yet is it not inconuenient, that man in reof the ſoule be called the image of God, albeit I hold ſtill that ciple which I haue before ſtabliſhed, that the Image of God ex-eth to the whole excellẽce, wherby the nature of man hath preence among all kindes of liuing creatures. Therefore in that word ed the integrity that man had when he was endued with right ſtanding, when he had his affection framed according to reaſon, ll his ſenſes gouerned in right order, and when in excellent gifts d truely reſemble the excellence of his Creator. And though the all feate of the image of God were in the minde & hart, or in oule and the powers therof, yet was there no parte of man, not ſo as the body, wherin did not ſome ſparkes thereof appeare. Cerit is, that alſo in all the partes of the world, there do ſhine ſome blances of the glory of God, wherby we may gather that where yd, that his Image is in man, there is in ſo ſaying a certain ſecret arſon, that auaunceth man aboue all other creatures, & doth as re ſeuere him from the commõ ſorte. Neither is it to be denied, Mat. 22 refore although we graunt that the Image of God was not al-

But that we may know on what partes it consisteth, it shall ood to entreate of the powers of the soule. For that speculatiue se of Augustine is not founde, where he sayeth that the soule is a e of the Trinity, because that there are in it vnderstanding, will, & ory. Neither is their opinion to be approued, which sette the I- e of God in the power of dominion giuen vnto him, as if he re- bled God onely in this marke, that he is appointed lorde and pos- r of all thinges, where as in deede the Image of God is properly sought within him, and not without him, and is an inward good f the soule. Lib. de tri. 10. De ciui. dei. 11.

But before I go any further, it is needefull that I meete with the g errour of the Manichees, which Seruetto hath attempted to in agayne in this age. Where it is sayd, that God breathed the h of life into the face of man, they thought that the soule didde ey into man the substance of God, as if some portion of the im- urable God were come into man. But it is easie euen shortely to how many grosse and foule absurdities this deuilish errour dra- with it. For if the soule be by deriuation parte of the essence of it shall follow that ỹ nature of God is subiect, not only to chaūge assions, but also to ignorance, euill lustes, weakenesse, and all s of vices. Nothing is more inconstant than man, because con- motions do tosse and diuersely draw his soule, oftentimes he is by ignorance, oft he yeldeth as vanquished euen to smale ten- ns, and we know that the soule it selfe is the sinke and receiuer filthinesse, al which things we must ascribe to the nature of God, graunt that the soule is of the essence of God, or a secrete influ- of Godheade. Who would not abhorre this monstrous deuise? y in deede doth Paule allege out of Aratus, that we are the of- of God, but in quality and not in substance, inasmuch as he garnished vs with godly giftes. But in the meane time to teare der the essence of the Creator, as to say, that euery mā doth pos part of it, is to much madnes. Therfore we must certainly hold, he soules, although the image of God be grauen in them, were e created than the angels were. And creation is not a pouring one substance into an other, but a beginning of essence made hing. And although the spirite of man came from God, and arting out of the flesh returneth to God, yet is not forthwith sayd, that it was taken out of his substance. And in this poynt Osiander, while he glorieth in his illusions, hath entangled Act. 17. 28.

God therefore hath furniſhed the ſoule of man with an vnderding minde, wherby he might diſcerne good from euill, and right wrong, and hauing the light of reaſon going before him, might hat is to be followed or forſaken. For which cauſe the Philoſo-s haue called this directing parte the Guider. To this he hath ad-ed Will, to which belongeth choiſe. With theſe noble giftes the ſtate of man excelled, ſo that he not onely had enough of reavnderſtanding, wiſdom, and iudgement, for the gouernement of earthly life, but alſo to clime vp euen to God and to eternall fey. Thēto haue Choiſe added vnto it, which migh direct the appe, and order all the inſtrumental motions, & that ſo the Wil might ltogether agreeable to the gouernement of reaſon. In this inte, man had freewill, whereby if he would he might haue attained nall life. For here it is out of place to moue queſtiō of the ſecrete eſtinatiō of God: becauſe we are not now about to diſcuſſe what t haue chaunced or not, but what at that time was the nature an. Adam therefore might haue ſtand if he would, becauſe he fell but by his owne will. But becauſe his will was pliable to either and there was not giuen him conſtancy to continue, therfore he ſely fell. Yet his Choiſe of good & euil was free. And not y only, alſo in his vnderſtanding minde, and in his will was moſt great ghtneſſe, and all his inſtrumentall partes orderly framed to obe-e, vntill by deſtroying himſelfe he corrupted the good things that in him. From henſe commeth it that all the Philoſophers were inded, for that in a ruyne they ſought for an vpright building, for ſtrong ioyntes in an vnioynted ouerthrowe. This principle helde, that man could not be a liuing creature, endued with reavnleſſe there were in him a free choiſe of good and euil: and they dered, that otherwiſe all the difference ſhould be taken away be-

The xvj. Chapter.

That God by his power doth nourish and maintaine the world, vvhich himſelfe hath created, and by his prouidence doth gouerne all the partes thereof.

BVt it were very fonde and bare to make God a creator moment, which doth nothing ſins he hath once made of his worke. And in this point principally ought we to frõ the prophane men, that the preſence of the power of may ſhine vnto vs no leſſe in the continuall ſtate of the world, in the firſt beginning of it. For though the mindes of the very w in onely beholding of the heauen and earth are compelled to vnto the creator, yet hath fayth a certayne peculiar maner by wh rby it geueth to God the whole praiſe of creation. And therfore th that ſaying of the Apoſtle, which we before alleged, that we t vnderſtand but by faith, that the world was made by the word od. For vnleſſe we paſſe forward euen vnto his prouidence, we s yet rightly conceiue what this meaneth that God is the crea-ow ſoeuer we do ſeeme to comprehend it in minde, and conwith tongue. When the ſenſe of the fleſh hath ones ſet before power of God in the very creation, it reſteth there, and when it deth furtheſt of all, it doth nothing but wey and conſider the m, power, and goodneſſe of the workemā in making ſuch a piece orke (which thinges do of them ſelues offer and thruſt them in ſight of men whether they will or no) and a certaine generall in preſeruing and gouerning the ſame, vpon which dependeth ower of mouing. Finally it thinketh that the liuely force at the ning put into all thinges by God, doth ſuffiſe to ſuſteine them. uth ought to perce deper, that is to ſay, whom it hath learned to creator of all thinges, byandby to gather that the ſame is the tuall gouernor and preſeruer of them: and that, not by ſtirring an vniuerſall motion as well the whole frame of the worlde, as partes therof, but by ſuſteyning, cheriſhing and caring for, with ar prouidence euery one of thoſe thinges that he hath created ages, and the ſame opinion is at this day alſo in a manner in all that all thinges happen by fortune, it is certaine, that that which senses ouerpasse not that vnmarked which experiēce plainly sh that some mothers haue full and plentifull brestes, some other dry, as it pleaseth God to fede one more liberally, and an other scarcely. But they which geue the due praise to the almightie God, do receiue double profit therby, the one that he hath suffic ly large abilitie to do them good, in whoes possession are both he and earth, and to whoes becke all creatures do attend vpon, a may any way be feared, by whoes authorite as with a bridle S restrained with all his furies and all his preparation, vpon becke doth hang all that euer is against our safetie. And no othe but this can the immesurable and superstitious feares be correc appeased, which we oftentimes conceiue by daungers happening to vs. Superstitiously fearful I say we be, if where creatures do th vs or geue vs any cause of feare, we be so afrayed therof, as if the of themselues any force or power to do vs harme, or did vnfor or by chaunce hurt vs, or as if against the hurtes that they do, Ier. 10. 2. were not sufficient helpe in God. As for example. The Prophe biddeth the children of God that they should not feare the sta signes of the heauen, as the vnbeleuers are wont to do. He co neth not euery kinde of feare. But when the vnbeleuers to gene the gouernement of the worlde from God vnto Planets, do fain their felicitie or miserie doth hang on the decrees and foresh of the starres, and not on the will of God, so commeth it to that their feare is withdrawen away from that onely one, whom ought to haue regarded, vnto the starres and comets. Whoso th will beware of this vnfaithfulnesse, let him kepe alwayes in re braunce that there is not in the creatures a wandring power, w or motion, but that they are gouerned by the secrete counsell o so that nothing can chaunce but that which is decreed by him witting and willing it so to be.

irſt therfore let the readers learne, that Prouidence is called that, herwith God idlely beholdeth from heauen what is done in the e, but wherwith as guiding the ſterne he ſitteth and ordreth all s that come to paſſe. So doth it no leſſe belong to his handes o his eyes. For When Abraham ſaied vnto his ſonne. God ſhall Ge. 22.
le, he meant not onely that God did forknow the ſucceſſe then 8. ne, but that he did caſt the care of a thing to him vnknowen the will of God, which is wont to bring thinges doutefull and ſed to a certaine end. Wherby foloweth that Prouidence conſin doing: for to much fondely do many trifle in talking of bare owledge. Their error is not altogither ſo groſſe which geue vn-his Prouidence which they call vniuerſall) that all creatures may ued by chaunce, or man may turne himſelfe hether or thether e choiſe of his will. And ſo do they parte the gouernement be-ordeined by the purpoſe and certaine diſpoſition of God, y they are chaunſable, not that we thinke that fortune ruleth th men, and vnaduisedly turneth all thinges vp and downe (for such lyneſſe ought to be farre from a Chriſtian harte) but becauſe the r, meane, ende and neceſſitie of thoſe thinges that happen, doth he moſt parte lie ſecrete in the purpoſe of God, and is not com-ended with opinion of man, therfore thoſe thinges are as it were iſable, which yet it is certaine to come to paſſe by the will of God. hey ſeme no otherwiſe, whether we conſider them in their owne re, or whether we eſteeme them according to our knowledge and ement. As for an example, let vs put the caſe, that a marchaunt g entred into a wood in cõpanie of true men, doth vnwiſely ſtray from his felowes, and in his wandring chaunceth vpon a denne bbers, lighteth among theues and is killed, his death was not on-reſeen with goddes eye, but alſo determined by his decree. e, but that he hath ſette and appointed markes which can not be d. And yet ſo farre as the capacitie of our minde conceiueth, all ges herein ſeme happening by chaunce. What ſhall a Chriſtian thinke? euen this, whatſoeuer happened in ſuch a death, he will e it in nature chauncing by fortune as it is in dede, but yet he wil doubt that the prouidence of God did gouerne to direct fortune r ende. In like manner are the happeninges of thinges to come. s all thinges that be to come are vncertaine vnto vs, ſo we hang in ſuſpenſe, as if they might fall on either parte, yet this remai-ſettled in our hartes, that nothing ſhal happē but that which God already foreſeen. In this meaning is the name of chaunce oft re-d in Eccleſiaſtes, becauſe at the firſt ſight mē do not atteine to ſee rſt cauſe which is farre hidden from them. And yet that which is red in the Scriptures concerning the ſecret prouidence of God, ncuer ſo blotted out of the hartes of men, but that euen in the neſſe there alway ſhined ſome ſparkes therof. So the ſothſayers e Philiſtiãs, although they wauer in doutfulneſſe, yet they aſcribe ſitie partly to God partly to fortune. If (ſay they) the arke go 1. Sam.

whatſoeuer changes of thinges are ſeen in the worlde, they com the ſecret ſturring of the hand of God. But that which God purpo is ſo of neceſſitie to come to paſſe, that yet it is not of neceſſitie ciſely nor by the nature of it ſelfe. As therof is a familiar exam in the bones of Chriſt. Foraſmuch as he had put on a bodie like ours, no wiſe man will deny that his bones were naturally able broken, yet was it impoſſible that they ſhould be broken: where ſee againe that not without cauſe were in ſcholes inuented the ctions of neceſſitie in reſpect, and neceſſitie abſolute, of conſe and conſequence, where as God had ſubiect to brickleneſſe the b of his ſonne, which he had exempted from being able to be bro and ſo brought to neceſſitie by reaſon of his owne purpoſe, that thing coulde not be, which naturally might haue bin.

NOw foraſmuch as mẽs wits are bent to vaine curious ſ ties, it is ſcarcely poſſible but that they ſhall encombre ſelues with entangled doubtes, whoſoeuer do not know true and right vſe of this Doctrine. Therfore it ſhall be pedient here to touch ſhortly to what ende the Scripture teach that all thinges are ordred by God. And firſt of all is to be noted, the Prouidence of God ought to be conſidered as well for the to come as for the time paſt: ſecondarily that the ſame is in ſuch the gouernour of all thinges, that ſometime it woorketh by mea ſometime without meanes, and ſometime againſt all meanes. L all, that it tendeth to this ende, that God may ſhew that he hath of all mankinde, but ſpecially that he doth watche in ruling Church, which he vouchſaueth more nerely to looke vnto. A is alſo to be added, that although either the fatherly fauour & be fulneſſe of God, or oftẽtimes the ſeueritie of his iudgemẽt do ly appere in the whole courſe of his Prouidence: yet ſometime cauſes of thoſe thinges that happen are ſecrete, ſo that this cro

beth into our mindes, that mens matters are turned and whirled ut with the blinde ſway of fortune, or ſo that the fleſh ſtirreth vs murmure, as if God did to make him ſelfe paſtime toſſe men like niſe balles. True it is that if we were with quiet and ſtill mindes y to learne, the very ſucceſſe it ſelfe woulde at length plainely w, that God hath an aſſured good reaſon of his purpoſe, either to e them that be his to pacience, or to correct their euill affections tame their wantonneſſe, or to bring them downe to the renounof them ſelues, or to awake their drowſineſſe: on the other ſide uerthrow the prowde, to diſappoint the ſutteltie of the wicked, to founde their deuiſes. But howſoeuer the cauſes be ſecrete and vnwen to vs: we muſt aſſuredly holde that they are laid vp in hidden e with him, and therefore we ought to crie out with Dauid, God, Pſa. 40. haſt made thy wonderfull workes ſo many, that none can count rder to thee thy thoughts towarde vs. I woulde declare and ſpeake hem, but they are more than I am able to expreſſe. For although aies in our miſeries we ought to thinke vpō our ſinnes, that ẏ very iſhement may moue vs to repentance, yet do we ſee how Chriſt eth more power to the ſecret purpoſe of his father, than to puniſh y one according to his deſeruing. For of him that was borne Iohn. 9. de he ſaith: neither hath this man ſinned nor his parentes, but that glorie of God may be ſhewed in him. For here naturall ſenſe mureth when calamitie commeth euen before birth, as if God did ercifully ſo to puniſh the ſely innocente, that had not deſerued it.
Chriſt doth teſtifie that in this looking glaſſe the glory of his fadoth ſhine to our ſight, if we haue cleere eyes to beholde it. But muſt kepe modeſtie, that we draw not God to yelde cauſe of his nges, but let vs ſo reuerence his ſecret iudgementes, that his will nto vs, a moſt iuſte cauſe of all thinges. When thicke cloudes do er the heauen, and a violent tempeſt ariſeth, then bycauſe both a uyſome miſtyneſſe is caſt before our eyes, & the thunder troubleth eares, and all our ſenſes are amaſed with terrour, we thinke that hinges are confoūded and tombled together: and yet all the while e remaineth in the heauen the ſame quieteneſſe and calmeneſſe, was before. So muſt we thinke that while the troubleſome ſtate hinges in the worlde taketh from vs abilitie to iudge, God by the light of his righteouſneſſe and wiſdom, doth in well framed orgouerne and diſpoſe euen thoſe very troubleſome motions themes to a right ende. And ſurely very monſtrous is the rage of many his behalfe, which dare more boldly call the workes of God to ac-pt and examine his ſecret meaninges, and to geue vnaduiſed ſentence of thinges vnknowen, than they will do of the deedes of m tall men. For what is more vnorderly than to vſe ſuch modeſtie warde our egals, that we had rather ſuſpende our iudgement tha incurre the blame of raſhneſſe, and on the other ſide proudly triumph vpon the darke iudgementes of God, which it became 2 Therfore no man ſhall well and profitably wey the Promiſe of God but he that conſidering that he hath to do with his crea re not hindered by the eternall Decrees of God, but that vnder will we may both prouide for our selues, and dispose all things being to vs. And that is not without a manifest reason. For he that limitted our life within appointed boundes, hath therwithall left vs the care thereof, hath furnished vs with meanes and helpes eserue it, hath made vs to haue knowledge before hand of daun-

, and that they should not oppresse vs vnware, he hath giuen vs isions and remedies. Now it is playne to see what is our duety:
s to say: If God hath committed to vs our owne life to defende, luety is to defende it. If he offer vs helpes, our duety is to vse
. If he shew vs daungers before, our duety is not to runne rash-o them. If he minister vs remedies, our duety is not to neglect . But no daunger shall hurt, vnlesse it be fatall, which by all rees can not be ouercome. But what if daungers be therefore not becauseGod hath assigned thee remedies to repulse & ouercome ? See howe thy manner of reasoning agreeth with the order of dispositon. Thou gatherest that daunger is not to be taken e of, becausse forasmuch as it is not fatall, we shall escape it withaking heede at all: but the Lord doth therefore enioyne thee to heede of it, because he will not haue it fatall vnto thee. These le men do nor consider that which is playne before their eyes, he skil of taking counsell & heede is enspired into men by God, e by they may serue his Prouidence in preseruing of their owne s on the other side by negligence & slouth they procure to them those euils that he hath appointed for them. For how commeth passe, that a circumspect man while he prouideth for himselfe, winde himselfe out of euils that hang ouer him, and the foole eth by vnaduised rashnesse, but for that both folly and wisdom he instrumentes of Gods disposition on both partes? There-pleased God to hide from vs all thinges to come, to this ende e should meete with them as thinges doutefull, and not ceasse te prepared remedies agaynst them, till either they be oueror be past all helpe of care. And for this cause I haue before nished that the Prouidence of God doth not alway shewe it naked, but as God by vsing of meanes doth in a certayne maner it.

The same men do vnorderly & vnaduisedly draw the chaunces ne past to the naked prouidence of God. For because vpon it do hang all thinges whatſoeuer happen, therfore (ſay they) neither robberies, nor adulteries, nor manſlaughters are committed without the will of God. Why then (ſay they) ſhall a thiefe be puniſhed, that he ſpoyled him whom the Lordes will was to puniſh with poverty? Why ſhall the murtherer be puniſhed which hath ſlayne him whoſe life the Lorde had ended? If all ſuch men do ſerue the will of God, why ſhall they be puniſhed? But I deny that they ſerue the will of God. For we may not ſay that he which is caried with an euill minde doth ſeruice to God as commaunder of it, where in deede he doth but obey his owne wicked luſt. He obeyeth God, which being enformed of his will doth labour to that end, whereunto God calleth him. But wherby are we enformed of his will, but by his worde? Therefore in doinge of thinges we muſt ſee that ſame will of God which he declareth in his word. God requireth of vs only that which he commaundeth. If we do any thing agaynſt his commaundement it is not obedience but obſtinacy & tranſgreſſiō. But vnleſſe he will that we ſhould not do it. I graunt. But do we euill thinges to this end to obey him? But he doth not commaund vs to do them, but rather we runne on headlong, not minding what he willeth, but ſo raging with the intemperance of our owne luſt, that of ſet purpoſe we beate our braynes to trauaile againſt him. And by theſe meanes in euill doing we ſerue his iuſt ordinance, becauſe according to the infinite greatneſſe of his wiſedom, he hath good skill to vſe euill inſtrumentes to do good. And how fooliſh is their maner of arguing. They would haue ỹ doers be puniſhed for miſcheuous actes, becauſe they are not cōmitted but by the diſpoſition of God. I graunt more: that theeues and murtherers & other euill doers are the inſtruments of Gods Prouidence, whom the Lord doth vſe to execute thoſe iudgementes which he hath wiſely ſelfe determined. But I deny that their euill doings ought to haue any excuſe therby. For why? ſhal they either entāgle God in their wickedneſſe with them, or ſhall they couer their naughtines with his righteouſneſſe? They can do neither of both. Becauſe they ſhould not be able to excuſe themſelues, they are accuſed by theyr owne conſcience. And becauſe they ſhould not be able to blame God, they finde all the euill in themſelues, & in him nothing but a lawfull vſe of euill. euilneſſe. But he worketh by them. And whence I pray you, commeth the ſtinke in a dead carrion, which hath bin both rotted & diſſolued by heate of the ſunne? All men do ſee that it is raiſed by the beames of the ſunne. Yet no man doth therefore ſay, that the ſunbeames do ſtinke. So when there reſteth in an euill man, the matter and ground of euill, what cauſe is there why it ſhould be thought that God defiled with it, if he vſe their ſeruice at his pleaſure. Away therith this doggiſh frowardneſſe, which may in dede a far of barke iuſtice of God, but can not touch it.

But theſe cauillations or rather doting errours of phrenetike all eaſily be ſhaken away, by godly and holy meditation of the dence, which the rule of godlineſſe teacheth vs, ſo that thereof ow vnto vs a good and moſt pleaſant fruite. Therefore a Chri-

What meaneth then this name of Repentaunce? euen in the sort that all the other phrases of speach which do describe God rs after the maner of men. For, because our weakenesse doth not nd this is the manner how to frame it low for vs, to paint out lfe not such a one as he is in himselfe, but such a one as he is ued of vs. Where as he himselfe is without al mouing of a trou-which had bin before pronounced, & that the life of Ezechias Esa. 35. 5 olonged after warning giuen him of death. They that so con-are deceiued in vnderstanding of thretenings: which although o simply affirme, yet by ỹ successe it shalbe perceiued that they ned a secret condition in them. For why did God send Ionas to miuites to tell them aforehande of the ruine of their city? Why by I say giue Ezechias warning of death? For he might haue t to nought both him and them without sending them any word of their deſtruction. He meant therfore an other thing, than to make them by foreknowing of their death to ſee it commanded of. Euen this he meant: not to haue thē deſtroyed, but to haue them ameńded that they ſhould not be deſtroyed. Therefore this that Ionas prophecied that Niniue ſhould fall after 40. dayes, was done not to the end that it ſhould not fall. That hope of longer life was cut off to Ezechias, was done for this purpoſe that he might obtaine longer life. Now who doth not ſee that God meant by ſuch threatnings to awake them to repentaunce, whom he made afrayd to the end that they might eſcape the iudgement which they had deſerued by their ſinnes? If that be ſo agreed, the nature of the things themſelues doth lead vs to this, to vnderſtand in the ſimple threatening a ſecret Ge. 26. 3. plied condition, which is alſo confirmed by like examples. The king rebuking the king Abimelech for that he had taken away Abraham's wife from him, vſeth theſe wordes. Behold thou ſhalt die for the woman that thou haſt taken, for ſhe hath a husband. But after he had excuſed himſelfe, God ſayd thus. Reſtore the wife to her husband, for he is a Prophete and ſhall pray for thee that thou maieſt liue. If not, know that thou ſhalt die the death and all that thou haſt. You ſee that in his firſt ſentence he vehemently ſtriketh his minde to bring him to be more hedefully bent to make amends, & in the other doth plainly declare to him his will. Seing the meaning of other places is ſuch, we not gather of theſe that there was any thing withdrawē from the purpoſe of God, by this that he made void the thing which he had before pronoūced. For God doth prepare the way for his ordinaunce, when in giuing warning of the puniſhmēt he moueth vs to repentance whom his wil is to ſpare, rather than varieth any thing in his will, no not in his word, ſauing that he doth not expreſſe the ſame thing in ſillables which it is yet eaſie to vnderſtād. For the ſaying of Eſay muſt needes remayne true: The Lord of Hoſtes hath determined, and who ſhall be able to vndo it? His hand is ſtretched out, and who ſhall turne it away?

THE SECOND BOOKE OF THE INSTITVTION OF CHRISTIAN RELIGION, WHICH intreateth of the knowledge of God the Redemer in Christ, which knowledge was first opened to the Fathers in the time of the Lawe, and then to vs in the Gospell.

The first Chapter.

By Adames syne and falling away, mankynde became accursed, and did degenerate from his first estate: wherin is intreated of Original sinne.

NOT without cause hath the Knowledge of himselfe bin in the olde prouerbe so much commended to man. For if it be thought a shame to be ignorant of all thinges that pertaine to the course of mans life, then much more shameful is the Not knowing of our selues, whereby it commeth to passe, that in taking cõsell of any thing necessary, miserably daseled, yea altogether blinded. But how much more noble this lesson is, so much more diligently must we take heede, that we do not disordrely vse it, as we see some of the Philosophers done. For they in exhorting man to know him selfe, do withall adde this to be the ende, why he shoulde know him selfe, that he should not be ignorant of his owne dignitie and excellencie: and no-thing do they will him to beholde in himselfe, but that wherby he may fall with vaine confidence, and be puffed vp with pride. But the knowledge of our selues, first standeth in this pointe, that considering what we geuen vs in creation, and how bountifully God continueth his gracious fauour toward vs, we may know how great had bin the excellencie of our nature, if it had cõtinued vncorrupted: and we may withall thinke vpon this, that there is nothing in vs of our owne, but what we haue as gotten by borrowing all that God hath bestowed vpõ vs, wherupon we may alwaies hang vpon him. Then, that we call to minde our miserable estate after the fall of Adam, the feeling wherof may throwne all glorying and trust of our selues, ouerwhelme vs with shame and truely humble vs. For as God at the beginning fashioned man after his owne image, to the ende to raise vp our mindes both to the Gen. 27 great nobleneſſe of our kinde, which maketh vs differente fro to know, that we are therfore endued with reaſon and vnder to the appointed ende of bleſſed immortalitie. But the ſtil

Therefore as any hath with his extolling moſt fauourably a king reioicement in manner of all ages. But what ſoeuer ſuch endacion there be of mans excellencie that teacheth man to him ſelfe, it doth nothing but deliue with that her ſweteneſſe, dede ſo deceiueth, that it bringeth to moſt wretched deſtruc-l them that aſſent vnto it. For to what purpoſe auaileth it for ding vpon all vaine confidence to deuiſe, apoint, attempt and out thoſe thinges that we thinke to be for our behoofe, and in ſt beginning of enterpriſe to be forſakē and deſtitute of ſounde ſtanding and true ſtrength, and yet to go on boldely till we fall into deſtruction? But it can not otherwiſe happen to them that ffiaunce that they can do any thing by their owne power. Ther-any man geue heede to ſuch teachers that holde vs in confionely our owne good thinges, he ſhall not profite in learning w him ſelfe, but ſhall be carried violently away into the worſt of ignoraunce.

Therfore, where as in this point the trueth of God doth agree he common naturall meaning of all men, that the ſecond part edome conſiſteth in the knowledge of our ſelues, yet in the anner of knowing there is muche diſagreement. For by the nent of the fleſh, a man thinketh that he hath then well ſear-himſelfe, when truſting vpon his owne vnderſtanding and ine, he taketh boldeneſſe, and encourageth him ſelfe to doing eties of vertue and bidding battell to vices, trauaileth with all die to bende himſelfe to that which is comly and honeſt. But t loketh vpon and trieth himſelfe by the rule of Gods iudgefindeth nothing that may raiſe vp his minde to good affiance: e more inwardely that he hath examined him ſelfe, the more diſcouraged, till being altogether ſpoiled of all confidence, he h to himſelfe nothing towarde the well ordering of his life. et woulde not God haue vs to forgette the firſt nobleneſſe that e to our father Adam, which ought of good right to awake he ſtudie of righteouſneſſe and goodneſſe. For we can not conither our owne firſt eſtate, or to what ende we are created, but lbe pricked forwarde to ſtudie vpon immortalitie, and to dekingedome of God. But that conſideration is ſo farre from g vs in courage, that rather diſcouraging vs, it throweth vs to humbleneſſe. For what is that firſt eſtate of ours? euen that hence we are fallen. What is that ende of our creation? euen e from which we are altogether turned away: ſo that lo-our owne miſerable eſtate, we may grone for ſorrowe, and in g may alſo ſigh for the loſſe of that dignitie. But now when we say that man ought to beholde nothing in himselfe that him of bolde courage, we meane that there is nothing in affiance wherof he ought to be proude. Wherfore, if any what knowledge man ought to haue of himselfe, let vs that first he consider to what ende he is created, & endued that are not to be despised, by which thought he may be to the meditatiō of the hearing of God and of the life to let him weye his owne strength, or rather needy want of perceiuing whereof he may lie in extreme confusion, as brought to naught. The first of these considerations ende, that he may know what is his duetie: and the other, he is able to do towarde the perfourming of it. We will them both, as the order of teaching shall require.

4 But bicause it must nedes be that it was not a light but a detestable wicked acte which God so seuerely punished, consider the very fourme of the same in the fall of Adam, led the horrible vengeaunce of God vpon all mankinde. It opinion that hath commonly bin receiued, concerning the raūce of glottonie, as though the summe and head of all sisted in the forbearing of one only frute, when there flowed side store of all sortes of deinties that were to be desired, that blessed frutefulnesse of the earth, there was not onely also varietie to make fare for pleasure. Therefore we must Herof it is not harde to gather, by what meanes Adam wrath of God against him selfe. Augustine in deede saieth when he saieth, that pride was the beginning of all euils. For alſo be made egall with God. If Apoſtaſie be a filthy and de-offence, wherby man withdraweth him ſelfe from the alle-ce of his creatour, yea outrageouſly ſhaketh of his yoke: then t vaine to extenuate the Sinne of Adam. Albeit it was no ſimple ſie, but ioyned with ſhameſull reproches againſt God, while ſented to the ſclaunders of Satan, wherin he accuſed God of enuie, and niggardly grudging. Finally, infidelitie opened the ambition, ambition was the mother of obſtinate rebellion, to nen caſt away the feare of God, and throw themſelues wheeir luſt caried them. Therfore Bernard doth rightly teach that e of ſaluation is opened vnto vs, when at this day we receiue oſpell by our eares: euen as by the ſame windowes, when they pen to Satan, death was let in. For Adam woulde neuer haue bolde, as to do againſt the commaundement of God, but for at he did not beleue his worde. Truely this was the beſt bridle right keping of all affections in good order, to thinke that ther ing better than to kepe righteouſneſſe in obeying the comementes of God, and then that the chiefe ende of happy life beloued of him. He therfore being carried away with the bla-ies of the Deuill, did (aſmuch as in him lay) extinguiſh the glory of God.

As the ſpirituall life of Adam was, to abide ioyned and bounde creatour, ſo his alienation from him was the death of his ſoule. er is it maruell if he by his falling away, deſtroyed all his owne uption againſt their will. If one ſhould aſke the cauſe: no doubt it is for that they beare parte of that punishment that man de for whose vse they were created. Sith thē the curse that goth th out all the coastes of the worlde proceded from his fault both w and downewarde, it is nothing against reason, if it spread abro all his issue. Therfore after that the heauenly image in him w ced, he did not alone suffer this punishment, that in place of w strength, holynesse, truth, and iustice (with which ornaments h bin clothed) there came in the most horrible pestilences, blin weakenesse, filthinesse, falsehode, and iniustice, but also he enc and drowned his whole offspring in the same miseries. This is th ruption that commeth by inheritaunce, which the olde writ led original sinne, meaning by this worde sinne, the corruption ture, which before was good and pure. About which matter the had much contention, bycause there is nothing farther of from mon reason, than all men to be made giltie of one mans fault, the sinne to become common. Which semeth to haue bin the why the oldest Doctors of the Church did but darkely touch point, or at least did not set it out so plainly as was conuenient. yet that fearefulnesse could not bring to passe, but that Pelagius whose prophane inuention was that Adam sinned onely to his losse, and hurted not his posteritie. So through this subtelte, went about by hiding the disease, to make it incurable. But when proued by manifest testimonie of Scripture, that sinne passed fro first man into all his posteritie, he brought this cauillation, that sed by imitation, but not by propagation. Therefore good ma uelled in this point, and aboue all other Augustine, to shew that

Psa. 51. 7. uid confesseth that he was begotten in iniquities, and by his ho coulde geue cleane of the vncleanneſſe? not one: as it is in oke of Iob.

We heare that the vncleanneſſe of the parentes ſo paſſeth into ildren, that all without any exception at their beginning are de- ut of this defiling we ſhall not finde the beginning, vnleſſe we go he firſt parent of all vs, to the well head. Thus it is therfore, that was not only the progenitor, but alſo the roote of mans na- d therefore in his corruption was all mankinde worthely cor- : which the Apoſtle maketh plaine by comparing of him and . As (ſaith he) by one man ſinne entred into the whole world, Rom. 5. ath by ſinne, and ſo death went ouer all men, foraſmuch as all 12. inned: ſo by the grace of Chriſt, righteouſneſſe and life is reſto- o vs. What will the Pelagians here prate? that Adams ſinne read abroad by imitation? Then haue we no other profit by hteouſneſſe of Chriſt, but that he is an example ſet before vs ow? Who can abide ſuch robberie of Gods honor? If it be out ſtion that Chriſtes righteouſneſſe is ours by communication, erby life: it followeth alſo, that they both were ſo loſt in Adam, y be recouered in Chriſt: and that ſinne and death ſo crept in by , as they are aboliſhed by Chriſt. The wordes are plaine, that re made righteous by the obediẽce of Chriſt, as by the diſobe- of Adam they were made ſinners: and that therfore betwene wo is this relation, that Adam wrapping vs in his deſtruction, ied vs with him, & Chriſt with his grace reſtored vs to ſaluа- n ſo cleare light of truth, I thinke we nede not a longer or more us proofe. So alſo in the firſt Epiſtle to the Corinthians, when 1. Cor. th about to ſtabliſh the godly in the truſt of the reſurrectiõ, he 15. 22. h that the life is couered in Chriſt that was loſt in Adam, he ronounceth, that we all are dead in Adam, doth alſo therwithall y teſtifie, that we were infected with the filth of ſinne. For dam- coulde not reach vnto thẽ that were touched with no giltineſſe quitie. But it can be no way plainlyer vnderſtãded what he mea- han by relation of the other member of the ſentence, where he th that hope of life is reſtored in Chriſt. But it is well enough n that the ſame is done no other way, than whẽ by maruellous of cõmunicating, Chriſt poureth into vs the force of his righte- ſſe. As it is written in an other place, that the ſpirite is life vnto Rom. 8. righteouſneſſe ſake. Therfore we may not otherwiſe expounde 10. hich is ſaid that we are dead in Adam, but thus, that he in ſin- id not onely purchaſe miſcheefe and ruine to himſelfe, but alſo downe our nature headlong into like deſtruction. And that not onely to the corruption of himselfe, which pertaineth nothing but because he infected all his sede with the same corruption into he was fallen. For otherwise the saying of Paule coulde not Ephe. 2. 3. true, that all are by nature the sonns of wrath, if they were not dy accursed in the wombe. And it is easily gathered, that there meant not such as it were create by God, but such as it rupted in Adam. For it were not cõuenient, that God should the author of Death. Adam therfore so corrupted him selfe, infectiõ passed from him into all his offspring. And the heaven

Ioh. 3. 6 himselfe Christ, doth also plainly enough pronoũce, that all are euill and corrupted, where he teacheth, that what soeuer is flesh, is flesh, and that therefore the gate of life is closed men, vntill they be begotten againe.

7 Neither for the vnderstanding thereof is any curiouse tion nedefull, which not a litle combred the olde writers, the soule of the sonne do procede by deriuation from the soule father, bycause in it the infection principally resteth. We content with this, that such giftes as it pleased the Lord to stowed vpon the nature of man, he left them with Adam, fore when Adam lost them after he had receiued them, he lost not onely from himselfe, but also from vs all. Who shall be a conueyance from soule to soule, when he shall heare that ceiued these ornamentes which he lost, no lesse for vs than selfe? that they were not geuen to one man alone, but assigned whole nature of man? Therefore it is not against reason, if he spoiled, nature be left naked and poore: if he being infect Sinne, the infection crepeth into nature. Therfore from a rotten arose vp rotten branches, which sent their rottennesse into the twigges that sprong out of them. For so were the children con in the father, that they also were infectiue to their children: that say, so was the beginning of corruption in Adam, that by con flowyng from one to an other, it is conueyed from the auncetor to the posteritie. For the infection hath not her cause in the of the flesh or of the soule, but bycause it was so ordeyned of that suche giftes as he had geuen to the first man, man should haue them, and lose them as well for him selfe as for his. this that the Pelagians do cauill, that it is not likely that the do take corruption from godly parentes, sith they ought be sanctified by their cleanneſſe, that is easely confuted. For the cende not of their spirituall regeneration, but of their carnall ration. * Therefore, as Augustine sayeth, whether the vnbe-mned as giltie, and the beleuer quitte as innocent, they both et not innocentes, but giltie, bycauſe they beget of the cor-nature. Now where as they do in manner partake of the pa-holineſſe, that is the ſpeciall bleſſing of the people of God, proueth not but that the firſt and vniuerſall curſe of mankinde efore. For of nature is giltineſſe, and ſanctification is of ſuperll grace.

And to the ende that theſe thinges be not ſpoken of a thing aine and vnknowen, lette vs define Originall ſinne. But yet I not to examine all the definitions that are made by writers, ill bring forth one onely, which I thinke to be moſt agrea-h trueth. Originall ſinne therefore ſemeth to be the inheri-leſcending peruerſneſſe and corruption of our nature, poured e into all the partes of the ſoule, which firſt maketh vs giltie rath of God, and then alſo bringeth forth theſe workes in ich the Scripture calleth the workes of the fleſh: and that is it ly that Paule oftentimes calleth Sinne. And theſe workes that Gal. 5. ut of it, as are adulteries, fornications, theftes, hatreds, mur- 19. banketinges, after the ſame manner he calleth the fruites of albeit they are likewiſe called ſinnes both commonly in the re, and alſo by the ſame Paule him ſelfe. Therefore theſe inges are diſtinctly to be noted: that is, that being ſo in all of our nature corrupted and peruerted, we are now euen for corruption onely holden worthily damned and conuicted beod, to whom is nothing acceptable but righteouſneſſe, inno-and pureneſſe. And yet is not that bonde in reſpect of an others For where it is ſaid, that by the ſinne of Adam we are made to the iudgement of God, it is not ſo to be taken, as if we inand vndeſeruing did beare the blame of his faulte. But by-y his offending we are all clothed with the curſe, therefore d that he hath bounde vs. Neuertheleſſe, from him not the ement onely came vpon vs, but alſo the infection diſtilled from bideth in vs, to the which the puniſhment is iuſtly due. Where-owe ſo euer Auguſtine doeth oftentimes call it an others ſinne, ewe the more plainely, that it is conueyed into vs by propa-) yet doeth he alſo affirme withall that it is propre to euery Rom. 5.
And the Apoſtle him ſelfe expreſſely witneſſeth, that therefore 12. came vpon all menne, bycauſe all men haue ſinned, and are ed in Originall ſinne, and defiled with the ſpottes thereof. herefore the very infantes themſelues, while they bring with heir owne damnation from their mothers wombe, are bounde, not by an others, but by their owne faulte. For though they not as yet brought forth the fruites of their owne iniquitie, ye haue the ſeede thereof encloſed within them: yea their whole ture is a certaine ſeede of Sinne: therefore it can not be but and abhominable to God. Wherevpon followeth, that it is accompted ſinne before God: for there coulde be no giltineſſe out ſinne. The other point is, that this peruerſeneſſe never in vs, but continually bringeth forth newe frutes, euen the workes of the fleſhe that we haue before deſcribed: like as ning fornace bloweth out flame and ſparcles, or as a ſpring without ceaſſing caſt out water. Therefore they which have ned Originall ſinne, to be a lacking of Originall righteou which ought to haue bin in vs, although in deede they compre all that is in the thing it ſelfe: yet they haue not fully enough ſed the force and efficacie thereof. For our nature is not one and emptie of goodneſſe, but alſo is ſo plenteous and frutefu euilles, that it can not be idle. They that haue ſaide, that it is cupiſcence, haue vſed a worde not very farre from the matter, were added, which is not graunted by the moſt parte, that euer is in man, euen from the vnderſtanding to the will, fro ſoule to the fleſh, is corrupted and ſtuffed ful with this concupi or, to ende it ſhortlier, that whole man is of him ſelfe noth but concupiſcence.

9 Wherfore, I haue ſaide that all the partes of the ſoule are ſeſſed of ſinne, ſith Adam fell awaye from the fountaine of righ neſſe. For not onely the inferiour appetite allured him, but impietie poſſeſſed the very caſtle of his minde, and pride pe the innermoſt parte of his hearte. So that it is a fonde and thing, to reſtraine the corruption that proceded from thence to the ſenſuall motions as they call them, or to call it a certa riture, that allureth, ſtirreth and draweth to ſinne onely tha which among them is called Senſualitie. Wherein Peter Lo hath diſcloſed his groſſe ignoraunce, which ſeeking and ſearc the place of it, ſaith that it is in the fleſh, as Paule witneſſeth proprely in dede, but bycauſe it more appeareth in the fleſh, as Paule did meane onely a parte of the ſoule, and not the wh ture which is in compariſon ſet againſt ſupernaturall grace. An there taketh away all doubte: teaching that corruption reſteth one parte alone, but that nothing is pure and cleane from the infection thereof. For entreating of corrupted nature, he onely condemne the inordinate motions of appetites that ecially trauaileth to proue that the vnderſtanding minde is ſub-o blindeneſſe, and the hearte to peruerſneſſe. And the ſame chapter to the Romaines is nothing els but a deſcription of oriſinne. That appeareth more plainely by the renewing. For irite which is compared with the olde man and the fleſh, doth nely ſignifie the grace whereby the inferiour or ſenſuall parte ſoule is amended, but alſo conteineth a full reformation of partes. And therefore Paule doth commaund, not onely that Ephe.4. oſſe appetites be brought to naught, but alſo that we our ſel- 27. renewed in the ſpirite of our minde, as likewiſe in an other he biddeth vs to be tranſformed in newneſſe of minde. Wher- Rom.12 ſolloweth, that the ſame parte, wherein moſt of all ſhineth the 2. ence and nobleneſſe of the ſoule, is not onely wounded, but alſo rupted, that it needeth not onely to be healed, but in manner on a newe nature. How farre ſinne poſſeſſeth both the vnder-ng minde and the hearte, we will ſee hereafter. Here I onely ſed ſhortely to touch that the whole man from the heade to ote is ſo ouerwhelmed as with an ouerflowing of water, that no of him is free from ſinne, and that therefore what ſoeuer pro-from him is accompted for ſinne, as Paule ſaith, that all the Rom. 8. ions of the fleſh or thoughtes, are enmities againſt God, and 7. fore death.

Now let them go, that preſume to make God author of their , bycauſe we ſay that menne are naturally ſinnefull. They do gfully ſeeke the worke of God in their owne filthyneſſe, which ught rather to haue ſought in the nature of Adam, while it t ſounde and vncorrupted. Therefore our deſtruction com-of the faulte of our owne fleſh and not of God, for aſmuch as riſhed by no other meane but by this, that we degendred from ſt eſtate. But yet let not any man here murmure and ſay, that night haue better foreſeen for our ſaluation, if he had proui-at Adam ſhoulde not haue fallen. For this obiection both is to horred of all godly mindes, for the to much preſumptuous cue of it, and alſo perteineth to the ſecret of predeſtination which fter be entreated of in place conuenient. Wherefore let vs reore that our fall is to be imputed to the corruption of nature, e accuſe not God himſelfe the author of nature. True in dede that the ſame deadely wounde ſticketh faſt in nature: but it is e materiall to knowe, whether it came into nature from ells , or from the beginning hath geſted in it. But it is euident that ounde was geuen by ſinne. Therefore there is no cauſe why we ſhoulde complaine but of our ſelues: which thing the Scri Eccl. 7. 13. hathe diligently noted. For Eccleſiaſtes ſaieth: This haue I fou that God hath made manne righteous, but they haue ſought inuentions. It appeareth that the deſtruction of man is to be ted onely to him ſelfe, for aſmuche as hauing gotten vpri by the goodneſſe of God, he by his owne madneſſe is fallen vanitie.

11 We ſaie therfore, that man is corrupted with faultines turall, but ſuch as proceded not from nature. We denie that ceded from nature, to make appeare that it is rather a qualitie from ſome other thing, whiche is happened to man, than a tiall propertie that hathe bin putte into him from the beg Yet we call it Naturall, that no man ſhoulde thinke that euery getteth it by euill cuſtome, wheras it holdeth all men bounde by heritablie deſcending right. And this we do not of our owne Eph. 2. 3 without authoritie. For, for the ſame cauſe the Apoſtle teach that we are all by nature the children of wrath. How could

The ij. Chapter.

That man is nowe ſpoiled of the Freedome of vvill, and made ſubiect to miſerable bondage.

SIth we haue ſeen, that the dominion of ſinne, ſins the that it helde the firſt man bounde vnto it, doth not onely gne in all mankinde, but alſo wholy poſſeſſeth euery ſoule: muſt we more nerely examine, ſins we are brought into bondage, whether we be ſpoyled of all Freedome or no: for yet there remaine any parcell, how farre the force therof proce the ende that the trueth of this queſtion may more eaſily apvnto vs, I will by the way ſet vp a marke, where vnto the whole e may be directed. And this ſhalbe the beſt way to auoid errour, daungers be conſidered that are like to fall on both ſides. For man is put from all vprightneſſe, byandby he therby taketh oc-of ſlouthfulneſſe: and becauſe it is ſayd, that by himſelfe he can thing to the ſtudy of righteouſneſſe, forthwith he neglecteth it y, as if it pertayned nothing vnto him. Againe, he can preſume e nothing vpon himſelfe, be it neuer ſo litle, but that both Gods r ſhalbe therby taken frō him, & man himſelfe be ouerthrowen aſh confidence. Therefore to the end we ſtrike not vpon theſe , this courſe is to be kept, that man being enformed that there neth in him no goodnes, and being on euery ſide compaſſed a-with moſt miſerable neceſſity, may yet be taught to aſpire to the es whereof he is voyd, and to the liberty wherof he is deprind may be more ſharply ſtirred vp from ſlouthfulnes, than if it ſayned that he is furniſhed with greateſt power. How neceſſary cond point is, euery man ſeeth. The firſt, I ſee is douted of by an it ought to be. For this beinge ſette out of controuerſie, it then plainely to ſtand for trueth, that nothing is to be taken a-om man of his owne, as farre as it behoueth that he be throwne e from falſe boaſting of himſelfe. For if it were not graunted to o glory in himſelfe euen at that time, when by the bountifulnes d he was garniſhed with moſt ſingular ornamentes, how much he now to be humbled, ſith for his vnthankfulneſſe he is thruſt e from hie glory into extreame ſhame? At that time, I ſay, when aduaunced to the hieſt degree of honor, the Scripture attribuothing elſe vnto him, but that he was created after the image of whereby it ſecretely teacheth, that man was bleſſed, not by his ood things, but by the partaking of God. What therfore remai-ow, but that he being naked and deſtitute of all glory, do ac-ledge God, to whoſe liberality he could not be thankefull when wed ful of the richeſſe of his grace: and that now at length with ſion of his owne pouerty he glorifie him, whom in the ac-edging of his good gifts, he did not glorifie? Alſo it is as much r profitte, that all praiſe of wiſdom and ſtrength be taken from t pertayneth to the glory of God, that they ioyne our ruyne he robbery of God, that giue vnto vs any thing more, than that is true. For what is elſe done when we are taught to fight of me force, but ẏ we be lifted vpō hie on a ſtaffe of a reede, that it yandby breake, and we fall to the ground? Albeit, our forces are yet to much commended when they are compared to the ſtaffe of reede. For it is but ſmoke all that vayne men haue imagined and babble of them. Wherefore not without cauſe is this excellent ſentence oft repeted by Auguſtine, that free will is rather throwen down headlonge, than ſtabliſhed by them that defende it. This I thought needefull to ſpeake before, as by way of preface for many mens ſake, which when they heare mans power ouerthrowen from the ground, that the power of God may be buylded in manne, do much hate this manner of diſputinge as daungerous, much more ſuperfluous, which yet appeareth to be both in religion neceſſarie, and for vs moſt profitable.

2 Whereas we haue a litle before ſayd, that in the vnderſtanding minde, and in the heart are placed the powers of the ſoule, now let vs conſider what they both are able to do. The Philoſophers in deede with great cõſent do imagine that in the vnderſtanding minde ſitteth reaſon, which like a lampe giueth light to all coũſels, & like a Queene gouerneth the will, for they ſay ẏ it is ſo endued with diuine light, that it can giue good counſell, and ſo excelleth in liuely force that it is able well to gouerne. On the other ſide, that ſenſe is dull and bleare eyed, that it alway creepeth on the ground, and walloweth in groſſe obiects, and neuer lifteth vp it ſelfe to true inſight. That the appetite, if it can abide to obey reaſon, and do not yeld it ſelfe to ſenſe to be ſubdued, is caried on to the ſtudy of vertues, holdeth on the right way, and is transformed into will: but if it giue it ſelfe ſubiect into the bondage of ſenſe, it is by it corrupted and peruerted, ſo that it degendreth into luſt. And whereas by their opinion there do ſit in the ſoule thoſe powers that I haue ſpoken of before, vnderſtanding, ſenſe, appetite, will, which word will is now more commonly vſed, they ſay that vnderſtanding is endued with reaſon, the beſt gouerneſſe toward good and bleſſed life, ſo that it do hold it ſelfe within his owne excellence, and ſhew forth the force that is naturally giuen it. But that inferiour motion of it, which is called ſenſe, wherewith man is drawen to errour & deceite, they ſay to be ſuch, that it may be tamed with the rule of reaſon, and by litle and litle be vanquiſhed. They place will in the middeſt betwene reaſon and ſenſe, as a thing at her owne ordering, hauinge liberty whether it liſt to obey to reaſon, or giue forth it ſelfe to be rauiſhed by ſenſe.

3 Sometime in deede they do not deny, being ouercome by very experience, how hardly man ſtabliſheth reaſon to raigne as queene within himſelfe, while ſomtime he is tickled with intiſements of pleaſures, ſometime deceiued with falſe ſemblance of good things, ſomee importunatly ſtricken with immoderate affections, and violenthaled out of the way as it were with ropes or ſtrings of ſinowes, as ro ſayth. For which reaſon Cicero ſayth, that theſe ſparkes giuen De leg. 16. li. 1.

y make no queſtion of, that vertues and vices are in our owne por. For if (ſay they) it be in our choiſe to do this or that, then is it Ari. eth li. 3. ca. 5 o in our choiſe not to do. Now if it be in our choiſe not to do, then t alſo to do, but of free choiſe we ſeeme to do thoſe things that we
, and to forbeare thoſe things that we forbeare. Therfore if we do y good thinge when we liſt, we may likewiſe leaue it vndone: if we rſt forth into ſo great licentiouſneſſe, that they haue boſted that it in deede Gods gift that we liue, but our owne that we liue well & lily. And thence commeth that ſaying of Cicero in the perſon of De natu de. lib. 3 otta: becauſe euery man himſelfe getteth vertue to himſelfe, there-re neuer any of the wiſe men did thanke God for it. For (ſayth he) r vertue we be praiſed, & in vertue we glory, which ſhould not be if were the gift of God, and not of our ſelues. And a litle after. This is e iudgement of al men that fortune is to be asked of God, but wiſom to be taken of himſelfe. This therfore is the ſumme of the opi-on of all the Philoſophers, that the reaſon of mans vnderſtanding is fficient for right gouernance: that Will being ſubiect to it, is in dede oued by Senſe to euill thinges. But euen as it hath free election, o can it not be ſtopped, but that it follow reaſon for her guide in all ings.

4 Among the Eccleſiaſticall wryters, albeit there haue bin none hat did not acknowledge both that the ſoundneſſe of reaſon in man ath bin ſore wounded by ſinne, and his will exceedingly entangled ith peruerſe deſires, yet many of them haue to much aſſented to the hiloſophers: of which the auncient, as I thinke, did ſo much ad-aunce the ſtrength of man, vpon this conſideration, leſt if they ſhould aue expreſſely confeſſed his weakeneſſe, firſt they ſhould haue made e Philoſophers, with whom they thē contended, to laugh at them: nd then leaſt they ſhould giue to the fleſh, which of it ſelfe was dull o goodneſſe, a new occaſion of ſlouthfulnes. Therefore becauſe they oulde not teache any thinge that were an abſurdity in the common iudgement of men, their ſtudy was to make the doctrine of the Scripture halfe to agree with the teachings of the Philoſophers. But they principally regarded that ſecond point, not to make place to ſlouthfulneſſe, appeareth by their owne words. Chryſoſtome hath one place: Becauſe God hath put both good and euill thinges in our owne power, he hath giuen vs Freedome of election, and he withholdeth not ỹ vnwilling, but embraceth the willing. Agayne, Often times he that is euill, if he will, is turned into good, and he that is good by ſlouthfullnes falleth and becometh euill, becauſe God made our nature to haue free will, and he layeth not neceſſity vpon vs, but giuing conuenient remedies, ſuffreth all to lye in the minde of the patient. Againe, As vnleſſe we be holpen by the grace of God, we can neuer do any thing well: ſo vnleſſe we bring that which is our owne we can not obtaine the fauour of God. And he had ſaid before, that we ſhould not be all of Gods helpe, but we muſt alſo bring ſomwhat. And this is commonly a familiar word with him, let vs bring that which is ours, God wil ſupply the reſt. Wherwith agreeth that which Hieron ſayeth, that it is our part to beginne, but Gods to make an ende: our parte to offer what we can, his to fulfil what we can not. You ſee now that in theſe ſayinges they gaue to man towarde the ſtudy of vertue more than was meete, becauſe they thought that they could not otherwiſe awake the dullneſſe that was naturally in vs, but if they did proue that in it onely we ſinned. With what apt handeling they haue don the ſame, we ſhall after ſe. Surely that the ſayings which we haue rehearſed are moſt falſe, ſhall byandby appeare. Now although the Grecians more than other, & among them principally Chryſoſtome haue paſſed meaſure in aduauncing the power of mans will, yet all the old wryters, except Auguſtine, do in this point ſo either vary, or wauer, or ſpeake doutefully, that in manner no certainty can be gathered of their wrytings. Therefore we will not tary vpon exact reckening of euery one of their ſayinges, but heare and there we will touch out of euery one of them ſo much as the playne declaration of the matter ſhall ſeeme to require. As for them that followed after, while euery one for himſelfe ſought praiſe of witte, in defending of mans nature, they fell continually by little and little one after an other into worſe and worſe, till it came ſo farre, that man was commonly thought to be corrupted only in his ſenſuall parte, and to haue reaſon altogether and will for the more parte vncorrupted. In the meane time this lye about in all mens mouthes, that the naturall gifts were corrupted in man, and the ſupernaturall were taken away, But to what meaning that tended, ſcarſely the hundreth man did euen ſlightly vnderſtand.

Hō. de prodi-tione Iudæ. Chryſ. in Gen. hom. 18 Hom. 52

Dialog. 3. cōtra Pelagiū for my parte, if I would plainely shew of what sorte is the corrupof nature, I could be easely contented with these words. But it is ch materiall that it be heedefully weyed what a man, being in all es of his nature corrupted and spoiled of his supernaturall giftes, ble to do. They therefore which boasted themselues to be the ciples of Christ, spake of this matter to much like Philosors. For the name of Freewill still remayned amonge the Latines, f man had still abiden in vncorrupted state. And the Grecians were ashamed to vse the worde much more arrogantly: For they cal-it Autexousion, that is to say of her owne power, as if man had the wer of himselfe. Because therefore all, euen to the common people, receiued this principle, that man was endued with Free will, and ny of them that would seeme excellent, can not tell how farre it endeth: first let vs search out the force of the word it selfe, and the s proceede on by the simplicity of the Scripture, to shewe what n is able to do of his owne nature, toward good or euill. What Fre is, where as it is a word commonly found in all mens wrytinges, few haue defined. Yet it semeth that Origen rehearsed that thing reof they were all agreed, when he sayd, that it is a power of rea-to discerne good or euell, and a power of will to choose either of

m. And Augustine varieth not from him, when he teacheth that it power of reason and will, whereby good is chosen while grace assi-h, and euill when grace ceasseth. Bernarde, while he meaneth to ke more suttelly, speaketh more darkely, which sayeth, that it is nsent by reason of the liberty of will that can not be lost, and the gement of reason that can not be auoyded. And the definition Anselmus is not familiar enough, which sayth that it is a power to e vprightnesse for it selfe. Therefore Peter Lombarde and the or Schoolemen, haue rather embraced Augustines definition, bese it both was playner & did not exclude the grace of God, with-the which they sawe that Will was not sufficient for it selfe. But y bring also of their owne such thinges as they thought either to etter, or to serue for playner declaration. First, they agree that the e of Arbitrium, that is free choise, is rather to be referred to rea-, whose parte is to discerne betwene good and Euill thinges: and adiectiue Free, pertayneth properly to wil, which may be turned ither of both. Wherefore sith Freedome properly belongeth to , Thomas sayth that it would very well agree, if Free will be called ower of chosing, which being mixt of vnderstanding and appe-, doth more encline to appetite. Nowe haue we in what thinges y teach that the power of Free will consisteth, that is to say, in rea-law of God. Which later point I thinke ſo to be the principall, yet I thinke the other is not to be neglected. Of which meanin truſt, I ſhall ſhew a good reaſon. There hath bin a diſtinction rece in Schooles, that reckeneth vp three ſortes of freedomes, the firſt

But this is farre from the meaning of Augustine, from whom yet vse the iudgement of reason, to departe from grace, that it may worthy rewarde not to haue departed, and that the thing which ld not be done but by the working together of the holy Ghost, be imputed to their merites, by whose wil it was possible to haue bin done. These two thinges I had will to note by the way, that ye, reader, thou maist see howe much I dissent from the soundest e of the Schoolemen. For I do much farther differ from the later histers, euen so much as they be farther gone from the auncient e. But yet somewhat, after such a sorte as it is, we perceaue by this sion, after what manner they haue giuen Free will to man. For at Libr. 2. gth Lombard sayth, that we haue not free will therefore, becausе dist.25. are alike able either to do or to thinke good and euill, but onely we are free from compulsion: which freedome is not hindered, ough we be peruerse and the bondmen of sinne, and can do nog but sinne.

Therefore, man shalbe sayd to haue free will after this sorte, not ause he hath a free choise as well of good as of euil, but becausе he euill by Will, and not by compulsion. That is very well sayd: to what purpose was it to garnish so smale a matter with so proud le? A goodly liberty forsooth, if man be not compelled to serue e: so is he yet a willing seruaunt that his will is holden fast bounde the fetters of sinne. Truely I do abhorre striuinge about des wherewith the Church is vaynely wearied: but I thinke that wordes are with great religious carefullnesse to be taken heede which sound of any absurdity, specially where the errour is hurte-. Howe fewe I pray you, are there, which when they heare that e will is assigned to man, do not byandby conceaue, that he is lord of his owne minde and will, and that he is able of himselfe to e himselfe to whether parte he will? But some one will say:

this perill ſhalbe taken away, if the people be diligently warned of meaning of it. But rather foraſmuch as the wit of man is natura to falſity, he will ſooner conceiue an errour out of one litle word a trueth out of a long tale. Of which thing we haue a more cer experience in this very word, than is to be wiſhed. For omitting poſitiō of the old wryters, all they in maner that came after, what ſticke vpon the naturall ſignification of the word, haue bin carri to a truſt of themſelues that bringeth them to deſtruction.

8 But if the authority of the fathers do moue vs, they haue in cōtinually the word in their mouth: but they do withall declare much they eſteme the vſe of it. Firſt of all Auguſtine, which ſtic not to call it Bonde will. In one place he is angry with them tha nie free will but he declareth his chiefe reaſon why, when he onely, Let not any man be ſo bold to deny the freedom of wil, tha go about to excuſe ſinne. But ſurely in an other place he confe that the will of man is not free without the holy Ghoſt, foraſmu it is ſubiect to luſtes that do binde and conquere it. Againe, that will was ouercome with ſinne whereinto it fell, nature began to freedome. Againe, that man hauing ill vſed his free will, loſt himſelfe and it. Againe, free will is become captiue, that it can thing toward righteouſnes. Againe, that it can not be free, whic grace of God hath not made free. Againe, that ỹ iuſtice of God fulfilled when the lawe commaundeth, and man doth of his ſtrength, but when the holy Ghoſt helpeth, and mans will not but made free by God, obeyeth. And of all theſe thinges he rendereth a cauſe, when in an other place he wryteth, that man ued great force of free will when he was created, but he loſt it by ning. Therefore in an other place, after that he had ſhewed that will is ſtabliſhed by grace, he ſharply inueyeth againſt them that it vpon them without grace. Why therefore (ſayth he) dare wret men either be proud of free will before that they be made free, their owne ſtrength if they be already made free? And they not that in the very name of free will, is mention of freedome. where the ſpirit of the Lord is, there is freedome. If then they be bondmen of ſinne, why do they boaſt them of free will? For of a man is ouercome, to him he is made bond. But if they be made why do they boaſt them as of their owne worke? Are they ſo that they will not be his bondſeruantes, which ſayth: Without can do nothing? Beſide that alſo in an other place he ſeemeth tingly to mocke at the vſe of that worde, when he ſayd, that aunt of ſinne. Which ſaying in an other place he repeateth and oundeth, that man is not free from righteouſneſſe, but by choiſe will, and from ſinne he is not free but by grace of the Sauiour. He doth teſtifie, that the freedome of man is nothing elſe but a free-ing or manumiſſion from righteouſnes, ſeemeth trimly to mocke he vaine name thereof. Therefore if any man will permit the vſe his word with no euil ſignification, he ſhall not be troubled by me ſo doinge. But becauſe I thinke it can not be kept without great il, & that it ſhould turne to a great benefit to the church, if it were liſhed: neither will I my ſelfe vſe it, and I would wiſh other, if they me counſell, to forbeare it.

I may ſeeme to haue brought a great preiudice againſt my ſelfe, ch haue confeſſed, that all the eccleſiaſticall wryters, except Au-ine, haue ſpoken ſo doutfully or diuerſly in this matter, that no aynety can be had out of their wrytinges. For ſome will ſo con-this, that I meant therefore to thruſt them from giuinge any herein, becauſe they are all againſt me. As for me, I meant it to ther end but this, that I ſimply & in good faith would haue god-ctes prouided for, which if they wayte vpon thoſe mens opinion is poynt, they ſhall alway wauer vncertayne. In ſuch ſorte do ſometime teach, man being ſpoyled of all ſtrength of freewill, to o grace onely: ſometime they furniſh or ſeeme to furniſh him his owne armour. But it is not hard to make appeare, that in ſuch fulneſſe of ſpeech, they nothing, or very litle eſteeminge mans gth haue giuen the praiſe of all good thinges to the holy Ghoſt, ere recite certaine ſentences of theirs, whereby that is playnely ht. For what meaneth that ſaying of Cyprian, which Auguſtine t repeateth, that we ought to glory of nothing, becauſe we haue ing of our owne, but that man wholely deſpoyled in himſelfe, learne to hang all vpon God. What meaneth that ſaying of uſtine and Eucherius, when they expound, that Chriſt is the tree e, to whom he that reacheth his hand, ſhal liue? and that the tree owledge of good and euill, is the free choiſe of will, wherof who ſteth, forſaking the grace of God, he ſhall dye? What meaneth of Chryſoſtome, that euery man is naturally not onely a ſinner, lſo altogether ſinne? If we haue no good thing of our owne: If frō top to toe be altogether ſinne: if it be not lawfull to attempt much the power of free will is able to do, howe then may it be ll to parte the prayſe of a good worke betwene God and man? I rehearſe of this ſort very many ſayings out of other, but leaſt a-an ſhould cauill, that I chooſe out thoſe things onely that make

The Lord in deede doth not take away the ning of the Sunne or Moone from his ſeruauntes, but becauſe he l himſelfe alone appeare glorious in them, he calleth their con-ence far away, euen from thoſe thinges, that are compted in their inion moſt excellent.

Truely, that ſaying of Chriſoſtome hath alway exceedingely ll pleaſed me, that the foundation of our Wiſdom is humilitie: yet more that ſaying of Auguſtine, As (ſayth he) that ſame Rhe- Hom. de perf. euange. Epi. 56. ad Diol. oritian beinge aſked, what was the firſt thinge in the rules of elo-ence, anſwered Pronunciation: and what was the ſecond, he an-red Pronunciation: and what was the third, he anſwered Pro-nciation: ſo if one aſke me of the rules of Chriſtian religion, the ſt, the Second, and Third time, and alwayes I would anſwer Hu-itie. But he meaneth not humility, when a man knowinge ſome e vertue to be in himſelfe, abſtayneth from pride and hautineſſe minde, but when he truely feeleth himſelfe to be ſuch a one, as h no refuge but in humility: as in an other place he declareth. te no man (ſayeth he) flatter himſelfe: of his owne he is a de- In Ioan. hom. 49 . That thinge whereby he is bleſſed, he hath of God onely. For at haſt thou of thine owne, but ſinne? Take away from thee, ne which is thine owne, for righteouſneſſe is Gods. Agayne, Li. de Nat. & gratia, cap. 52. In pſ. 45 y is the poſſibility of nature ſo preſumed on? it is wounded, may-d, troubled and loſt, it needeth a true confeſſion, and not a falſe enſe. Agayne, when euery man knoweth that in himſelfe he is thing, and of himſelfe he hath no helpe, his weapons in himſelfe broken, the warres are ceaſſed. But it is needfull, that all the apons of wickedneſſe be broken in ſunder, ſhiuered in in peeces burnt, that thou remayne vnarmed and haue no helpe in thy e. Howe much more weake thou art in thy ſelfe, ſo much the re the Lord receiueth thee. So vpon the three ſcore and tenne lme he forbiddeth vs to remember our owne righteouſneſſe, that may acknowledge the righteouſneſſe of God: and he ſheweth God doth ſo commende his grace vnto vs, that we may knowe ſelues to be nothing, that we ſtand onely by the mercy of God, n of our ſelues we are nothing but euill. Lette vs not therefore e here with God for our right, as if that were withdrawen from ſaluation which is giuen to him. For as our humbleneſſe is his hieneſſe, ſo the confeſſion of our humbleneſſe hath his mercy ready for remedy. Neither yet do I require that manne not conuicted ſhould willingely yelde himſelfe: nor if he haue any power, that he ſhoulde turne his minde from it, to be ſubdued vnto true humilitie. But that layinge away the diſeaſe of ſelfeloue and deſire of victory wherewith beinge blinded, he thinketh to highly of himſelfe, he ſhould well conſider himſelfe in the true lookinge glaſſe of the Scripture.

12 And the common ſaying which they haue borrowed out of Auguſtine pleaſeth me well, that the naturall giftes were corrupted in man by ſinne, and of the ſupernaturall he was made empty. For this later parte of ſupernaturall giftes, they vnderſtande as well the light of faith as righteouſneſſe, which were ſufficient to the attayning of heauenly life and eternall felicity. Therefore baniſhing himſelfe from the Kingdome of God, he was alſo depriued of the ſpirituall giftes, wherewith he had bin furniſhed to the hope of eternall ſaluation. Whereupon followeth, that he is ſo baniſhed from the Kingdome of God, that all thinges that belong to the bleſſed life of the ſoule, are extinguiſhed in him, vntill by grace of regeneration he recouer them. Of that ſorte are faith, the Loue of God, charity towardes our neighbours, the ſtudy of holineſſe and righteouſneſſe. All theſe thinges, becauſe Chriſt reſtoreth them vnto vs, are compted thinges comming from an other to vs, and beſide nature, and therefore we put ther that they were once taken away. Againe, ſoundneſſe of the vnderſtandinge minde and vprightneſſe of hart were then taken away together, and this is the corruption of naturall giftes. For though there remayne ſomewhat left of vnderſtanding and iudgement mixt ther with will, yet can we not ſay, that our vnderſtanding is ſounde and perfect, which is both feeble and drowned in many darkeneſſes. And as for our will, the peruerſeneſſe thereof is more than ſufficiently knowen. Sith therefore reaſon, whereby a man diſcerneth betwene good and euill, whereby he vnderſtandeth and iudgeth, is a naturall gift, it could not be altogether deſtroied, but it was partely weakened, partely corrupted, ſo that foule ruynes thereof appeare. In this ſenſe doth Iohn ſay, that the light ſhineth yet in darkeneſſe, but the darkeneſſe comprehended it not: In which wordes both thinges are plainely expreſſed, that in the peruerted and degendred nature of man, there ſhine yet ſome ſparkes that ſhewe that he is a creature indued with reaſon, and that he differeth from brute beaſtes, becauſe he is indued with vnderſtanding: and yet that this light is choked with great thickeneſſe of ignoraunce, that it can not effectually gette abroade.

Ioh. 1. 5

Will, becauſe it is vnſeparable from the nature of man, periſhed t, but was bound to peruerſe deſires, that it can couet no good inge. This in deede is a full definition, but yet ſuch as needeth to be de playne with more wordes. Therefore, that the order of our ke may proceede according to that firſt diſtinction, wherein we died the ſoule of man into vnderſtandinge and will: lette vs firſt ex-ine the force of vnderſtandinge. So to condemne it of perpetublindeneſſe, that a man leaue vnto it no manner of skill in any de of thinges, is not onely againſt the worde of God, but alſo ainſt the experience of common reaſon. For we ſee that there is nted in man a certayne deſire to ſearch out trueth, to which he uld not aſpire at all, but hauing felt ſome ſauour therof before. is therefore is ſome ſight of mans vnderſtanding, that he is natu-y drawen with loue of trueth, the neglectinge whereof, in brute ſtes proueth a groſſe Senſe without reaſon, albeit, this litle deſire h as it is, faynteth before it entre the beginning of her race, beſe it byandby falleth into vanity. For the witte of man can not dullneſſe keepe the right way to ſearch out trueth, but ſtrayin diuerſe erroures, and as it were gropinge in darkeneſſe, often-es ſtumbleth, till at length it wander and vaniſheth away; ſo in kinge trueth, it doth bewray howe vnfitte it is to ſeeke and finde eth. And then it is ſore troubled with an other vanity, that of-times it diſcerneth not thoſe thinges, to the true knowledge ereof it were expedient to bend it ſelfe, and therefore it tormenit ſelfe with fonde curioſity, in ſearchinge out thinges ſuperus and nothing worth: and to thinges moſt neceſſary to be kno, it either taketh no heede, or negligently or ſeldome turneth, ſurely ſcarſe at any time applieth her ſtudy earneſtly vnto them. which peruerſeneſſe, whereas the prophane wryters do common-complayne, it is founde, that all menne haue entangled themes with it. Wherefore Salomon in all his Eccleſiaſtes, when he de gone through all theſe ſtudies, in which men thinke themſel-to be very wiſe, yet he pronounceth, that they are all vayne and ing.

Yet do not all trauailes of Witte ſo alway become voyde, but t it attayneth ſomewhat, ſpecially when it bendeth it ſelfe to theſe riour thinges. Yea and it is not ſo blockiſh, but that it taſteth alſo e litle of the hier thinges, howeſoeuer it more negligently apply ſearching of them, but yet not that with like power of conceage. For when it is caried vppe aboue the compaſſe of this pre-life, then is it principally conuinced of her owne weakeneſſe.

Wherefore, that we may the better see howe farre accordinge to the degrees of her ability it proceedeth in euery thinge, it is good that I putte foorth a distinction. Lette this therefore be the distinction, that there is one vnderstandinge of earthly thinges, another of heauenly thinges. Earthly thinges I call those that do not concerne God and his Kingdome, true righteousnesse, and the blessednesse of eternall life, but haue all their respect and reference to this presente life, and are as it were contayned within the boundes thereof. Heauenly thinges, I call the pure knowledge of God, the order of true righteousnesse, and the mysteries of the heauenly kingdome. Of the first sorte are policy, gouernaunce of household, all handy craftes, and liberall Sciences. Of the seconde sorte are the knowledge of God and Gods will, and the rule to frame our life accordinge to it. Concerninge the first, this we must confesse, because man is a creature by nature giuen to liue in company together: he is also by naturall instinction bent to cherish and to preserue the fellowshippe of these companies, therefore we see that there are in the mindes of all men vniuersal impressions of a certaine ciuill honestie and order. Hereby it commeth to passe, that there is found no man that vnderstandeth not, that all companies of men ought to be kept in order with lawes, and that conceiueth not in his minde the principles of these lawes. Hereof commeth that same perpetuall consent, as well of all nations as of all men vnto lawes, because the seedes thereof are naturally planted in all men without any teacher or lawmaker. And I weye not the dissensions and fightings that afterward arise while some desire to peruert lawe and right, and loose absolute gouernementes of kinges, that lust strayeth abroad in steede of right, as theeues and robbers, some (which is a fault more than common) thinke that to be vniust, which other haue stablished for iust: and on the other side stiffely say, that to be laudable, which other haue forbidden. For these men do not therefore hate lawes, because they do not knowe that lawes are good and holy, but for that they raginge with headdy lust, do fight against manifest reason, and for theyr fansie do abhorre that, which the vnderstandinge of minde they allowe. The later sorte of striuinges is such, that it taketh not away the first conceiuinge of equitie. For when men do striue amonge themselues, concerninge the poyntes of lawes, they agree together in a certayne summe of equity. Wherein is proued the weakenesse of mannes witte, which euen then when it seemeth to followe the right way, yet halteth and staggereth, but still this remayneth true, that there is sowen in nne a certaine ſeede of politike order. And that is a large proufe, t in the orderinge of this life, no manne is voyde of the light of ſon.

Nowe do followe the artes, both the liberall, and the handy fres: in learninge whereof, becauſe there is in vs all a certayne neſſe, in them alſo doth appeare the force of mannes witte: but eit, all menne be not apt to learne them all, yet is this a token tayne enough of the common naturall power, that there is all- ſt no manne founde, whoſe conceite of witte doth not in ſome or other ſhew foorth it ſelfe. Neither haue they onely a power facility to learne, but alſo to deuiſe in euery art ſome newe nge, either to amplifie or make perfecter that which hath bin med of an other that went before, which thinge, as it moued to erroneouſly to teach, that ſuch conceauinge is nothinge elſe, a callinge to remembraunce, ſo by good reaſon it ought to mpell vs to confeſſe, that the beginninge thereof is naturally nted in the witte of man. Theſe poyntes therefore do playnely nfie, that there is giuen to men naturally an vniuerſall concei- ge of reaſon and of vnderſtandinge. Yet is it ſo an vniuerſall be- te, that therein euery man ought for himſelfe to acknowledge peculiar grace of God. To which thankefullneſſe the creator nſelfe doth ſufficiently awake vs, when he createth natural fooles, whom he maketh vs to ſee with what giftes mans ſoule excel- , if it be not endued with his light, which is ſo naturall in all n, that it is yet altogether a free gift of his liberality towarde e- y man. But the inuention and orderly teachinge of the ſame s, or a more inwarde and excellent knowledge of them which is per but to a fewe, is no perfect argument of the common conceit- ge of witte, yet becauſe without difference it happeneth to the lye and vngodlye, it is rightfully reckened amonge naturall es.

So oft therefore as we light vpon prophane wryters, let vs be in minde by that maruelous light of trueth that ſhineth in them, the wit of man, how much ſoeuer it be, peruerted and fallen from firſt integrity, is yet ſtill clothed and garniſhed with excellent es of God. If we conſider that the ſpirite of God is the onely ntayne of trueth, we will neyther refuſe nor deſpiſe the trueth lfe, whereſoeuer it ſhall appeare, except we will diſhonorably the ſpirite of God: for the giftes of the holy Ghoſt can not be ight by, without contempt and reproch of himſelfe. And what? ll we deny that the trueth ſhined to the olde Lawyers, which haue ſet forth Ciuile order and Diſcipline with ſo great equity? Shall we ſay that the Philoſophers were blinde both in that exquiſite contemplation, and cunning deſcription of nature? Shall we ſay that they had no wit, which by ſetting in order the art of ſpeach, haue taught vs to ſpeake with reaſon? Shall we ſay that they were madde, which in ſetting forth Phiſicke, haue emploied their diligence for vs? What of all the Mathematicall ſciences? ſhall we thinke them doting errours of madde men? no, rather we can not reade the wrytings of the olde men, concerning theſe thinges, without great admiration of their wit. But ſhall we thinke any thinge praiſeworthy or excellent, which we do not reknowledge to come of God? Lette vs be aſhamed of ſo great vnthankefullneſſe, into which the Heathen Poetes fell not, which confeſſed that both Philoſophie and Lawes, and all good artes, were the inuentions of Gods. Sith then it appeareth that theſe men, whom the Scripture calleth naturall men, were of ſo ſharpe and deepe ſight in ſearchinge out of inferiour thinges, lette vs learne by ſuch examples, howe many good thinges the Lorde hath left to the nature of manne, after that it hath bin ſpoyled of the true God.

16 But in the meane time yet let vs not forget, that theſe are the moſt excellent good giftes of the ſpirite of God, which for the common benefitte of mankinde he dealeth abroade to whom it pleaſeth him. For if it behoued, that the vnderſtandinge and skill that was required for the framinge of the tabernacle, ſhould be poured into Beſeleel and Oliab by the ſpirit of God, it is no maruell if the knowledge of thoſe thinges which are moſt excellent in mans life, be ſayde to be communicated vnto vs by the ſpirite of God. Neither is there cauſe why any man ſhould aske, what haue the wicked to do with Gods ſpirite, which are altogether eſtranged from God. For where it is ſayd that the ſpirite of God dwelleth in the faithfull onely, that is to be vnderſtanded of the ſpirite of ſanctification, by the which we are conſecrate to God himſelfe, to be his temples: yet doth he neuertheleſſe fill, moue and quicken all thinges with the vertue of the ſame ſpirite, and that according to the property of euery kinde which he hath giuen to it by law of creation. If it haue bin the Lords will that we ſhould be holpen by the trauaile and ſeruice of the wicked in naturall Philoſophie, Dialecticke, the Mathematicall knowledges, and other: lette vs vſe it, leaſt if we neglect the giftes of God, willingly offered in them, we ſuffer iuſt puniſhment for our ſlouthfullnes. But leaſt any ſhoulde thinke a man to be bleſſed, when vnder the elementes of this world there is graunted vnto him ſo great an abi-

abilitie to conceiue truth, it is alſo to be added that all this power to vnderſtand, and the vnderſtanding that followeth therof, is a vaniſhing and tranſitorie thing before God, where there is not a ſtedefaſt fundation of truth. For Auguſtine teacheth moſt truely, whome (as we haue ſaid) the Maſter of the Sentences, and the other Schole- men are compelled to aſſent vnto, as the free giftes were taken from man after his fall, ſo theſe naturall giftes which remained, were corrupted. Not that they can be defiled of themſelues in aſmuch as they come from God, but bycauſe they ceaſe to be pure to a defiled man, that he ſhould haue no praiſe of them. Lib. 2. diſt. 25.

17 Let this be the ſumme: that it is ſeen that in all mankinde is reaſon which is propre to our nature, which maketh vs to differ from brute beaſtes, as brute beaſtes do differ in ſenſe from thinges without life. For where as there be borne certaine naturall fooles and idiotes, that defaute obſcureth not the generall grace of God. But rather by ſuch ſight we are put in minde, that what is left vnto our ſelues, ought iuſtely to be aſcribed to the kindeneſſe of God, bycauſe if he had not ſpared vs, our rebellion had drawen with it the deſtruction of our whole nature. But wheras ſome do excell in ſharpeneſſe of conceiuing, ſome other do paſſe in iudgement, ſome haue a quicker witte to learne this or that arte: in this variete God ſetteth forth his grace vnto vs, that no man ſhoulde claime to him ſelfe as his owne, that which floweth from Gods mere liberalitie. For howe becometh one more excellent than an other, but that in common nature might appere aboue other the ſpeciall grace of God, which in omitting many, ſaieth openly that it is bounde to none. Beſide that, God poureth in ſingular motions, according to the calling of euery man. Of which thing we mete with many examples in the bookes of the Iudges, wher it is ſaid, that the ſpirite of the Lord clad them, whome he called to rule the people. Finally, in euery noble acte there is a ſpeciall inſtruction. By which reaſon the ſtrong men followed Saul, whoſe heartes the Lord had touched. And when his miniſtring in the kingdome was prophecied of, Samuel ſaid thus: The ſpirite of the Lord ſhall come vpon thee, and thou ſhalt be an other man. And this was continued to the whole courſe of gouernement: as after it is ſpoken of Dauid, that the ſpirite of the Lord came vpon him from that day forwarde. But the ſame is ſpoken in an other place as touching particular motions: yea in Homere men are ſaid to excell in witte, not onely as Iupiter hath dealte to euery man, but alſo as the time required. And truely experience teacheth, while many times ſuch men ſtand amaſed as were moſt ſharpe and depewitted, that the wittes of men are in the Iudic. 6 34. 1. Sam. 10. 6. 1. Sam. 16. 13.

hand and will of God to rule them at euery moment: for which reason it is said, that he taketh witte from the wise, that they may wander out of the way. But yet in this diuersitie we see remaining some markes of the Image of God, which do make difference betwene all mankinde and other creatures.

18 Now is to be declared what mans reason seeth, when it commeth to the kingedome of God and to that spirituall insight, which consisteth chiefely in three thinges: to know God, and his fatherly fauour towarde vs, wherein our saluation standeth: and the way to frame our life according to the rule of his lawe. Both in the first two, and in the second, proprely they that are most witty, are blinder than molles. I denie not that there be here and there read in Philosophers, concerning God, many thinges well and aptely spoken, but yet such as do alway sauour of a certaine giddy imagination. The Lord gaue them in dede, as is aboue said, a little tast of his Godhead, that they shoulde not pretende ignoraunce to colour their vngodlinesse: and many times he moued them to speake many thinges, by confession wherof them selues might be conuinced: But they so sawe the things that they saw, that by such seyng they were not directed to the truth, much lesse did attaine vnto it, like as a wayfaring man in the middest of the feylde, for a sodaine momẽt, seeth faire and wide the glistering of lightning in the night time, but with such a quickely vanishing sight, that he is soner couered againe with the darkenesse of the night, than he can stirre his fote, so farre is it of that he can be brought into his way by such a helpe. Beside that, those small droppes of truth, wherwith, as it were by chaunce, they sprincle their bookes, with how many and how monstruous lies are they defiled? Finally, they neuer so much as smelled that assuredneſse of Gods good will towarde vs, without which mans witte must nedes be filled with infinite confusion. Therfore mans reason neither approcheth, nor goeth toward, nor ones directeth sight vnto this trueth, to vnderstand who is the true God, or what a one he will be towarde vs.

19 But bycause we being dronke with a false persuasion of our owne deepe insight, do very hardely suffer our selues to be persuaded, that in matters of God it is vtterly blinde and dull: I thinke it shall be better to cõfirme it by testimonies of Scripture than by reasons. This doth Iohn very well teache in that place whiche I euen now alleged, whẽ he writeth, that life was in God from the beginning, and the same life which shoulde be the light of men, and that the light did shine in darkenesse, and the darkenesse comprehended it not. He sheweth in dede, that mans soule is lightened with the brightnesse of Gods light, ſo that it is neuer altogether without ſome ſmall flame, or at leaſt ſome ſparcle of it, but yet, that with ſuch a light he comprehendeth not God. And why ſo? bycauſe mans quickeneſſe of wit, as towarde the knowledge of God, is but mere darkeneſſe. For when the holy Ghoſt calleth men darkeneſſe, he at ones ſpoileth them of all abilitie of ſpirituall vnderſtanding. Therefore he affirmeth, that the faithfull which embrace Chriſt, are borne not of bloude, or of the will of the flesh, or of man, but of God. As if he ſhoulde ſaie: fleſh is not capable of ſo hie wiſedome to conceiue God and that which is Gods, vnleſſe it be lightened with the ſpirite of God. As Chriſt teſtified, that this was a ſpeciall reuelation of the father, that Peter did know him. Iohn 1. 13. Mat. 16. 17.

20 If we were perſwaded of this, which ought to be out of all controuerſie, that our nature wanteth all that, which our heauenly father geueth to his elect by the ſpirite of regeneration, then here were no matter to doubte vpon. For thus ſpeaketh the faithfull people in the Prophet: For with thee is the fountaine of life, and in thy light we ſhall ſee light. The Apoſtle teſtifieth the ſame thing, when he ſaieth that no man can call Ieſus the Lord, but in the holy Ghoſt. And Iohn Baptiſt ſeyng the dulneſſe of his diſciples, crieth out, that no man can receiue any thing, vnleſſe it be geuen him from aboue. And that he meaneth by Gifte a ſpeciall illumination, and not a common gifte of nature, appereth hereby, that he complaineth that in ſo many wordes as he had ſpoken to commende Chriſt to his Diſciples, he preuayled nothing. I ſee (ſayeth he) that wordes are nothing to informe mens myndes concerning diuine thinges, vnleſſe the Lord geue vnderſtanding by his ſpirite. Yea and Moſes, when he reprocheth the people with their forgetfulneſſe, yet noteth this withall, that they can by no meanes grow wiſe in the myſteries of God, but by the benefite of God. Thyne eyes (ſaieth he) haue ſeene thoſe greate tokens and wonders, and The Lord hath not geuen thee a heart to vnderſtande, nor eares to heare, nor eyes to ſee. What ſhould he expreſſe more, if he called vs blockes in conſidering the workes of God? Whervpon the Lord by the Prophet promiſeth for a great grace, that he will geue the Iſraelites a heart, that they may know him: ſignifiyng thereby, that mans witte is onely ſo much ſpiritually wiſe, as it is lightened by him. And this Chriſt plainely confirmed with his owne mouth, when he ſayeth that no man can come to him, but he to whome it ſhalbe geuen from the Father. What? is not he him ſelfe the liuely image of the Father, in whom the whole brightneſſe of his glorie is expreſſed vnto vs? Therefore he coulde not better ſhewe what our power is to knowe God, than when he ſayeth, that we haue no eyes Iohn 6. 44. Pſa. 34. 10. 1. Cor. 12. Iohn 3. 27. Deu. 29 2. Ier. 24. 7.

to ſee his Image, where it is ſo openly ſet preſente before vs. What? Came he not into the earth for this purpoſe, to declare his Fathers will vnto men? And did he not faithfully do his office? Yes ſurely, but yet nothing is wrought by his preaching, vnleſſe the inwarde Schole-maſter, the holy Ghoſt, ſet open the way to our mindes. Therefore none come to him, but they that haue hearde and bin taught of the Father. What maner way of learning and hearing is this? Euen, when the holy Ghoſt by maruellous and ſingular vertue formeth the eare to heare, and the mindes to vnderſtande. And leaſt that ſhoulde ſeme ſtraung, he allegeth the prophecie of Eſaie, where when he promiſeth the repairing of the Church that they which ſhall be gathered toge-Iſa. 54. 13. ther to ſaluation, ſhall be taught of the Lord. If God there foreſheweth ſome peculiar thing concerning his electes, it is euident that he ſpeaketh not of that kinde of learning that was alſo common to the wicked and vngodly. It remaineth therefore that we muſt vnderſtande thus, that the way into the kingdome of God is open to no man, but to him to whom the holy Ghoſt by his enlightening ſhall make a new minde. But Paule ſpeaketh moſt plainely of all, which of purpoſe entring into diſcourſe of this matter, after he had condemned all mens Whome doeth he call naturall? euen him that ſtayeth vpon the light of nature. He I ſay comprehendeth nothing in the ſpirituall miſteries of God. Why ſo? is it bycauſe by ſlouthfulneſſe he neglecteth it? Nay, rather although he would trauaile neuer ſo much, he can do nothing, bycauſe forſoth they are ſpiritually iudged. What meaneth that? bycauſe being vtterly hidden from the ſight of man, they are opened by the onely reuelation of the ſpirite: ſo that they are reckened for folie where the ſpirite of God geueth not light. Before he had auaunced thoſe thinges that God hath prepared for them that loue him, aboue the capacitie of eyes, eares and mindes. lightened with his grace. He that geueth to him ſelfe more vnderanding, is ſo much the more blinde, for that he doth not acknowe-dge his owne blindeneſſe.

22 Nowe remaineth the thirde pointe, of knowing the rule of ll framing of life, which we do rightly call the knowledge of the orkes of righteouſneſſe, wherein mans wit ſemeth to be of ſome-at more ſharpe ſight, than in the other two before. For the Apoſtle ſtifieth, that the Gentiles which haue no lawe, while they do the Rom. 2. 14. orkes of the lawe, are to themſelues in ſtede of a lawe, and do ſhewe e lawe written in their heartes, their conſciences bearing them witſſe, and their thoughtes accuſing them within themſelues, or excu-g them before the iugdement of God. If the Gentiles haue righte-neſſe naturally grauen in their mindes, ſurely we can not ſay that e are altogether blinde in the order of life. And nothing is more cōon, than that man by the lawe naturall, of which the Apoſtle ſpea-h in that place, is ſufficiently inſtructed to a right rule of life. But let vs weye to what purpoſe this knowledge of the lawe is planted in men: then it ſhall byandby appeare, how farre it bringeth them towarde the marke of reaſon and truth. The ſame is alſo euident by the wordes of Paule, if a man do marke the placing of them. He had ſaide a litle before, that they whiche ſinned in the lawe, are iudged by the lawe: they that haue ſinned without lawe, do periſh without lawe. Becauſe this might ſeme vnreaſonable, that the Gentils ſhould periſh without any iudgement going before, he byandby addeth, that their conſcience is to them in ſteade of a lawe, and therfore is ſufficient for their iuſt damnation. Therefore the ende of the lawe naturall is, that man may be made inexcuſable. And it ſhall be defined not ill after this ſorte, that it is a knowledge of conſcience, that ſufficiently diſcerneth betwene iuſt and vniuſt, to take away from men the pretence of ignoraunce, while they are proued gilty by their owne teſtimonie. Such is the tenderneſſe of man towarde him ſelfe, that in doing of euils, he alway turneth away his minde ſo much as he maie from the ſight of ſinne. By which reaſon it ſemeth that Plato was moued to thinke that there is no ſinne done but by ignorance. That in dede were fitly ſpoken of him, if mens hypocriſie went ſo farre in hiding of vices, that the minde might not know it ſelfe gilty before God. But when the ſame ſeking to eſcheue the iudgement emprinted in him, is now and then drawene backe vnto it, and not ſuffered ſo to winke, but that he is compelled whether he will or no, ſome time to open his eyes: it is falſely ſaid that he ſinneth onely by ignorance. Themiſtius ſaith more truely, which teacheth that vnderſtanding is ſeldome deceiued: that it is blindeneſſe when it goeth any further, that is, when he comeſh downe to the ſpeciall caſe. Euery man, if it be generally aſked, will affirme, that manſlaughter is euill: but he that conſpireth to kill his enemies, deliberateth vpon it, as on a good thing. The adulterer generally will condemne adulterie, but in his owne, priuately he will flatter him ſelfe. This is ignoraunce, when a man comming to the ſpeciall caſe forgetteth the rule, that he had lately agreed vpon in the generall queſtion. Of which thing Auguſtine diſcourſeth very finely in his expoſition of the firſt verſe of the lvij. Pſalme: albeit the ſame thing is not continuall. For ſometime the ſhamefulneſſe of the euill deede ſo preſſeth the conſcience, that not deceiuing him ſelfe vnder the reſemblance of a good thing, but wittingly and willingly he runneth into euill. Out of which affection came theſe ſayinges: I ſee the better and allow it, but I follow the worſe. Wherefore, me thinke, Ariſtotle hath very aptely made diſtinction betwene Incontinence and Temperance. Where incontinence reigneth, he ſayeth, that there by reaſon reaſon of troubled affection or paſſion, knowledge is taken away from he minde, that it marketh not the euill in his owne acte, which it enerally ſeeth in the like: and when the troubled affection is cooled, epentaunce immediatly followeth. But intemperaunce is not extin-uiſhed or broken by feeling of ſinne, but on the other ſide obſtinate-y ſtandeth ſtill in her conceiued choiſe of euill.

24 Now when thou heareſt iudgement vniuerſally named in the ifference of good and euill, thinke it not euery ſounde and perfect dgement. For if mans heartes are furniſhed with choiſe of iuſt and niuſt, only to this ende, that they ſhould not pretende ignorance, it is ot then nedefull to ſee the trueth in euery thing. But it is enough & ore, that they vnderſtand ſo farre that they can not eſcape away, but eing conuict by witneſſe of their conſcience, they euen now already eginne to tremble at the iudgemēt ſeate of God. And if we will trie ur reaſon by the lawe of God, which is the exampler of true righte-uſneſſe, we ſhall finde how many wayes it is blinde. Truely it attei-eth not at all to thoſe that are the chiefe thinges in the Firſt table, as f confidence in God, of geuing to him the prayſe of ſtrength and ghteouſneſſe, of calling vpon his name, of the true keping of Sab-at. What ſoule euer, by naturall ſenſe did ſmell out, that the lawfull orſhipping of God conſiſteth in theſe and like thinges? For when rophane men will worſhippe God, although they be called away a undred times from their vaine trifles, yet they alway ſlide backe thi-her againe. They denie in deede that ſacrifices do pleaſe God, vn-leſſe there be adioyned a pureneſſe of minde: whereby they declare, hat they conceiue ſomewhat of the ſpirituall worſhipping of God, hich yet they byandby corrupt with falſe inuentions. For it can ne-er be perſuaded them, that all is true that the lawe preſcribeth of it. hall I ſaie, that that wit excelleth in any ſharpe vnderſtanding, which an neither of it ſelfe be wiſe, nor harken to teaching? In the com-aundementes of the Second table it hath ſome more vnderſtanding, y ſo much as they came nerer to the preſeruation of ciuile felow-ippe among menne. Albeit euen herein alſo it is founde many times faile. To euery excellent nature it ſemeth moſt vnreaſonable, to ffer an vniuſt, and to imperious a maner of gouerning ouer them, by any meane he may put it away: and the iudgement of mans rea-n is none other, but that it is the part of a ſeruile and baſe courage, ſuffer it patiently: and againe, the parte of an honeſt and free borne earte, to ſhake it of. And reuenge of iniuries is reckened for no faulte mong the Philoſophers. But the Lorde condemning that to much obleneſſe of courage, commaundeth his to kepe the ſame patience, that is ſo ill reported among men. And in all the keping of the law our vnderſtanding marketh not deſire of minde at all. For a natural man ſuffereth not him ſelfe to be brought to this, to acknowledge the diſeaſes of his deſires. The light of nature is choked vp, before that it come to the firſt entrie of this bottomleſſe depth. For when the Philoſophers note immoderat motions of minde for faultes, they meane thoſe motiõs that appere and ſhew forth themſelues by grose tokens, but they make no accompt of thoſe euill deſires that do gently tickle the minde.

25 Wherfore, as Plato was worthyly founde fault withall before, for that he imputed all ſinnes to ignoraunce, ſo is their opinion to be reiected, which teach that purpoſed malice and frowardneſſe is not in all ſinnes. For we finde it to much by experience, how oft we fall with our good intent. Our reaſon is ouerwhelmed with ſo many ſortes of being deceyued, is ſubiect to ſo many errours, ſtombleth at ſo many ſtayes, is entangled with ſo many ſtreightes, that it is farre from ſure directing. But how little it is eſtemed before the Lord in the partes of our life, Paule ſheweth when he ſayeth, that we are not ſufficient to thinke any thing of our ſelues, as of our ſelues. He ſpeaketh not of will or affection, but he taketh alſo this away from vs, that we ſhoulde not thinke that it can come in our mindes how any thing is to be done well. Is our diligence, inſight, vnderſtanding, and heade corrupted, that it can deuiſe or thinke vpon nothing that is right before the Lord? that ſemeth to harde to vs, that do vnwillingly ſuffer our ſelues to be ſpoyled of the ſharpeneſſe of reaſon, which we accompt a moſt precious gift. But to the holy Ghoſt it ſemeth moſt full of equitie, which knoweth that all the thoughtes of wiſemen are vaine: and which pronounceth plainly, that all the inuention of mans heart is onely euill. If all that our witte conceiued, deuiſeth vpon, purpoſeth and goeth about, is alway euill, how can it come in our minde to purpoſe that which pleaſeth God, to whom onely holyneſſe and righteouſneſſe is acceptable? So is it to be ſeen, that the reaſon of our minde, which way ſo euer it turne it ſelfe, is miſerably ſubiect to vanitie. Dauid knew this weakeneſſe in him ſelfe, when he prayed to haue vnderſtanding geuen him, to learne the Lordes commandementes aright. For he ſecretly ſayeth therein, that his owne wit ſufficeth him not, which deſireth to haue a new geuen him. And that he doth not onely once, but almoſt ten times, in one Pſalme, he repeteth the ſame prayer. By which repeting he priuely declareth, with how great neede he is driuen to pray it. And that which he prayeth for himſelfe alone, Paule commonly vſeth to pray for the Churches. We 16 Now is will to be examined, wherin ſtandeth the cheefe liber-tie of free choiſe, for it hath bene already ſene, that choiſe doth rather belong to will, than to vnderſtanding. Firſt, that this thing which the Philoſophers haue taught, and is receiued with common cōſent, that is, that all thinges by naturall inſtinction deſire that which is good, may not ſeeme to belōg to the vprightneſſe of mans will: Let vs marke that the force of free will, is not to be conſidered in ſuch appetite, as rather procedeth of the inclination of the eſſence, than of the aduiſement of the vnderſtanding minde. For euen the ſcholemen do con-fes, that free will hath no action, but when reaſon turneth it ſelfe to obiectes, wherby they mean that the obiect of appetite muſt be ſuch, as may be ſubiect to choiſe, and go before deliberation, which pre-pareth the way for choiſe. And truely, if a man cōſider what is the naturall deſire of good in man, he ſhall finde that it is common to him with beaſtes. For they alſo deſire to be well, and when any ſhew of good appeareth that moueth their ſenſe, they follow it. But man doth rather choſe by reaſon, that he may follow with diligence that thing which is in deede good for him, according to the excellence of his immortall nature, nor taketh reason to coūsel, nor bendeth his minde, but without reason, without counsell, like a beast, followeth the inclination of nature. This therefore maketh nothing for the freedome of will, if a mā by sense of nature be caryed to desire that which is good: but this is requisite, that he discerne good by right reason, and when he hath knowene it, that he chose it, and whē he hath chosen it, that he follow it. But least any man shoulde doubt, there is to be noted a double sophisticall argumēt. For appetite is not here called the proper manner of will, but a naturall inclination: and good is called not that of vertue or iustice, but of estate, as we say. This man is well, or in good case: Finally, although a man do neuer so much desire to attaine that is good, yet he followeth it not. As there is no man to whom eternall blessednesse is not pleasant, yet is there none that aspireth vnto it, but by the mouing of the holy Ghost. Wherfore, sith the naturall desire in men to be well, maketh nothing to proue the fredome of will, no more than in metals and stones, doth the affection inclining to the perfection of their substance: let vs consider in other thinges, whether Will be so infected and corrupted in all partes, that it engendreth nothing but euill: or whether it kepeth still any parcell vnhurte, from whence do grow good desires.

27 They that do attribute to the first grace of God, that we will effectually, seme on the other side to say secretely, that there is in the soule a power of it selfe to aspire to good, but it is so weake, that it cannot growe to a perfecte affection, or raise vp any endeuour. And there is no doute that the scholemen haue commonly embraced this opinion, or which was borowed by Origen and certaine of the olde writers: forsomuch as they are wonte to consider man in pure naturall thinges, (as they terme it) such a one as the Apostle describeth him in these wordes. I do not the good that I would, but the euill that I woulde not, that I do. To will is present vnto me, but to performe it I finde not. But after this maner is the discours that Paule there followeth, altogether wrongfully peruerted. For he entreateth of the Christian wrastling (which he shortly toucheth to the Galathians) which the faithfull continually fele within themselues, in the battell of the flesh and the spirite. But the spirite is not of nature, but of regeneration. And that the Apostle doth there speake of the regenerate, appeareth by this, that whē he had said, that there dwelleth no goodnesse in him, he addeth an exposition, that he meaneth it of his flesh. And therefore he saith, that it is not he that doth the euill, but sinne that dwelleth in him. What meaneth this correction in me, that is, in my flesh? Euen as much as if he had said thus: God dwelleth not in me as

That out of the corrupt nature of man procedeth nothing but damable.

BVt man can not be any way better knowene in either part of his ſoule, than if he come forth with his titles wherewith the Scripture doth ſet him out. If he be painted whole in these
Ioh. 3.6 wordes of Chriſt, That which is borne of fleſh, is fleſh: and is eaſy to proue, then is he proued to be a very miſerable creature.
Rom. 8. 6. For the affection of the fleſh, as the Apoſtle witneſſeth, is death, in aſmuch as it is enimitie againſt God, and ſo is not ſubiect, nor can be ſubiect to the lawe of God. Is fleſh ſo peruerſe, that with all hatred ſhe continually vſeth enimitie againſt God? that ſhe can not agree with the righteouſneſſe of the lawe of God? Finally, that ſhe can bring forth nothing but matter of death? Nowe, graunt that the nature of man is nothing but fleſh, and gather any good out of it if thou canſt. But (they ſay) the name of fleſh belongeth onely to the ſenſuall, and not the hier parte of the ſoule. But that is ſufficiently confuted by the wordes of Chriſt, and of the Apoſtle. It is the Lordes Iob. 3.6 argument, that man muſt be borne againe, bycauſe he is fleſh. He commaundeth not to be borne againe according to the body. But in minde he is not borne againe, if a parte of it be amended, but when it is all renewed. And that doth the compariſon, ſet in both places, confirme. For the ſpirite is ſo compared againſt the fleſh, that there is left no meane thing betwene them. Therefore whatſoeuer is not ſpirituall in man, is after the ſame reaſon called fleſhly. But we haue nothing of the Spirite but by regeneration. It is therefore fleſh whatſoeuer we haue of nature. But of that matter, if otherwiſe we could Ephe. 4. 13. haue any doubte, that is taken away from vs by Paule, where after he had deſcribed the olde man, whome he had ſaide to be corrupt with concupiſcences of errour, he biddeth vs to be renewed in the ſpirite of our minde: you ſee he doth not place vnlawefull and euil luſtes onely in the ſenſitiue part, but alſo in the very minde, and therefore requireth a renuing of it. And truely a little before he had pointed out ſuch an image of mans nature, as did ſhewe that there was no parte wherein we were not corrupted and peruerted: for where he writeth that all nations do walke in the vanitie of their minde, are darkened in vnderſtanding, eſtranged from the life of God, by reaſon

which is also made more plaine by the comparison byandby adioyned, where he putteth the faithfull in minde, that they haue not so learned Christ. For of these wordes we gather, that the grace of Christ is the onely remedie whereby we be deliuered from that blindenesse, and the euils that ensue thereof. For so had Esaie also prophecied of the kingdome of Christ, when he promised, that the Lorde should be an euerlasting light to his Church, when yet darkenesse couered the earth, and a mist the peoples. Whereas he testifieth, that the light of God shall arise onely in the Church, truely without the Church he seeth nothing but darkenesse and blindenesse. I will not reherse perticularly such thinges as are written euery where, specially in the Psalmes and in the Propheres against the vanity of man. It is a great thing that Dauid writeth, if he be weyed with vanitie, that he shall be vayer than vanitie it selfe. His wit is wounded with a greuous weapon, when all the thoughtes that come out of it, are scorned as foolish, dizeling, madde and peruerse. Esa. 60. 2. Psal. 62. 10.

2 No easier is the condemnation of the heatre, when it is called guilefull and peruerse aboue all thing: but bycause I studie to be short, I will be contente with one place alone, but such a one as shall be like a most bright loking glasse, wherin we may beholde the whole image of our nature. For the Apostle, when he goeth about to throwe downe the arrogance of mankinde, doth it by these testimonies, That there is not one righteous manne, There is not one manne that vnderstandeth or that seeketh God, All are gone out of the way, they are made vnprofitable together, there is none that doth good, no not one: their throte is an open sepulcher, with their tongues they worke deceitfully, the poison of Serpentes is vnder their lippes, whose mouth is full of cursing and bitternesse: whose feete are swifte to shedde bloude, in whose wayes is sorrowe and vnhappinesse, which haue not the feare of God before their eyes: With these thunderbolres he inueyeth, not against certaine menne, but against the whole nation of the sonnes of Adam. Neither declineth he against the corrupt manners of one or two ages, but accuseth the continuall corruption of nature. For his purpose is in that place, not simply to chide men, to make them amende, but to teach rather that all menne are oppressed with calamitie, impossible to be ouercome, from which they can not get vp againe, vnlesse they be plucked out by the mercie of God. And bycause, that couldc not be proued vnlesse it had bin by the ouerthrowe and destruction of nature, he brought forth these testimonies whereby is proued that our nature is more than destroyed. Let this therefore remaine agreed, that menne are such as Rom. 13 10. Psal. 14. 53. Esa. 59 7. Iere. 17. 9.

they be here described, not onely by faulte of euill custome, but also by corruptnesse of nature. For otherwise the Apostles argument can not stande, that there is no saluation for manne but by the mercie of God, bycause he is in him selfe vtterly loste and past hope. I will not here busie my selfe in prouing the applying of these testimonies that no man shoulde thinke them vnfitly vsed. I will so take them as if they had bin first spoken by Paule, and not taken out of the Prophets. First he taketh awaie from manne righteousenesse, that is integritie and pureneſſe; and then vnderstanding. The wante of vnderstanding, he proueth by Apostasie or departing from God, whome to seeke is the first degree of wisedome. But that wante must nedes happen to them that are fallen awaie from God. He sayeth further, that all are gone out of the waie and become as it were rotten, that there is none that doeth good, and then he adioyneth the haynous sinne, wherewith they defile their members that are ones let loose into wickednesse. Last of all he testifieth that they are voide of the feare of God, after whose rule our steppes shoulde haue bin directed. If these be the inheritable giftes of mankind, it is in vaine to seke for any good thing in our nature. In deede I graunt that not all these faultes do appeare in euery manner: yet can not be denied that this Hydra lurketh in the heartes of all menne. For as the bodie while it already soffreth enclosed within it, the cause and matter of disease, although the paine be not yet vehement, cannot be called healthy: no more can the soule be reckened sounde, while it swarmeth full of such diseases of vices, albeit the similitude doth not agree in all pointes. For in the body be it neuer so muche diseased, there remayneth a quickenesse of life: but the soule beyng drowned in this gulfe of destruction, is not onely troubled with vices, but also altogether voide of all goodnesse.

3 The same question in a manner which hath bin before debated, now riseth vp againe of newe. For in all ages there haue bin some, which by guiding of nature haue bin bente to vertue in all their life. And I regarde it not, though many slippinges may be noted in their manners: yet by the very studie of honestie they haue shewed a proofe, that there was some pureneſſe in their nature. What rewarde such vertue haue before God, although we will more fully declare when we shall speake of the merites of workes, yet we must somewhat speake in this place so farre as is necessarie for making plaine of the present argument. These examples therefore seeme to put vs in minde, that we shoulde not thinke mans nature all together corrupt, for that by her instruction some men haue not onely excelled in some

noble actes, but also in the whole course of their life haue behaued themselues most honestly. But here we must thinke, how in this corruption of nature there is some place for the grace of God, not to cleanse it, but inwardely to restraine it. For if the Lord woulde suffer the mindes of all men as it were with lose reines to runne wildly into all sortes of lustes, without doubte there woulde be no man, but he would in plaine experience make vs beleue, that all those euils wherewith Paule condemneth all nature, are most truely saide of him. For what? Canst thou exempt thy selfe out of the number of them, whose feete are swift to shed bloude, their handes defiled with robberies and manslaughters, their throtes like vnto open Sepulchres, their tongues deceitfull, their lippes venymous, their workes vnprofitable, wicked, rotten, deadly, whose minde is without God, whose inwardes are peruersenesse, whose eyes are bent to entrappinges, their heartes lift vp dispiteously to triumph ouer other, and all the partes of them applied to infinite mischeues. If euery soule be subiect to all such monsters, as the Apostle boldly pronounceth, truely we see what woulde come to passe, if the Lorde woulde suffer the lust of manne to wander after his owne inclination. There is no madde beast that is so headlong caried awaye, there is no streame be it neuer so swifte and strong, whereof the ouerflowing is so violent. The Lorde healeth these diseases in his electe by this meane that we will byandby sette forth. In some he only restraineth them with putting a bridle in their mouth, onely that they breake not out, so farre as he foreseeth to be expedient for preseruing of the vniuersitie of thinges. Hereby some are holden in by shame, some by feare of lawes, that they burst not forth into many sortes of filthinesse, howbeit they do for a great part not hide their vncleanneſſe. Some bycause they thinke that an honest trade of life is good, do after a certaine sorte aspire towarde it. Some rise vp aboue the common sorte, that by their maiestie they may kepe other in their duetie. So God by his prouidence bridleth the peruersenesse of nature, that it breake not forth into doyng: but he cleanseth it not within. Rom. 3. 10.

Aug. li. 4. cõtra Iulianum. naturall manne excelled in ſuch vprightneſſe of manners, then nature is vndoubtedly not without power towarde the ſtudie of vertue. But what if the minde were peruerſe and crooked, and folowing anything rather than vpright ſtraightneſſe? And that it was ſuch, there is no doubte, if you graunt that he was a naturall manne. Nowe what power of mans nature to goodneſſe will you reherſe vnto me in this behalfe, if in the greateſt ſhewe of pureneſſe it be founde that he is alway carried to corruption: Therefore, leaſt ye commende a man for vertue, whoſe vices deceyue you vnder vertues Image, do not ye geue vnto the will of manne power to deſire goodneſſe, ſo long as it remayneth faſt in her owne peruerſeneſſe. Albeit this is a moſt ſure and eaſy ſolution of this queſtion, that theſe are not common giftes of nature, but ſpeciall graces of God, which he diuerſely and to a certaine meaſure dealeth among men that are otherwiſe vngodly. For which reaſon we feare not in common ſpeache to call one man well natured, and an other of euill nature, and yet we ceaſe not to include them bothe vnder the vniuerſall ſtate of mans corruption, but we ſhewe what ſpeciall grace God hath beſtowed vpon the one, which he hath not vouchſaued to geue to the other, when his pleaſure was to make Saule king, he formed him as a new man: and that is the reaſon why Plato alluding to the fable of Homere, ſayeth that Kings ſonnes are created notable by ſome ſingular marke, bycauſe God prouiding for mankinde, furniſheth theſe with a princely nature whome he appointeth to beare gouernemẽt: and out of this ſtore houſe came all the great Capitaines that are renomed in hiſtories The ſame is alſo to be thought of priuate men. But bycauſe as euery man hath moſt excelled, ſo his ambition hath moſt moued him forwarde (with which ſpotte all vertues are defiled, ſo that they loſe all fauour before God) it is to be accompted nothingworth, what ſoeuer ſemeth praiſeworthy in vngodly men, beſide that the cheefe parte of vprightneſſe faileth, where there is no ſtudy to aduaunce the glory of God, which all they wante whome he hath not regenerate with his ſpirite. Neither was Eſa. 11. 3. vainely ſpoken in Eſaie, that vpon Chriſt reſteth the ſpirite of the feare of God, whereby we are taught, that ſo many as are ſtrange from Chriſt, are without the feare of God, which is the beginning of wiſdome. As for the vertues that deceiue vs with vaine ſhewe, I graunt they ſhall haue praiſe in the court of policie, and in the commõ ſame of men, but before the heauenly iudgement ſeate, they ſhall be of no valewe to deſerue righteouſneſſe.

5 With ſuch bondage of ſinne therfore as Will is detayned, it can not ones moue it ſelfe to goodneſſe, much leſſe apply it ſelfe. For ſuch

ninge is the beginninge of turning to God, which in Scriptures is holly imputed to the grace of God. As Ieremy praieth to the Lord turne him, if he will haue hime turned. Whereupon the Prophet the same chapter, describing the spiritual redemption of the faithful people, sayth that they were redeemed out of the hand of a stōger, meaning with how straight fetters a sinner is bound so long as being forsaken of the Lord, he liueth vnder the yoke of the Deuill. Yet Will remayneth, which with most bent affection is both enclined & hasteth to sinne. For man was not depriued of Will when he did cast himselfe into this necessity, but of the soundenesse of Will. And Berde sayth not vnaptly, which teacheth that to Will is in vs all: but Will good is a profiting, to will ill is a defaut: and therefore simply will, is the worke of man: to will euill, of corrupte nature: to wil wel, grace. Now whereas I say, that will put from liberty is by necessity we or led into euill, it is maruell if that should seeme a hard speach to any man, which neither hath any absurdity in it, nor varieth frō the vse of holy men: But it offendeth them that can make no difference betwene necessity and compulsion. But if a man aske them, is God of necessity good? is not the deuill of necessity euill? what they aunswere? For so is goodnesse knit with Gods diuinity, that is no more necessary that he be God then that he be good. And deuill is by his fall so estranged from partaking of goodnesse, that can do nothing but euill. But now if any robber of God do barke against this and say, that God deserueth smale praise for his goodnes, which he is compelled to keepe: shall not this be a ready aunswere to him, that it commeth to passe by his infinite goodnesse and not by violent impulsion, that he can not do euell. Therefore if this, that it is necessiue that God doe well, do not hinder the free will of God in doing wel, if the deuil which can not do but euil yet willingly sinneth who shall then say that a man doothe therefore lesse willingly sinne for this that he is subiect to necessity of sinning. This necessity, wher- Lib. de perfect. instit.
Augustine ech where speaketh of it, euen then also when he was grieuously pressed with the cauillation of Celestius, he sticked not to affirme in these wordes, by liberty it came to passe that man was with sinne, but now the corruption which flowed for punishment, hath of liberty made necessity. And so oft as he falleth into mention thereof, he douteth not to speake in this manner of the necessary bondage of sinne. Therefore let this summe of that distinction be kept, that De nat. & grat. & alibi.

ren constraynt: but yet of such peruerseneſſe of nature as he is, he can not but be moued and driuen to euil. If this be true, then surely it is playnely expreſſed that he is ſubiect to neceſſity of ſinning. Bernard agreeing to Auguſtine wryteth thus, only man among all liuing creatures is free: and yet by meane of ſinne, he alſo ſuffereth a certayne violence, but of wil and not of nature, that euen therby alſo he ſhould not be depriued of freedome, for that which is willing is free. And a little after, wil being chaunged in it ſelfe into worſe, by I wot not what corrupt and maruelous manner, ſo maketh neceſſity, that very neceſſity for as much as it is willing, can not excuſe will, and will forasmuch as it is drawen by allurement, can not exclude neceſſity, for this neceſſity is after a certaine manner willing. Afterward he ſayth, I was preſſed downe with a yoke, but yet none other but of a certaine willing bondage, therefore by reaſon of our bondage we are miſerable, by reaſon of our will we are inexcuſable, becauſe will when it was ill made it ſelfe the bondſeruaunt of ſinne. At length he concludeth, that the ſoule is ſo after a certaine maruelous and euill manner holden both a bonde ſeruaunt and free, vnder this certaine willinge and free neceſſity: a bondſeruaunt by reaſon of neceſſity, free by reaſon of wil, and that which is more maruelous and more miſerable, therein gilty wherein it is free, therein bond wherein it is gilty, and ſo therein bond wherein it is free. Hereby truely the readers do perceiue that I bringe no newe thinge, which longe ago Auguſtine brought forth out of the conſent of all godly men, and almoſt a thouſand yeares after was kept ſtill in monkes Cloyſters. But Lombarde when he could not diſtinguiſh neceſſity frō compulſion, gaue matter to a pernicious errour.

Ser. ſuper Cā tic. 81.

6 On the otherſide it is good to conſider what manner remedy that of the grace of God, whereby the corruption of nature is amended and healed. For whereas the Lord in helping vs, giueth vs that which we want, when we ſhall knowe what his worke is in vs, it will ſtreightway appeare on the other ſide what is our needineſſe. When the Apoſtle ſayeth to the Philippians, that he truſteth that he which beganne a good worke in them, will performe it vnto the day of Ieſus Chriſt: it is no doute, that by the beginninge of a good worke he meaneth the very beginninge of conuerſion, which is in vs. Therefore God beginneth a good worke in vs by ſtirring vp in our heartes the loue, deſire and endeuour of righteouſneſſe, or (to ſpeake more properly) in bowing, framing and directing our heartes to righteouſneſſe: he endeth it in confirminge vs to perſeuerance. And that no man ſhould cauill that good is begonne by the Lord, when we

Who ſhall ſay that the weakeneſſe of mans will is ſtrengthened with ich was of common nature before, is deſtroyed. For there is to be derſtanded a compariſon betwene Adam and Chriſt, which in an her place he more playnly expreſſeth, where he teacheth that we e the worke of God created in Chriſt to good workes, which he th prepared that we ſhoulde walke in them. For he goeth about by this reaſon to proue, that our ſaluation is of free gift, becauſe the beginning of all goodneſſe, is at the ſeconde creation, which we obtayne in Chriſt. But if there were any power of our ſelues, were neuer ſo ſmale, we ſhould haue alſo ſome portion of merite. But he to proue vs altogether nothing worth, reaſoneth that we haue deſerued nothing, becauſe we are create in Chriſt to good workes, which God hath prepared. In which wordes he ſignifieth againe, that all partes of good workes, euen from the firſt motiō, are propre to God onely. For this reaſon, the Prophete after he had ſayd in the Pſalme that we are the workemanſhip of God, that there ſhould be no partition, addeth byandby, We made not our ſelues. That he ſpeaketh there of regeneration, which is the beginning of ſpirituall life, appereth by the tenor of the text, where it byandby after followeth, that we are his people & the flocke of his paſtures. We ſee now, how he not contented ſimply to haue giuen to God the praiſe of our ſaluation, doth expreſly exclude vs from all fellowſhip with him, as if he would ſay, that there reſteth no peece, be it neuer ſo litle, for man to glory in, becauſe it is all of God.

7 But there will be ſome peraduenture that will graunt, that Will being of her owne nature, turned away from good, is conuerted by the only power of the Lord: but ſo that being prepared before, it hath alſo her owne parte in doing, as Auguſtine teacheth, that grace goeth before euery good worke, but ſo, that will doth accompany it and not leade it, as a wayting maide after it, and not a foregoer. Which thing being not euill ſpoken by the holy man, Peter Lombarde doth diſorderly wryth to this purpoſe. But I affirme, that as well in the words of the Prophet which I haue alleaged, as in the other places, theſe two thinges be playnely ſignified, that the Lord doth both correct our corrupted will or rather deſtroy it, & alſo of himſelfe putteth in place therof a good will. In as much as it is preuented by grace, in that reſpect I giue you leaue to call it a wayting maide: but for that being reformed, it is the worke of the Lord, this is wrongfully giuen to man that he doth with will cōming after, obey grace going before. Therefore it is not wel wrytten of Chryſoſtome, that neither grace without will, nor will without grace can worke any thing: as if grace did not worke very well it ſelfe, as euen now we haue ſeene by Paule. Neither was it Auguſtines purpoſe, when he called mannes will the wayting maide of grace, to aſſigne vnto her a certaine ſecond office in doing good worke, but becauſe this only was his intent, to confute the wicked doctrine of Pelagius, which did ſet the principall cauſe of ſaluation in mans deſerning: therefore he ſtode only vpon this point, that race was before all deſeruing: which was ſufficiēt for the matter that e then had in hande, not medling in the meane time with the other eſtion, concerning the perpetuall effect of grace, which yet in an ther place he excellently well handleth. For ſometimes when he ith, ỹ the lord doth preuent the vnwilling that he may wil, & follo-eth the willing that he wil not in vayne, he maketh him altogether e whole author of the good worke. Albeit his ſentences touching is matter, are to plaine to neede any long arguing vpon them. Men (ſayth he) do labour to finde in our will ſomething that is our owne d not of God, but how it may be found I know not. And in his firſt ooke againſt Pelagius and Celeſtius, where he doth expounde that ying of Chriſt, Euery one that hath heard of my father cōmeth to e, he ſayth: Freewill is ſo holpen not only that it may know what is be done, but alſo may do it when it hath knowen it. And ſo when od teacheth, not by the letter of the law, but by the grace of the irit, he ſō teacheth, that he that hath learned, doth not only ſee it in owing, but alſo deſire it in willing, and performe it in doing.

Au. li. 2. de remiſſ. peccat. cap. 18. Ioh. 6. 45.

And becauſe we are now in hand with the chiefe point wherupō e matter hangeth, let vs go forward and proue the ſumme thereof the readers, onely with a fewe & ỹ moſt plaine teſtimonies of the cripture. And then, leaſt any man ſhould accuſe vs of wrongful wre-ng the Scripture, let vs ſhew that the trueth which we affirme be-g taken out of the Scripture, wanteth not the teſtimony of this ho-man, I meane Auguſtine. For I thinke it not expedient, that all the inges be rehearſed that may be brought out of the Scriptures, for nfirmation of our meaning, ſo that by the moſt choſen that ſhalbe ought forth, ỹ way may be prepared to vnderſtand all the reſt that e here and there commonly red. And againe, I thinke it ſhall not be idly done, if I openly ſhew that I agree well with that man whom perthily the conſent of godly men doth much eſteeme. Surely it is e-dent by plaine and certaine proufe, that the beginning of goodneſſe from no where elſe but only from God. for there can not be found will bent to good, but in the elect. But the cauſe of election is to be ught out of man. Whereupon followeth, that man hath not right l of himſelfe, but it proceedeth frō the ſame good pleaſure, wher-we are elect before the creatiō of the world. There is alſo an other ſon not vnlike vnto that. For whereas the beginning of willing and ing well is of faith, it is to be ſeene whenſe faith it ſelfe cōmeth. For much as the whole Scripture crieth out that it is a free gift of God, followeth, ỹ it is of the mere grace of God, wherē we, which are with our minde naturally bent to euill, begin to will that which is good.

Therfore the lord, whē he nameth these two things in the conuersiō of his people, to take away from them a stony heart, and to giue them a heart of flesh, plainly testifieth that that which is of our selues must be done away, that we may be conuerted to righteousnesse: and that whatsoeuer commeth in place therof, is from himselfe. And he vrgeth not this in one place only. For he sayth in Ieremy: I wil giue them
Eze. 11. 19. departe not from me. Againe in Ezechiel: I will giue them one heart, and I will giue a new spirite in their bowels. I will take away the stony heart out of their flesh, and I will giue them a heart of flesh. He could not more euidently claime to himselfe, & take from vs whatsoeuer is good and right in our will, than when he declareth that our conuersion is a creation of a new spirite, and of a new heart. For it followeth alway, that both out of our will proceedeth no goodnesse till we be reformed: and that after reformation, so much as it is good, is of God and not of vs.

1. Reg. 8. 58. as, The Lord encline our heart to him (sayth Salomon) that we may kepe his commaundementes. He sheweth the frowardnesse of our heart which naturally reioyseth to rebell agaynst the lawe of God, if it be not bowed. And the same thinge is in the Psalme: Lord incline Ps. 119. my heart to thy testimonies. For the comparison of contrariety is alway to be noted, which is betwene the peruerse motion of the heart whereby it is caried to obstinacy, and this correction whereby it is led Psa. 51. 12. to obedience. When Dauid feeling himselfe for a time without the directing grace, prayeth God to create a new heart within him, to renue a right spirite within his bowelles: doth he not acknowledge that all the partes of his heart are full of vnclennesse, and his spirite wrythen with crooked peruersenesse? and in calling the cleannesse which he prayeth for, the creature of God, doth he not attribute it wholly to God? But if any manne take exception and say, that the very prayer is a token of a godly and holy affection: our aunswere is ready, that though Dauid were by that time somewhat come to amendment, yet doth he still compare his first state with that sorowful fall that he had felt. Therefore taking vpon him the person of a man estraunged from God, he for good cause prayeth to haue giuen him all these thinges that God giueth to his elect in regeneration. And so beinge like a deade man, he wisheth himselfe to be created of new, that of the bondslaue of Satan, he may be made the instrument of the holy Ghost. mine owne will, why ſwelleſt thou? wilt thou heare that this alſo uen thee? Heare euen him that calleth: No man commeth to me eſſe my Father draw him. And it is without controuerſie gathered of Iohns wordes, that the heartes of the godly are ſo effectually erned by Gods working, that they follow with an vnchangeable ction. He that is begotten of God (sayth he) can not ſinne, becauſe ſeede of God abideth in him. For we ſee that the meane motion ich the Sophiſters imagine, which we at our liberty may either oor refuſe, is openly excluded, where an effectuall conſtancy to coe is affirmed.

Aug. de verbis Apoſt. ſer. 11.

Ioh. 6. 44.

1. Ioh. 3. 9.

Of continuaunce there ſhoulde no more dout haue bin made, that it ſhould haue bin taken for the free gift of God vnleſſe the l wicked errour had growen in force, that it is diſtributed accor-g to the deſert of men, as euery man hath ſhewed himſelfe not vn-kefull to the firſt grace. But forasmuch as this errour hath grovpon that point, that they thought it to be in our hand to re-or receiue the grace of God offered, that opinion being driuen y, this other doth alſo fall of it ſelfe. Albeit herein they erre two ner of wayes. For beſide this that they teach that our thankefull-e toward the firſt grace and our lawfull vſe thereof, are rewarded the later giftes: they adde alſo, that nowe grace alone doth not ke in vs, but that it is onely a worker together with vs. Of the this we ought to beleue, that the Lord while he dayly enricheth heapeth his ſeruauntes with newe giftes of his grace, becauſe he th and fauoureth the worke which he hath begonne in them, fin-in them ſomewhat whereupon to beſtowe greater graces. And here to ſerue thoſe ſayinges: To him that hath, ſhalbe giuen. Again Mat. 25. 21. Luc. 19. 17. Oh, good ſeruaunt, becauſe thou haſt bin faithfull in few things, I will ſet thee ouer many. But here two things are to be taken heede of, that neither the lawefull vſe of the firſt grace be ſayd to be rewarded with the later graces, nor it be ſo compted a rewarding, that it ceaſe to be reckened the free grace of God. I graunt therefore, that this bleſſing of God is to be looked for of the faithfull, that howe much the better they haue vſed the firſt graces, they ſhalbe encreaſed with ſo much the greater. But I ſay, that this vſe alſo is of the Lord, and that this rewarding is of his free good will. And they vſe no leſſe wrongfully than vnhappily that olde deſtruction of workinge and together working grace. Auguſtine vſed the ſame in deede, but delaying it with a fit definition, ỹ God in together working with vs doth ende, that in working he beginneth, and that it is ſtill the ſame grace but changeth name, according to the diuerſe manner of effect. Whereupon followeth, that he doth not parte it betwene God and vs, as if there were a mutuall meeting together by ỹ motiõ of both, but only noteth the multiplicatiõ of grace. To which purpoſe belõgeth that which in another place he teacheth, that many giftes of God do go before the good will of man, among the which the ſelfe ſame is one. Whereon followeth, that he leaueth nothing that it may claime to it ſelf. What Phi. 2. 13. thing Paul alſo hath namely expreſſed: For when he had ſayd that it is God, which worketh in vs both to will and to perfome, he by and addeth, that he doth them both of his good will declaringe by the word, that it is his free goodneſſe. Whereas they are wont to ſay, that after we haue once giuẽ place to the firſt grace, our owne endeauour do now worke together with the grace that followeth. To this I anſwere: If they meane that we, after we haue bin once by the power of the Lorde broken to the obedience of righteouſneſſe, do of our owne accorde go forward, and are inclined to follow the working grace, I ſpeake nothinge againſt it. For it is moſt certayne, that there is ſuch a readines of obeying, where the grace of God reigneth. But whenſe commeth that, but from this, that the ſpirite of God by his way agreeinge with it ſelfe, doth cheriſhe and confirme to ſtedfaſtneſſe of continuing, the ſame affection of obeying, which it ſelfe hath gendred at the beginning. But if they meane that man taketh of himſelfe ſomwhat wherby to labour with the grace of God, they are moſt peſtilently deceiued.

12 And to this purpoſe is that ſayinge of the Apoſtle wrongfully 1. Cor. 15. 10. wraſted by ignoraunce: I haue laboured more than they all: not I, but the grace of God with me. For they take it ſo: that becauſe it may ieme somwhat arrogantly spoken that he preferred himselfe before hem all; therfore he corrected it with referring the praise to the grace f God; but yet so, that he calleth himselfe a worker together with race. It is marueil that so many which otherwise were not euill men, oue stombled at this straw. For the Apostle doth not wryte that the race of the Lord laboured with him, to the intent to make himselfe artener of the labour, but rather by this correction he giueth away l ỹ praise of the labour to grace only. It is not I (sayth he) that haue boured, but the grace of God that was with me. But the doutfulnes f the speach deceiued them: but specially the ill translation wherein he force of the Greke article was left out. For if it be translated word r word, he doth not say, that grace was a worker together with him; ut that the grace that was with him was the worker of all. And the me thing doth Augustine teach, not darkely, though shortly, where e thus saith: The good will of man goeth before many gifts of God, Psa. 59. t not before all. But of them which it goeth before, it selfe is one, 11. hen followeth his reason: because it is wrytten: His mercy hath pre- Psa. 23. ted me: And his mercy shall follow me. It preuenteth man not wil- 6. ge, to make him will: & it followeth him willinge, that he wil not in ne. With whom Bernard agreeth bringing in the church speaking Ser. 2 in us: Drawe me in a maner vnwillinge, that thou maist make me wil- Cant.

g: draw me lying slouthfull, that thou maist make me runne.

13 Now let vs heare Augustine speaking in his owne wordes, leaste e Pelagians of our age, that is to say, the Sophisters of Sorbone, oulde as they are wont, lay to our charge that all antiquitie is a-inst vs, wherein they followe their father Pelagius, by whom long go Augustine was drawen foorth into the same contention. In his ooke of Correption and Grace wrytten to Valentine he entreateth rgely that which I will rehearse shortely, but yet do it in his owne ordes: that to Adam was giuen the grace of continuinge in good if Capi. 11 e would: and to vs is giuen to will, and by will to ouercome con-piscence: that he therefore had to be able if he would, but not to ill that he might be able: to vs is giuen both to will and to be able.
hat the first liberty was to be able not to sinne, ours is much grea-
, not to be able to sinne. And leaste he shoulde be thought to speake f the perfection to come after immortality (as Lombard wrongful-draweth it to that meaning) within a litle after he plucketh out this ut. For (sayth he) the will of holy men is so much kindeled by e holy Ghost, that they therfore are able, because they so wil: they erefore will, because God worketh ỹ they so will. For if in so great 2. Cor. eakenesse, in which yet behoueth the power to be made perfect, 12. 9.

for repelling of pride, their owne will were left vnto thē, that by the help of God they may if they will, and God doth not worke in them to will: then amonge so many temptations will shoulde needes fall downe for weakenesse, and therefore could not continue. Therefore succour giuen to the weakenesse of mans will, that it should be moued without swaruing or seuering by the grace of God, and therfore shoulde not faint how weake so euer it be. Then he entreateth more Cap.14. largely howe our heartes do of necessity follow the mouing of God that worketh affectiō in them. And he sayth, that the Lord doth draw men in deede with their owne wills, but with such as he himselfe hath wrought. Nowe haue we that thinge testified by Augustines mouth which we principally desire to obtaine, that grace is not only offered by God to be receiued or refused at euery mans Free election, but also that grace is the same, that formeth the election and will in the heart: so that euery good werke that followeth after, is the frute and effect thereof, and that it haue no other will obeying it, but the same which it hath made. For these are also his wordes out of an other place, that nothing but grace maketh euery good worke in vs.

14 But whereas he sayth in an other place, that will is not taken Epi.100 5. away by grace, but from an euill will turned into a good, and holpen when it is good: he meaneth onely that man is not so drawen, but without any motion of heart he is caried as by an outwarde impulsion, but that he is inwardly so affected, that from his very heart he obeyeth. That grace is specially and freely giuen to the elect, he wri-Epi.100 6. teth thus vnto Boniface: We know that grace is not giuen to all men, and to them to whom it is giuen, it is not giuen according to the merites of workes, nor according to the merites of will, but of free fauour: and to them to whom it is not giuen, we know that it is by the iust iudgement of God that it is not giuen. And in the same Epistle he strongly fighteth against that opinion, that the grace following is giuen to the deseruinges of men, because in not refusinge the first grace, they shewed themselues worthy. For he will haue Pelagius graunt, that grace is necessary to vs for euery of our doinges, and is not giuen in recompense to workes, that it may be grace in deede. But the matter can not be comprehended in a shorter summe, than out of the eight chapter of his booke to Valentine of Correption and Grace, where first he teacheth that mans will obtayneth not grace by liberty, but liberty by grace: and that by the same grace, by affection of delite printed in him, it is framed to continuance, that it is strengthened with inuincible force: that while grace gouerneth, it neuer fa-

by

y the free mercy of God it both is conuerted to good, and beinge onuerted abideth in it, that the direction of mans will to good, and dilligneſſe after direction, hangeth vpon the onely will of God, and ot vpon any merite of his owne. And ſo to man is left ſuch a free ill, if we liſt ſo to call it, as he wryteth of in an other place, that can either be turned to God, nor abide in God but by grace, & by grace able all that it is able.

The iiij. Chapter.

How God worketh in the hearts of men.

IT is ſufficiently proued, as I thinke, that man is ſo holden captiue with the yoke of Sinne, that of his owne nature he can neither aſpire by deſire, nor trauaile by endeuour to good-neſſe, beſide that, we haue rehearſed a diſtinction betwene ompulſion & neceſſity, whereby it might appeare, that when he neth of neceſſity, yet neuertheleſſe he ſinneth willingly. But for-much as while he is ſubiect in bondage to the Deuill, he ſeemeth ther to be ledde by the deuils will than his owne, it reſteth nowe be declared of what ſorte are both kindes of workinge. And en is this queſtion to be aſſoiled, whether in euill workes there any thinge to be atributed to God: in which the Scripture ſheeth that there is vſed ſome working of his. In one place Auguſtine mpareth mans will to a horſe, which is ready to be ruled by the ill of his rider: and God and the Deuill he compareth to riders. If od (ſayth he) ſit vpon it, he like a ſober and cunning rider, gouereth it temperatly, ſpurreth it forward if it be to ſlow, plucketh it cke if it be to quicke, reſtrayneth the wantonneſſe and wildneſſe f it, tameth the ſtubbornneſſe of it, and guydeth it into the right y. But if the Deuill haue poſſeſſed it, he like a fooliſh and wanton der, violendy carieth it through places where no way is, driueth it to ditches, rolleth it downe ſteepe places, ſpurreth it forward to ubbornneſſe & fearceneſſe: which ſimilitude we will for this time e cõtented with, ſith there commeth not a better in place. Where it ſayd that the will of a naturall man is ſubiect to the rule of the De-ill, to be ſtirred by him, it is not ment therby that man as it were ſtri-ng againſt it, & reſiſting is compelled to obey, as we compell bondnes againſt their wil, by reaſon of being their lordes, to do our cõaundementes: but that beinge bewitched with the deceites of San, it of neceſſity yeldeth it ſelfe obedient to euery leading of him. or whom the Lord vouchſafeth not to rule with his ſpirite, them by iuſt iudgement he ſendeth away to be moued of Satan. Where-

Eph. 2. 2. ſee the light of the Goſpell. And in an other place: That he worketh in the diſobedient children. The blindinge of the wicked, and all the wicked deedes that follow therupon, are called the workes of Sathan, of which yet the cauſe is not to be ſought elſewhere, than in the will of man, out of which ariſeth the roote of euell, wherin reſteth the fun-dation of the kingdome of Sathan, which is Sinne.

2 But farre other is the order of Gods doing in ſuch thinges. And that the ſame may appeare more certainly vnto vs: let the hurt done to Iob. 1. the holy man Iob by the Chaldees, be an example. The Chaldees haled his herdmen, and like enemies in warre, droue away his cattell for booties. Now is their wicked deede plainely ſeene, and in that worke Sathan is not idle, from whome the Hiſtory ſayeth, that all this did proceede. But Iob himſelfe did acknowledge the worke of the Lord in it, whom he ſayth to haue taken away from him thoſe thinges, that were taken away by the Chaldees. How can we referre the ſelfe ſame worke to God, as author, to Sathan as author, and to manas author of it, but that we muſt either excuſe Sathan by the company of God, or report God to be the author of euill? Very eaſily: if firſt we looke vpon the ende, why it was done, and then the manner how. The purpoſe of the Lord is by calamity to exerciſe the patience of his ſeruaunt: The deuil goeth about to driue him to deſpeir. The Chaldees againſt right and law, ſeeke gayne of that which is an other mans. Such diuerſi-ty in purpoſes, maketh great difference in the worke. And in the manner of doing there is no leſſe diuerſity. The Lord leaueth his ſer-uaunt to Sathan to be afflicted: and the Chaldees, whom he did chuſe for miniſters to execute it, he did leaue & deliuer to him to be driuen to it. Sathan with his venemous ſtings, pricked forward the mindes of the Chaldees which otherwiſe were peruerſe of thēſelues to do the miſchiefe: they furiouſly runne to do wrong, and do binde and doe al their members with wicked doing. Therfore it is properly ſaid, that Sathan doth worke in the reprobate, in whom he exerciſeth his kingdome: that is to ſay, the kingdome of wickedneſſe. It is alſo ſayd that God worketh in them after his maner, becauſe Sathan himſelfe, ſo much as he is the inſtrument of his wrath, according to his bidding & commaundement, turneth himſelfe hither & thither to execute his iuſt iudgements. I ſpeake not here of Gods vniuerſall mouing, whereby as all creatures are ſuſteined, ſo from thence they take their ef-ficuall power of doing any thing. I ſpeake only of that ſpeciall doing,

hich appeareth in euery speciall act. We see therfore that it is no abrdity, that one selfe act be ascribed to God, to Sathan, and to man: e the diuersity in the end and maner of doing, causeth that therein peareth the iustice of God to be without fault, and also the wicked-s of Sathan and man, bewrayeth it selfe to their reproch.

The old wryters in this point also, are somtime precisely afraid, mply to confesse the trueth, because they feare least they should so pen a windowe to wickednes, to speke irreuerently of the workes of od. Which sobriety as I embrace, so I thinke it nothing daũgerous, we simply holde what the Scripture teacheth. Augustine himselfe mtime was not free frõ ỹ superstition, as where he sayth, that hard-nge and blindinge, pertaine not to the worke of God, but to his reknowledge. But the phrases of Scripture allow not these surtelties, Lib. de ich phrases do plainly shewe that there is therin somewhat else of praod, besides his foreknowledge. And Augustine himselfe in his fift deſt. & oke against Iulianus, goeth earnestly about with a long processe, to grat. one that sinnes are not only of the permission or sufferance of God, e also of his power, that so former sinnes might be punished. Like-se, that which they bring foorth, concerning permission, is to weake stande. It is oftentimes sayd, that God blindeth and hardeneth the probate, that he turneth, boweth, & moueth their hearts as I haue e where taught more at large. But of what manner that is, it is ner expressed, if we flee to free foreknowledge or sufferance. Therfore answere that it is done after two manners, For first, where as when s light is taken away, there remayneth nothing but darkenesse and ndnes: wheras when his spirite is take away, our heartes waxe hard become stones: where as when his direction cesseth, they are wra-d into crookednes, it is wel sayd that he doth blinde, harden & bow em frõ whom he taketh away the power to see, obey & do rightly. he second maner, which cõmeth nere to the property of the words, that for the executing of his iudgementes by Sathan the minister of s wrath, he both appointeth their purposes to what end it pleaseth m, and stirreth vp their willes, & strengtheneth their endeuours. So en Moises rehearseth that king Sehon did not giue passage to the Deu. 2. ople, because God had hardned his spirit, & made his hart obstinate, 30. e by and by adioyneth the end of his purpose: that he might (sayth ) giue him into our handes. Therfore because it was Gods will to ue him destroied, the making of his heart obstinate, was Gods pre-ration to his destruction.

After the first manner this seemeth to be spoken. He taketh a- Iob. 12.

the Elders. He taketh the heart away from them that are set ouer the Esay. 63. 17. people, he maketh them to wander where no way is. Again, Lord why hast thou made vs mad, and hardened our heart, that we should not feare thee? Because they iudge rather of what sorte God maketh men by forsakinge them, than how he performeth his worke in them. But there are other testimonies that go further: as are these of the hardninge of Pharao. I will harden the heart of Pharao, that he shall not
Exo. 4. 21. & 7. 3. & 10. 1. heare you, & let the people go. Afterward he saith, that he hath made heauy and hardened his heart. Did he harden it, in not susteininge? That is true in deede: but he did somewhat more, that he consented his heart to Sathan, to be confirmed with obstinacy. Wherevpon he
Exo. 3. 19. Deut. 2 30. had before sayd: I will hold his heart. The people went out of Egypt, the inhabitantes of that countrey came forth and met them like enemies. By whom were they stirred vp? Truely Moses affirmeth to the Psa. 105 25. people, that it was the Lord that had hardened their heartes. And the Prophet reciting the same history, saith, that he turned their heart, that they should hate his people. Now can you not say, that they disobeied being left without the counsell of God. For if they be hardened and turned, then they are of purpose bowed to that selfe thing. Moreouer so oft as it pleased him to punish the transgressours of the people, how did he performe his worke in the reprobate? so as a man may see, that the effectuallnes of working was in him, & they only did seruice as ministers. Wherfore somtime he threatened that he would Specially he then declared how he is not idle in them, when he called Sennacherib an Axe, which was both directed and driuen by his hand to cut. Augustine in one place doth not amisse, appointe it after this sorte: that inasmuch as they sinne, it is their owne: inasmuch as in sinninge they do this or that, it is of the power of God, that diuideth his darkenesse as pleaseth him.

De præ dest. sanct.

5 Now that the ministery of Sathan is vsed to pricke forward the reprobate, so oft as the Lord by his prouidence appointeth them to this or to that, may sufficiently be proued, though it were but by one
1. Sa. 16. and 18. 10. & 29 place only. For it is oftentimes sayd in Samuell, that the euill spirit of the Lord, and an euill spirite from the Lord, did either violently cary or leaue Saul. To say that this spirit was the holy Ghost, is blasphemous. Therfore the vncleane spirit is called the spirit of God, because it answereth at his cōmaundement and power, being rather his instrumēt in doing, than an author of it selfe. This is also to be added with
2. Thes. 2. all, which Paul teacheth, that the efficacy of errour and deceiuinge is sent at by God, that they which haue not obeyed the trueth, may beleue es. But there is alway great difference in one selfe same worke, be-wene that which the Lorde doeth, and that which Sathan and the icked go about. He maketh the euill instrumentes that he hath vn-r his hand, and may turne whether he list, to serue his iustice. They, as much as they are euill, do bring fourth in effect the wickednesse at they haue conceiued by corruptnesse of nature. The reste, of such inges as serue for to deliuer the maiestie of God from slaunder, and cur of all shifting from the wicked, are already set fourth in the apter concerning Prouidence. For in this place my purpose was ely to shewe how Sathan reigneth in the reprobate man, and how od worketh in them both.

6 Although we haue before touched, yet it is not plainely decla-d what libertie man hath in those doinges, which are neither iust r faulty of them selues, and belong rather to the bodely than the rituall life. Some in such thinges haue graunted him free election, ther, as I thinke, because they woulde not striue about a matter of great importance, than that they minded certainely to proue the e thing that they graunt. As for me, although I confesse that they ich do holde that they haue no power to righteousnesse, do holde thing that is principally necessarie to saluation: yet I do thinke at this point also is not to be neglected, that we may know that it of the speciall grace of the Lorde, so oft as it cometh in our minde chose that which is for our profit, so oft as our will encline th ther-to: againe so oft as our wit and minde eschueth that whiche els ulde haue hurte vs. And the force of Gods prouidence extendeth s farre, not only to make the successes of thinges to come to passe, he shal forsee to be expedient, but also to make the willes of men to de therunto. Truely if we consider in our wit the administration of warde thinges, we shall thinke that they are so farre vnder the will man: but if we shall geue credit to so many testimonies, which crie t that the Lord doth in these thinges also rule the hearres of men, y shall compelle vs to yelde our will subiect to the speciall mouing God. Who did procure the good willes of the Egyptians to the Islites, to lende them all their most precious iewels? They woulde er haue founde in their hearres to haue so done of their owne ac-de. Therfore their hearres were more subiect to the Lord, than ruby them selues. And truely if Iacob had not bene persuaded that d put into men diuerse affections as pleaseth him, he woulde not e said of his sonne Ioseph, whom he thought to be some Heathē yptian: God graunt you to finde mercie before this man. As also

Exo. 11. 3.

Pſa 106 46. the whole Church confeſſeth in the Pſalme, that whē it pleaſed God to haue mercie vpon it, he meekened the heartes of the cruell nations. Againe, when Saul ſo waxed on fire with anger, that he prepared him to warre, the cauſe is expreſſed, for that the ſpirite of God did enforce him. Who turned away Abſolons minde from embracing the 1. Sam. 11. 6. counſell of Achitophel, which was wont to be holden as an oracle? 2 Sam. 17. 10. Who inclined Rehabeam to be perſuaded with the yong mens aduiſe? Who made the nations that before were great, to be afraide at Iſ. 2. 9. the cōmyng of Iſraell? Truely the harlot Rahab confeſſed, that it was Leui. 26 36. done by God. Againe, who threw downe the hartes of Iſraell with Deu. 28 63. dread and fearfulneſſe, but he that in the lawe threatened that he woulde geue them a fearefull hearte?

7 Some man will take exception and ſay, that theſe are ſingular examples, to the rule wherof all thinges vniuerſally ought not to be reduced. But I ſay, that by theſe is ſufficiently proued that which I affirme, that God ſo oft as he meaneth to prepare the way for his prouidence, euen in outwarde thinges doth bow and tourne the willes of men, and that their choiſe is not ſo free, but that Gods will beareth rule ouer the freedome therof. That thy minde hangeth rather vpon the mouing of God, than vpon the freedome of thine owne choiſe, this dayly experience ſhall compell thee to thinke whether thou wilt or no: that is, for that in thinges of no perplexitie thy iudgement and wit oft faileth thee, in thinges not heard to be done thy courage fainteth: againe in thinges moſt obſcure, byandby preſent aduiſe offred thee: in thinges great & perillous, thou haſt a courage ouercōming all difficultie. And ſo do I expounde that which Salomon ſaith, Prou. 20 12. That the eare may heare, that the eye may ſee, the Lord wrought both. Prou. 21 1. For I take it that he ſpeaketh not of the creation, but of the ſpeciall grace of vſing them. And when he writeth that the Lord holdeth in his hande and boweth whether he will the hearte of the king as the ſtreames of waters: truely vnder the example of one ſpeciall ſorte, he comprehendeth the whole generaltie. For if the will of no man be free from ſubiection, that preeminence principally belongeth to the will of a King, which vſeth as it were a kingdome vpon the willes of other: but if the will of the King be ruled with the hande of God, no more ſhall our will be exempted from the ſame eſtate. Vpon this point there is a notable ſaying of Auguſtine. The Scripture (ſaith he) be diligently looked vpon doth ſhew, that not onely the good will of men which he of euill maketh good, and ſo beyng made by him ſelfe doth direct to good doinges and to eternall life, but alſo thoſe willes that preſerue the creature of the worlde, are ſo in the power of God. Lib de gratia & libero arb ad Valent. ca. 20.

od, that he maketh them to be inclined whether he will and when will, either to do benefites, or to execute punishemētes, by a iudge-ent most secret in deede, but the same most righteous.

8 Here let the Readers remember, that the power of mans will is t to be weyed by the succesſe of thinges, which some vnskilful men e vnorderly wont to do. For they seme to them selues to proue inly and wittely that mans will is in bondage, because euen the eſt Monarches haue not all thinges flowyng after their owne de-e. But this power wherof we speake, is to be considered within man d not be measured by outwarde succesſe. For in the disputacion of ewil, this is not to the questiō, whether man may for outwarde im-dimentes, perfourme and put in execution all those thinges that he th purposed in minde: but whether he haue in euery thing both a e election of iudgement, and a free affection of will, which both if n haue, then Attilius Regulus, encloſed in the narroweneſſe of a ne, set full of sharp prickes, shal no leſſe haue free will than Augu-s Cesar, gouerning a great part of the worlde with the becke of his untenaunce.

A confutacion of the obiections that are vsued to be brought for defence of Free will.

T might seme that we haue saide enough already, concerning the bondage of mans will, if they that with false opinion of libertie, labour to throw it downe hedlong, did not on the contrary part pretende certaine reasons to assaile our meaning. First they heape together diuerse absurdities, whereby they may bring it in hatred a thing abhorring from common reason: afterwarde they set vpon with testimonies of Scripture. Both these engines we shall beate cke in order. If (say they) Sinne be of neceſſitie, then ceſſeth it to ſinne: if it be voluntarie, then may it be auoyded. These were also e weapons of Pelagius to assaile Auguſtine, with whose name we ll not yet haue them oppreſſed, till we haue satisfied them, concer-ng the matter it selfe. I deny therfore that sinne ought the leſſe to be puted, because it is neceſſarie. I denie againe that this doth follow ich they conclude, that it may be auoyded, because it is voluntarie. e if any man will dispute with God, and seeke to escape from his dgement by this pretenſe, because he coulde none otherwiſe do: od hath that answere ready which we in an other place haue spoken , that it is not of creation, but of the corruption of nature that men ng made bondslaues to sinne, can will nothing but euil. For whēce cometh this want of power which the wicked would gladly pretend, but vpon this, that Adam of his owne accorde made him selfe subiect to the tyrannie of the Deuill? Hereupon therefore grewe the corruption, with the bondes wherof we are holden fast tyed, for that the first man fell from his creator. If all men be iustly holde guilty of his falling away, let them not thinke them selues excused by necessitie, in which it selfe they haue a most euident cause of their damnation. And this I haue aboue plainely set fourth, and I haue geuen an example in the Deuill him selfe, wherby it might appeare, that he which necessarily sinneth, doth neuertheless willingly sinne: as againe in the elect Angels, where as their will can not decline from good, yet it ceaseth not to be a will. Which same thing Bernard also aptly teacheth: that we are therefore the more miserable, because our necessitie is voluntarie: which yet holdeth vs so subiect vnto it, that we be the bonde slaues of sinne, as we haue before rehearsed. The second parte of this argument is faulty, because from voluntarie it streightway leapeth to free: but we haue before proued, that it is voluntarely done which is not subiect to free election.

Ser. 81. in Can.

2 They further say: that if both vertues and vices procede not of free choise of will, it is not reasonable that either punishment should be laide vpon man or rewarde geuen to him. This argument, although it be Aristotles, yet I graunt is in some places vsed by Chrysostome and Hierome. But that it was a common argument with the Pelagians, Hierome him selfe hideth not, & also rehearseth it in their owne wordes. If the grace of God worke in vs: then it, not we that labour, shalbe crowned. Of punishmentes I aunswere, that they are iustly laide vpon vs from whom the filthinesse of sinne procedeth. For what matter maketh it, whether sinne be done by free or bonde iudgement, so it be done by voluntarie lust: specially sith man is hereby prouoked sinner, for that he is vnder the bondage of sinne? As to the rewardes of righteousnesse: a great absurditie forsoth it is, if we confesse that they hang rather vpon Gods bountifullnesse, than vpon our owne deseruinges. How oft finde we this thing repeted in Augustine: that God crowneth not our deseruinges, but his owne giftes: and that they are called rewardes, not as due to our deseruinges, but such as are rendred to the graces already bestowed vpō vs? Wisely in deede they note this, that now there remaineth no place for deseruinges, if they come not out of the fountaine of free will: but where they reckon that which we say so farre differing from trueth they are much deceiued. For Augustine doubteth not, commonly to teach for necessarie that which they thinke so vnlawefull to confesse, as where he saith: Wil-

In Epistol. ad Ctesiphon. & diacon. 1.

the merites of any men what ſoeuer they be? when he commeth, with due rewarde, but with free grace, then he alone being free, that maketh free from ſinne? He findeth all men ſinners. Againe, In Pſal. 70. that ſhall be rendred to thee that is due to thee, thou arte to be puniſhed: what is done then? God hath not geuen thee punyſhement which is due, but geueth thee grace which is not due. If thou wilt be reuenged from grace, boaſte of thy deſeruinges. Againe: Thou art nothing by thy ſelfe. Sinnes are thine, but deſeruinges are Gods, punyſhment is due to thee: and when rewarde commeth, he ſhall crowne his owne giftes, and not thy deſeruinges. And in the ſame meaning in another place, he teacheth that grace is not of deſeruing, but deſerueth of grace. And a little after he concludeth, that God with his mercy goeth before all deſeruinges, that out of the ſame he may gather his owne deſeruinges, and doth geue altogether freely, bycauſe he findeth nothing wherevpon to ſaue. But what neede is it to make a longer regiſter, when ſuch ſentences are often founde in his writinges? Epiſtol. 52. De verbis Apoſto. Sermo. 47.

But the Apoſtle ſhall yet better deliuer them from this error, if they 1. Cor. 4 7. marke from what beginning he conueyeth the glorie of the Saintes: whome he hath choſen, them he hath called: whome he hath called, them he hath iuſtified: whome he hath iuſtified, them he hath glorified. Why then, as witneſſeth the Apoſtle, are the faithfull crowned? bycauſe by the Lordes mercy and not by their owne endeuour they are both choſen and called and iuſtified. Away therefore with this vaine feare, that there ſhall no more be any deſeruinges, if free grace ſhall not ſtande. For it is moſt fooliſh to be frayed away and to flie from that to which the Scripture calleth vs. If (ſaith he) thou haſt 1. Cor. 4 7. receyued all thinges, why gloryeſt thou, as if thou haddeſt not receyued them? Thou ſeeſt that for the ſame cauſe he taketh all thinges from free will, to leaue no place for deſeruinges: but as the bountifulneſſe and liberalitie of God is manyfolde, and impoſſible to be numbred our, thoſe graces which he beſtoweth on vs, bycauſe he maketh them ours, he rewardeth as if they were our owne vertues.

3 Moreouer they bring fourth that which may ſeeme to be taken out of Chryſoſtome: If this be not the power of our will, to chooſe good or euil, then they that are partakers of the ſame nature, Hom. 22. in Gen. muſt either all be euill or all be good. And not farre from that is he, whatſoeuer he was, that wrote the booke Of the calling of the Gentiles, which is carried about vnder the name of Ambroſe, when he Lib. 2. cap. 4. diſputeth this argument, that no man ſhoulde euer departe from the truth, vnleſſe the grace of God did leaue vnto vs the ſtate of mutabilitie wherin it is marueile, that ſo excellēt men fell beſide them ſelues.

For how chaúceth it came not in Chryſoſtomes minde, that it is God election that ſo maketh difference betwene men? As for vs, we ſeing Rom. 3. 10. not to graunt that which Paule with great earneſtneſſe affirmeth, that all together are peruerſe and geuen to wickedneſſe: but with him we adioyne this that by Gods mercy it commeth to paſſe that all men not in peruerſeneſſe. Therefore wheras naturally we are all ſicke of one diſeaſe, they onely recouer health vpon whome it hath pleaſed God to lay his healing hande. The reſt whome by iuſt iudgement he paſſeth ouer, pine away in their own rottenneſſe till they be conſumed. Neither is it of any other cauſe, that ſome contynew to the ende, and ſome fall in their courſe begon. For continuaunce it ſelfe is the gift of God, which he geueth not to all indifferently, but dealeth it to whom it pleaſeth him ſelfe. If a man aske for a cauſe of the difference, why ſome continew conſtantly, and ſome faile by vnſtedfaſtneſſe, we finde none other cauſe but that God ſuſteyneth the one ſorte ſtrengthened with his power that they periſh not, and doth not geue the ſame ſtrengthe to the other ſorte, that they maie be examples of inconſtancie.

4 Further they preſſe vs, ſaying, that exhortations are vainely taken in hande, that the vſe of admonitions is ſuperfluous, that it is a fonde thing to rebuke, if it be not in the power of the ſinner to amend. When the like thinges in time paſt were obiected againſt Auguſtine, he was compelled to write the booke of Correption and grace. Where although he largely wipe them away, yet he bringeth his aduerſaries to this ſumme: O man, in the commaundement learne what thou oughteſt to do: in correction learne that by thine owne faulte that haſt it not: in prayer learne whenſe thou maieſt receiue that which thou wouldeſt haue. Of the ſame argument in a maner is the booke of the Spirite and Letter, where he teacheth that God meaſureth not the commaundementes of his lawe by the ſtrength of man, but when he hath commaunded that which is right, he freely geueth his elect power to fullfill it. And this is no matter of long diſputation. Firſt we are not onely in this cauſe, but alſo Chriſt and all the Apoſtles. Now let the other looke how they will get the maſterie in the
Ioh. 15. 5. uing, that matche them ſelues with ſuch aduerſaries. Doth Chriſt which teſtyfieth that we can do nothing without him, any thing? Doth he leſſe rebuke and chaſtice them, that without him did euill? Doth he leſſe exhorte euery man to applie him ſelfe to good workes? How
1. Cor. 3. 3. Rom. 9. 16. uerely doth Paule inuey againſt the Corinthians for neglecting charitie? and yet he prayeth for charitie to be geuen to the ſame men from God. He teſtifieth in the Epiſtle to the Romaines, that it is not er of him that willeth, nor of him that runneth, but of God that th mercy, and yet he ceſſeth not afterwarde to admoniſh, to exrte and to rebuke. Why do they not therefore ſpeake to the Lorde, at he do not ſo loſe his labour in requiring of menne thoſe thinges hich he him ſelfe alone can geue, and in puniſhing thoſe thinges hich are done for wante of his grace? Why do they not admoniſh ule to ſpare them, in whoſe power it is not to will or to runne, 1. Cor.

en them? As if the Lorde had not a very good reaſon of his doc-ne, which offreth it ſelfe redily to be founde of them that reuerentſeeke it, but howe much doctrine, exhortation and rebuking do rke of themſelues, to the chaunging of the minde, Paule declareth, en he writeth, that neither he that planteth is any thing, nor he at watereth, but the Lord that geueth the encreaſe onely effectually rketh. So we ſee that Moſes ſeuerally ſtabliſheth the commaundentes of the lawe, and the Prophetes do ſharpely call vpon them, d threaten the tranſgreſſors, whereas they yet confeſſe, that men do n onely waxe wiſe, when a hearte is giuen them to vnderſtand, that s the propre worke of God to circumciſe the heartes, and in ſteede ſtony heartes to geue hearts of fleſh, to write his law in the bowells menne: finally in renewyng of ſoules to make that his doctrine y be effectuall.

Wherfore then ſerue exhortations? For this purpoſe: if they be ſpiſed of the wicked with an obſtinate heart, they ſhal be for a wit-ſe vnto them when they ſhall come to the iudgement ſeate of the rde, yea and euen nowe alreadie they beate and ſtrike their con-ence: for howeſoeuer the moſt frowarde man laugheth them to rne, yet can he not diſproue them: but thou wilt ſay, what may y miſerable man do, if the ſofteneſſe of hearte, which was neceſily required to obedience, be denied him? Nay rather, why doth he cuſe him ſelfe, when he can impute the hardeneſſe of heart to none t to him ſelfe? Therefore the wicked that are willingely ready to ocke them out if they might, are throwen downe with the force of m whether they wil or no. But the chiefe profite towarde the faith-l is to be conſidered: in whome as the Lord worketh all thinges by ſpirite, ſo he leaueth not the inſtrumentes of his worde, and vſeth e ſame not without effect. Let this therfore ſtande which is true, t all the ſtrēgth of the godly reſteth in the grace of God, according that ſaying of the Prophet: I will geue them a newe hearte that Ezec.11 y may walke in them. But thou wilt ſaie: Why are they nowe 19. monished of their duetie, and not rather left to the direction of the holy Ghoſt? why are they moued with exhortation, ſith they make no more haſt than the ſtirring forwarde of the holy Ghoſt keth? why are they chaſtiſed if at any time they be gone out of way, ſith they fell by the neceſſary weakeneſſe of the fleſh? O what art thou to appoint a law for God? If it be his pleaſure, that be prepared by exhortation to receiue the ſelfe ſame grace, whe wrought that the exhortation is obeied, what haſt thou in this to bite or carpe at? If exhortations and rebukinges did nothing profit with the godly, but to reproue them of ſinne, they were for that thing only to be compted not altogether vnprofitable. Now for aſmuch as by the holy Ghoſt working inwardly, they much to enflame the deſire of goodneſſe, to ſhake of ſluggiſhneſſe, to away the pleaſure and venimous ſweteneſſe of wickedneſſe, and the other ſide to engendre a hatred and irkeſomneſſe therof: who cauill that they are ſuperfluus? If any man require a plainer anſwe let him take this: God worketh after two ſortes in his elect, wardely by his ſpirite, outwardely by his worde: By his ſpirite, by lightning their mindes, by framing their heartes to the loue ping of iuſtice, he maketh them a newe creature: By his worde, ſtirreth them to deſire, to ſeke and atteine the ſame renuing: by both he ſheweth fourth the effectual working of his hande, accor to the proportion of his diſtribution. When he ſendeth the ſame to the reprobate, though not for their amendement, yet he make to ſerue for an other vſe: that both for the preſent time they may preſſed with witneſſe of conſcience, and may againſt the day of Iohn 6. 44. ment be made more inexcuſable. So though Chriſt pronounce no man commeth to him, but whom the Father draweth, and that elect do come when they haue hearde and learned of the father? doth not he neglect the office of a teacher, but with his voice ly calleth them, whome it neceſſarily behoueth to be inwardly 2. Cor. 2. 16. by the holy Ghoſt, that they maie any thing profite. And Paule cheth, that teaching is not in vaine with the reprobate, bycauſe them the ſauour of death to death, but a ſwete ſauour to God.

6 They be verie laborious in heaping together of teſtimonies Scripture: and that they do of purpoſe, that when they can not preſſe vs with weight, they maie yet with numbre. But as in when it commeth to hand ſtrokes, the weaker multitude how pompe and ſhew ſoeuer it hath, is with a fewe ſtripes diſcomfited put to flight: ſo ſhall it be very eaſy for vs to ouerthrowe them all their route. For, bycauſe the places that they abuſe againſt vs, they are ones diuided into their ordres, do meete vpon a fewe ures, we ſhall with one aunſwere ſatyſfie many of them: therefore all not be needefull to tarry vpon diſſoluing euery one of them icularly. Their chiefe force they ſet in the commaundementes, ich they thinke to be ſo tempered to our ſtrengthes, that what ner is proued to be required by the one, it neceſſarily foleth that it may be perfourmed by the other. And therefore they ne through euery of the commaundementes, & by them do meae the proportion of our ſtrength. For (ſay they) either God moch vs when he chargeth vs with holyneſſe, godlyneſſe, obedience, ſtitie, loue, and mekeneſſe: and when he forbiddeth vs vncleanſe, idolatrie, vnchaſtencſſe, wrath, robberie, pride, and ſuch like: or requireth onely thoſe thinges that are in our power. Nowe, we y diuide into three ſortes in manner all the commaũdementes that y heape together. Some require our firſt conuerſion to God, ſome ke ſimply of the keping of the lawe: ſome commaunde vs to nue in the grace of God that we haue receyued. Firſt let vs ſpeake hem all in generalitie, and then deſcende to the ſpeciall ſortes. To nde the power of man to the commaundementes of the law, hath cede long agoe begonne to be commune, and hath ſome ſhewe: it proceded from moſt rude ignorannce of the lawe. For they that ke it a heynous offence, if it be ſaide that the keping of the lawe poſſible, do reſt forſoth vpon this moſt ſtrong argument, that the lawe was geuen in vaine. For they ſpeake in ſuch ſorte as if e had no where ſpoken of the lawe. For, I beſeeche them, what ne theſe ſayinges, that the lawe was ſet bycauſe of tranſgreſſions: t by the lawe is the knowledge of ſinne: That the lawe maketh Gala. 3. weakeneſſe? Truely by the ſame mans definition, the ende and Rom. 7. lling of the lawe is Charitie. But when he wiſheth the mindes of 7 inſpire the whole ſumme thereof in our heartes. 1. Theſ.

3. 12.

Truely, if the Scripture did teach nothing ells, but that the law ule of life where vnto we ought to frame our endeuour, I woulde without delay agree to their opinion: but whereas it doth dili-ly and plainely declare vnto vs the manyfolde vſe of the lawe: it nenient rather to conſider by that interpretation, what the lawe do in man. For ſo much as concerneth this preſente cauſe: it eth that ſo ſone as it hath appointed what we ought to do, the power to obey commeth of the goodneſſe of God, and therefore moueth vs to prayer, whereby we may require to haue it giuen vs. If there were onely the commaundement and no promiſe, then were our ſtrength to be tried whether they were ſufficient to aunſwere the commaundement, but ſith there are promiſes ioyned withall, which crie out, that not onely our aide, but alſo all our whole power conſiſteth in the helpe of Gods grace, they do teſtifie enough and more, that we are altogether vnfitte, much more inſufficient to kepe the lawe. Wherfore let this proportion of our ſtrengthes with the commaundmentes of Gods lawe be no more enforced, as if the Lord had meaſured the rule of iuſtice, which he purpoſed to geue in his lawe, according to the rate of our weakeneſſe. Rather by his promiſes we ought to conſider, how vnready we are of our ſelues which in euery behalfe do ſo much neede his grace. But who (ſay they) ſhall be perſwaded that it is like to be true, that the Lorde appointed his lawe to ſtockes and ſtones? Neither doth any man go about to perſwade it. For the wicked are neither ſtockes nor ſtones, when being taught by the lawe that their luſtes do ſtriue againſt God, they are proued guilty by their owne witneſſe. Nor yet the godly, when being put in minde of their weakeneſſe, they flee vnto grace. For which purpoſe ſerue thoſe ſayinges of Auguſtine. The Lorde commaundeth thoſe thinges that we can not do, that we may know what we ought to aſke of him. Gen. is the profite of the commaundementes, if ſo much be geuen to the will, that the grace of God be the more honoured. Faith obtaineth that which the lawe commaundeth, yea the lawe therfore commandeth, that faith may obtaine that which was commaunded by the lawe: yea God requireth faith it ſelfe of vs, and findeth not what to require, vnleſſe he geue what to finde. Againe, Let God geue what he commaundeth, and commaunde what he will.

In Enchir. ad Lau. de grat. & lib. arb. cap. 16. Homel. 29. in Ioan. Epiſ. 24

8 That ſhall more plainely be ſeen in reherſing the three ſorts of commaundementes which we touched before. The Lorde oftentimes commaundeth both in the lawe and in the Prophetes, that we be conuerted vnto him. But on the other ſide, the Prophet anſweareth, Conuerte me, Lorde, and I ſhall be conuerted: for after that thou didſt conuerte me, I repented, &c. He commaundeth vs to circumciſe the vncircumciſed ſkinne of our hearte: and by Moſes he declareth that this circumciſion is done by his owne hande. He eche where requireth newneſſe of hearte, but in an other place he teſtifieth that it is geuen by himſelfe. That which God promiſeth (ſaith Auguſtine) we do not by free will or nature, but he himſelfe doth it by grace. And this is the ſame note that he himſelfe reherſeth in the fifth place the rules of Ticonius, that we well make difference betwene the lawe and the promises, or betwene the commaundementes and grace. Now let them go, that gather by the commaundementes whether man be able to do any thing towarde obediences in such sorte that they destroy the grace of God, by which the commaundementes them selues are fulfilled. The commaundementes of the seconde sorte are simple, by which we are bidden to honour God, to serue and cleaue vnto his will, to kepe his commaundementes, to follow his doctrine. But there are innumerable places that do testifie that it is his gifte what soeuer righteousnesse, holynesse, godlinesse or puritie may be had. Of the thirde sorte was that exhortacion of Paule and Barnabas to the faithfull, which is rehearsed by Luke, that they shoulde abide in the grace of God. But from whence that strength of constancie is to be had, the same Paule teacheth in an other place. That remaineth, saieth he, Ephe. 6. 16. brethren, be ye strong through the Lorde. In an other place he forbiddeth vs, that we do not greue the spirite of God, wherewith we are Ephe. 4. 30. sealed vp vnto the day of our redemption. But because the thing that here there requireth, coulde not be perfourmed by men, therefore he wisheth it, to the Thessalonians, from God, namely, that he woulde 1. Thes. 1. 2 reckon them worthy of his holy calling, and fulfill all the purpose of his goodnesse, and the worke of faith in them. Likewise in the seconde 2. Cor. 8. 11.

epistle to the Corinthians, entreating of almes, he oftentimes commendeth their good and godly will: yet a litle after, he thanketh God that put it in the hearte of Titus, to take vpon him to geue exhortacion. If Titus coulde not so much as vse the office of his mouth to exhorte other, but onely so farre as God did put it vnto him, how shoulde other haue bene willing to do, vnlesse God him selfe had directed their heartes?

9 The craftier sorte of them do cauill at all these testimonies: because there is no impediment, but that we may ioyne our owne strengthes, and God to helpe our weake endeuours. They bring also places out of the Prophetes, where the effect of our conuersion seemeth to be parted in halfe betwene God and vs. Tourne ye to me, Zach. 1. 3. and I will tourne to you. What maner of helpe the Lord bringeth vs, I haue aboue shewed, and it is not needefull here to repete it. This one thing I woulde haue graunted me, that it is vainely gathered that there is required in vs a power to fulfill the lawe, because God hath commaunde the obedience of it: For as much as it is euident, that for the fulfilling of all the commaundementes of God, the grace of the lawegeuer is both necessarie for vs & promised vnto vs. Therefore then it appeareth, that at least there is more required of vs than we

Ier. 13. 3. are able to paye. And that saying of Hieremie can not be wiped away with any cauillations: that the couenaunt of God made with the ancient people, was voide, because it was onely literall, and that it could no otherwise be stablished, than when the spirite cometh vnto it, which frameth the heartes to obedience. Neither doth that saying, Tourne ye to me, and I will tourne vnto you, fauour their errour. For there is meant, not that tourning of God, wherewith he renueth our heartes to repentaunce, but wherewith he by prosperitie of things doth declare him selfe fauorable and mercifull: as by aduersitie he sometime sheweth his displeasure. Where as therefore the people being vexed with many sortes of miseries and calamities, did complaine that God was turned away from them: he aunswereth, that they shall not be destitute of his fauour, if they retourne to vprightnesse of life, and to him selfe that is the paterne of righteousnesse. Therefore the place is wrongfully wrested, when it is drawen to this purpose, that the worke of our conuersion shoulde seeme to be parted betwixte God and men. These thinges we haue comprehended the much the shortelier, bycause the propre place for this matter shall be where we entreate of the Lawe.

10 The seconde sorte of their argumentes is much like vnto the first. They allege the promises whereby God doth couenaunt with Amos 5. 14. our wil, of which sorte are, Seeke good and not euill, and ye shall liue. If ye will and do heare, ye shal eate the good thinges of the earth: but if ye will not, the swerde shall deuoure you, bycause the Lordes mouth hath spoken it. Againe, If thow put away thine abhominations out Esa. 5. 16. of my sight, then shalt thou not be driuen out: If thou shalt obey diligently the voice of the Lorde thy God, and obserue and do all his Jer. 4. 1. Deu. 28 2. commaundementes which I commaunde thee this day, then the Lord thy God will set the on hye aboue all the nations of the earth. And Leu. 26. 3. other like. They do inconueniently and as it were in mockerie thinke that these benefites which the Lorde doth offer in his promises, are assigned to our owne wil: vnlesse it were in vs to stablish them or make them voide. And right easy it is to amplifie this matter with eloquent complaintes, that the Lorde doth cruelly mocke vs, when he pronounceth that his fauour hangeth vpon our will, if the same will be not in our power: And that this liberality of God should be a goodly thing forsoth, if he so set his benefits before vs that we haue no power to vse them: and a merueilous assurednes of his promises, which hang vpon a thing impossible, so as they might neuer be fulfilled. But of such promises as haue a condition adioined, we wil speake in an other place: so that it shall be plaine, that there is no absurditie in the impossible fulfilling of them. And for so much as concerneth this place: I deny that God doth vngently mocke vs, when he moueth vs to deserue his benefites, whome he knoweth to be vtterly vnable to do it. For whereas the promises are offered both to the faithfull and to the wicked, they haue their vse with both sortes. As God with his commaundemētes pricketh the consciēces of the wicked, that they should not to swetely take pleasure in their sinnes, without any remembrance of his iudgementes: so in his promises he doth in a manner take them to witnesse, howe vnworthy they are of his goodnesse. For who can denie that it is most rightfull and conueniente, that the Lord do good to them of whome he is honored, and punish the despisers of his Maiesty, according to his seueritie? Therefore God doth well and ordrely, when in his promises he adioyneth this condition to the wicked that are bounde with the fetters of sinne, that they shall then only enioy his benefites, if they departe from their wickednesse: or for this purpose only, that they may vnderstand that they are worthily excluded from these thinges, that are due to the true worshippers of God. Againe, bycause he seeketh by all meanes to stirre vp the faithfull to call vpon his grace, it shall not be inconuenient, if he attempt the same thing also by promises, which we haue shewed that he hath done to great profit with commaundementes towarde them. Being enfourmed of the will of God, by his commaundementes, we are put in minde of our miserie, which do withall our hearte to sarre dissent from the same, and we be therewithall pricked forward so call vpon his spirite, whereby we may be directed into the right waie. But because our sluggishnesse is not sufficiently sharpened with commaūdementes, there are added promises which with a certaine swetenesse may allure vs to the loue of them. And that the more desire that we haue of righteousnesse, we may be the more feruent to seeke the fauour of God. Loe howe in these requestes, (If you will: If you shall heare,) the Lorde neither geueth vs power to will nor to heare, and yet mocketh vs not for our want of power.

11 The third sorte of their argumentes, hath also great affinitie with the two fourmer. For they bring fourth the places wherein God reproacheth the vnthankefull people, and sayeth that they them selues onely were the cause that they receyued not of his tender loue all kindes of good thinges. Of which sorte are these places. Amaleck and the Chananee are before you, with whose swerde you shal fall, because ye woulde not obey the Lorde, because I called and ye aunswered not, I will do to this house as I did to Silo. Againe, this nation hath not hearde the voyce of the Lorde their God, nor hath recey- Num.14 43. Ier. 32. 13.

Iere.32. ued diſcipline, therefore it is caſt away from the Lorde. Againe, becauſe ye haue hardened your hearte and woulde not obey the Lorde, all theſe euilles are happened vnto you. Howe (ſay they) coulde ſuch reproches be laide againſt them which might redely aunſwere? As for vs, we loued proſperitie, and feared aduerſitie. But where as to obteine the one and auoyde the other we obeyed not the Lorde, nor hearkened to his voice: this was the cauſe thereof, for that it was not at our libertie ſo to do, becauſe we were ſubiect to the dominion of ſinne. Vainely therfore are theſe euilles layde to our charge, which it was not in our power to auoyde. But leuing the pretenſe of neceſſitie, wherein they haue but a weake and ſickly defence, I aſke of them whether they can purge them ſelues of all fault. For if they be found gilty of any faulte, then the Lorde doth not without cauſe reproche them, that it came to paſſe by their peruerſneſſe, that they felt not the fruite of his clemencie. Let them aunſwere therfore, whether they can denie, that their frowarde will was the cauſe of their ſtubbournes.
If they finde the ſpring head of the euill within them ſelues, why go they to finde out foreine cauſes, that they might ſeme not to haue bene authours of their owne deſtruction? But if it be true that by their owne faulte and none others, ſinners are both depriued of the benefites of God, and chaſtiſed with puniſhementes, then is there great reaſon why they ſhould heare theſe reproches at the mouth of God, that if they go obſtinatly forwarde in their faultes, they may learne in their miſeries rather to accuſe and abhorre their owne wickedneſſe, than to blame God of vniuſt crueltie: that if they haue not yet of all willingneſſe to learne, they may be wery of their ſinnes, by the deſeruinges whereof they ſee them ſelues miſerable and vndone, and may retourne into the way, and acknowledge the ſame with cauſe 12 Yet there is alleged a testimonie out of the law of Moses, which semeth to be much against our saluation. For after the publishing of Deu. 30. 11. the law, he protesteth vnto the people in this maner. The commaun-dement that I commmaunde thee this day, is not hid from thee, neither farre of: It is not in heauen, but harde by thee, it is in thy mouth and in thy heart, thou shouldest do it. Truely if this be taken to be spoken of the bare cõmaundementes, I graunt they be of no smal weight to this present matter. For though it were easy to mocke it out with saying, that here is spoken not of the easinesse and redinesse of obediuation, but of knowledge: yet euen so, peraduenture it would still Rom. 10. 8. leaue some doubt. But the Apostle which is no doubtfull expositor, taketh away all doubt from vs, which affirmeth that Moses here spake of the doctrine of the Gospell. But if any obstinate man will say, that Paule violently wrested those wordes, that they might be drawen to the Gospel: although his boldenesse so to say shal not be without impietie, yet is there sufficiẽt matter beside the authoritie of the Apostle to conuince him withall. For if Moses spake of the cõmaundement only, then he puffed vp the people with a most vaine confidence. For what should they els haue done, but throwen themselues down headlong, if they had taken vpõ them the keping of the lawe by their own strength, as a thing not hard for them? Where is then that so ready easinesse to keepe the lawe, where there is no accesse vnto it, but by hedlong fall to destruction? Wherfore there is nothing more certain, than that Moses in these wordes did meane the couenant of mercie, which he had published together with the streight requiring of ye law.

Deu. 30. 8. For in a few verses before he had taught, that our heartes must be cirmã, but in ỹ helpe & succour of ỹ holy Ghost, ẅ performeth his worke mightely ghely in our weakeneſſe. Albeit the place is not ſimply to be vnſtanded of the commaundementes, but rather of the promiſes of e Goſpell, which are ſo farre from ſtabliſhing a power in vs to obyne righteouſneſſe, that they vtterly ouerthrow it. Paul conſidering at ſame, proueth by this teſtimony, that ſaluation is offred vs in the oſpell, not vnder that hard and impoſſible condition, wherwith the w dealeth with vs, that is, that they onely ſhall attayne it which haue lfilled all the commaundements, but vnder a condition that is eaſie, ady, and playne to come vnto. Therfore this teſtimony maketh no-ing to chalenge freedom to the will of man.

13 There are alſo certaine other places wōt to be obiected, whery is ſhewed that God ſomtime, withdrawing ỹ ſuccour of his grace, eth men, and wayteth to ſee to what end they will applie their encuours, as is that place in Oſee: I will go to my place till they put it their heart and ſeeke my face. It were a fond thing (ſay they) if the Oſee. 5. 14. ord ſhould conſider whether Iſrael would ſeke his face, vnleſſe their indes were pliable that they might afrer their owne wil incline thē-lues to the one ſide or the other. As though this were not a thinge ommonly vſed with God in the Prophetes, to make a ſhewe as if he d deſpiſe and caſt away his people, till they haue amended their liſe. t what will the aduerſaries gather out of ſuch threatninges? If ey meane to gather, that the people beinge forſaken of God, may rpoſe their owne ſaluatiōn: all the Scripture ſhall cry out againſt em in ſo doing. If they confeſſe that the grace of God is neceſſary conuerſion, why ſtriue they with vs? But they ſo graunt it neceſſa-, that ſtill they will haue mans power preſerued vnto him. Howe oue they that? truely not by this place, nor any like to it. For it is e thing, to depart aſide from man, and to looke what he will do beg giuen ouer and left to himſelfe, and an other thinge to helpe his le ſtrength after the meaſure of his weakeneſſe. What then (will me man ſay) do theſe manners of ſpeaking meane? I aunſwere that ey are aſmuch in effect, as if God had ſayd: Foraſmuch as I preuaile othing with this ſtubborne people by admoniſhinge, exhorting and bukinge, I will withdraw my ſelfe a while: and ſitte ſtill and ſuffer em to be afflicted: I will ſee if at length, after longe miſeries, they ill beginne to remember me, to ſeeke my face. The Lordes go-go farre away, ſignifieth the taking away of Prophecy: his lookinge hat men will do, ſignifieth that he keepinge ſilence, and as it were idinge himſelfe, doth for a time exerciſe them with diuerſe affli-ions. Both theſe thinges he doth to humble vs the more. For we oulde ſooner be dulled than amended with the ſcourges of aduersity, vnlesse he did frame vs to that tractablenesse by his Spirite. Now whereas the Lorde beinge offended, and in a manner wery with our obstinate stubbornnesse, doth not for a time leaue vs (that is by takinge away his word in which he is wont to geue vs a certayne presence of himselfe) and doth make a proufe what we would do in his absence, it is falsely gathered hereof that there is any strength of free will that he should behold and trie, forasmuch as he doth it to no other ende, but to driue vs to acknowledge our owne being nothing.

14 They bringe also for their defence the continuall manner of speakinge, that is vsed both in the Scriptures and in the talke of men. For good workes are called ours, and it is no lesse sayd that we do the thing that is holy and pleasinge to God, than that we commit sinnes. But if sinnes be iustly imputed to vs, as proceedinge from vs truely in righteous doinges also somewhat by the same reason ought to be assigned vnto vs. For it were against reason that it should be sayd that we do those thinges, to the doing whereof being vnable of our owne motiō, we are moued by God like stones. Therfore though we giue the chiefe parte to the grace of God, yet these manners of speaking do shew that our endeuour hath also yet a second parte. If that thing onely were stil enforced, that good workes are called ours,

Mat. 6. I would obiect againe, that the bread is called ours, which we pray to haue giuen vs of God. What will they get by the title of possession, but that by the bountifulnes & free gift of God, the same thing becommeth ours, which otherwise is not due vnto vs? Therefore either lette them laugh at the same absurdity in the Lordes prayer, or let them not recken this to be laughed at, that good workes are called ours, in which we haue no property, but by the liberality of God. But this is somewhat stronger, that the Scripture oftentimes affirmeth that we our selues do worship God, obey the law & apply good workes. Sith these are the dueties properly belonging to the mind and will: howe could it agree that these thinges are both referred to the holy Ghost, & also attributed to vs, vnlesse there were a certaine communicatinge of our endeuour with the power of God? Out of these snares we shall easily vnwinde our selues, if we well consider the manner how the spirite of the Lorde worketh in the holy ones. The similitude wherwith they enuiously presse vs is from the purpose, for who is so fonde to thinke that the mouing of man differeth nothing from the casting of a stone? Neither doth any such thinge follow of our doctrine. We recken among the naturall powers of man, to allow and refuse, to will and not will, to endeuour and to resist, that is, to allow we vanity and to refuſe perfect goodneſſe, to will euill and to be willing to good, to endeuour our ſelues to wickedneſſe and to re-ighteouſneſſe. What doth the Lord herein? If it be his will to vſe t peruerſeneſſe as an inſtrument of his wrath, he directeth and appareth it to what end he will, that he by an euill hand may execute good worke. Shall we then compare a wicked man that ſo ſerueth power of God, when he laboureth onely to obey his owne luſt, a ſtone that beinge throwen by the violence of an other, is caried ther with mouing nor ſenſe nor will of his owne? We ſe how much ference there is. But what doth he in good thinges, of which is our ocipall queſtion? when he erecteth his kingdom in them, he by his re reſtrayneth mans will, that it be not caried vp and downe with ndering luſtes, according to the inclination of nature: & that it may bent to holineſſe and righteouſneſſe, he boweth, frameth, faſhioth & directeth it to the rule of his righteouſnes: and that it ſhould ſtumble or fall, he doth ſtabliſh and confirme it with the ſtrength his ſpirite. For which reaſon Auguſtine ſayth: Thou will ſay vnme: then we are wrought, and worke not. Yea thou both worke ſt d art wrought, and thou worke ſt well when thou art wrought of at which is good. The ſpirite of God that worketh thee, helpeth m that worke, and giueth himſelfe the name of a helper, for that u alſo worke ſt ſomewhat. In the firſt parte he teacheth, that mans rking is not taken away by the mouing of the holy Ghoſt, becauſe l is of nature, which is ruled to aſpire to goodneſſe. But where he andby addeth, that by the name of help, may be gathered that we ſo do worke ſomewhat, we ought not ſo to take it, as if he did giue y thing ſeuerally to vs: but becauſe he woulde not cheriſh ſlouthneſſe in vs, he ſo matcheth the working of God with ours, that to ll may be of nature, and to will well of grace. Therefore he ſayd a le before, Vnleſſe God helpe vs, we ſhall not be able to ouercome, nor yet to fight at all.

§ Hereby appeareth, that the grace of God (as the word is taken en we ſpeake of regeneration) is the rule of the ſpirite, to direct & uerne the will of man. And it can not gouerne it, vnleſſe it correct reforme it, and renew it (from whenſe we ſay that the beginninge regeneration is, that that which is ours might be deſtroyed) & vn-ſe it moue it, ſtirre it, driue it forward, cary it and hold it. Whereon we do truely ſay, that all the doinges that proceede from it, are olly the only worke of the ſame grace. In the meane time we dee not that it is very true that Auguſtine teacheth, that will is not ſtroyed by grace, but rather repayred. For both theſe thinges do ſtand very well together: that mens will be ſayd to be reſtored, when the faultineſſe and peruerſeneſſe thereof being reformed, it is directed to the true rule of iuſtice: and alſo that a new will be ſayd to be created in man, forasmuch as it is ſo defiled and corrupted, that it needeth vtterly to put on a new nature. Nowe is there no cauſe to the contrary, but that we may well be ſayd to do the ſame thing that the ſpirit of God doth in vs, although our owne will do of it ſelfe giue no toward it nothing at all, that may be ſeuered from his grace. And therefore we muſt kepe that in mind, which we haue elſewhere alleged out of Auguſtine, that ſome do in vayne trauaile to finde in the will of man ſome good thinge that is properly her owne. For whatſoeuer mixture men ſtudy to bring from the ſtrength of free wil to the grace of God, it is nothinge but a corruptinge of it, as if a man would delay wine with dirty and bitter water. But although whatſoeuer good is in the wil of man, it proceedeth from ỹ mere inſtinct of the holy Ghoſt, yet becauſe it is naturally planted in vs to will, it is not without cauſe ſayd, that we do thoſe thinges whereof God chalengeth the praiſe to himſelfe. Firſt, becauſe it is ours whatſoeuer by his goodneſſe he worketh in vs, ſo that we vnderſtand it to be not of our ſelues: and then becauſe the minde is ours, the will is ours, the endeuour is ours, which are by him directed to good.

16 Thoſe other teſtimonies beſide theſe, that they ſcrape together here and there, ſhall not much trouble euen meane writers that haue well conceiued onely the ſolutions aboue ſayd. They alleage this Ge. 4.7. ſaying out of Geneſis, Thine appetite ſhalbe vnder thee, and thou ſhalt beare rule ouer it. Which they expound of ſinne, as if ỹ Lord did promiſe to Cain, that the force of ſinne ſhould not get the vpper hand in his minde, if he would labour in ſubduinge of it. But we ſay that better agreeth with the order of the text, that this be taken to be ſpoken of Abell. For there Gods purpoſe was to reproue the wickedneſſe of the enuy that Cain had conceiued againſt his brother. And that he doth two wayes. One, that in vayne he imagined miſchiefe to come to his brother in Gods ſight, before whom no honor is giuen but vnto righteouſneſſe: the other, that he was to much vnthankefull for the benefit of God which he had alredy receiued, which could not abide his brother, although he had him ſubiect vnder his authority. But leaſt we ſhould ſeme therfore to embrace this expoſition, becauſe the other is againſt vs: let vs admitte that God ſpake of ſinne. If it be ſo, then God either promiſeth or commaundeth that which he there declareth. If he commaundeth, then haue we already ſhewed that thereby followeth no prouſe of the power of man. If he promiſeth, whe-

he fulfilling of the promise? for Cain became subiect to sinne, o- which he should haue had dominion. They will say, that in the omise was included a secrete condition, as if it had bin sayd, that he uld haue the victory if he would striue for it. But who will receiue se crooked compasses? For if this dominion be meant of sinne, n no man can doubt that it is spoken by way of commaundement, erein is not determined what we are able to do, but what we ought do, yea though it be aboue our power. Albeit both the matter lfe and the order of Grammer do require, that there be a com- ison made of Cain and Abel, because the elder brother should not e bin set behinde the yonger, vnlesse he had become worse by owne wicked doing.

They vse also the testimony of the Apostle, which saith, that it ot of him that willeth, nor of him that runneth, but of God that h mercy. Wherby they gather that there is somewhat in mans will d endeuour, which of it selfe, though it be weake, beinge bolpen the mercy of God, is not without prosperous successe. But if they soberly wey what matter Paule there intreateth of, they woulde so vnaduisedly abuse this sentence. I know that they may bringe th Origen and Hierome for maintainers of their exposition: and I alde on the other side set Augustine against them. But what they e thought, it maketh no matter to vs, if we know what Paul meant ere he teacheth that saluation is prepared only for them, to whom lord vouchsaueth to graunt his mercy: and that ruine and destru- on is prepared for all those that he hath not chosen. He had vnder example of Pharao declared the state of the reprobate, & had al- confirmed the assurednes of free election by the testimony of Mo- I will haue mercy vpon whom I will haue mercy. Nowe he con- deth, that it is not of him that willeth, or him that runneth, but of d that hath mercy. If it be thus vnderstanded, that wil or endeuour not sufficiēt, because they are to weake for so great a weight, that ich Paule sayth, had not bin aptly spoken: Therefore away with se sutteties, to say: It is not of him that willeth, nor of him that neth, therfore there is some will, there is some running. For Paules aning is more simply, thus: It is not will, it is not running that get he way to saluation, herin is only the mercy of God. For he spea- h no otherwise in this place than he doth to Titus, where he wri- h, that the goodnesse and kindenesse of God appeareth not by the rkes of righteousnes, which we haue done, but for his infinite mer- They themselues that make this argument, that Paule meant that re is some will & some running, because he said, ý it is not of him ſteth vpon, If it were therfore ſayd that it is not of him that wil nor of him that runneth, becauſe neither the will nor the running ſufficient. Then it may be turned on the contrary parte that it is of the mercy of God, becauſe it alone worketh not. Sith this ſeemeth an abſurdity, Auguſtine doth rightfully conclude, that this is ſpo pared of the Lord, not but that we ought both to will and to run, but becauſe God worketh both in vs. No leſſe vnaptly do ſome wre the way. I know that it is cõmon almoſt with all wryters, that the Luc.10. lamity of mãkinde is repreſented vnder the figure of that wayfaring 30.

n. Therupon do our aduerſaries gather an argument, ỹ man is not maymed with the robbery of ſinne and the Deuill, but ỹ he keepeth l remayning the leauinges of his former good things, foraſmuch as is ſayd, that he was left halfe aliue. For where is that halfe life, vnles ne portion both of right reaſon & will remayned? Firſt if I would t giue place to their allegory, I beſeech you, what would they do? r there is no dout that it was deuiſed by the fathers beſide the na-rall ſenſe of the Lordes wordes. Allegories ought to go no further n they haue the rule of Scripture going before them: ſo farre is it that they be by themſelues ſufficient to ground any doctrines. And re want not reaſons, whereby I can, if I liſt, ouerthrow this deuiſe, r the word of God leaueth not to man halfe a life, but teacheth that is vtterly dead, for ſomuch as cõcerneth bleſſed life. And Paul whẽ Eph. 2. ſpeaketh of our redemption, doth not ſay that we were healed, whẽ 5. were halfe dead and halfe aliue, but that we were raiſed vp againe en he were dead. He calleth not vpon them that are halfe aliue to ciue the light of Chriſt, but them that ſlepe and are buried. And in e maner ſpeaketh the Lord himſelfe, when he ſayth, that the houre Ioh. 5. come when the dead ſhall riſe againe at his voice. With what face 25. ould they ſet this light alluſiõ againſt ſo many plaine ſentences? But this allegory haue the force of a certaine teſtimony, yet what ſhall y wring out of vs therby? Mã is halfe aliue, therfore he hath ſomat left ſafe. I graunt: he hath a wit capable of vnderſtãding, althogh earce not to ỹ heauenly and ſpirituall wiſdom: he hath true iudge-nt of honeſty: he hath ſome feeling of the godhead howbeit ỹ he aine not the true knowledge of God. But to what purpoſe come all ſe thinges? Truely they bring not to paſſe that the ſame ſaying of guſtine be taken frõ vs, which is alſo approued by cõmon conſent the Schooles: that after mans fall the freely giuen good thinges, ereupon ſaluation hangeth, are taken away from him, and that his rall giftes are corrupted and defiled. Lette therefore this trueth remayne with vs vndouted, which can be ſhaken by no engines, that the minde of man is ſo eſtranged frō the righteouſnes of God, that it cōceiueth, coueteth, & enterpriſeth al wickednes, filthines, vncleanneſſe and miſchiefe: that his heart is ſo throughly ſoked in poyſon of ſinne that it can breath out nothinge but corrupt ſtinke: But if at any time they do vtter any goodnes in ſhew, yet ſtill the minde remayneth ſtil way wrapped in hypocriſie and deceitfull crookedneſſe, and the heart entangled with inward peruerſnes.

The vj. Chapter.

That man being loſt, muſt ſeeke for redemption in Chriſt.

SIth all mankinde hath periſhed in the perſon of Adam, that excellence and nobility of beginninge which we haue ſpoken would ſo litle profit vs, that it would rather turne to our greater ſhame, till God appeare the redeemer in the perſon of his onely begotten Sonne, which acknowledgeth not men defiled and corrupted with ſinne to be his worke. Therefore ſith we are fallen from life into death, all that knowledge of God the creator which we haue entreated, were vnprofitable, vnleſſe there followed alſo the ſetting foorth God a father vnto vs in Chriſt. Truely this was the naturall order that the frame of the world ſhould be a Schoole vnto vs to learne godlineſſe, from whenſe might be made a paſſage for vs to eternalll life and perfect felicity: but ſince our fallinge away, whereſoeuer we turne our eyes, vpward and downeward, the curſe of God ſtill preſenteth it ſelfe vnto our ſight, which while it poſſeſſeth and enwrappeth innocent creatures by our fault, muſt needs ouerwhelme our owne ſoules with deſperation. For although Gods will is that his fatherly fauour toward vs do ſtill many wayes appeare: yet by beholding of the worlde we cannot gather that he is our Father when our conſcience inwardly pricketh vs, and ſheweth that there is in ſinne cauſe of forſaking, why God ſhould not accompt or recken vs for his children. Beſide that there is in vs both ſlouthfullneſſe and vnthankfulneſſe: becauſe both our mindes, as they be blinded, do not ſee the trueth, and alſo as all our ſenſes be peruerſe, we malicioufly deface God of his glory. Therefore we muſt come to that ſayinge of Paul, 1. Cor. 1 becauſe in the wiſdom of God, the world knew not God by wiſedom, 22. it pleaſed God by the fooliſhneſſe of preachinge to ſaue them that beleue. The wiſdom of God he calleth this honorable ſtage of heauen and earth, furniſhed with innumerable miracles, by beholding whereof we ought wiſely to haue knowen God. But becauſe we haue profited therein, he calleth vs backe to the fayth of Chriſt, which is at it seemeth foolish, ỹ vnbeleuers do disdaine. Wherfore although e preaching of the crosse do not agree with mās wit, yet ought we mbly to embrace it, if we desire to returne to God our creator and aker, that he may beginne againe to be our father. Truely since the l of the first man, no knowledge of God auailed to saluation, with-t the Mediatour. For Christ speaketh not of his owne age onely, Ioh. 17. comprehendeth all ages, whē he sayth that this is the eternall life; 3. know the father the one true God, & him whom he hath sent Ie-Christ. And so much the fowler is their sluggishnesse, which take on them to set open heauen to all prophane and vnbeleuing men, thout his grace whom, the Scripture ech where teacheth to be the y gate wherby we entre into saluation. But if any wil restrayne that ing of Christ only to the publishing of the Gospel, we haue in rea-esse wherwith to confute him. For this hath bin a cōmon sentence ll ages & among all nations, that without reconciliation they that estranged from God & pronounced, accursed and the children of th, can not please God. And here may be also alleaged that which Iohn. 4. rist answered to the womā of Samaria: Ye worship what ye know 21. but we worship that which we know: because the saluation is frō Iewes. In which wordes he both condemneth of falsehood all the gions of the Gentiles, and also assigneth a reason why, for that the deemer was promised vnder the lawe to the onely chosen people. ereupon it followeth, that no worship euer pleased God, but that ch had respect vnto Christ. For which cause also Paule affirmeth Ephe. 2. all the nations of the Gentiles were without God, and voide of 12. hope of life. Now wheras Iohn teacheth that life was from the ning in Christ, and that all the world fell from it, we must nedes rne to the same fountayne Christ. And therfore Christ, insomuch is the reconciler, affirmeth himselfe to be the life. And truly the ritance of heauen belongeth to none, but to the childrē of God. is not meete that they be accompted in the place and degree of drē, that are not grafted into the body of the only begotten sonne Iohn plainely testifieth, that they which beleue in his name, are the children of God. But because it is not directly my purpose discourse of fayth in Christ, therefore it shall for this time be ient to haue touched it by the way.

And therefore God neuer shewed himselfe mercifull to the olde le, nor euer did put them in any hope of grace without the Me-ur. I omitte to speake of the sacrifices of the lawe, wherein the ll were openly and plainely taught, that saluation is no where o be sought, but in the clensing which was performed by Christ alone. Only this I say, that the blessed and happy state of the church hath bin alway grounded vpon ỹ person of Christ. For though God comprehended all the issue of Abraham in his couenant, yet did Paule wisely reason, that Christ is properly that seede in whom all nations were to be blessed, forasmuch as we know that not all they were reckened his seede that were begotten of him according to the flesh. For (to speake nothing of Ismael and other) how came it to passe that of the two sonnes of Isaac, that is Esau and Iacob, brethren born at one birth, while they were yet together in their mothers wombe, the one was chosen, the other refused? Yea how came it to passe that the elder was reiected and the yonger only tooke place? And how also came it to passe, that the greater parte should be forsaken? It appeareth therefore, that the seede of Abraham was principally reckened in one person, and that the promised saluation did neuer stande sure till it came to Christ, whose office is to gather together the children that were scattered abroad. Therefore the first adoption of the chosen people did hang vpon the grace of ỹ Mediatour. Which though it be not in so plaine wordes expressed by Moses, yet it sufficiently appeareth that it was commonly knowen to all the godly. For knowing that there was any king create among the people, Hanna the mother of Samuell entreatinge of the felicity of the godly, euen then 1.Sam.2 10. thus in her song: God shall giue strength to his king, and shal exalte the horne of his anointed. In which wordes she meaneth that God shall blesse his church. Wherewith also agreeth the oracle that is written a little after adioyned: The Priest whom I shall appoint shall walke before mine anointed. Neither is it to be doubted, but that the wil of the heauenly father was to haue the liuely image of Christ to be set before Psal.2. 12. Dauid and his posterity. Therefore meaning to exhorte the godly to Ioh.5. 23. the feare of God, he biddeth them to kisse the Sonne. Wherewith the saying of the Gospell also agreeth: He that honoreth not the sonne honoreth not the father. Therefore although by fallinge away of the tribes the kingdome decayed: yet it behoued the couenant to stande which God had made in Dauid and his successours: as also he 2.Re.11. & 12.24 the Prophets: I will not altogether cut of the kingdom, for Dauid my seruauntes sake, and for Hierusalems sake, whom I haue chosen. Yet there shall remaine one tribe to thy sonne. Where the same is repeted the second and third time. It is also expressely added 1.Kings 11.39 afflict the seede of Dauid, but not for euerwith in a litle space after, it is sayd. For Dauid his seruantes sake God hath geuen a light 1.K.ngs 15.4. ough amonge the Iewes, the Scribes and Phariſees had darkened n falſe inuentions, that which the Prophetes had ſpoken concerg the Redeemer: yet Chriſt tooke it for a thing confeſſed as receiby common cõſent,that there was none other remedy, deſpered ,and no other meane of deliuering the church, but by giuing the iatour. In deede that was not commonly knowen amonge the ple as it ought to haue bin, which Paule teacheth, that Chriſt is Ro.10.4 nde of the lawe. But howe true and aſſured it is, doth playnely appeare by the law and the Prophetes. I ſpeake not yet of fayth, becauſe there ſhalbe elſewhere a more conuenient place for it. Only let the readers hold this as faſt ſtabliſhed, that the firſt degree of goodneſſe be, to acknowledge God to be a Father vnto vs, to defend, gouerne and cheriſh vs, till he gather vs together into the euerlaſting inheritance of his kingdom: and that hereby it plainly appeareth what we ſayd euen now, that the knowledge of God which bringeth ſaluation, ſtandeth not without Chriſt, and that therefore from the beginning he hath bin ſet forth vnto all the elect, that they ſhould looke vpon him, and that in him ſhould reſt all their affiance. According to this meaning writeth Ireneus, that the Father which is vnmeaſurable, is in his Sonne meaſured, becauſe he hath applied himſelfe to ỹ meaſure of our capacity, leaſt he ſhould drowne our mindes with the vnmeaſurablnes of his glory. Which thing the phrentike men not conſidering, do wreſt a profitable ſentence to a wicked fantaſy, as though there were in Chriſt but a portion of the godhead deriued from the whole perfection: whereas it meaneth nothing elſe, but that God is comprehended in Chriſt alone. That ſayinge of Iohn hath alway ben true: He ỹ hath not the Sonne, neither hath he the father. For though in old time many did boſt that they worſhipped the ſouereigne God the maker of heauen and earth: yet becauſe they had no Mediatour it was impoſſible that they ſhould truely taſt of the mercy of God, or ſo be perſuaded ỹ he was their father. Therefore becauſe they knew not ỹ head that is Chriſt, the knowledge of God was but vaine among them: whereby alſo it came to paſſe, that at length falling into groſſe & filthy ſuperſtitions, they bewrayed their owne ignorance. As at this day the Turkes, although they report with full mouth, that the creator of heauen and earth is their God, yet do they thruſt an idole in place of the true God while they ſwarue from Chriſt.

1. Ioh. 2. 31.

The vij. Chapter.

That the Law was giuen, not to hold ſtill the people in it, but to nourish the hope of ſaluation in Chriſt vntill his comming.

BY this continuall proceſſe that we haue rehearſed, may be gathered, that the law was added about foure hundred yeres after the death of Abraham, not for this entẽt to lead away the chooſen people from Chriſt: but rather to keepe theyr mindes in expectation vntill his comminge, to kindle a deſire of him, & to confirme them in looking for him, that they ſhould not waxe faint with long tariance. I meane by this word Law, not only the ten commande-lementes, which prescribe a rule how to liue godlily and righteously, ut also the forme of religion deliuered by the hand of Moses. For Moses was not made a lawgiuer to aboliſh the bleſſinge promiſed to he kinred of Abraham: but rather we ſee how euery where he put-eth the Iewes in remembrance of that free couenaunt made with eir fathers whoſe heires they were, as if he had bin ſent to renewe e ſame. That was moſt plainely ſet fooorth by the ceremonies. For hat were more vaine and fonde, than for men to offer vp lothſome inke of the fat of cattell, to reconcile themſelues to God therby? to ee to the ſprinkling of water or bloud to waſh away their filthines? nally, all the ſeruice of God apointed in the law (if it be conſidered y it ſelfe, and do not containe ſhadows and figures, which the trueth ould anſwere vnto) ſhalbe but a very mockery. Wherfore not with-ut a cauſe both in Stephens ſermō, & in the Epiſtle to the Hebrues Act. 5. that place ſo diligently weyed, where God commaūdeth Moſes to 44. ake all things pertaining to the tabernacle, according to the paterne Heb. 8. 5 leſſe haue foodly ſpent their labour in them, than the Gentiles did their trifles. Prophane men that neuer earneſtly applied the ſtuy of godlineſſe, cannot without lothſome tediouſneſſe abide to here many ſundry faſhions of vſages: and they not onely maruell why od wearied his people with ſuch a heape of ceremonies, but alſo ey deſpiſe and ſcorne them as childrens playes. And the cauſe is, r that they conſider not the end, frō which if the figures of the law ſeuered, they muſt needes be condemned of vanity. But that ſame ure ſheweth, that God did not therefore commaund ſacrifices, beuſe he would occupie them that worſhipped him with earthly exciſes, but rather to raiſe vp their minds hier. Which may alſo plainappeare by his nature: for as he is ſpirituall, ſo he is delited with no her worſhippinge but ſpirituall. This do the ſayinges of the Pro-ctes teſtifie, wherein they rebuke the Iewes of ſluggiſhnes, for that ey thought that any ſacrifices were of any value with God. Is that cauſe their purpoſe is to derogate any thing from the law? No, but cording as they were true expoſitours of the law, ſo they would by is meane haue mens eyes directed to the marke frō which the cōon people ſtrayed. Now by the grace offered to the Iewes it is cernly gathered, that the law was not void of Chriſt. For Moſes did Exo. 10. forth vnto them this end of the adoption, that they ſhoulde be- 6. me a prieſtly kingdom to God. Which they coulde not obtaine vn-there were had for the meane therof a greater and more excellent reconciliation, than by the bloud of beastes. For what is lesse likely than Adams children, which by inheritably descending infection are all borne the bondslaues of sinne, to be aduaunced to royal dignity & so to become partakers of the glory of God, vnlesse that so excellent a benefit shoulde come vnto them from elsse where than from themselues? Also how could ỹ right of priesthoode remaine in force among them, who by filthinesse of sinnes were abhominable to God, vnles they had bin consecrate in a holy head? Wherefore Peter doth very aptly turne that saying of Moises, where he teacheth, that the time of grace, the tast wherof the Iewes had taken vnder the law, was past

1. Pet. 2. 9. in Christ: Yea are (sayth he) a chosen kinred, a kingly priesthoode. For to this end tendeth that turning of the wordes, to shewe that they, to whom Christ appeared by the Gospel, haue obtained more than their fathers, because they are all endued both ẇ priestly and kingly honor, that trusting vpon their mediatour, they may freely be bold to come forth into the sight of God.

2 And here by the way it is to be noted, that the kingdom which at length was erected in the house of Dauid, is part of the law, & contained vnder the ministery of Moses. Whereupon followeth, that wel in all the kinred of the Leuites as in the posterity of Dauid Christ was set before the eyes of ỹ olde people as in a double looking glasse. For, as I sayd euen now, they could not otherwise be before God than kings or priestes, which were both the bondslaues of sinne and death, & defiled by their owne corruption. Herby appeareth that the

Gala. 3. 24. saying of Paul is most true, that the Iewes were holden as vnder the keping of a Schoolemaister, till the sede came for whose sake the promise was giuen. For, because Christ was not yet familiarly known, they were like vnto children, whose weakenesse could not yet beare full knowledge of heauenly thinges, but howe they were by ceremonies as it were led by the hand to Christ, is before spoken, & more better vnderstanded by many testimonies of the Prophetes. For though it was commaunded them to come daily with newe sacrifice

Esa. 53. Dani. 9. to appease God: yet Esay promiseth that all their sinnes shalbe clensed with one onely sacrifice. Wherewith Daniell agreably sayeth. The priestes appointed of the tribe of Leui, did enter into the Sanctuary, but of the only priest it was once sayd, that by an oth he was chosen

Psa. 110 4. of God to be a priest for euer, according to the order of Melchisedech. At that time the anointing with oile was visible: but Daniel by the vision pronounceth ỹ there shalbe an other manner of anointing. And because I will not tary vpon many examples, the author of the epistle to the Hebrues euen from the 4. chapter to the 11. doth largely ainely enough ſhewe, that the ceremonies are nothing worth and ine till we come to Chriſt. As concerning the tenne commaundeers: that leſſon of Paule is likewiſe to be kept in minde, that Chriſt Rom. 10 ly preparation to ſeke Chriſt, what ſo euer he teacheth in diuerſe rdes, do all very well agree together. But bycauſe he then was in tention with peruerſe teachers, which fained that we do deſerue teouſneſſe by the workes of the lawe, to confute their errour, he s compelled ſometime to ſpeake preciſely of the bare lawe, which otherwiſe is clothed with the couenant of free adoption.

But now it is good to know, how being taught by the morall e, we are made more inexcuſable, that our owne giltyneſſe may ue vs to craue pardon. If it be true that we be taught perfection of teouſneſſe in the lawe: then this alſo followeth, that the abſolute ng thereof is perfect righteouſneſſe before God, that is, whereby an may be demed and accompted righteous before the heauenly one of iudgement. Wherefore Moſes, when he had publiſhed the Deu. 30 e, doubted not to proteſt before heauen and earth, that he had ſet 15. re Iſraell life and death, good and euill. And we may not denie, that the rewarde of eternall ſaluation belongeth to the vpright dience of the lawe, as the Lord hath promiſed it. Againe, yet it is d to examine, whether we performe that obedience, vpon deſert reof we may conceiue a truſt of that rewarde. For to what ſmall poſe is it, to ſee the rewarde of eternall life ſet in keping of the , vnleſſe we further knowe whether we may by that way attaine ernall life? But herein the weakeneſſe of the lawe doth ſhewe it . For bycauſe that keping of the lawe is founde in none of vs all, re excluded from the promiſes of life, and do fall into curſe only. not nowe tell what doth come to paſſe, but what needes muſt ſo e to paſſe. For where as the doctrine of the lawe is farre aboue power of man, he may in deede a farre of, looke at the promiſes, but yet not gather any fruite of them. Therefore this one thing ... mayneth, that by the goodneſſe of them he may the better weye ... owne miſerie, while he conſidereth, that all hope of ſalnation being ... cut of, death doth certainely hang ouer him. On the other ſide ... preſſe vs terrible penall lawes, which do holde entangled and ...

bounde not onely a fewe of vs, but euery one without exception: ... preſſe vs, I ſay, and do purſue vs, with vnappeaſable rigour, ſo that ... we may ſe moſt preſent death in the lawe.

4 Therfore if we loke only vpon the lawe, we can do nothing ... be diſcouraged, be confounded, and deſpeire, foraſmuch as by ...
are all damned and curſed, & kept farre of from the bleſſednes ... he offreth to them that worſhip him. Wilt thou ſay then, Doth ...
Lord ſo mocke vs? For how ſmally doth it differ from mocking, ... ſhewe forth a hope of felicitie, to allure and exhorte men vnto ... proteſt that it is layed open for vs, when in the meane ſeaſon the ... trie vnto it is forcloſed and impoſſible to be come to? I anſwere: ... though the promiſes of the lawe, in ſo much as they are conditional, ... do hang vpon the perfect obedience of the lawe, which can no ... be founde, yet are they not geuen in vaine. For when we haue ... that they ſhalbe voide and of no effect vnto vs, vnleſſe God ... vs with his free goodneſſe without regarde of our workes, and ... we do embrace by faith the ſame goodneſſe geuen vs by the Gospel, ... then want they not their effectualneſſe, yea with their condition ... nexed. For then he doth ſo freely geue all thinges vnto vs, that ... deth this alſo to the heape of his bountifulneſſe, that not refuſing ... halfe full obedience, and remitting ſo much as it wanteth of ...
formance, he ſo maketh vs to enioy the frute of the promiſes of ... lawe, as if we our ſelues had fulfilled the condition. But we ... this preſent procede no further in this matter, bycauſe it ſhalbe ... largely to be entreated of, when we ſhall ſpeake of the Iuſtification ... of faith.

5 Wheras we ſaid that it is impoſſible to kepe the lawe, that ... fewe wordes to be both expounded and proued. For it is wont ... the people commonly to be accompted an opinion of great abſurdi- ... tie, ſo farre that Hierome doubted not to pronounce it accurſed: ...
Hierome thought, I do nothing ſtay vpon: as for vs, let vs ſearch ... is truth. I will not here make long circumſtances of diuerſe ſorte ... poſſibilities. I call that impoſſible, which both neuer hath bee, ... alſo is hindered by the ordinance and decree of God, that it ... herafter may be. If we recorde from the fartheſt time of memorie, ... ſay that there hath none of the holy men, that being clothed with ...

lie of death, hath euer attained to that full perfection of loue, to e God with all his heart, with all his minde, with all his ſoule, with his power: Againe, that there hath bene none that hath not bene abled with concupiſcence. Who can ſay Nay? I ſee in deede what uet holy men fooliſh ſuperſtition doth imagine vnto vs, euen ſuch uſe pureneſſe the heauenly Angels do ſcarcely counteruaile: but inſt both the Scripture and profe of experience. I ſay alſo, that re ſhall none heraſter be, that ſhall come to the marke of true per-ion, vnleſſe he be looſed from the burden of his bodie. For this at there are open teſtimonies of Scripture. Salomon ſaid, there is a righteous man vpon the earth that ſinneth not. And Dauid ſaid: ry liuing man ſhal not be iuſtified in thy ſight. Iob in many places rmeth the ſame. But Paule moſt plainly of all: that the fleſh luſteth inſt the ſpirite, and the ſpirite againſt the fleſh. And by no other ſon he proueth that all that are vnder the lawe, are ſubiect to the ſe. But bycauſe it is written, that curſed are all they that do not le in all the commaundementes therof: meaning, or rather taking a thing confeſſed, that no man can abide in them. And what ſoeis foreſpoke by the Scriptures, that muſt be holden for perpetuall, and neceſſarie. With ſuch ſutteltie did the Pelagians trouble Auine, ſaying that there is wrong done to God, to ſay that he doth maund more than the faithful are able by his grace to performe. guſtine, to auoide their cauillation confeſſed, that the Lord might eede, if he woulde, aduaunce a mortall man to the pureneſſe of els: but that he neither hath done ſo at any time, nor will do, bye he hath otherwiſe affirmed in the Scriptures. And that do I alot denie. But I adde further, that it is inconuenient to diſpute of power againſt his truth, and that therfore this ſentence is not ſubto cauillations if a man ſhoulde ſay, that that thing is impoſſible e, wherof the Scriptures do pronounce that it ſhall not be. But if diſpute of the worde: when the Diſciples aſked the Lorde, who be ſaued, he aunſwered: with men in deede it is impoſſible, but God all thinges are poſſible. Alſo Auguſtine with a moſt ſtrong on ſtiffely defendeth, that in this fleſh we neuer yelde to God the loue that we owe him. Loue (ſaith he) ſo followeth knowledge, no man can perfectly loue God, but he that hath firſt fully knowē oodneſſe. We, while we wander in this worlde, ſee by a glaſſe and darke ſpeech: it followeth therfore, that our loue is vnperfect. Let therefore remaine out of controuerſie, that in this fleſh it is im-ble to fulfill the lawe, if we behold the weakeneſſe of our owne re, as it ſhall yet alſo in an other place be proued by Paule.

6 But that the whole matter may be more plainly set forth: let us in a compendious order gather vp together the office and vse of the lawe which they call Moral. Now, as farre as I vnderstand, it is contained in these three partes. The first is, that while it sheweth to every man the righteousnesse of God, that is, the righteousnesse which only is acceptable to God, it admonish, certifie, proue gilty, yea and condemne euery man of his owne vnrighteousnesse. For so is it needful that man blinded and dronke with loue of himselfe, be driuen back to the knowledge and the confession of his owne weakenesse and vncleannesse: for asmuch as if his vanitie be not euidently conuicted, he swelleth with madde affiance of his owne strength, and can neuer be brought to thinke of the sclēderneſse therof, so long as he measureth it by the proportion of his owne will. But so sone as he beginneth to compare his strength to the hardnesse of the lawe, there he findeth matter to abate his courage. For how so euer he before conceiued great opinion of it, yet byandby he feeleth it to pante vnder so great a burden, and then to shake and folter, at laste euen to fall downe as faint. So being taught by the scholing of the lawe, he putteth of the arrogancie wherwith before he was blinded. Likewise he is to be instructed of an other disease of pride, wherof we haue said that he is sicke. So long as he is suffred to stand to his owne iudgement, he deuiseth Hypocrisie in stede of righteousnesse, wherwith being contented, he riseth vp in courage, by I wote not, what forged righteousnesse, against the grace of God. But so sone as he is compelled to trie his life by the balaunce of the lawe, thē leauing the presumption of the counterfait righteousnesse, he seeth himselfe to be an infinite space distant from holynesse: Againe, that he floweth full of infinite vices, which before he seemed cleane. For the euils of luste are hidden in so deepe and crooked priuie corners, that they easily deceiue the sight of man. And not without cause the Apostle saith, that he knewe not luste, except the lawe had said: Thou shall not luste: bycause except it be Rom. 7. 7. the law disclosed out of her lurking holes, it destroieth miserable men so secretly, that he feeleth not the deadely darte thereof.

7 So the lawe is like a certaine looking glasse wherein we beholde, first our weakenesse, and by that our wickednesse, and laste of all by them both our accursednesse, euen as a glasse representeth vnto vs the spottes of our face. For when power faileth man to follow righteousnesse, then muste he needes sticke faste in the mire of sinnes. And after sinne byandby followeth curse. And of howe much the greater transgression the lawe holdeth vs giltie and conuict, with so much the more grieuous iudgement it condemneth vs. For this purpose maketh e ſaying of the Apoſtle, that by the lawe is the knowledge of ſinne. Rom. 3.

inges, that the lawe entred that ſinne might abound, and therfore Rom. 5.

ction of the ſinner, bycauſe of it ſelfe it can do nothing but acſe, condemne and deſtroie. And as Auguſtine writeth, if the ſpirite grace be abſent, the lawe is preſent with vs, onely to this ende, to De corre. & gratia. Vide Ambroſ. cap. 2. de Iac. & vita beata, cap. 6. cuſe vs and kill vs. And yet when this is ſaid, neither is the lawe diſ-nored thereby, nor any thing taken from the excellencie thereof. ruely if our will were wholy framed and diſpoſed to the obedience the lawe, then plainely the onely knowledge of it were ſufficient to uation. But for aſmuch as our fleſhly and corrupt nature fighteth, an enemie with the ſpirituall lawe of God, and is nothing amended th the diſcipline thereof, this followeth that the lawe which was gen for ſaluatiō, (if it hadde founde fitte hearers) tourneth to the oc-ſion of ſinne and death. For ſith we are all proued tranſgreſſors of the more plainely that it openeth the righteouſneſſe of God, ſo ch the more on the other ſide it diſcloſeth our iniquitie: the more ely that it confirmeth the rewarde of life and ſaluation laide vp for hteouſneſſe, ſo much the more aſſured it maketh the deſtruction the wicked. So farre is it of therefore that theſe ſayinges ſhoulde to the diſhonour of the lawe, that they much auaile to the more rious commendations of Gods bountie. For truely it hereby ap-reth that we are hindered by our owne wickedneſſe, and peruerſſe, that we enioy not the bleſſedneſſe of life ſet openly abroade for by the lawe. Whereby the grace of God that helpeth vs without ſuccour of the lawe, is made ſo much the ſweter, and the mercie re louely that geueth it vnto vs, wherby we learne that he is neuer aried with often doing vs good and heaping new giftes vpon vs.

And wheras the iniquitie and condemnation of vs all is ſealed the teſtimonie of the lawe, it is not done for this purpoſe (if at e we well profit in it) to make vs fall downe with deſpeire, or with couraged mindes to tumble downe hedlong. In deede the reproe are amaſed after that manner, but that is by reaſon of their ob-acie, but with the children of God there behoueth to be an other Rom. 8.
e of inſtructiō. I graunt, the Apoſtle teſtifieth that we are all con- 19.

demned by iudgement of the lawe, that euery mouth may be ſtopped, and that all the worlde may become bounde vnto God: but the ſame Apoſtle in an other place teacheth, that God hath concluded all vnder vnbeliefe, not to deſtroy all, or to ſuffer all to perish, but that he might haue mercy of all, that leauing the fooliſh opinion of their owne ſtrength, they might vnderſtand, that they ſtand and are vpholden by the onely hande of God: that they being naked and emptie, may flee to his mercie, that they may reſte them ſelues wholly vpon it, hide them ſelues wholly in it, take holde of it alone in ſtead of righteouſneſſe and merites, which is laide open in Chriſt for all men who ſoeuer they be that with true faith do deſire and looke for it. For God in the commaundementes of the lawe appeareth but a rewarder of perfect righteouſneſſe, wherof we all are deſtitute, and on the other ſide a rigorous iudge of euill doinges. But in Chriſt his face ſhineth full of grace and lenity, euen towarde the wretched and vnworthy ſinners.

Rom. 11. 32.

9 Of profiting, to craue the grace of his helpe, Auguſtine ſpeaketh oft, as when he writeth to Hilarie, The lawe commaundeth endeuoring to do the thinges commaunded, and being wearied with our weakeneſſe vnder the lawe, we ſhoulde learne to aſke the helpe of grace. Againe to Aſelius. The profit of the lawe is to conuince man of his owne weakeneſſe, and compell him to craue the Phyſicke of grace that is in Chriſt. Againe to Innocent of Rome, The lawe commaundeth, and grace miniſtreth ſtrength to do. Againe to Valentine: God commaundeth thoſe thinges that we can not do, that we may learne to knowe what to aſke of him. Againe: The lawe was geuen to accuſe you, that being accuſed you ſhould feare, that ſtraight you ſhoulde craue pardon, and not preſume of your owne ſtrength. Againe: The lawe was geuen for this purpoſe, of great to make you to ſhewe that thou haſt no ſtrength of thine owne to righteouſneſſe, that thou as poore, vnworthy and needy, ſhouldeſt flee vnto grace. After, he tourneth his ſpeech to God and ſaith: Do ſo Lorde, O merciful Lorde, commaunde that which can not be fulfilled: yea, commaunde that which can not but by thy grace be fulfilled, that is, men can not fulfill it by their owne ſtrength, euery mouth muſt be ſtopped, and no man may thinke him ſelfe great. Let all be little ones, and let all the worlde be gilty before thee. But I am not wiſe to heape vp ſo many teſtimonies, ſith that holy man hath written a booke purpoſely of that matter, which he hath intituled, Of the Spirite and the letter. The ſeconde profiting he doth not ſo liuely deſcribe, either becauſe he knewe that it did hang vpon the former, or by cauſe he so well vnderstand it, or bycause he wanted wordes where with actly & plainly to expresse his meaning of it, which yet he rightconceyued: but this first office of the lawe is not idle euen in the robate also. For though they go not thus farre forwarde with the ldren of God, that after the throwing downe of their flesh they be ed and florish againe in the inward man, but amased with the first our do lie still in desperation: yet it serueth to shewe forth the ine of Gods iudgement, that their consciences be tossed with h wayes. For they euer willingly desire to make shifte against the gement of God. Nowe while the same is not yet opened, they yet stonished with the testimonie of the lawe and their conscience do raie in them selues what they haue deserued.

The second office of the lawe, is that they which are touched h no care of that which is iust and right, vnlesse they be compel-, when they heare the terrible penall ordinaunces therein, may be rayned at least with feare of punishment. But they are restrained, because their inwarde minde is moued or affected withall, but by-se being as it were brideled, they withholde their hande from out-de worke, and do keepe in their peruersenesse within them, which erwise they woulde haue outragiously poured out. Thereby they ome truely nether the better, nor the more righteous before God. although being letted either by feare or by shame, they dare not that in practise which they haue conceiued in their minde, not nly blow abrode the rages of their lust: yet haue they not a hearte ned to the feare & obedience of God, yea the more that they holde te them selues, so much the stronglier within they are kindeled, burne, they boile, ready to do any thing, and to breake forth any ther, if this terrour of the lawe did not stay them. And not that y, but also they most spitefully hate the lawe, and do detest God lawemaker, so that if they coulde, they would very faine take him y, whome they can not abide, neither when he commaundeth efull thinges, nor when he reuengeth him vpon the despisers of aiestie. In some in deede more darkly, and in some more plainely, in all generally that are not regenerat, is this feeling, that they are en to the following of the lawe not by willing submission, but reg and against their willes, only by violence of feare. But this con-ed and enforced righteousnesse is necessarie for the publike com-n state of men, the quiet wherof is herin prouided for, while ordre ken that all thinges be not cõfounded with vprore, which woulde e to passe, if all thinges were lawefull for all men. Yea it is not vnsonable for the childrẽ of God to be exercised with this Scholing, so long as they before their calling being yet destitute of the of sanctification, are still wanton with the folly of the flesh. For they are drawen backe, though it be but from outwarde licentiou nesse, by the terrour of Gods vengeance, although for that they a not yet tamed in minde, they go for the present time but a little warde, yet they partly grow in vre to beare the yoke of Christ, so when they are called, they be not altogether rude and raw to 1. Tim. 1. 9. pline, as to a thing vnknowen. This office the Apostle seemeth prely to haue touched, when he saieth that the lawe was not the righteous man, but for the vnrighteous and disobedient, wic and sinners, euill doers and prophane men, slaiers of their murtherers, fornicators, Sodomites, robbers of children, lyers periured men, and what soeuer ells is against sounde doctrine. Fu saieth, that it is a stay to the wilde outraging lustes of the flesh, ells woulde stray abroade without measure.

11 But to both may that be applyed which he saith in Gal. 3. 24. place, that the lawe was to the Iewes a Schoolemaister to Christ, there are two sortes of men, whom with her schooling she leadeth the hande to Christ. The one sorte, of whome we first spake, by they are to full of affiance of their owne strength or righteou are not meete to receiue the grace of Christ, vnlesse they be pried, therefore the lawe bringeth them downe to humilitie by ledge of the selues, that so they may be prepared to desire before they thought they wanted not. The other sorte needeth to be holden backe, least they so geue loose the reines to the sonnesse of their flesh, that they fall of altogether from all righteousnesse. For where the spirite of God doth not yet there sometime lustes do so boile, that it is in great perill throw downe the soule that is subiect to them into the forget and despising of God: and so woulde it come to passe if God with this remedy prouide for it. Therfore those whom he hath ted to the inheritaunce of his kingdome, if he do not byandby nerate them, he keepeth them by the workes of the lawe vnder vntill the time of his visitation, not that chaste and pure feare ought to be in children, but yet a profitable feare for this may according to their capacitie be taught by introduction to godlinesse. Of this we haue so many proues, that it needeth no ple. For who soeuer haue any time continued in not knowing of will cõfesse that this happened vnto them, that they were the bridle of the law in some feare & obediẽce of God, vntil that being regenerate by his spirit, they beganne hartely to

The third vſe, which is alſo the principall vſe, and more neareoketh vnto the propre ende of the lawe, concerneth the faithfull, whoſe heartes already liueth and reigneth the ſpirite of God. For ough they haue the lawe written and grauen in their heartes by finger of God, that is to ſay, be ſo affectioned and minded by the ction of the ſpirite that they deſire to obey God, yet do they ſtill waies profite in the lawe. For it is to them a very good meane, reby they may dayly better and more aſſuredly learne what is the of the Lord which they aſpire vnto, and may be confirmed in the eſtanding thereof. As if a ſeruaunt be already bente with all the ction of his hearte, to pleaſe his Lorde: yet hath he neede dilitely to ſearche out and marke the faſhions of his Lorde, that he frame and apply him ſelfe vnto them. And let none of vs exempt ſelfe from this neede. For no manne hath hetherto attained ſo reat wiſedome, but that he may by dayly inſtruction of the lawe newe profit in proceding to the purer knowledge of Gods will. n bycauſe we neede not onely doctrine but alſo exhortation: this r profite ſhall the ſeruaunt of God take by the lawe, to be by the meditation thereof ſtirred vp to obedience, to be ſtrengthened to be holden backe from the ſlippery way of offending. For after maner, muſt theſe holy ones driue forwarde them ſelues, which how great cheerefulneſſe ſo euer they trauaile to Godwarde acing to the ſpirite, yet they are alway loden with the ſluggiſhneſſe fleſh, that they procede not with ſuch ful redineſſe as they ought. his fleſh is the lawe geuen as a whippe, that like a ſlowe and dull it may be pricked forwarde to worke. Yea to the ſpirituall man, ſe he is not yet diſpatched of the burden of the fleſh, it ſhall be ninuall pricke that ſuffereth him not to ſtand ſtill. Euen to this Dauid hadde reſpect, when he did ſet forth the lawe with thoſe my pathes, and innumerable other that he rehearſeth in all that

e. Neither are theſe thinges againſt the ſayinges of Paule, ein is ſhewed, not what vſe the lawe miniſtreth to the regenebut what it is able to geue to manne of it ſelfe. But here the et reporteth with howe great profite the Lorde doth inſtruct by reading of his lawe, to whome he inwardely inſpireth a eſſe to obey. And he taketh holde not of the commaunde-s onely, but alſo the promiſe of grace annexed to the thinges, whiche onely maketh the bitterneſſe to waxe ſweete. For what were leſſe ameable than the lawe, if it ſhoulde onely with reproving and threatening trouble ſoules carefully with feare, and vexe them with terrour? But ſpecially Dauid ſheweth, that he in the law conceyued the Mediatour, without whome there is no delite or ſweeteneſſe.

13 Which while ſome vnſkillfull men canne not diſcerne, they boldely ſhake away all Moſes, and bidde the two tables of the law farewell, bycauſe they thinke it is not agreable for Chriſtians to cleaue to that doctrine that conteineth the miniſtration of death. But this prophane opinion departe farre out of our mindes. For Moſes taught excellently well, that the ſame Lawe which with ſinners engendre nothing but death, ought in the holy to haue a better and more excellent vſe. For thus, when he was ready to die, he openly ſaide to the people: Lay your heartes vpon all the wordes that I Deu. 31 6. teſtifie to you this daie, that ye maie committe them to your children, that ye maie teache them to keepe, to do, and to fulfill all thinges that are written in the volume of this lawe, bycauſe they are not vainely commaunded you, but that euery one ſhoulde learne them: but if no manne canne denie that there appeareth in it an abſolute paterne of righteouſneſſe, then either we muſte haue no rule at all to liue iuſtely and vprightely, or els it is not lawefull for vs to departe from it. For there are not many but one rule of life which is perpetualll and canne not be bowed. Therefore, whereas Dauid Pſal. 1. 2 maketh the life of a righteous manne continually buſied in the meditation of the lawe, let vs not referre that to one age onely, bycauſe it is moſte meete for all ages to the ende of the worlde: but let vs not therefore be frayed awaie, or flee from being inſtructed in it, bycauſe it appointeth a muche more exact holyneſſe than we can performe, while we ſhall carry about the perſon of our bodie. For nowe it executeth not againſt vs the office of a rigorous exactor, that will not be ſatiſfied, but with his full taſke performed: but of perfection where vnto it exhorteth vs, it ſheweth vs a marke, at which in all our life to endeuour, is no leſſe profitable for vs, than agreable with our dutie. In which endeuour if we faile not, it ſhall For all this life is a race, the ſpace whereof being runne out, the Lord wil graunt vs to atteine to that marke, towarde which our endeuours do trauaile a farre of.

14 Nowe therefore, whereas the lawe hath towarde the ſinner a power to exhorte, not ſuch a power as may binde their conſciences with curſe, but ſuche as with often calling on, may ſhake of [illegible] ſe and pitthe imperfection to awake it: many when they meane xpreſſe this deliuerance from the curſe thereof, do ſay, that the e is abrogate to the faithfull. (I ſpeake yet of the lawe morall) not it doth no more commaunde them that which is right, but only it be no more vnto them that which it was before, that is, that it o more, by making afraide and confounding their conſciences, ed among the Iewes. But foraſmuch as it coulde not riſe cauſeand without any colour, it is likely that it grewe vpon falſe vnlanding of his doctrine, as in a maner all erroures are wonte to occaſion of truthe, but leaſt we ſhoulde alſo ſtumble at the ſame e, let vs diligently make diſtinction, what is abrogate in the lawe, what remaineth yet in force. Where the Lord proteſteth that he not to deſtroie the lawe, but to fulfill it: and that till heauen arth paſſe away, no one iote of the lawe ſhoulde paſſe away, but all ſhoulde be fulfilled: he ſufficiently confirmeth that by his ning nothing ſhould be taken away from the due keeping of the

. And for good cauſe: ſith he came rather for this ende, to heale es. Wherefore the doctrine of the lawe remaineth for all Chri, inuiolable, which by teaching, admoniſhing, rebuking and cor-g may frame and prepare vs to euery good worke.

As for thoſe thinges that Paule ſpeaketh of the curſe, it is eui-that they belong not to the very inſtruction, but onely to the of binding the conſcience. For the lawe not onely teacheth, but ith authoritie requireth that which it commaundeth. If it be erfourmed, yea if duety be ſlacked in any parte, it bendeth her erboulte of curſe. For this cauſe the Apoſtle ſaith, that all they Gala. 3. re of the workes of the lawe, are ſubiect to the curſe, bycauſe it 10. ten: Curſed is euery one, that fulfilleth not all. And he ſaieth, Deu. 27 hey be vnder the workes of the lawe, that do not ſet righteouſ- 26. n the forgeueneſſe of ſinnes, by which we are looſed from the of the lawe. He teacheth therefore that we muſt be looſed from ndes of the lawe, vnleſſe we will miſerably periſh vnder them. om what bondes? the bondes of that rigorous and ſharp exa-hat releaſeth nothing of the extremitie of the lawe, and ſuffreth y offence vnpuniſhed. From this curſe (I ſay) that Chriſt might e vs, he was made a curſe for vs. For it is written: Curſed is Gal. 3. one that hangeth vpon the tree. In the chapter following in 12. and 5. 4.

deede he saith, that Christ was made subiect to the lawe, to redeme them that were vnder the lawe: but all in one meaning, for he by-andby addeth, that by adoption we might receiue the right of children. What is that? that we shoulde not be oppressed with perpetuall bondage, that shoulde holde our conscience fast strained with anguish of death. In the meane time this alway remaineth vnshake, that there is nothing withdrawen of the authority of the lawe, but that it ought still to be receiued of vs with the same reuerence and obedience.

16 Of ceremonies it is otherwise, which were abrogate not in effect, but in vse onely. And this, that Christ by his comming hath made an ende of them, doth so nothing diminish their holinesse, that it rather setteth them forth, and maketh them glorious. For as they shoulde haue geuen but a vaine shew to the olde people, vnlesse the power of the death & resurrection of Christ had bene shewed therin: so if they had not ceased, we coulde not at this day discerne to what purpose they were ordained. Therefore Paule, to proue that the hoping of them now is not onely superfluous, but also hurtfull, teacheth Col. 2. 17. that they were shadowes wherof we haue the body in Christ. We see therefore how in the abolishing of them, the trueth shineth better than if they did still a farre of, and as it were with a veile spred before, shewe a figure of Christ that hath already plainely appeared. And Mat. 27 51. therefore the veile of the temple at the death of Christ was rent in two peeces and fell downe: because now the true and expres image of the heauenly good thinges was come to light, which before had bene but vnperfectly begonne with darke rude daughters, as the au- Heb. 10 1. thor of the Epistle to the Hebrues saith. Herevnto serueth that Luk 16. 26. of Christ, that the lawe & the Prophetes were vnto the time of Iohn, and that from that time forwarde, the kingdome of God began to be ioyfully preached: not meaning that the holy fathers were without the preaching that cõtaineth the hope of saluation, & of eternall life, but because a farre of, and vnder shadowes only they did behold that which we at this day see in the full light. But why it behoued that the church of God shoulde climbe vp hyer from those first instructions, Iohn. 1. 15. Iohn the Baptist declareth: for that the lawe is geuen by Moses, but grace and trueth beganne by Iesus Christ. For although the pardon of sinnes were truely promised in the olde sacrifices, and the Ancient couenant was a sure pledge of the fatherly fauor of God: yet this had bene but a shadowe, if it had not bene grounded vpon the grace of Christ, wherein is founde, perfect, and eternall stedfastnesse. Let this then remaine sure, that although the cremonial vsages of the lawe haue ceased to be obserued, yet by the ende of them it is er knowne howe great was the profit of them before Christes cō-g, which in taking away the vse of them hath sealed the force and ct of them with his death.

7 Somewhat more hard is the point that Paule noteth. And he Col.2. h renued you together with him, when ye were dead by sinnes, and 12. vncircumcision of your flesh, forgiuing you all your offences, blot-out the handwriting that remained in the decrees against vs, ch was contrary vnto vs, and he hath taken it away, fastening it to crosse. &c. For he seemeth to stretch the abolishing of the lawe ewhat further that now we haue nothing to do with the decrees reof. For they erre that expounde it of the lawe morall, whose peasable rigor rather then doctrine thereof they thinke to be ta-away. Some more depely waying the wordes of Paule, do espie t it is properly spoken of the lawe ceremoniall, and do shew that worde Decree, doth more than once so signifie in Paule. For to Ephe.2.
Ephesians he saith thus: He is our peace, that maketh both to be 14.
, that maketh voide the lawe of commaundementes consisting in decrees, that he might make two in himselfe into one newe man. no dout that he speaketh there of the ceremonies, for he calleth e partition wherewith the Iewes were seuered from the Gentiles: refore I graunt that those first expositors are rightfully reproued ese: but yet me thinkes that these do not sufficiently well set forth minde of the Apostle. For I like not at all, to haue these two pla-compared together in all pointes, when his purpose was to aduer-the Ephesians of their adoption into the fellowship of Israel, he heth that the stop is taken away, wherby they were before time asunder, that was in ceremonies. For the vsages of washinges and fices, wherewith the Iewes were made holy vnto the Lorde, do them from the Gentiles. But in the Epistle to the Colossians, seeth not that he toucheth a hyer misterie? In deede the point e disputation there, is of Mosaicall obseruations wherevnto the Apostles did labor to driue the Christian people. But, as in the le to the Galathians he fetcheth that controuersie further of, and were bringeth it backe to the first head therof, so doth he also in lace. For if in the ceremonies you consider nothing els but a ssinie of the vse of them, to what purpose was it, to call it a hand-ng against vs? moreouer to set the whole summe in a maner of edemption in this, that it shoulde be cancelled? Wherefore the er it selfe trieth out, that here is some more secret thing to be cō-d. And I trust that I haue attained the naturall vnderstanding of t leaste this be graunted me to be true, which in one place is most truely written by Auguſtine, yea that he hath taken out of the plaine Heb.7. & 9. & 10. wordes of the Apoſtle, that in the Iewiſh ceremonies was rather confeſſiō than a clenſing of ſinnes. For what did they els by ſacrifices but confeſſe them ſelues in their conſcience guilty of death, that ſhould put clenſinges in their place? What did they with their clenſinges, but teſtifie them ſelues to be vncleane? And ſo was the handwriting of their ſinne, and vncleanneſſe oft renued by them, but there was no diſcharge in that teſtifying thereof. For which cauſe the Apoſtle writeth Heb. 9. 15. that at length by meane of the death of Chriſt, was performed the redemption of the offences that remained vnder the olde Teſtament. Therfore the Apoſtle doth worthily cal the ceremonies handwritinges againſt thoſe that obſerue them: foraſmuch as by them they did openly ſeale to their owne damnation and vncleanneſſe. And it hindereth not, that they were alſo partakers of the ſame grace with vs. For that they obteined in Chriſt, not in the ceremonies, which there the Apoſtle doth ſeuer from Chriſt, becauſe being at that time vſed, they did obſcure the glorie of Chriſt. Thus learne we, that the ceremonies if they be conſidered by themſelues, are well and fitly called hand writinges againſt the ſaluation of men, becauſe they were as ſeales or inſtrumentes that teſtified their being bounde. When the falſe Apoſtles went about to binde the Chriſtian Church to them againe Paul did not without cauſe admoniſh the Coloſſians, by fetching the ſignification of them further of, to what pointe they ſhoulde fall backe againe, if they ſuffered them ſelues in ſuch ſorte to be yoked by them. For therewithal was the benefite of Chriſt wreſted away from them, in as much as he hauing once performed the eternall clenſing, had vtterly aboliſhed thoſe dayly obſeruations, which were only of force to ſeale ſinnes, but coulde do nothing to the putting away of them.

The viij. Chapter.

An expoſition of the Morall lawe.

HEre I thinke it ſhall not be from the purpoſe, to expound the tenne commaundementes of the lawe with a ſhort expoſition of them, becauſe thereby both that ſhall beſt appeare which I haue touched, that the ſame keping of the which God hath once appointed, remaineth yet in force: and that alſo we ſhall haue beſides that a proofe of the ſeconde point, that the Iewes did not only learne by it what was the true force of godlines, but alſo by the terror of the iudgement, ſith they ſaw themſelues not able to keepe it, they were compelled whether they woulde or no to be drawen to the Mediator. Nowe in ſetting forth the ſumme ſe things that are required in the true knowledge of God, we haue ready taught, that we cannot conceiue him according to his great-ſſe, but that byandby his maieſty preſenteth it ſelfe vnto vs, to binde o the worſhip of him. In the knowledge of our ſelues we haue ſet s for the chiefe point, that being voide of the opinion of our owne ength, and cleane ſtripped of the truſt of our owne righteouſneſſe, l on the other ſide diſcouraged and beaten downe with conſcience our owne nedineſſe, we ſhoulde learne perfect humilitie and aſement of our ſelues. The Lord ſetteth forth both theſe pointes in lawe, where firſt chalenging to himſelfe due power to gouerne, calleth vs to the reuerence of his diuine maieſtie, and apointeth t vnto vs wherein it ſtandeth and conſiſteth: and then publiſhing ule of his righteouſneſſe, (againſt the righteouſneſſe whereof our ure as it is peruerſe and crooked, doth alway ſtriue, and beneth the rfection whereof our power as of it ſelfe it is weake and feble to good, lieth a greate way belowe) he reproueth vs both of weakeſſe and vnrighteouſneſſe. Moreouer that inwarde lawe which we ue before ſaid to be grauen and as it were imprinted in the hartes al men, doth after a certaine maner enforme vs of the ſame thinges t are to be learned of the two tables. For our conſcience doth not er vs to ſleepe a perpetuall ſleepe without feeling, but that it inrdly is a witneſſe and admoniſher of thoſe thinges that we owe to d, and layeth before vs the difference of good and euill, and ſo aceth vs when we ſwarue from our duetie. But man being wrapped in h darkeneſſe of errours as he is, ſkarſe eué ſlenderly taſteth by that e of nature, what worſhip pleaſeth God: but truely he is very farre ant from the right knowledge thereof. Beſide that, he is ſo ſwollen h arrogancie and ambition, and ſo blinded with ſelfe loue, that he not yet looke vpon, and as it were, deſcend into him ſelfe to learne ſubmit and humble him ſelfe, and confeſſe his owne miſerie. There (as it was neceſſary both for our dulneſſe and ſtubborneſſe) the rde hath ſet vs a lawe written, which ſhoulde both more certainely ine that which in the law naturall was too obſcure, and alſo ſhould e away our drowſineſſe, and more liuely touche our minde and embraunce.

Nowe it is eaſy to vnderſtand what is to be learned of the lawe, is, that as God is our creator, ſo of right he hath the place of our er and Lorde, and that by this reaſon we owe to him glorie, re-ence, loue and feare. Yea and alſo that we are not at our owne liies to followe whether ſo euer that luſt of our minde doth moue but that we ought to hang vpon his becke, and to reſt onely vpon that which pleaſeth him. Then we learne, that he deliteth in righ-ouſneſſe and vprightneneſſe, that he abhorreth wickednesſe, and therefore, that vnleſſe we will with wicked vnthankefulneſſe fall away from our creator, we muſt neceſſarily obſerue righteouſneſſe all our life long.

For if then only we yelde vnto him the reuerence that we owe, when we prefer his will before our owne, it followeth, that there is no other due worſhip of him, but the obſeruation of righteouſneſſe, holi-neſſe & cleannesſe. Neither may we pretend this excuſe that we want power, and like waſted detters be not able to pay. For it is not conuenient that we ſhoulde meaſure the glory of God by our own power: for whatſoeuer we be, he alway abideth like to himſelfe, a louer of righteouſneſſe, a hater of wickednesſe. What ſoeuer he requireth of vs (becauſe he cā require nothing but that which is right) by bonde of nature we muſte of neceſſitie obey: but that we are not able, is our owne fault. For if we be holden bounde of our owne fa-wherin ſin reigneth, ſo ý we are not loſe at libertie to obey our ſinne, there is no cauſe why we ſhould allege neceſſitie for our defence, ſeing euill wherof is both within vs, and to be imputed vnto our ſelues.

3 When we haue thus farre profited by the teaching of the law, then muſt we by the teaching of the ſame lawe alſo deſcend vnto ſelues: whereby at length we may cary awaie two thinges. The firſt is, by comparing the righteouſneſſe of the lawe with our life, to learne, that we are farre of from being able to ſatisfie the will of God, and that therefore we are not worthy to haue place among his creatures, much leſſe to be reckened among his children. The ſecond is, in conſidering our ſtrength, to learne that it is not onely inſufficient to fulfill the lawe, but alſo vtterly none at all. Hereupon followeth both a diſtruſt of our owne ſtrength, and a care and fearefulneſſe of minde. For conſcience can not beare the burden of iniquitie, but that byandby the iudgement of God is preſent before it: and the vengea-ment of God can not be felte, but that it ſtriketh into vs a dreadful horrour of death. And likewiſe being conſtrained with proues of his owne weakeneſſe, it can not chooſe but byandby fall into deſpaire of her own ſtrength. Both theſe affectiōs do engendre humility & aſtonment of courage. So at length it commeth to paſſe, that man made afraide with feling of eternal death, which he ſeeth to hang ouer him by the deſcruing of his owne vnrighteouſneſſe, turneth him ſelfe to the only mercy of God, as to the onely hauen of ſaluation: that ſeing that it is not in his power to pay that he oweth vnto the lawe, deſpe-ring in him ſelfe, he may take breath againe and beginne to cralooke for helpe from els where.

4 Be

But the Lord not contented to haue procured a reuerẽce of his teousneſſe, hath alſo added promiſes and threatninges, to fill our nes with loue of him, and with hatred of wickednesſe. For, becauſe minde is to blinde, to be moued with the onely beauty of goodſe, it pleaſed the moſt mercifull Father of his tender kindeneſſe, to re vs with ſweeteneſſe of rewardes, to loue and long for him. He nounceth therefore, that with him are rewardes layd vp for ver-, and that he ſhall not ſpende his labour in vaine, whoſoeuer he be, ſhall obey his commaundementes. He proclaimeth on the other , that he not only abhorreth vnrighteouſneſſe, but alſo that it ſhal eſcape vnpuniſhed, for that he will be a reuenger of the contempt his maieſty. And to exhort vs by all meanes, he promiſeth as well bleſſinges of this preſent life, as alſo eternall bleſſednesſe, to their dience that keepe his commaundementes: and to the tranſgreſrs therof, he threatneth both preſent miſeries and the puniſhment eternall death. For the ſame promiſe, (he that doth theſe thinges, ll liue in them:) and alſo the threateninge that anſwereth it, (the le that ſinneth, that ſame ſhall die) do without dout belong to the nortality or death that is to come, and ſhall neuer be ended. Albe-whereſoeuer is mentioned the good will or wrath of God, vnder one is contained the eternity of life, vnder the other eternall de-ction. Of preſent bleſſinges and curſes there is a long regiſter rerſed in the law. And in the penall ordinaunces appeareth the ſo-aigne cleanneſſe of God, that can ſuffer no iniquity: but in his pro-es, beſide his great loue of righteouſneſſe, (which he cannot finde is heart to defraude of her reward) there is alſo proued his mar-ous bountifullneſſe. For whereas we and all ours are indetted vnto maieſty, by good right whatſoeuer he requireth of vs, he demaunit as due det, but the payment of det is not worthy of rewarde. erfore he departeth with his owne right, whẽ he offereth reward ur obediences, which we do not yeld of our ſelues as things that e not due: but what thoſe promiſes do bring vnto vs, is partly ſayd dy, and partly ſhall appeare more plainly in place fit for it. It ſuffi-for this preſent, if we remember and conſider, that there is in the miſes of the law, no ſmall commendation of righteouſneſſe, that it the more certainely appeare howe much the keepinge thereof ſeth God: that the penall ordinaunces are ſet for the more dete-on of vnrighteouſneſſe, leaſt the ſinner, delited with the ſwete flat-ngs of vices, ſhould forget that the iudgement of the lawmaker is pated for him.

Leu. 18. 5. Eze. 18. 4. & 20.

Leu. 26. 4. De. 28. 1

Now whereas the Lord giuing a rule of perfect righteouſneſſe, hath applied all the partes thereof to his owne will, therein is dered that nothing is to him more acceptable than obedience, w is ſo much more diligētly to be marked, as the wantonneſſe of m minde is more ready to deuiſe nowe and then diuerſe ſortes of w ſhipping to winne his fauour withall. For in all ages that irrelig affectation of religion, becauſe it is naturally planted in the wit man, hath ſhewed and yet doth ſhew foorth it ſelfe, that men do d delite to inuent a way to obtaine righteouſneſſe beſide the w God, wherby it commeth to paſſe, that the commaundements o law haue but ſmale place among the workes that are commonly led good works, while that innumerable route of mens workes w Deu.12. pieth almoſt all the roome. But what other thing meant Moſes 28. to reſtraine ſuch licentiouſneſſe, when after the publiſhing of the he ſpake thus to the people: Giue heede, and heare all ỹ things t commaund thee, that it may be well to thee and to thy children thee for euer, when thou ſhalt do that which is good and plea before thy God. What I commaunde thee, that onely do vnto it, nor diminiſh it. And before, when he had proteſted, that was his wiſedom and vnderſtanding before other nations that h receiued iudgementes, righteouſneſſe and ceremonies of the La Deu.4. ſayd further, keepe therefore thy ſelfe & thy ſoule carefully, that 9. forget not the wordes which thine eyes haue ſeene, and that time they fall out of thy heart. For, becauſe God did foreſee, that Iſraelites woulde not reſt, but that after they had receiued the l they would beſide it trauaile in bringinge foorth new righteouſ if they were not ſeuerely holden backe: therfore he pronounceth herein is contained the perfection of righteouſneſſe, which haue bin the ſtrongeſt ſtay to hold them backe, and yet they di from that boldneſſe ſo much forbidden them. But what of ri ſurely comprehended within the ſame charge: for it is no doub that continueth ſtill whereby the Lord hath chalenged to his la abſolute doctrine of righteouſneſſe, yet we not contented ther do monſtruouſly trauaile with forginge and coyninge of newe workes one vpon an other. For the healing of this fault, the hol medy ſhalbe, if this thought ſhalbe ſtedfaſtly ſettled in vs, that is giuen vs from God to teach vs a perfect righteouſneſſe: that is taught no righteouſneſſe, but the ſame that is examined, by pointed rule of Gods will: that therefore new formes of wo vainely attempted to winne the fauour of God, whoſe true ſtandeth in onely obedience: but rather that ſuch ſtudy of good as wandereth out of the lawe of God, is an intolerable de s righteousnes and of the true righteousnes Augustine also sayth truely, which calleth the obedience that is done to God, some- e the mother and keeper, somtime the originall of all vertues. Lib.4. de ciui. Dei. ca. 12. de bono coniugali cõtra aduer. Legis & proph. 6.

But when we haue expounded the lawe of the Lord, then more and with more profite shall that be confirmed which I haue be- spoken of the office & vse of the law. But before that I beginne scusse euery seuerall commaundement by it selfe, it shall be good to giue such lessons as serue to the vniuersall knowledge therof. let vs hold for determined, that the life of mã is instructed in the not onely to outward honesty, but also to inward and spirituall teousnesse. Which thinge whereas no mãn can deny, yet there ewe that rightly marke it. That commeth to passe, because they e not vpon the lawmaker, by whose nature the nature of the law ought to be weyed. If any king do by proclamation forbid to cõ- fornication, to kill, or to steale: in this case I graunt that if a man nly conceiue in his minde a lust to commit fornication, to sinne, o steale, and do not commit any of these thinges in dede, he is out he compasse of this prohibitiõ. And the reason is, for that because foresight of a mortal lawmaker, could not extend but to outward ary: his commaundementes are not broken, but when the out- d offences are committed. But God (whose eye nothing escapeth, which regardeth not so much the outward shew as the cleannes he heart) vnder the forbidding of fornication, manslaughter and ft, forbiddeth lust, wrath, hatred, coueting of an other mans, guile, whatsoeuer is like to these. For insomuch as he is a spiritual law- er, he speaketh no lesse to the soule than to the body. But the mã- ghter of the soule, are wrath and hatred: the theft of the soule, is l desire and couetousnesse: the fornication of the soule, is lust. mans lawes also (will some man say) haue regard to ententes & es, and not to successes of fortune. I graunt, but yet they are such entes and willes, as haue outwardly broken out. They weye with at entent euery outwarde act hath bin done, but they searche the secrete thoughtes. Therefore they are satisfied when a man ly withholdeth his handes from offendinge. On the other side, ause the heauenly lawe is made for our myndes, therefore the raynte of myndes is principally needefull to the keepinge there- But the common sorte of menne, euen when they mightily emble there contempt of the lawe, do frame their eyes, their e, their handes, and all the partes of their body to some obseruã- n of the law, in the meane time they hold their heart most farre of n all obedience, and thinke themselues well discharged, if they keepe close frō men ỹ which they do in the sight of God. They heare it sayd: Thou shalt not kill: Thou shalt not commit adultery: Thou shalt not steale: they draw not out their swerd to kill: they ioyne not their bodies with harlots: they lay not their handes vpon other mens goods. All this is well hitherto. But in their whole heartes they breath out murders, they boile in lust, they cast their eyes aside at all mens goods, and deuour them with couetinge. Now wanteth that which was the chiefe point of the lawe. Whense, I pray you, commeth this grosse dulnesse, but that leauing the lawemaker, they rather measure righteousnesse by their owne wit? Against these doth Paul mightily Rom. 7. 14. crie out, affirming that the law is spirituall: whereby he meaneth, that it not onely demaundeth an obedience of the soule, minde and will, but also requireth an Angelike pureneſſe, which hauing all the filthinesse of the flesh cleane wiped away, may sauour nothinge but of the spirite.

7 When we say that this is the meaninge of the lawe, we stand not in a new exposition of our owne, but we follow Christ the best expositour of the law. For when the Pharisees had infected the peo- Matt. 5. 21. ple with a false opinion, that he performeth the law that hath with outward worke committed nothing against the law, he reproueth this most perilous errour, and pronounced that vnchast looking at a woman is fornication: he protested that they are manslayers that hate their brother, for he maketh them guilty of iudgement that haue but conceiued wrath in their minde, and them guilty of the counsell that haue murmuring or grudging haue vttered any token of a displeased mind, and them guilty of Hell fier, that with tauntes and railing breake forth into open anger. They that haue not espied these thinges, haue imagined Christ to be an other Moses, the giuer of the law of the Gospell, which supplied the imperfection of the law of Moses. Whereupon commeth that common principle of the perfection of the law of the Gospell, which far passeth the old law, which is a most pernicious opinion. For hereafter, where we shall gather a summe of the commandementes, it shall appeare by Moses himselfe, how reprochfully they dishonor the law of God. Truely it sheweth that all the holinesse of the fathers did not much differ from hypocrisie, & it leadeth vs away from that only and perfect rule of righteousnesse. But it is very easie to confute that errour: for that they thought that Christ did adde somewhat to the law, whereas he did but restore the law to her integrity, which he made it free, & clensed it being obscured with lies, and defiled with leuen of the Pharises.

8 Let this be our second note, that there is alway more concupishe commaundementes and prohibitions, than is by words expref, which yet is so to be tempered, that it be not like a Lesbion rule, ereby licentiously wresting the Scriptures, we may make of euery g what we list. For many bring to passe by this vnmeasured liberof running at large, that with some the authority of Scripture groh in contempt, and other some despeire of vnderstanding it. There, if it be possible, we must take some such way, that may by right perfect path lead vs to the will of God, we must I say search how e our exposition may exceede the boundes of the wordes, that it y appeare that it is not an additiō of mens gloses knit to the word God, but rather that the pure and naturall meaning of the lawgi-is faithfully rendred. Truely in a manner in all the commaunde-es it is so manifest, that there are figuratiue speaches, meaninge e in expressing parte that he may worthily be laughed at that will raine the meaning of the law to the narrowneſſe of the wordes. It ident therfore, that sober expositiō doth passe beyond the words: how farre, that remayneth hard to iudge, vnlesse there be some sure appointed: wherefore I thinke this to be the best measure, if it be directed to the entēt of the commaundement, that is, that uery commaundement be weyed, why it was giuen vs. As for ex-ple: Euery commaundement is either by way of bidding, or of fording: the trueth of both sortes shall foorth with be founde, if we sider the intent or the end thereof. As the end of the fift commasient is, that honor is to be giuen to them to whom God appoin-it. This therefore is the summe of the commaundement, that it ght and pleaseth God, that we honor them to whom he hath gi-any excellency, and that he abhorreth contempt and stubborn-e against them. The intent of the first commaundement is, that d alone be honored. The summe therefore of the commaunde-at shall be, that true godlinesse, that is to say, true worshippe of maiesty pleaseth God, and that he abhorreth vngodlinesse. So in ey commaundement we must looke, vpon what matter it treateth: n must we search out the ende, till we finde what the lawemaker h testifie therein properly to please or displease him: and last of all we draw an argument from the same to the contrary, after this er: If this pleaseth God, then the contrary displeaseth him: if this lease him, then the contrary pleaseth him: if he commaunde this, he forbiddeth the contrary, if he forbid this then he commaunthe contrary.

That which is now somewhat darkely touched, shall in expoun-of the commaundements become very plaine by practise, wherfore it ſuffiſeth to haue touched it, ſauinge that this laſt point, is to be ſhortly confirmed with ſome prouſe thereof, becauſe otherwiſe either it ſhould not be vnderſtanded, or being vnderſtand, it might perhaps at the beginning ſeeme to ſound like an abſurdity. This proceedeth no proofe, that when a good thing is commaunded, the euill is forbidden that is contrary to it: for there is no man but he wil graunt it me. And common iudgement will not much ſticke to admitte, that when euil thinges are forbidden, the contrary dueties are commaunded by an vniuerſall opinion that vertues are commended, when the contrary vices are condēned. But we require ſomwhat more than thoſe forms of ſpeach do ſignifie commonly among the people. For they for the moſt parte take the vertue contrary to any vice, to be the abſtaining from the ſame vice: we ſay that it proceedeth farther, that is to ſay, trary dueties & doings. Therfore in this commaundemēt, Thou ſhalt not kill the common ſenſe of men will conſider nothing elſe, but that we muſt abſtaine frō all hurt doing, or luſt to do hurt. I ſay that there is further contained, that we ſhould by all the helpes that we may ſuccour the life of our neighbour. And, leaſt I ſpeake without a reaſon, I proue it thus: God forbiddeth that our brother be hurt or miuſed, becauſe he willeth that our neighbours life be deare & precious vnto vs: he doth therfore require withal thoſe duties of loue that may be done by vs for ỹ preſeruation of it. And ſo may we ſee how the ende of the commaundement doth alway diſcloſe vnto vs all that we are therein commaunded or forbidden to do.

10 But why God, in ſuch as it were halfe cōmaundements, hath by figures rather ſecretly ſignified, than expreſſed what his will is, whereas there are wont to be many reaſons rendered therof, this one reaſon pleaſeth me aboue the reſt. Becauſe ỹ fleſh alway endeuoureth to extenuate the filthineſſe of ſinne, & to colour it with faire preſes, ſauing where it is euē palpable for groſſenes, he hath ſet forth an example in euery kinde of offenſe that which was moſt wicked abhominable, at the hearing whereof our very ſenſes might be moued with horrour, thereby to imprint in our mindes a more hayn deteſtinge of euery ſorte of ſinne. This many times deceiueth weying of vices, that if they be any thing ſecret, we make them ſeem ſmall. Theſe deceites the Lord doth diſcloſe, when he accuſtometh to referre all the whole multitude of vices to theſe principall heads which do beſt of all ſhew, how much euery kinde is abhominable for example, wrath and hatred are not thought ſo haynous when they are called by their owne names, but whē they are forbidden vs vnder the name of manſlaughter, we better vnderſtand how nable they are before God, by whose word they are set in the gree of so horrible an offense: and we moued by his iudgement, do ustome our selues better to wey the haynousnesse of those faultes t before seemed but light vnto vs.

Thirdly is to be considered, what meaneth the diuiding of the e of God into two tables, whereof all wise men will iudge that re is sometime mention made not vnfitly from the purpose, not thout cause. And we haue a cause ready, that doth not suffer vs to nayne in dout of this matter. For God so diuided his law into two es, in which is contayned the whole righteousnesse, that he hath gned the first to the dueties of religiō that do peculiarly pertaine he worshipping of his Godhead, the other to the dueties of Cha-which belong vnto men. The first foundation of righteousnesse e worship of God: which being once ouerthrowen, all the other mbers of righteousnesse are torne in sunder and dissolued, like to partes of a house vniointed and fallen downe. For what manner ighteousnesse wilt thou call it, that thou vexest not menne with bery & extorcions, if in the meane time by wicked sacrilege thou yleſt Gods maiesty of his glory? that thou defilest not thy body n fornication, if with thy blasphemies thou prophanely abuse the ed name of God? that thou murthere st no man, if thou trauaill to roy and extinguish the memorie of God. Wherefore righteousse is vainly bosted of without religion, & maketh no better shew, n if a mangeled body with the head cutte of, shoulde be brought th for a beautifull sight. And religion is not onely the principall e of righteousnes, but also the very soule wherwith it breatheth: is quickned. For men keepe not equity and loue among themsel-without the feare of God. Therefore we say, that the worship of d is the beginning and foundation of righteousnes, because when taken away all the equity, continence and temperance that men amonge themselues, is vaine and triflinge before God. We say al-hat it is the springe heade and liuely breath of righteousnesse, bee hereby men do learne to liue amonge themselues temperately ithout hurt doing one to an other, if they reuerence God as the ge of right and wronge. Wherefore in the first table he instructeth godlinesse and the proper dueties of religion, wherewith his mais to be worshipped: in the other he prescribeth howe for the es sake of his name, we ought to behaue our selues in the fellow-of men. And for this reason our Lord (as the Euangelistes reherse Mat. 22 d in a summe gather the whole lawe into two principall pointes, 37. one that we should loue God with all our heart, with all our soule, Luc. 10. 27.

with all our ſtrength: the other, that we loue our neighbour as our ſelues. Thus thou ſeeſt how of the two partes wherein he conclude the whole law, he directeth the one toward God, & appointeth the other toward men.

12 But although the whole lawe be contained in two principal pointes, yet, to the ende to take away all pretenſe of excuſe, it pleaſed our God, to declare in the ten cõmaundements more largely & plainly all things that belong both to the honor, feare & loue of him, and alſo to that charity which he commaundeth vs to beare to men for his ſake. And thy ſtudy is not ill ſpent to know the diuiſion of the commaundementes, ſó that thou remember that it is ſuch a matter wherein euery man ought to haue his iudgement free, for which he ought not contentiouſly to ſtriue with him that thinketh otherwiſe. But we muſt needes touch this point, leaſt the readers ſhoulde either ſcorne or maruell at the diuiſion that we ſhall vſe, as newe and lately deuiſed. That the law is diuided in ten words, becauſe it is ofte repeated by the authority of God himſelfe, it is out of controuerſie, therefore there is no dout of the number, but of the manner of dividing. They that ſo diuide them, that they giue three commaundements to the firſt table, and put other 7. into the ſecond, do wipe out of the number the commaundement concerninge images, or at leaſt they hide it vnder the firſt: whereas without dout it is ſeuerally ſet by the Lord as a commaundement, and the tenth commaundement of not coueting the things of his neighbour, they do fondly teare into two. Before it ſhall byandby be done to vnderſtand, that ſuch manner of diuiſion was vnknowen in the purer age. Other do recken, as we do, ſome generall cõmaundementes in the firſt table, but in place of the firſt they ſet the promiſe without the commaundement. As for me, becauſe I am leſſe I be conuinced by euident reaſon, I take the ten wordes in ſuch ſenſes for ten commaundementes, me thinkes I ſee ſo many diuiſions in very fit order. Therefore, leauing to them their opinion, I will follow that which I beſt allowe, that is, that the ſame which theſe later make the firſt commaundement, ſhalbe in ſteede of a preface to the whole law, and then ſhal follow the commmaundements, foure in the firſt table, and ſixe of the ſeconde, in ſuch order as they ſhalbe numbred.

Libr. 2. qu. vet. Teſt. ſed. Auguſtine alſo to Boniface agreeth with vs which in rehearſing them kepeth this order: that God onely be ſerued with obedience religion, that no idole be worſhipped, that the name of the Lord be not taken in vaine, when he had before ſeuerally ſpoken of the ſabbath dowiſhe commaundement of the Sabbat. In an other place he ſaith that firſt diuiſion pleaſeth him, but for to ſclender a cauſe, that ſe in the number of three, if the firſt table cõſiſt of three cõmaunements, the miſtery of the trinity more plainly appeareth. Albeit in ſame place he ſticketh not to confeſſe that otherwiſe he rather li-h our diuiſion. Beſide theſe, the author of the Vnperfect worke v-Matthew is of our ſide, Ioſephus, vndoutedly according to the cõ n conſent of his time, aſſigneth to either table fiue commaunde-es. Which is both againſt reaſon, becauſe it confoundeth the diſion of religion & charity, and alſo is confuted by the authority he Lord himſelfe, which in Matthew reckeneth the commaunde-t of honoringe our parentes, in the number of the ſecond table. Mat. 19. 19.

w let vs heare God himſelfe ſpeaking in his owne wordes.

The firſt commaundement.

I am the Lord thy God, which haue brought thee out of the lande of AEgypt, out of the houſe of bondage. Thou ſhalt haue no ſtraunge Gods before my face.

Whether you make the firſt ſentence a parte of the firſt com-ndemẽt, or read it ſeuerally, it is indifferent to me, ſo that you do eny me that it ſtandeth in ſtede of a preface to the whole lawe. in making of lawes is heede to be taken, that they be not ſhortly abrogate by contempt. Therfore God firſt of all prouideth, that aieſty of the law that he ſhal make, may neuer at any time come ntempt. For ſtabliſhinge whereof he vſeth three maners of ar-ntes. Firſt he chalengeth to himſelfe power and right of domi-whereby he may conſtraine his choſen people, that they muſt of ſay obey him: thẽ he ſetteth forth a promiſe of grace with ſwetherof to allure them to ſtudy of holines. Thirdly he reciteth the s that he did for them, to reproue the Iewes of vnthankefulnes, y do not with obedience anſwere his kindnes. Vnder the name onah, the Lord, is meant his authority & lawful dominion. And ings be of him and do abide in him, it is right that all things be ed to him, as Paule ſayth. Therfore we are with this word alone Rom. 11. 36.
ently brought vnder the yoke of Gods maieſty, becauſe it were rnous for vs to ſeeke to withdrawe our ſelues from vnder his nment, out of whom we can not be.

After that he hath ſhewed that it is he that hath power to nd, to whom obedience is due, leaſt he ſhould ſeeme to draw ely neceſſity, he alſo allureth with ſweteneſſe in pronouncing, e is the God of the Church. For there is hidden in this ſpeach uall relation, which is contained in the promiſe: I will be to the Ier. 31. 33. Mat. 22. 32.
& they ſhalbe to me a people. Wherupon Chriſt proueth that Abraham, Isaac and Iacob haue immortall life, by this that God is stified that he is their God. Wherefore it is as much in effect, as if he should say thus: I haue chosen you to be my people, not only to d you good in this present life, but also to giue you ỹ blessednes of the life to come. But to what end this tendeth, it is noted in diuerse pla ces in the law. For when the Lord doth vouchsaue to deale thus mer cifully with vs, to call vs into the company of his people, he chooseth 15 Now followeth the rehearsall of his benefit, which ought be of so much more force to moue vs, as ỹ fault of vnthankefulnes more detestable euen among men. He then did put Israell in remem brance of a benefit lately done, but such a one as for the miracle greatnesse therof being worthy to be had in remembrance for ev should remaine in force with their posterity. Moreouer it is most ap able for this present matter. For ỹ Lord seemeth to say that they deliuered out of miserable bondage for this purpose, that they with obedience and redines of seruice honor him, the author of deliuerance. He vseth also, (to the end to hold vs fast in the true w shipping of him alone) to set out himselfe with certaine titles, wh he maketh his sacred maiesty to be differently knowen from all & forged gods. For, as I sayd before, such is our redy inclinatiō to nity, ioyned with rash boldnes, ỹ so soone as God is named, our can not take hede to it selfe, but that it byandby falleth away to vaine inuention. Therfore, when the Lord meaneth to bring a re for this mischiefe, he setteth out his owne godhead with certa tles and so doth compasse vs in, as it were within certaine grace we should wander hither and thither & rashly forge our selues new God, if forsaking ỹ liuing God, we should erect an idole. For cause, so oft as the Prophetes meane properly to point out him let this remaine stedfastly emprinted, that there is mention made the deliuerance to this end, that the Iewes might the more chere-y giue themselues to the God that doth by right claime them vnhim. And we (least we should thinke that the same nothing belonh to vs,) ought to consider, that the bondage of Ægipt is a figure he spiritual captiuity, wherin we are all holden bound, vntil our hely deliuerer do make vs free by the power of his arme, & conuey nto the kingdom of liberty. As therfore, when in the old time he ded to gather togeather the Israelites that were scattered abroad, he worshipping of his name, he deliuered them out of the intolele dominion of Pharao, wherwith they were oppressed: so al those hō at this day he professeth himselfe a God, he doth now deliuer he deadly power of the deuil, which was in a shadow signified by eporall bondage. Wherfore there is no man, but his minde ought e inflamed to harken to the law which he heareth to haue procefrō the soueraigne king. From whom as all things take their being, so is it meete that they haue also their ende appointed & died to him. There is no man (I say) but he ought to be rauished to eace the lawmaker, to the keeping of whose commaundementes, taught that he is peculiarly chosen frō whose bounty he looketh for flowing store of all good things, & also the glory of immortie by whose marueloꝰ power and mercy, he knoweth himselfe deliuered out of the iawes of death.

After that he hath grounded and stablished the authority of his he setteth forth the first cōmaundement, That we haue no straunge before him. The ende of this commaundement is, that God will haue preeminēcie, and wholly enioy his owne authority among people. And that it may so be, he commaundeth that there be far vs all vngodlines and superstition, whereby the glory of his god-e is either diminished or obscured: and by the same reason he maundeth, that we worshippe and honor him with true ende-of godlinesse. And the very simplicity of the wordes themselues a manner expresse the same, For we cannot haue God, but we also comprehende therein all thinges that properly belonge to Whereas therfore he forbiddeth vs to haue other Gods, he mea-itherby, that we should not giue away elsewhere ỹ which is proto him. For although ỹ things ỹ we owe vnto God be innumera-er not vnfitly they may be brought vnto foure principal points: ation, wherevnto as a thing hanging vpon it, is adioyned spiriobedience of cōscience: Affiance, Inuocation, & Thankesgiuing.

Adoration I call the reuerẽce & worſhip which euery one of vs deth vnto him, when he ſubmitteth himſelfe vnto his greatnes fore I do not without cauſe make this a part therof, y we yeelde conſciences in ſubiection to his lawe. Affiance is an aſſuredne ſting in him by reknowledging of his powers, whẽ repoſing al righteouſnes, power, trueth and goodnes in him, we thinke our bleſſed with onely partaking of him. Inuocation, is a reſorting minde to his faith and help as to our only ſuccour, ſo oft as ceſſity preſſeth vs. Thankeſgiuing, is a certaine thankefulnes the praiſe of all good things is giuen vnto him. Of theſe, as freth nothing to be conueyed away elſe where, ſo he commande to be wholly giuen to himſelfe. Neither ſhal it be enough to from hauing any ſtraunge God, vnleſſe thou reſtraine thy ſelfe that many wicked cõtemners are wont, which thinke the reſt to ſcorne all religions: but true religion muſt go before, wher mindes may be directed to the liuinge God, with knowledge they being endued, may aſpire to reuerence, feare & worſhip ieſty, to embrace the communicatinge of all his good thinges, where to ſeeke for his help, to reknowledge and aduaunce feſſion of praiſe the magnificence of his works, as to the only in all the doings of our life. Then, that we beware of peruerte ſtition, whereby our mindes ſwaruing from the true God, are hither and thither as it were vnto diuerſe gods. Wherefore, if cõtented with one God, let vs call to remembrance that which fore ſaid, that all forged gods are to be driuen farre away, and worſhip is not to be torne in ſunder, which he alone claimeth ſelfe. For it is not lawfull to take away any thing from his glor neuer ſo litle, but that all thinges that belong to him may maine with him. The percell of ſentence that followeth (Be face) encreaſeth the hainouſnes: for that God is prouoked ſo oft as we thruſt our owne inuentions in his place, as if a woman by bringing in an adulterer openly before her ſhould the more vexe his minde. Therefore when God with his preſent power & grace he looked vpon ỹ people choſen, the more to fray them from the wicked act of falling him, he glueth them warning that there can be no new gods in, but that he is witnes and beholder of their ſacrilege. For neſſe is encreaſed with much wickednes, that man thinketh his fleinges away he can begile the eyes of God. On the God crieth out that whatſoeuer we purpoſe, whatſoeuer we whatſoeuer we practiſe, it commeth in his ſight. Let therfore nce be cleane euen from the moſt ſecret thoughtes of ſwarueinge d him, if we will haue our religion to pleaſe the Lord. For he re-eth to haue the glory of his godhead whole & vncorrupted not y in outward confeſſion, but alſo in his eyes, which do behold the l ſecret corners of heartes.

The ſecond Commaundement.

Thou ſhalt not make to thee any grauen image, nor any ſimilitude of thoſe thinges that are in heauen aboue, or in earth beneth, or in the waters vnder the earth. Thou ſhalt not worſhip them, nor ſerue them.

In the firſt commaundement he pronounced that he is the one d beſide whom there are no other gods to be deuiſed or had, ſo , he more openly declareth what manner of God he is, and with kinde of worſhip he is to be honored: that we may not preſume orge any carnall thing for him. The end therfore of this comaunent is, that he will not haue the lawful worſhip of him, to be pro-ned with ſuperſtitious vſages. Wherfore in ſumme, he calleth and eth vs away from the carnall obſeruations, which our fooliſhe de is wont to inuent, when it conceiueth God according to her e groſneſſe. And therefore he frameth vs to the lawfull worſhip him, that is the ſpirituall worſhip, and which is appointed by him. peaketh of ỹ groſſeſt fault that is in this offenſe, namely outward ery. And there be two partes of this commaundement. The firſt ineth our liberty, that we do not preſume to make ſubiect to our es or by any forme to repreſent God, which is incomprehenſible. ſecond parte forbiddeth vs to honor any images for religions Moreouer he ſhortly reciteth all the formes wherewith he was to be expreſſed in ſhape, by the prophane and ſuperſtitious na-. By thoſe thinges that are in heauen, he meaneth the Sunne, the ne, and other Starres, and paraduenture alſo birdes, as expreſſing meaning in the fourth of Deuteronomy he meaneth as wel birdes rets. Which note I would not haue ſpoke of but that I ſaw ſome ulfully to apply it to Angels. Therefore I omit the other partes, Deut. 4. 15. ſe they are ſufficiently knowen of themſelues. And we haue aly in the firſt booke taught plainely enough, that whatſoeuer viſi-formes of God man doth inuent, they are directly contrary to his e, and that therefore ſo ſoone as images come foorth, true reli-is corrupted and defiled.

The penall ordinance that followeth ought not a litle to anaile ake of our ſlouthfulneſſe. For he threameth: That he is the Lord our God, a ielous God, that visiteth the iniquity of the fathers the children vnto the third and fourth generation, in them that his name, and sheweth mercy vnto thousandes to them that lo and keepe his commaundementes. This is asmuch in effect, as shoulde haue sayd, that it is he onely vpon whom we ought Here is in deede set the name El, which signifieth God. But is deriued of strength, to expresse the sense the better, I did not so to translate it, or to put it into the text. The he calleth him lous that can abide no fellow. Thirdly he affirmeth that he reuenger of his maiesty and glory if any do transferre it to or to grauen images, and that not with a shorte or slender but such as shall extende to the children and childrens childre childrens childrens children, that is such as shalbe followers fathers vngodlinesse: as also he sheweth a perpetuall mercy tifulnes vnto longe continuance of posterity, to those that lo and keepe his lawe. It is a common manner with God so to him the persone of a husband toward vs. For the coniunction with he bindeth himselfe vnto vs, when he receiueth vs into some of his church, is like vnto a certaine holy wedlocke, that stand by mutuall faithfulnes. As he doth all the dueties of a and true husband, so againe he requireth of vs such loue and as ought to be in wedlocke, that we yeelde not our soules to lust, and to filthy desires of the flesh, to be defiled by them. W pon he that rebuketh the Apostasie of the Iewes, complaineth they did throw away chastity, & were defiled with adulteries. T fore, as the husband, the more holy and chast that he himself more is he kindeled to anger if he see his wiues minde straūge louer. So the Lord that hath wedded vs vnto himselfe in Ier. 3. Osee. 2. testifieth that he hath a most feruently burning iealousie, so oft as cting the pureties of his holy mariage, we are defiled with stes, but specially then when we transferre to any other, or with any superstition the worshippe of his name, which ought most vncorrupted. Forasmuch as by this meane we do not only the faith giuen in wedlocke, but also do defile the very wedding with bringing into it adulterers.

19 In the threatening is to be seene what he meaneth by this he sayth, that he will visite the iniquity of the fathers vpon the dren vnto the third and fourth generation. For, beside that it not with the equity of Gods iustice, to punish the innocent for offence. God himselfe also saith, that he will not make the sonne Eze. 18.

repeated, of prolonging the punishmēt of the sinnes of the auns vpon the generations to come. For so doth Moses oftentimes Num. 14 e vnto him: Lord, Lord, that rendrest the iniquity of the fathers 8. children, vnto the third & fourth generation. Likewise Ieremy: Ier. 32. u that shewest mercy in thousandes, that rendrest the iniqui- 18. the fathers into the bosome of the children after them. Many, they trauaile much in losinge this knot, thinke that it is to be standed onely of temporall punishmentes, which if the children for the parentes faultes, it is no absurdity, forasmuch as they are times layed vpon them for their saluation, which is in dede true when that is alleaged for assoilinge of this question, it is rather a 17. & 20 than a true exposition. For here & in like places he threatneth a 3. greuous reuenge thā that it may be limited within the bounds his present life. It is therefore thus to be taken: that the iust curse e Lord, lieth not only vpon the head of the wicked mā himselfe, also vpon his whole family: whē the curse once lieth vpon them, is else to be looked for, but that the father being destitute of the of God, line most wickedly, and the sonne likewise forsaken of Lord for the fathers fauls, do follow the same way of destruction: ally, the childes child, & the childe of the childes childe, the cur-eede of detestable men do fall headlong after them?

First let vs see, whether such reuēge be vnsemely for the iustice od. If all the nature of man be dāmable, we know that destruction epared for them, to whom the lord vouchsaueth not to commu-e his grace, Neuertheles they do perish by their own vnrighteous e, & not by vnrighteous hatred of God. Neither is there left any e to quarell, why they be not holpen by ỹ grace of God to salua-as other are. Wheras therfore this punishmēt is laid vpon wicked & euil doers for their offenses, that their houses be depriued of the e of God during many generations: who can accuse God for this iust reuenge? But ỹ Lord on ỹ other side pronounceth, that ỹ pumēt of ỹ fathers sinne shal not passe ouer vnto ỹ sonne. Note what ere entreated of. When the Israelites had bin long & continually Eze. 18. ed w many calamities, they began to vse for a Prouerbe, that their 20. ers had eatē a sower grape, wherwith the childrens teeth were set dge: whereby they meant that their fathers had cōmited sinnes, whereof they, being otherwise righteous, and not deserving it, suffer the punishment, rather by the vnappeaseable wrathfulnes God, than by a moderate severity. The Prophet pronounceth thé ẏ it is not so: because they are punished for their owne offe & that it standeth not with the iustice of God, ẏ the righteous shoulde suffer punishment for the naughtinesse of the wicked Which thing also is not contained in this present ordinance. For Visiting, wherof mention is now made, be fulfilled when the lo keth away from the house of the wicked his grace, the light o trueth and other helps of saluation: in this that the children be blinded & forsaken of him, do go on in the steps of their fathers susteine curses for their fathers offenses. But inasmuch as the put to temporall miseries, & at last to eternal destruction, herein are punished by the iust iudgement of God, not for ẏ sinnes of but for their owne iniquity.

21 On the other side is offered a promise of enlarging the of God into a thousand generatiõs, which promise is also often in the Scriptures, & is set in ẏ solemne couenant of the church petuall rule as should derogate his free electiõ. For it sufficeth comforte of the righteous and for the terrour of the sinner, th penalty is not vaine or of no effect, although it do not alwa

The third Commaundement.

Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vaine.

he ende of this commaundement is, that his will is to haue the sty of his name to be holy amõg vs. Therfore the summe shalbe, we do not defile it with cõtempteously and irreuerently vsing it. which prohibition the commaundement hangeth orderly toes, that we take studie and care godlily to reuerence it. Therfore ght so to order our selues both in our mindes and our tonges, we neither thinke nor speake any thing of God himselfe or his ries, but reuerently and with much sobrietie: that in weying his es, we conceiue nothing but honorable towarde him. These thinges I say, it behoueth vs not negligently to marke, that what r our minde conceiueth of him, what soeuer our tong vttereth, y sauour of his excellencie, and may agree with the holy high-of his name: and finally may serue to aduaunce his magnificẽce, we do not rashly or disorderly abuse his holy word and reuerẽd ries either to ambition, or to couetеousnesse, or to our owne ges: but that as they beare the dignitie of his name emprinted m, so they may keepe their honour and estimation among vs.
of all, that we do not carp against or speake euill of his workes, ese wretched men are wont to babble reprochefully against thẽ: hat what soeuer we rehearse done by him, we reporte it with es of praise of his wisedome, righteousnesse & goodnesse. That sanctifie the name of God. Where otherwise is done, it is defiled vaine and peruerse abuse, bycause it is violently carried from the se wherunto onely it was apointed: and though there be no hurt done, yet it is spoiled of his dignitie, and by little and little ght to contempe. Now, if there be so much euil in this rash readito vse the name of God out of season, much more mischiefe is , if it be employed to euill vses, as they do that make it to serue perstitions of Necromantie, cruell execrations, vnlawfull con-ons, and other wicked enchauntementes. But swearing is chiefly ioned in the commaundement, as the thing wherin the peruerse e of Gods name is most detestable, that thereby we may be the better altogether frayed away from all defiling thereof. But that is commaundement geuen of the worſhip of God, and of the rence of his name, and not of the truthe and equitie that is to among men, appeareth by that that he afterwarde in the ſecond condemneth periurie and falſe witneſſe, whereby hurte is done fellowſhip of men: but it were in vaine to repete it againe, if this maundement entreated of the dutie of charitie. And alſo the of the lawe it ſelfe requireth it, bycauſe as it is ſaid, God did vaine apointe two tables for his lawe, whereby is gathered this commaundement he chalengeth his owne right to himſelf 23 Firſt is to be learned what is an othe. It is a taking of G witneſſe, to confirme the truthe of that which we ſpeake. For curſed ſpeaches that conteine manifeſt reproches againſt God, vnworthy to be reckened among othes. That ſuch taking to wit whan it is rightly done, is a kinde of worſhipping of God, is and vnchaungeable truthe, whome we call vpon, not onely ſubſtantiall witneſſe of truth aboue all other, but alſo as the ſenſe thereof, which is able to bring forth hidden thinges and then as the knower of heartes. For where teſtimonies do faile, there we flee to God for witneſſe, ſpecially where is to be proued that lieth ſecrete in conſcience. For which

The name of the Lorde is made vile and common, when it is ſuperfluous othes, although they be true. For in ſuch caſe it is ken in vaine. Wherfore it ſhal not be ſufficient to abſteine from ng falſely, vnleſſe we do alſo remember, that ſwearing was ſufnd ordeined not for luſte or pleaſure, but for neceſſities ſake: erefore they go beyond the lawfull vſe thereof, that applie it to s not neceſſarie. And there can no other neceſſitie be preten-but where it is to ſerue either religion or charitie, wherin at this en do ſo much licentiouſly offende, and ſo much the more inblie, for that by very cuſtome it hath ceſſed to be reckned for enſe at all, which yet before the iudgement ſeate of God is not ly weied. For euery where without regard, the name of God led in trifling talkes, and it is not thought that they do euill, by-by long ſuffred and vnpuniſhed boldeneſſe, they are come to reſt ere in poſſeſſion of ſo great wickedneſſe. But the commaundeof the Lord remaineth in force, the penaltie abideth in ſtrength, all one day haue his effect, whereby there is a certaine ſpeciall ge proclaimed againſt them that vſe his name in vaine. This maundement is alſo tranſgreſſed in an other point, that in our othes we put the holy seruantes of God in the place of God, and manifest vngodlynesse, for so we transfer the glorie of his godhead Deut.6. 13. and 10 20. Exod. 23.13. to them. Neither is it without cause, that the Lorde hath geuen so ciall commaundement to swere by his name, and by speciall pro-tion forbidden, that we shoulde not be heard swere by any gods. And the Apostle euidently testifieth the same, when he teth, that men in swearing do call vpon a hier than themselues, that God which had none greater than his owne glorie to swear did swere by himselfe.

26 The Anabaptistes not contented with this moderatio of ring, do detest all othes without exception, bycause the prohiby this meane, they do without consideration stumble against Ch while they make him aduersarie to his father, and as if he had downe from heauen to repeale his fathers decrees. For the ete Exo.22. 11. God doth in the lawe not onely permit swearing as a thing

Christ affirmeth that he is all one with his father? that he bringe other thing, but that which his father commaunded him, that doctrine is not of himselfe, &c. What then? will they make God trarie to himselfe, which shall afterwarde forbidde and condemne same thing in mens behauiours, whiche he hath before allowed cõmaunding it? But bycause there is some difficultie in the wor Christ, let vs a little weye them. But herein we shall never attain truth, vnlesse we bende our eyes vnto the entent of Christ, and heede vnto the purpose that he there goeth about. His purpose either to release or restreigne the lawe, but to reduce it to the and naturall vnderstanding, whiche had bene very muche de by the false gloses of the Scribes and Pharisees. This if we minde, we shall not thinke than Christ did vtterly condemne but only those othes which do transgresse the rule of the lawe. T by it appeareth, that the people at that time did forbeare no swearing but periuries, wheras the lawe doth not onely forbi iuries, but also all idle and superfluous othes. The Lord there Matt.5. 34. most sure expositour of the lawe, doth admonish them, that are after rehearſed. For this was alſo parte of their errour, that n they did ſweare by heauen and earth, they thought that they not touch the name of God. Therefore after the principall kinde ffenſe againſt this commaundement, the Lorde doth alſo cut of n them all byeſhiftes, that they ſhoulde not thinke that they haue ood, if not ſpeaking of the name of God they call heauen and h to witneſſe. For here by the way it is alſo to be noted, that algh the name of God be not expreſſed, yet mé by indirect formes weare by him, as if they ſweare by the liuely light, by the bread they eate, by their Baptiſme, or other tokens of Gods liberalitie rd them. Neither doth Chriſt in that place where he forbiddeth n to ſweare by heauen and earth and Hieruſalem, ſpeake it to corſuperſtition, as ſome men falſely thinke, but he rather confuteth ſophiſticall ſutteltie, which thought it no faulte babblingly to we out indirect othes, as though they ſpared the holy name of , which is engrauen in all his benefites. But otherwiſe it is, where r a mortall man, or a dead man, or an Angell is put in the place odas among the prophane nations flatterie deuiſed that ſtinking e of ſwearing by the life or ſoule of the King: for then the falſe ng of Gods doth obſcure and miniſh the glorie of the one onely . But when we meane only, to procure credit to our ſayinges by oly name of God, although the ſame be indirectly done, yet in ch trifling othes his maieſtie is offended. Chriſt taketh from this tiouſneſſe, all pretenſe of excuſe, in this that he forbiddeth to re at all. And Iames tendeth to the ſame purpoſe, reciting the wordes of Chriſt which I haue before alleged, bycauſe that ſame boldeneſſe hath alway bene in the worlde, which is a prophane e of the name of God. For if ye referre this worde, At all, to the nece, as if without any exception it were altogether vnlawfull to ret wherefore ſerueth that expoſition which is added afterward: her by heauen nor by earth, &c? Wherby it ſufficiently appereth thoſe cauillations are met withall, by which the Iewes thought ſelues to be excuſed.

Iac. 5. 12.

Therefore it can not nowe be doubtefull to ſounde iudge-es, that the Lorde in that place did onely reproue thoſe othes were forbidden by the lawe. For he himſelfe which ſhewed in e an examplar of the perfection that he taught, did not ſticke to e when occaſion required. And his diſciples, who (we doubte did obey their maiſter in all thinges, followed the ſame exam-who dare ſay that Paule woulde haue ſworne, if ſwearing had utterly forbidden? but when matter ſo required, he ſware without any sticking at it, yea sometime adding an execration. But this stion is not yet ended, bycause some do thinke that only othes are excepted out of this prohibitiō, as those othes that when the Magistrate doth offer them to vs and require them And such as Princes vse to take in stablishing of leagues, or the

to this sorte they adioyne, and that rightfully, such othes, as Heb. 6 16. Paule to confirme the dignitie of the Gospell, for asmuch as postles in their office are not priuate men but publicke minis God. And truely I denie not that those are the safest othes, they are defended with soundest testimonies of Scripture. The gistrate is commaunded in a doubtefull case to driue the an othe, and he on the other side to aunswere by othe and the stle saith, that mens controuersies are by this meane ended. In cōmaundement bothe these haue a perfect allowance of their Yea and we may note, that among the olde heathen men, the and solemne othe was had in great reuerence, but common othes were vsually spoken without consideration, were either not very little regarded, bycause they thought that in these they to do with the maiestie of God at all. But yet it were to much rous to condemne priuate othes, that are in necessarie cases holly, and reuerently taken, which are mainteined both by and examples. For if it be lawefull for priuate men in a weigh earnest matter to appele to God as iudge betwene them, much is it lawefull to call him to witnesse. Put the case: thy brother cuse thee of false breache of faith, thou endeuoreſt to purge according to the dutie of charitie, and he by no meanes will himselfe to be satisfied. If thy good name come in perill by stinate maliciousnesse, thou shalt without offense appele to the ment of God, that it will please him in time to make thine knowen. Now if the weight of the wordes be considered, it is matter to call him to witnesse. Therefore I see not why in this we shoulde affirme, that the calling him to witnesse is vnlawfull. we are not without many examples thereof. For though the Gen. 21 24. and 26. 31. and 31. 53. Abraham and Isaac with Abimelech be said not to serue for pose, bycause it was made in the name of a publike companie, cob and Laban were priuate men, which stablished a couenant mutuall othe betwene themselues. Booz was a priuate man, Ruth. 3. 13. by the same meane cōfirmed his promise of mariage to Ruth, was a priuate man, a iust man and fearing God, which affirmed by othe, the thing that he meant to perſuade him. Therefore no better rule, but that othes be ſo tempered, that they be aduiſed, that they be not common without regard, that they vſed of raging luſte, nor trifling, but that they ſerue iuſte ne-, as where the Lordes glorie is to be mainteined, or the edifi- of our brother furthered, to whiche ende the commaunde- of the lawe tendeth. 1.Re.18. 10.

The fourth Commaundement.

Remember that thou kepe holy the Sabbat day. Six dayes ſhalt thou worke and do all thy workes. But on the ſeuenth day is the Sabbat of the Lord thy God. In it thou ſhalt do no worke. &c.

The ende of this commaundement is, that we being dead to ne affections and workes, ſhoulde be buſied in meditation of ngdome of God, and to the ſame meditation ſhoulde be exer- by ſuch meanes as he hath ordeined. But bycauſe this cõmaun- t hath a peculiar and ſeuerall conſideratiõ from the reſt, there- muſt haue alſo a ſeuerall manner of expoſition. The olde wri- e to call it a ſhadowiſh commaundement, for that it conteineth ward obſeruatiõ of the day, which by the comming of Chriſt ken away with the other figures. Wherin I graũt they ſay true- t they touch but halfe the matter. Wherefore we muſt fetch poſition of it farther of. And (as I thinke) I haue marked that re three cauſes to be conſidered, wherupon this commaunde- conſiſteth. For firſt the heauenly lawemaker meant vnder the the ſeuenth day, to ſet out in figure to the people of Iſrael the ll reſt, whereby the faithfull ought to ceſſe from their owne s, that they might ſuffer God to worke in them. Secondarily, l was to haue one apointed day, wherin they ſhoulde meete to- to heare the law, & execute the ceremonies, or at leaſt beſtow liarly to the meditation of his workes: that by ſuch calling embrance, they might be exerciſed to godlineſſe. Thirdly, he t good to haue a day of reſt graunted to ſeruauntes, and ſuch vnder the gouernement of other, wherein they might haue ceſſing from their labour.

But we are many waies taught, that the ſame ſhadowing of the ll reſt, was the principall point in the Sabbat. For the Lorde d the keping of no commaundement in a maner more ſeuere- n, this: when his meaning is in the Prophetes to declare that all is ouerthrowen, thẽ he complaineth that his Sabbates are pol- lefiled, not kept, not ſanctified: as though that peece of ſeruice Num.15 22. oubt, that by the comming of our Lorde Chriſt, ſo much as was

e day, but in the whole courſe of our life, vntill that we being dead to our ſelues, be filled with the life of God. Therefore ſtious obſeruing of dayes ought to be farre from Chriſtians.

But for aſmuch as the two later cauſes ought not to be reckemong the olde ſhadowes, but doe belong a like to all ages: ſince abbat is abrogate, yet this hath ſtill place with vs, that we ſhould meete at appoynted dayes to the hearing of the word, to the breaking of the misticall bread, and to publike prayer: and then, that seruauntes and laborers be graunted their rest from their labour. It is out of doubt that in commaunding the Sabbat the Lorde had care of both these thinges. The first of them hath sufficient testimonie by the only vse of the Iewes to proue it. The second, Moses spake of in Deuteronomie in these wordes: that thy man seruaunt and thy maide seruaunt may rest as well as thou: remember that thou thy selfe wast a serue in Egypt. Againe in Exodus: that thy Oxe and thy Asse may rest, and the sonne of thy bondwoman may take breath. Who can deny that both these thinges doe serue for vs as well as for the Iewes? Meetings at the Church, are commaunded vs by the word of God, and the necessitie of them is sufficiently knowen in the very experience of life. Vnlesse they be certainly appoynted and haue their solemnitie dayes, how can they be kept? All thinges by the sentence of the Apostle are to be done comly and in order among vs. But so farre as of, that comlinesse and order can be kept without this policie and moderation, that there is at hand present trouble and ruine of the Church, if it be dissolued. Now if the same necessitie be among vs, the releefe whereof the Lord appointed the Sabbat to the Iewes: let no man say that it belongeth nothing vnto vs. For our most prouident and tender Father, willed no lesse to prouide for our necessitie than for the Iewes. But thou wilt say, why doe we not rather daily meete togither, that the difference of dayes may be taken away? I would God, that were graunted, and truely spirituall wisedome was worthy to haue daily a peece of the time cut out for it. But if it not be obtained of the weakenesse of many to haue daily meetings and the rule of charitie doth not suffer vs to exact more of them, should we not obey the order which we see layed vpon vs by the will of God.

33 I am compelled here to be somewhat long, because at this day many vnquiet spirites doe raise trouble, concerning the Sunday, crie out that the Christian people are nourished in Iewishnesse, because they keepe some obseruation of dayes. But I answere, that we keepe those dayes without any Iewishnesse, because we doe in this behalfe farre differ from the Iewes. For we keepe it not with superstition as a ceremonie, wherein we thinke a spirituall misterie to be figured, but we retaine it as a necessary remedie to the keeping of order in the Church. But Paule teacheth that in keeping thereof this is not to be iudged Christians, because it is a shadow of a thing to come. Therefore he feared that he had laboured in vaine among the en the glory of Christ and the light of the Gospell. They did not efore cease from handy vvorkes, because they were thinges that stian fellowship, for in the Churches that he him selfe did or-the brethren at Ierusalē. If they feare superstitiō, there was more ger thereof in the feast dayes of the Iewes, than in the Sundayes Albeit the old fathers haue not without reason of their choise, place of the Sabbat day the day that we cal Sunday. For wherhereof the olde Sabbat was a shadow: the Christians are by the me day that made an ende of shadowes, put in minde that they no longer sticke vnto the shadowish ceremonie. But yet I doe rest vpon the number of seuen, that I would binde the church bondage thereof. Neither will I condemne those Churches, aue other solemne dayes for their meetings, so that they be t superstition, which shall be, if they be onely applyed to the ation of Discipline and well appoynted order. Let the summe be this: as the truth was geuen to the Iewes vnder a figure, so liuered vs without any shadowes at all. First that in all our life

The fift Commaundement.

Honour thy Father and thy Mother, that thou maiſt liue long vpon the Land which the Lord thy God ſhall giue thee.

35 The ende of this commaundement is, that becauſe the L deliteth in the preſeruation of his order, therefore he willeth thoſe degrees of preeminence which he hath ordained be not ken,the ſumme therefore ſhall be that we reuerence thoſe whom Lord hath ſet ouer vs, that we yeld to them honour, obedien thankefulneſſe. Whereupon followeth that it is forbidden vs, to draw any thing from their dignitie,either by contempt or ob or vnthankefulnes. For ſo doth the word Honour, in the Scr 1.Tim. 5. ſignifie very largely: as when the Apoſtle ſayeth, that the which rule well are worthy of double honour,he meaneth not that reuerence is due vnto them,but alſo ſuch recompenſe a miniſterie deſerueth. And becauſe this commaundement of on,doth moſt of all diſagree with the peruerſeneſſe of mans which as it ſwelleth with greedineſſe of climbing hie,ſo it ha deth to be brought lowe: therefore he hath ſet that kinde of ority for example, which by nature is moſt amiable and leaſt becauſe he might the eaſelyer meeken and reclaime our minde of ſubmiſſion. Therefore the Lorde doth by litle and litle traine to all lawfull ſubiection by that which is moſt eaſy to beare, foraſ-much as the rule of all is alike. For to whome he geueth any preeminence, he doth communicate his owne name with them, ſo farre as is neceſſarie to preſerue the ſame preeminence: The name of Father, King, and Lord, do ſo belong vnto him alone, that ſo ofte as we heare any of them named, our minde muſt needes be touched with a feeling of his maieſty. Therfore whom he maketh partakers of theſe thinges, he maketh to gliſter with a certaine ſparke of his brightneſſe, that they may be honorable euery one according to his degree. Therfore in him that is our father we haue to cõſider ſomewhat of the nature of God, becauſe he beareth not the name of God without cauſe. He that is called Prince or our Lord, hath ſome partaking of honour with God.

Wherfore it ought not to be doubted that God doth here ſet forth a generall rule, that as we know any man to be by his ordinaunce ſet ouer vs, ſo we yeelde vnto him reuerence, obedience, thankefulneſſe, and ſuch other dueties as it lieth in vs to do. And it maketh no difference whether they be worthy or vnworthy. For of what ſorte ſoeuer they be, they haue not without the prouidence of God atteined that honor, by reaſon wherof the lawemaker would haue them to be honored. Yet namely he hath geuen commaundement of reuerẽce to pathe ſcene of Matthew, that it is the commaundement of God that we do good to our parentes. And ſo oft as Paule maketh mention of this commaundement, he expoundeth that therein obedience is required.

Moreouer there is annexed a promiſe for a commendation, which doth rather put vs in minde, how acceptable vnto God is the ſubmiſſion that is here commaunded. For Paule vſeth the ſame pricke to ſtirre vp our dulneſſe when he ſaieth: that this is the firſt com-dement with promiſe. For the promiſe that went before in the Table, was not ſpeciall and proprely belonging to one comment, but extēded to the whole law. Now this is thus to be taken Lord ſpake to the Iſraelites peculiarly of the lande which he had miſed them for their inheritance. If then the poſſeſsion of lande a pledge of Gods bountyfullneſſe: let vs not meruell if it pleaſe to declare his fauour by geuing length of life, by which a man long enioye his benefit. The meaning therefore is thus. Honour Father and thy Mother, that by a long ſpace of life thou may the poſſeſsion of that lande that ſhalbe vnto thee for a teſtimo my Father. But ſith all the earth is bleſſed to the faithfull, we worthily recken this preſent life among the bleſſinges of God. fore this promiſe doth likewiſe belong vnto vs, forſomuch as continuance of this life is a proofe of Gods good will. For it is promiſed to vs, nor was promiſed to the Iewes, as though it ned bleſſedneſſe in it ſelfe, but bycauſe it is wont to be to the a token of Gods tender loue. Therefore if it chaunce that an child to his parētes be taken out of this life before his ripe age, is oftentimes ſeene, yet doth God no leſſe conſtantly continue perfourmance of his promiſe, than if he ſhoulde reward, him hundreth Acres of lande, to whome he promiſed but one Acre. conſiſteth in this, that we ſhould cōſider that long life is ſo miſed vs, as it is the bleſſing of God, and that it is his bleſſing as it is a proofe of his fauour, which he by death doth much plentifully and perfectly witneſſe and ſhew in effect to his ſer 38 Moreouer, when the Lorde promiſeth the bleſſing of ſente life to the children that honour their parentes with ſuch rence as they ought, he doth withall ſecretly ſay, that moſt curſe hangeth ouer the ſtubborne and diſobedient children. A the ſame ſhoulde not want execution: he pronounceth them law ſubiect to the iudgement of death, and commaundeth the put to execution: & if they eſcape that iudgement, he him ſelfe vengeaunce on them by one meane or other. For we ſee how numbre of that ſorte of men are ſlaine in battailes and in fra ſome other tormented in ſtrange vnaccuſtomed faſhions, and in a manner are a proofe that this threatning is not vaine. But eſcape to olde age, ſith in this life being depriued of the bleſ God, they do nothing but miſerably languiſh and are reſerue greater paines hereafter, they are farre from being partakers bleſſing promiſed to the godly children. But this is alſo by noted, that we are not commaunded to obey them but in the e. And that is euident by the foundation before layed: for they hie in that place whereunto the Lorde hath aduaunced them, mmunicating with them a portion of his honour. Therfore the ssion that is vsed towarde them, ought to be a steppe towarde onouring of that soueraigne Father. Wherefore, if they moue transgresse the lawe, then are they worthily not to be accomp-arentes, but straungers that labour to withdraw vs from obe-e to the true Father. And so is to be thought of Princes, Lordes ll sortes of superioures. For it is shamefull and against conue-e of reason, that their preeminence shoulde preuaile to presse e his highnesse, sith theyres as it hangeth wholy vpon it, so t onely to guide vs vnto it.

The sixt Commaundement.

Thou shalt not kill.

The ende of this commaundement is, that forasmuch as God bounde together all mankinde with a certaine vnitie, that euery ought to regarde the safetie of all men, as a thing geuen him in ge. In summe therefore, all violence and wrong, yea and all harme , wherby our neighboures bodie maie be hurte, is forbidden vs. therfore we are commaunded, if there be any power of succour r trauaile to defende the life of our neighboures, that we faithimploy the same, that we procure those thinges that may make eir quiet, that we watch to keepe them from hurte, and if they any daunger, that we geue them our helping hand. If thou conthat it is God the lawemaker that so saith, then thinke withall his meaning is by this rule also to gouerne thy soule. For it were de thing to thinke, that he which espieth the thoughtes of the e, and principally resteth vpon them, should instruct nothing but ody to true righteousnesse. Therefore the manslaughter of the e is also forbidden in this lawe, and an inwarde affection to pre-our brothers life is here geuen in commaundement. The hande de bringeth fourth the manslaughter, but the minde conceiueth hen it is infected with wrath and hatred. Looke whether thou be angry with thy brother without burning in desire to do him . If thou canst not be angry with him, then canst thou not hate for asmuch as hatred is nothing but an olde rooted anger. Algh thou dissemble and go about to winde out thy selfe by vaine nstances: yet where anger or hatred is, there is an affection to 40 The Scripture noteth two pointes of equitie, vpon which commaundement is grounded: bycauſe manne is both the image God and our owne fleſh, wherefore vnleſſe we will defile the of God, we muſt haue care to touche man none otherwiſe, than a ſacred thing: and vnleſſe we will put of all naturallneſſe of man, muſt cheriſh him as our owne fleſh. That maner of exhortation is fetched from the redemption and grace of Chriſt, ſhall be entreated of in an other place. God willed theſe two thinges naturally conſidered in man, that might perſwade vs to the preſeruatiõ of that we ſhould both reuerence the image of God emprinted in and embrace our owne fleſhe. He hath not therefore eſcaped crime of manſlaughter, that he hath kept him ſelfe from ſhedding bloude. If thou committe any thinge in dede, if thou go about thing with endeuour, if thou conceiue any thing in deſire and poſe that is againſt the ſafetie of an other, thou art holden gilty manſlaughter. And againe: If thou do not trauaile to thy power as occaſion may ſerue to defende his life, thou doeſt with like hu ouſneſſe offende the lawe. But if there be ſo much care taken for ſafetie of his body, let vs hereby gather, how much ſtudie and uaile is due to the ſafetie of his ſoule, which in the Lordes ſight infinitely excell the bodie.

The ſeuenth Commaundement.

Thou ſhalt not committe adulterie.

41 The ende of the cõmaundement is, that bycauſe God lo charitie and cleanneſſe, therefore all vncleanneſſe ought to de farre away from vs. The ſumme therefore ſhall be, that we be with no vncleanneſſe or luſtfull intemperance of the fleſh: Where aunſwereth the affirmatiue commaundement, that we chaſtly continently ordre all the partes of our life. But fornication he biddeth by name, to which all vnchaſte luſte tendeth, that the neſſe of that which is more groſſe and ſenſible, for ſomuch as it defileth the body, he might bring vs to abhorre all filthy luſte. manne was created in this eſtate, not to liue a ſolitarie life, but a helper ioined vnto him: and ſins that by the curſe of ſinne he uen the more to this neceſſitie, the Lord hath in this behalfe elp for him ſo much as was ſufficient, when he ordained mariwhen he ſanctified with his bleſſinge the fellowſhip begonne by thority. Whereby followeth, that all other fellowſhip of man & an out of mariage, is accurſed before him, & that the fellowſhip riage it ſelfe, was ordained for remedy of neceſſity, ẏ we ſhould nne out into vnbridled luſt. Therefore let vs not flatter our ſelſith we heare that man can not be coupled with woman out of ge, without the curſe of God.

Nowe foraſmuch as by the condition of nature, and by luſt enkindeled ſins the fall of man, we are become doutely ſubiect fire of company of women, except it be thoſe whom God of his ar grace hath exempted from it: let euery man looke well what en vnto him. Virginity, I graunt, is a vertue not to be deſpiſed:
th it is to ſome denied, and to ſome graũted but for a time, lette that are troubled with incontinence and ſtriuinge with it, can withdrawe themſelues, which forſakinge the helpes of God, neſſe. The Lord affirmeth that continence is a ſingular gift of

, & of that ſorte that are not giuen generally, nor vniuerſally to hole body of the Church, but to a few members thereof. For e ſayth, that there is a certaine kinde of men, that haue gelded ſelues for the kingdome of Heauen, that is, that they might ore looſely and freely applie themſelues to the affayres of the ly kingdome. But, that no man ſhould thinke that ſuch gelis in the power of man, he ſhewed a litle before, that all men heauen, whereupon he concludeth: He that can take it, let him 12.

. But Paul yet affirmeth it more plainly, where he wryteth, that 1. Cor. 7 man hath his proper gift of God, one thus, and an other thus. 7.

Whereas we are by open declaration admoniſhed, that it is not ry mans power to keepe chaſtity in ſingle life, although with and trauaile he indeuour neuer ſo much vnto it, and that it is a ider what lawemaker doth here condemne fornication, euen he h ſith of his owne right he ought to poſſeſſe vs wholly, requireth neſſe of the ſoule, ſpirite and body. Therefore when he forbid-to commit fornication, he alſo forbiddeth with wanton attire of , with vncleanly geſtures, & with filthy talke to lay waite to trap thers chaſtity. For that ſaying is not without good reaſon, which elaus ſpake to a yong man aboue meaſure wantonly and deinteothed, that it made no matter in what parte he were filthily vn-if we haue regard vnto God that abhorreth all filthines in what r part either of our ſoule or body it appeareth. And to put thee of dout, remember that the Lord here commendeth chaſtity. If Lorde require chaſtity of vs, then he condemneth all that euer is ſt it. Therefore if thou couet to ſhew obedience, neither let thy le burne inwardly with euill luſt, nor lette thine eyes runne wany into corrupt affections, nor let thy body be trimmed vp for al-ment, nor let thy tongue with filthy talke entiſe thy minde to like ghtes, nor let thy gluttonous belly enflame thee with intempe-. For all theſe vices are, as it were, certaine blottes, wherwith the neſſe of chaſtity is beſpotted.

The eight Commaundement.

Thou ſhalt not ſteale.

The ende of this commaundement is, becauſe God abhorreth ghteouſneſſe, ỹ euery man may haue his owne rendred vnto him. ſumme therefore ſhall be, that we are forbidden to gape for omens goodes, & that therefore we are commaunded euery man ploy his faythfull trauaile to preſerue to eche man his owne es. For thus we ought to thinke, that what euery man poſſeſſeth happened vnto him by chaunce of fortune, but by the diſtribuof the ſoueraigne Lord of all things, & therfore no mans goods e gotten from him by euill meanes, but that wronge be done to iſpoſition of God. But of theftes there be many kindes: one ſtan-in Violence, whē ỹ goods of an other are by any maner of force obbinge licentiouſneſſe bereued. The other kinde conſiſteth in cious deceite, where they are guilefully conueied away. An other ſorte there is that ſtandeth in a more hidden luttelry, when th wrong from the owner by colour of lawe. An other ſorte in ſtr where they are ſucked away by pretenſe of gift. But leaſt we ſ tary too longe vpon rentinge of all the ſeuerall kindes of thef vs know, that all crafty meanes whereby the poſſeſſions and of our neighboures are conueyed vnto vs, when they once g crooked wayes from ſincereneſſe of heart, to a deſire to beguile any meane to do hurt, are to be accompted for theftes. Altho pleadinge the lawe, they may preuaile, yet God doth not ot wey them. For he ſeeth the longe captious ſurtelties, wherew guilefull man beginneth to entangle the ſimpler minde, till a he drawe him into his nettes. He ſeeth the hard and vngent wherwith the mightier oppreſſeth and throweth downe the w He ſeeth the allurementes, wherwith as with baited hookes, th tier taketh thee vnware. All which things are hidden from the ment of man, and come not in his knowledge. And this m wrong is not only in money, in wares, or in landes, but in ev right. For we defraude our neighbour of his goodes, if we de thoſe dueties which we are bound to do for him. If any idle ſ bailie do deuour his maiſters ſubſtance, & is not heedeful to th of his thrift, if he either do wrongfully ſpoile, or do riotouſly w ſubſtance commited vnto him, if a ſeruaunt do mocke his ma he diſcloſe his ſecretes by any meanes, if he betray his lift goodes: againe if the Lord do cruelly oppreſſe his houſehold are before God gilty of theft. For he both withholdeth & co an other mans goodes, which performeth not that which by th fice of his calling he oweth to other.

46 We ſhall therfore rightly obey this commaundement, if contented with our owne eſtate, we ſeeke to get no gaine but and lawful, if we couet not to waxe rich with wrong, nor go a ſpoile our neighbour of his goodes that our owne ſubſtance m creaſe, if we labour not to heape vp cruell riches and wrong others mens blood, if we do not immeaſurably ſcrape together way, by right and by wrong, that either our couetouſneſſe may led, or our prodigality ſatisfied. But on the other ſide, lette thi perpetuall marke, to aide all men faithfully by counſell and h keepe their owne ſo farre as we may: but if we haue to do wi and deceitfull men, lette vs rather be ready to yeelde vp ſome owne, then to ſtriue with them. And not that only, but let vs co nicate to their neceſſities, & with our ſtore relieue their neede, we ſee to be oppreſſed with hard and poore eſtate. Finally, lette looke how much he is by duety bounde vnto other, and let him fully pay it. For this reaſon lette the people haue in honor all e that are ſet ouer them, let them paciently beare their gouerne-, obey their lawes and commaundementes, refuſe nothing that may beare, ſtill keepinge God fauourable vnto them. Againe, let take care of their people, preſerue common peace, defende the l, reſtraine the euil, & ſo order all things, as ready to giue accompt eir office to the ſoueraigne iudge. Let the Miniſters of churches fully applie their miniſtery, and not corrupt the doctrine of ſal-on, but deliuer it pure & ſincere to the people of God, and let thē ct them not onely with learning, but alſo with example of life: y, let thē ſo be ouer thē, as good ſhepeherdes be ouer the ſhepe. he people likewiſe receiue them for the meſſingers & Apoſtles od, giue them that honor whereof the hieſt maiſter hath vout-l them, and miniſter vnto them ſuch thinges as are neceſſary for life. Lette parentes take on them to feede, rule and teach theyr dren, as committed to them of God, & greue not, nor turne away mindes from them with cruelty, but rather cheriſh & embrace with ſuch lenity and tenderneſſe, as becommeth there perſon. r which manner, we haue already ſayd, that children owe to their ntes their obedience. Let yong men reuerence olde age, euen as Lord willed that age to be honorable. Let old men alſo gouerne eakenes of youth with their wiſedom and experience, wherein excell yonge men, not ratinge them with rough and loude braw-, but tempering ſeuerity with mildeneſſe and gentleneſſe. Lette unges ſhew themſelues diligent and ſeruiſable to obey: and that o the eye, but from the heart, as ſeruing God himſelfe. Alſo lette ers ſhewe themſelues not teſty and hard to pleaſe, nor oppreſſe with to much ſharpenes, not reprochfully vſe them, but rather owledge that they are their brethren and their fellow ſeruaunres r the heauēly Lord, whom they ought mutually to loue & gētly treat. After this manner, I ſay, let euery man conſider what in his ce and place he oweth to his neighbours, and let him pay that he h. Morouer our minde ought alwayes to haue reſpect to the law r, that we may know that this law is made as wel for our mindes, r our handes, that men ſhould ſtudy to defend & further the com-ies and profite of other.

The ninth commaundement.

Thou ſhalt not be a lying witneſſe againſt thy neighbour.

The end of this commaundement is that becauſe God whichis trueth abhorreth lyinge, we ought to obserue trueth without full colour. The ſumme therefore ſhall be, that we neither mans name either with ſlaunders or falſe reportes, nor hinder in his goodes by lyinge: finally that we offende no man, by

, that we couet not to vſe a ſcoffing kinde of a pleaſauntnes, but led with bitter tauntes, thereby bitingly to touch other mens vnder pretenſe of paſtime, as many do that ſeeke praiſe of me-if we bende our eyes to the lawmaker, which muſt accordinge rightfull authority beare rule no leſſe ouer the eares and than ouer the tongue: truely we ſhall finde that greedineſſe to backebitings, and a haſty readines to euill iudgementes are no orbidden. For it were very fond if a man ſhould thinke that God the fault of euill malicioufneſſe in the hearte. Wherefore if be in vs a true feare and loue of God, let vs endeuour ſo farre as y and as is expedient, and as charity beareth, that we giue nei-

The tenth Commaundement.

Thou ſhalt not couet thy neighbours houſe, &c.

The end of this cõmaundement is, ỹ becauſe ỹ lords wil is that our ſoule be wholly poſſeſſed with the affectiō of loue: all luſt is p ſhakē out of our minde that is contrary to charity. The ſumme t fore ſhall be, that no thought creepe into vs, which may moue mindes with a concupiſcens hurtfull and turninge toward an ev whatſoeuer we conceiue, purpoſe, will or ſtudy vpon, be ioyned the benefit and commodity of our neighbours. But here, as w ariſeth a hard and comberſome difficulty. For if it be truely ſ before that vnder the names of fornication and theft are co the luſt of fornication, and the purpoſe to hurt and deceiue, t ſeeme ſuperfluouſly ſpoken, that the couetinge of other mens ſhoulde afterward be ſeuerally forbidden vs. But the diſtinctio twene purpoſe and couetinge, will eaſily loſe vs this knot. For poſe (as we haue meant in ſpeakinge of it in the other comm mentes before) is deliberate conſent of will, when luſt hath the minde: but couetinge may be without any ſuch either ment or aſſent, when the minde is only pricked & tickled wi and peruerſe obiectes. As therefore the Lord hath heretofore maunded, that the rule of charity ſhoulde gouerne our wille and workes: ſo he now commaundeth the conceptions of our to be directed to the ſame rule, that there be none of them c and writhen, that may prouoke our minde an other way. As he forbidden our minde to be bowed and ledde into wrath, hau nication, robbery, and lying: ſo he doth now forbid vs to be Therfore God cõmaundeth a maruelous feruẽtnes of loue which lleth not to be entangled with neuer ſo ſmall ſnares of concupi-for exãple thoſe things that moſt cõmonly do deceiue vs with e image of delight: becauſe he would leaue nothing to concupirfore you ſhall but vainely call vpon thoſe dueties that are con-vs, that this worde, Thou ſhalt not couet, is the ſecond time red, for after that he had firſt ſet the houſe, then he renteth the thereof, beginning at the wife: whereby it plainely appeareth, (as the Hebrues do very well) it ought to be read in one whole ce, and that God in effect commaundeth, that al that euery man ſeth, ſhould remaine ſafe and vntouched, not onely from wrong ſt to defraude them, but alſo from the very leaſt deſire that may

But now to what ende the whole lawe tendeth, it ſhall not be

1.Tim.1 15. Which thing the Apoſtle ſheweth when he wryteth, that the end of the law is Loue out of a pure conſcience, and a faith not fayned. We ſee how, as it were, in the heade is ſet conſcience and faith vnfayned, that is to ſay in one worde true Godlineſſe, and that from thence charity deriued. Therefore he is deceiued, whoſoeuer thinketh that in the lawe are taught onely certaine rudimentes and firſt inſtructions of righteouſneſſe, wherewith men became to be taught in the firſt ſchoolinge, but not yet directed to the true marke of good woorkes: whereas beyonde that ſentence of Moſes and this of Paul you canne deſire nothinge as wantinge of the higheſt perfection. For howe farre, I pray you, will he proceede that will not be contented with this inſtitution, whereby manne is inſtructed to the feare of God, to ſpirituall worſhippinge, to obeyinge of the commandementes, to follow the vprightnes of the way of the Lord: finally pureneſſe of conſcience, ſincere faith and loue? Whereby is conſummed that expoſition of the law, which ſearcheth for and findeth out in the commaundementes thereof all the dueties of God and loue. For they that follow onely the drie and bare principles, it taught but the one halfe of Gods will, know not the end thereof, the Apoſtle witneſſeth.

52 But whereas in rehearſing the ſumme of the law, Chriſt the Apoſtle do ſomtime leaue out ỹ firſt Table: many are deceiued that while they woulde faine draw their words to both the Tables. Chriſt in Matthew calleth the chiefe pointes of the law, Mercy, Judgement, Faith: vnder the word Faith, it is not dourtful to me, but that he vnderſtandeth trueth or faithfulneſſe toward men. Here therfore let vs ſticke faſt, that then our life ſhalbe beſt frarofitable to our brethren. But in the whole lawe there is not one ſillable that appointeth to man any rule of ſuch thinges as ll do or leaue vndone to the commodity of his owne fleſh. And surely sith men are so borne of such disposition naturally that they be too much caried all headlong to the loue of themselues, and how much soeuer they fall from the trueth yet still they keepe that self loue, there needed no law any more to enflame that loue, that was na-

Whereby it plainly ap-peareth, that not the loue of our selues, but ỹ loue of God & of our neighbour is the keeping of the commaundements, & that he liueth best & most holily, ỹ (so nere as may be) liueth & trauaileth lest for himselfe, & that no man liueth worse & more wickedly than he that liueth and trauaileth for himselfe & only thinketh vpon and seeketh for things of his owne. And the Lord, the more to expresse with how great earnestnesse we ought to be led to the loue of our neighbour, appointed it to be measured by the loue of our selues as by a rule, be-cause he had no other vehement or stronger affection to measure by. And the force of the maner of speakinge is diligently to be weyed. For he doth not, as certaine Sophisters haue foolishly dreamed, put the first degree to the loue of our selues, and the second to charity, but rather that affection of loue which we do all naturally draw to our sel-
1. Cor. 13. 5. ues he giueth away vnto other, wherupon ỹ Apostle sayth, that Cha-rity seketh not her owne. And their reasō is not to be esteemed worth a heare that ỹ thing ruled is euer inferiour to his Rule. For God did not make the loue of our selues a rule whereunto charity towards o-ther should be subiect, but whereas by peruersnes of nature, ỹ affec-tion of loue was wont to rest in our selues, he sheweth that now it ought to be elsewhere spred abroad, that we should with no lesse cheere-nesse, feruentnesse, & carefulnesse be ready to do good to our neigh-bour than to our selues.

55 Now sith Christ hath shewed in the parable of the Samaritane Luc. 10. 36. that vnder the name of Neighbour euery man is cōtained be he neuer so straunge vnto vs: there is no cause why we shoulde restraine the commaundement of loue within the boūdes of our owne frendes and acquaintances. I deny not that the nerer that any man is vnto vs, the more familiarly he is to be holden with our endeuours to do him good. For so the order of humanity requireth, that so many more duties of friendshippe men shoulde communicate together, as they are bound together with streighter bonds of kinred, familiarity or neigh-bourhoode, & that without any offense of God, by whose prouidence we are in a manner driuen therunto. But I say that all mākinde with-out exception is to be embraced with one affection of charity. & that in this behalfe is no difference of Barbarous or Grecian, of worthy & vnworthy, of friend or foe, because they are to be considered in God not in themselues: from which consideration when we turne away, no maruell if we be entangled with many errours. Wherefore if will keepe the true trade of louing, we must not turne our eyes vnman, the sight of whom would ofter enforce vs to hate thā to loue, vnto God which cōmaundeth that the loue which we offer him, poured abroade amonge all men: that this be a perpetuall foundaon, that whatsoeuer the man be, yet he ought to be loued because d is loued.

Wherfore it was a most pestilent either ignorāce or malice, that Schoolemen of these commaundementes, touchinge not desiring euengement, and louing our enemies, which in the olde time both e giuen to the Iewes and at the same time were commonly giuen ll Christians, haue made Councels which it is in our liberty to o-, or not obey. And the necessary obeying of them, they haue pouer to Mōkes which were though but in this one point forsoth re righteous thā simple Christians, that they willingly bound them es to kepe the Councels. And they render a reason why they re- them not for lawes, for that they seme too burdenous & heauy, ially for Christians that are vnder the law of grace. So dare they ume to repell the eternall law of God touching the louing of our hbours? Is there any such difference in any leafe of the law? & are therein rather eche where founde commaundementes that do t seuerely require of vs to loue our enemies? t it properly belongeth hereunto. Hath any desire of minde pric-gressors of the law. Because the Lord doth forbid vs, not only to pose & practise any thing that may be to an others losse, but also e pricked & swell with coueting it. But the curse of God doth al-hang ouer the transgressiō of the law. We can not therfore proue the very least desires free from iudgement of death. In weyinge

The ix. Chapter.

That Christ, although he was knowen to the Iewes vnder the law, yet was deliuered only by the Gospell.

BEcause it pleased God in the olde time not vainely by [illegible] tions and sacrifices to declare himselfe a Father, and [illegible] vaine he did consecrate a chosen people to himselfe: euen [illegible] without dout he was knowen in the same image, wherein

I graunt truely, that in that reſpect that Paule calleth the Goſpell the doctrine of faith, all the promiſes that we here and finde in the lawe, concerning the free forgeueneſſe of ſinnes, wherby God reconcileth men to himſelfe, are accompted partes therof, bycauſe he compareth faith againſt theſe terrors, wherewith the conſcience ſhould be troubled and vexed, if ſaluation were to be ſought by workes. Wherevpon followeth, that in taking the name of the Goſpell largely, there are conteined vnder it all the teſtimonies that God in olde time gaue to his fathers, of the mercie and fatherly fauour. But in the more excellent ſignification of it, I ſay it is applied to the eſtabliſhing of the grace geuen in Chriſt. And that meaning is not only receyued by common vſe, but alſo hangeth vpon the authoritie of Matt. 4. 9. Mar. 1. 1. Chriſt and the Apoſtles. Wherevpon this is proprely aſcribed to him, that he preached the Goſpell of the kingdome. Chriſt therfore by his comming hath made
2. Tim. 1. 10. the life and immortalitie by the Goſpell. By which wordes he meaneth, not that the fathers were drowned in darkeneſſe of death vntill the ſonne of God did put on fleſh: but clayming this preheminence of honour to the Goſpell, he teacheth that it is a newe and vnwonted kinde of meſſage, wherby God performed thoſe things which he had promiſed, that the truth of his promiſes ſhoulde be fulfilled in the perſone of the Sonne. For although the faithful haue alway found by experience, that ſame ſaying of Paule to be true, that in Chriſt are all the promiſes, yea and Amen, bycauſe they were ſealed in their heartes: yet bycauſe he hath accompliſhed all partes of our ſaluation in his fleſh, therefore that ſelfe liuely deliuering of the thinges is fully obteined a newe and ſingular title of praiſe. Whervpon ſerueth Iohn. 1. 51. that ſaying of Chriſt: Hereafter ye ſhall ſee the heauens open, and the Angels of God aſcending and deſcending vpon the ſonne of man: though he ſeeme to haue relation vnto the ladder ſhewed in a viſion to the Patriarch Iacob: yet he ſetteth out the excellencie of his kingdome by this marke, that he opened the gate of heauen to all men, that the entrie thereof maie ſtand familiarly open to all men.

3 But yet we muſt take hede of the deueliſh imagination of Seruetus, which when he goeth about, or at leaſt ſaineth that he goeth about, to extoll the greatneſſe of the grace of Chriſt, vtterly aboliſheth the promiſes, as if they were ended together with the Law. He layeth for him, that by the faith of the Goſpell there is vs the accomplishmēt of all the promises: as though there were fference betwene vs and Christ. I did in deede euen nowe declare Christ lefte nothing vnperfourmed of the whole summe of our on: but it is wrongfully gathered thereupon, that we do already the benefites purchaced by him, as though that saying of Paule false, that our saluation is hidde in hope, I graunt in deede, that by beleuing in Christ, do also passe from death to life: But in the e season we must holde this saying of Iohn, that although we we be the children of God, yet it hath not as yet appeared, till albe like vnto him: that is, till we shall see him suche as he is. refore although Christ offer vnto vs in his Gospell present ful-of spiritual good thinges, yet the enioying therof lieth stil hidde the keping of hope, till being vnclothed of the corruptible we be transfigured into the glorie of him that goeth before vs. e meane time the holy Ghost biddeth vs to reste vpon the pro-, whose authoritie ought with vs to put to silence all the bar-es of that filthy dogge. For as Paule witnesseth, godlinesse hath 1. Tim. mise as well of the life to come, as of the life present. For which 4 8. n he boasteth that he is an Apostle of Christ, according to the 2. Tim. 1 mise of life that is in him. And in an other place he putteth vs in 2. Cor. 7 le, that we haue the same promises, which in the olde time were n to the holy men. Finally, he setteth this for the summe of feli-, that we are sealed vp with the holy spirite of promise, but yet o no otherwise enioy Christ, but so farre as we embrace him ed with his promises. Wherby it cometh to passe, that he in dede leth in our heartes, and yet we wander in iourney abrode from bycause we walke by faith & not by sight. And these two thinges ot ill agree together: that we possesse in Christ all that perteineth e perfection of the heauenly life: and yet that faith is a behol-of good thinges that are not seene. Onely there is a difference noted in the nature or qualitie of the promises: bycause the ell sheweth with her finger that thing, whiche the lawe did ow vnder figures.

And hereby also is their errour conuinced, whiche do neuer rwise compare the lawe with the Gospell, but as they compare merites of workes with the free imputation of righteousnesse. ough in deede this comparison of contraries be not to be reiecbycause Paule doth oftentimes vnderstand by the name of the rule to liue righteously, wherin God requireth of vs, that which , not geuing vs any hope of life, vnlesse we in all pointes obey it: on the other side adding a curse if we do neuer so litle swarue from it: that is in such places as he disputeth, the we do freely God, and are by pardon reckened righteous, bycause the obser of the lawe, wherunto the rewarde is promised, is no where fo Therefore Paule doth fitly make the righteousnesse of the law of the Gospell, contrarie the one to the other. But the Gos not so succede in place of the whole lawe, that it should bring diuers meane of saluation, but rather to confirme and proue force, what so euer the lawe had promised, and to ioine the the shadowes. For when Christ saith, that the lawe and the Pro were vntill Iohn: he maketh not the fathers subiect to the which the bond seruantes of the lawe can not escape: but rather that they were instructed with certaine rudimentes, so as they Rom. 1. 16. Therefore Paule calling the Gospell the power of God, to to euery beleuer, by and by addeth, that it hath witnesse of the and the Prophetes. But in the ende of the same Epistle, although shewe that the title of praise of Iesus Christ is the reuelation misterie kept secret in euerlasting times: yet he doth qualifie saying, with adding an exposition, teaching that he is openly by the writinges of the Prophets. Wherupon we gather, that we are to entreate of the whole lawe, the Gospell differeth from lawe onely in respect of the plaine disclosing thereof. But yet inestimable flowing store of grace, which hath ben layed open in Christ, it is not without cause said, that at his cóming the kingdome of God was erected in earth.

5 Now betwene the lawe and the Gospell came Iohn, which an office that was meane and of affinitie to them both. For when he called Christ the lambe of God, and the sacrifice cleansing of sinnes, he shewed forth the summe of the Gospell bycause he did not expresse that same incóparable strégth and which at length appered in his resurrection, therefore Christ

The x. Chapter.

Of the likeneſſe of the olde and newe Teſtament.

Y the thinges aforſaid it may nowe appeare euidently, that all the men whome from the beginning of the worlde God adopted into the eſtate of his people, were with the ſame lawe, and with the bonde of the ſame doctrine, which nowe remaineth e among vs, bound in conuenant to him. But bycauſe it is of no mportance that this point be well eſtabliſhed, I will adioyne for an addition, ſith the fathers were partakers of all one inhewith vs, and hoped for all one ſaluation by the grace of al one tour, how farre their eſtate differed from oures in this fellow-t although the teſtimonies that we haue gathered out of the d the Prophets for proofe therof, do make it plaine that there ner any other rule of religion and godlineſſe in the people of et bycauſe in writers there are oftentimes many thinges ſpothe difference of the olde and new Teſtament, that may make der that is not of very ſharp iudgement to be in doubt: there-ſhall rightfully apoint one peculiar place for the better and act diſcuſſing of this matter: Yea and that thing alſo, which ſe ſhoulde haue bene very profitable for vs, is nowe made ne-by that monſtruous loſel Seruettus, and by diuerſe other mad the ſect of Anabaptiſtes, which haue no other opinion of the of Iſraell, than as of a hearde of ſwine: which they fondely haue bene fatted vp by the Lorde here in this earth, without e of heauenly immortalitie. Therefore that we may keepe s peſtilent errour from godly mindes, and alſo to plucke out all doubtes which are wont byandby to ariſe vpon hearing of the diuerſitie betwene the olde and newe Teſtament: let vs by the way looke, what they haue in them like, and what vn one to the other: what couenant the Lorde made with the Iewes in the olde time before the cõming of Christ, and what couenant hath nowe made with vs sins Christ hath bene openly shewed.

2 And both these pointes may be made plaine with one wo The couenãt of all the fathers so differeth nothing from ours in stance and in the matter it selfe, that it is altogether one and the same: but the ministration is diuers. But bycause of so great nesse no man were able to attaine a certaine vnderstanding, we needes proceede on with a longer declaration if we meane to any thing at all. But in shewing how they are like or rather all one shalbe superfluous to discourse againe of new vpõ all the speci ticulars that haue already bene declared: and it shalbe out of to mingle those thinges together that remaine yet to be spoke other places. Here we must chiefly rest vpon three principall First, that we holde, that carnall wealth and felicitie was not marke apointed to the Iewes to aspire vnto, but that they were adoption chosen vnto the hope of immortalitie: and that the this adoption was certainly assured vnto them both by oracles the lawe, & by the prophecies. Secondarily, that the couenant by they were ioyned to the Lord, was vpholden not by any of theires, but by the onely mercie of God that called them. Th that they both had and knew Christ the mediatour, by whome shoulde both be ioyned to God and enioie his promises. Of pointes, bycause the second paraduẽture is not yet sufficiẽtly it shall in place apointed for it be declared at large. For we sha firme by many and cleere testimonies of the Prophetes, that it his owne meere goodnesse and tender fauour, what so euer Lord at any time did, and promised to the people of Israell. Th also hath already had here and there some plaine declaration and we haue not left the first altogether vntouched.

3 Therefore in setting out of this point, bycause it most belongeth to this present matter, and for that they make vs trouersie about it, we will emploie the more earnest trauaile so that if there wante yet any thing of the explication of the may be by the way supplied, or in conuenient place be added.

re. For the Gospell doth not holde the heartes of men in the ioy is present life, but lifteth them vp to the hope of immortalitie: not fasten them to earthly delites, but preaching to them a hope l vp in heauen, doth in a manner transport them thether. For thus tion, and the power of God to saue the faithful, and the kingdome auen. Now if the doctrine of the Gospell be spirituall, and ope-he entrie to the possessiō of an incorruptible life: let vs not thinke hey to whome it was promised and declared, did passe ouer and t the care of their soule, & lie dully like beastes in seeking pleaof the body. Neither let any man here cauill that the promises are sealed in the law and the Prophetes, cōcerning the Gospel, ordeined for the new people. For within a little after that which ke of the Gospell promised in the lawe, he addeth, that all the es that the law conteineth, are without doubt properly directed m that are vnder the lawe. I graunt in deede it is in an other ar-nt. But he was not so forgetfull, that when he had ones said that Rom. 3. thinges which the lawe conteineth belong to the Iewes, he did 19. member what in a fewe verses before he had affirmed of the ll promised in the lawe. Wherefore the Apostle sheweth most , that the old Testamēt chiefly tended to the life to come, when h, that vnder it are conteined the promises of the Gospell. y the same reason followeth, both that it stoode vpon the free e of God, and also was confirmed by the meane of Christ. For ry preaching of the Gospell pronounceth no other thing, but nners are iustified by the fatherly kindenesse of God, without wne deserving: and the whole summe therof is fulfilled in Christ. then dare make the Iewes without Christ, with whome we that the couenant of the Gospell was made, whereof Christ is ly foundation? Who dare make them strangers from the bene-free saluation, to whome we heare that the doctrine of the nesse of faith was ministred? But, that we dispute not longe idēt matter, we haue a notable sentence of the Lord. Abrahā Iohn. 8. ſhoulde chalenge any prerogatiue vnto our ſelues, to deliuer u the vengeance of God which they ſuſteined, for aſmuch as the did not onely graunt vnto them the ſame benefites, but he hath ouſly ſet forth his grace among them with the ſame tokens: A ſhoulde haue ſayd: If ye truſt that ye be out of peril, bycauſe Baptiſme wherewith ye be marked, and the Supper which ye ceyue, haue excellent promiſes, and in the meane time deſpiſe goodneſſe of God, ye are licẽtiouſly wanton: Know ye, that the alſo were not without ſuch ſacramentes, againſt whome yet th did moſt ſeuerely put his iudgementes in execution. They were tized in paſſing ouer the Sea, and in the cloude wherewith they defended from the burning heate of the ſonne. They ſay, that ſame paſſage was a carnall Baptiſme, which after a certaine p tion aunſwereth to our ſpirituall Baptiſme. But if that were true, the Apoſtles argument coulde not procede, which meaneth to haue this taken away from the Chriſtiãs, that they thinke th excell ỹ Iewes by the prerogatiue of Baptiſme. Neither is that byandby after followeth, ſubiect to this cauillation: that th eate the ſame ſpirituall meate that we eate, and dronke the ſa rituall drinke, which he expoundeth to be Chriſt.

6 To ouerthrow this ſentence of Paule, they obiecte that Iohn. 6. Chriſt ſaith: Your fathers did eate Manna in the wildernesse, a dead: he that eateth my fleſh, ſhall not die for euer. Which ces are very eaſily made to agree together. The Lord, bycauſe h talked to hearers that ſought onely to be filled with foode but cared not for the meate of the soule, tempered his talke that to their capacitie, but specially he frameth the compari-Manna and of his body according to their sense. They required e, to getue himselfe some credite, woulde approue his power ing some such miracle, as Moses did in the wildernesse, when ined Manna from Heauen. But in Manna they conceyued no-ut the remedie of carnall hunger, wherewith the people was ted that they pearced not to that hier misterie which Paule spost vnto: Christ therefore, to shew how much greater a be-hey ought to looke for at his hande, than that which they re-that Moses did bestow vpon their fathers, frameth this com-: If it were a great miracle in your opinion, and worthy to be bred, that the Lord by Moses ministred foode from Heauen people, to sustaine them for a small time, that they shoulde not for hunger in the wildernesse: gather hereby how much more is in the meate that geueth immortalitie. We see why the Lord ver that thing which was principall in Manna, and spake only aiest profit of it: euen bycause the Iewes as it were of purpose che him, did caste Moses in his teeth, which succored them of the people with remedie of Manna: he aunswered that he inister of a much hier grace, in cõparison wherof, the carnall f the people, which alone they so much esteemed, ought of o be nothing regarded. But Paule, bycause he knew that the when he rained Manna from heauen, did not onely poure it for the feding of their belly, but also did distribute it for a l misterie, to be a figure of the spirituall quickning that is Christ, did not neglect that parte that was most worthy of cõ-on. Wherfore is certainely and clerely followeth, that the same s of eternall and heuenly life, which now the Lorde voucheo graunt vnto vs, were not only cõmunicated vnto the Iewes, sealed with very spirituall Sacramentes. Of which matter e disputeth largely against Faustus the Manichee.

But if the readers had rather to haue testimonies alledged vnout of the lawe and the Propheter, whereby they may per-ue the spirituall couenant was common also to the fathers, as e by Christ and the Apostles: I will also follow that desire, much the more willingly, bycause by that meanie the aduer-saries shalbe more surely convinced, so that they shall haue afterward no dally. And I will beginne at that proofe, which although that the Anabaptistes pride will thinke very fonde and in a to be laughed at, yet shall much auaile with such readers as are willing to learne and haue their ſounde wit. And I take it principle confeſſed, that there is ſuch effectuall force of life worde of God, that whomeſo euer God vouchſaueth to ioine them nier to God, I take it for the maner of communica-not that general maner, which is poured abrode throughout uen and earth and all the creatures of the worlde, which alone do quicken all thinges, euery one after the proportion of

I ſpeake of this ſpeciall maner, whereby the ſoules of the both lightened vnto the knowledge of God, and in a maner braham, and the other fathers cleaued vnto God, I ſay that doubtefull that they had an entrie into the immortall king God. For it was a ſounde partaking of God, which can not be 10 Now (which is the principal point wherevpon this controuerſie hangeth) let vs looke, whether the faithful themſelues haue not ben ſo inſtructed of the Lord, that they perceyued that they ſhoulde haue a better life els where, & ſo neglecting this life, had an eie to the other. Firſt the ſtate of life that was enioyned them by God, was a cōtinuall exerciſe, whereby they might be put in minde, that they were the moſt miſerable of all men, if their happineſſe were only in this life. Gen.3. 17. Adam, moſt vnhappy, euen with onely remembrance of the happineſſe that he had loſt, did with painefull labours hardely ſuſteine his nedineſſe, and that he ſhoulde not be preſſed with the curſe of God in the onely labours of his handes, euen there receyued he extreme ſorrowe of that which remained for him to be his comfort. Of his two ſonnes, the one was taken away by the wicked ſlaughter of his Gen.4. 8. brother: the other he had lefte aliue, whoſe ſight he worthily deteſted and abhorred. Abel cruelly murthered in the very floure of his age, became an example of the wretchedneſſe of men. Noe, while the Gen.6. 22. whole worlde careleſly liued in pleaſure, ſpent a good part of his age with great werineſſe in bilding the Arke. This that he eſcaped death, came to paſſe by his greater troubles, than if he ſhoulde haue died a Gen.9. 24. hundred deathes. For beſide that the Arke was to him as a graue for tenne monethes, there is nothing more vnpleaſant than to be holden ſo longe in manner drowned in dong of beaſtes. When he had paſſed ouer ſo great difficulties, he fell into newe matter of griefe, he ſaw him ſelfe ſcorned of his owne ſonne, and was compelled with his owne mouth to curſe him, whome by the great benefit of God he had receyued ſafe from the generall floode.

Gen.12 4. 11 Abraham in deede may be one alone to be compared with a hundred thouſand, if we conſider his faith, which is ſet forth vnto vs for the beſt rule of beleeuing, of whoſe kinred we muſt be accompted, that we may be the children of God. But what more abſurditie is there, than Abraham to be the father of all the faithfull, and not to poſſeſſe ſo much as the ſmaleſt corner amōg them? but he can not be throwen downe out of the number, no not from the moſt honorable degree, but that the whole church muſt be deſtroyed. Now as touching the experiēces of his life: When he was firſt called by the commaundement of God, he was plucked away from his countrey, his parentes and his frendes, in whome men thinke to be the chiefe ſweetneſſe nesse of life: euen as if God of determined purpose meant to spoyle him of all the pleasures of life. So soone as he came into the lande where he was commaunded to dwell, he was driuen out from thense with famine. Thither he fled for succour, where to saue himselfe, he was compelled to deliuer out his wife to be abused, which we knowe not whether it were not more bitter to him thā many deathes. Whē he was returned into the lande of his owne dwelling, he was driuen out againe from thense with famine. What a felicitie is this, to dwell in that lande, wherin a man must so oft be hungry, yea die for famine if he runne not away? And therewithall he was brought to that necessitie with Abimelech, that he must needes redeeme his life with the losse of his wife, while many yeares long he wandred vncertainely hither and thither, he was compelled by the continuall brawlinges of his seruantes to put away his nephew, whome he loued as his owne sonne. Which departing without doubt he dyd no otherwise take, than if he had suffred the cutting of one of his limmes. A litle after, he heard that he was carried away captiue by his enemies. Whether so euer he went, he founde neighbours outragcously barbarous, which woulde not suffer him so much as to drinke water out of the welles that himselfe had digged with great labour. For he would not haue redeemed the vse of them at the hand of king Gerar, if he had not first ben forbidden. Nowe when he came to olde age, he saw the thing which is the most vnpleasant & bitter that that age hath, himselfe punished with hauing no children, till beside all hope he begate Ismaell, whose birth yet he payed dere for, when he was wery with the brawling of Sara, as if he in mainteining the stubbornesse of his bondewoman, were himselfe the cause of the trouble of his household. At length Isaac was borne, but with this condition that his first begotten Ismaell must, as forsaken, be cruelly caste out of doores. When only Isaac was left, in whome the weryed age of the silly good man might rest, within a litle after he was commaunded to kill him. What can mans wit deuise more miserable, than the father to be made the butcher of his owne sonne? If Isaac had dyed of any sickenesse, who woulde not haue thought the olde man most miserable, that had a sonne geuen him in mockeage, for whome his griefe of want of children should be doubled? If he had ben slaine by some straunger, the vnhappinesse of the thing would haue much encreased his miserie. But this passeth all examples of miserie, to haue him slaine with his fathers owne hand. Finally, he was in all the whole course of his life so tossed and vexed, as if a man would in a table paint out an example of a miserable life, he coulde finde none more fit, than this of Abraham. Gen. 12 12.

And let noe man obiect that he was not altogether vnhappy, for that he at length prosperously escaped from so many and so great tempestes. For we can not say that he liueth a blessed life, which for a long space together painefully weareth out of infinite troubles, but him that without feeling of euils, quietly enioyeth present good thinges.

12 Isaac that was lesse troubled with euilles, yet scarce euer tolde any tast of sweetenesse. He also felt the same vexations, that do not suffer a manne to be blessed in the earth. Famine chaced him out of
Gen. 26 35. the lande of Chanaan: he had his wife violently plucked away from his bosome: his neighbours oft troubled him, and by all meanes oppressed him, so that he was faine to striue for his water: at home in

Gen. 29 30. he was fled from his parentes and his natiue countrey, beside that it was a greuous thing to liue in banishment, he was nothing more kyndly or gently receiued of his vncle Laban. Thé it sufficed not that he had serued seuen yeare a hard and cruell seruice, but that also he must be by guile defrauded of his wife. For an other wiues sake he was driuen into new seruice, where he was all the day fried with heate of the sunne, and all the night lay waking and pained with frost and cold, as himselfe complained. While he by the space of twentie yeares suffred so hard a life, he was dayly vexed with newe iniuries of his

When he was commaunded to returne into his countrey, he was compelled to watche an auantage to take his iourney, much like a shamefull running away: and yet coulde he not so escape the vniust dealing of his father in lawe, but was faine to suffer his reproches and rebukes in the middes of his iourney. Then fell he
Gen. 32 11. into a much more cruell destresse. For when he came nere to his brother, he had so many deathes before his eyes, as might be prepared by a cruell man and a bent enemie. So was he aboue measure tormented and as it were drawen in sonder with terrible feares, so long as he looked for his brothers cõmyng: when he came ones in his sight, he
Gen. 33 16. fell down as halfe dead at his feete, vntil he foũd him more fauorable than he durst haue hoped. Beside that, at his first entrie into the lande, he

he loſt Rachel his derely beloued wife. Afterwarde he heard worde that the ſonne which he had by her, and whome therefore he loued aboue the reſte, was torne with wilde beaſtes: by whoſe death howe great griefe he conceyued, he himſelfe declared in this, that after long weping he obſtinately ſtopped vp all wayes whereby comfort might come to him, leauing himſelfe nothing, but to goe downe to his ſonne wayling into the graue. In the meane time howe great cauſes of griefe, wayting and werineſſe were the rauiſhment and deflouring of his daughter, and the boldeneſſe of his ſonnes in reuenging it, which not onely made him to be abhorred in ſight of all the inhabitaunts of that countrey, but alſo procured him moſte preſent perill of vtter deſtruction? Then followed that horrible outragious offenſe of Ruben his firſt begotten ſonne, which was ſuch as their coulde not chaunce a more greuous. For whereas the defiling of a mans wife is reckned among the hyeſt ill fortunes: what is to be ſaide of it, when that wickedneſſe is committed by a mans owne ſonne? Within a lide while after, his houſe is ſpotted with an other vnnaturall adulterie: ſo that ſo many ſhames might well breake a hearte, that otherwiſe were moſt conſtant and vnable to be vanquiſhed with calamities. Nere before the ende of his life, while he ſought to prouide ſuccour for the famine of himſelfe and other, he has ſtriken with tidynges of a newe misfortune, vnderſtanding that an other of his ſonnes was kept in priſon, for recouering of whome he was compelled to leaue to the reſt Beniamin his onely dearling. Whō can thinke, that in ſuch a heape of miſcheues he had any one moment geuen him ſafely to take breath in? And therefore he himſelfe the beſte witneſſe of himſelfe, affirmed to Pharao, that his dayes were ſhorte and euill vpon the earth. Nowe truely he that declareth that he hath paſſed his life by continuall miſeries, denieth that he felt that proſperitie which the Lorde had promiſed him. Therefore either Iacob did vnkindely and vnthankefully weye the grace of God, or he truely profeſſed that he had ben miſerable vpon the earth. If his affirmation were true, then it followeth, that he had not his hope faſtened vpon earthly thinges.

13 If theſe holy fathers loked for (as vndoubtedly they did) a bleſſed life at the hande of God, truely they both thought and ſaw it to be an other maner of bleſſednеſſe, than the bleſſednеſſe of earthly life. Which thing the Apoſtle alſo doth ſhewe excellently well: Abraham (ſaith he) dwelt by faith in the lande of promiſe as in a ſtrange lande, dwelling in tentes with Iſaac and Iacob parteners with him of the ſame inheritaunce. For they loked for a citie ſet vpon a good foundation, the maker and bilder wherof is God. All these are dead in faith, not receyuing the thinges promised, but loking at them a farre of, and beleuing and confessing that they were gestes and straungers vpon the land. Whereby they declare that they sought for a countrie, and if they had ben moued with desire of that lande from whence they came, they had power to returne. But they sought for a better, that is the heauenly countrie. Wherefore God is not ashamed to be called their God, for asmuche as he hath prepared them a citie. For they had bene duller than blockes, to followe promises so earnestly, wherof there appered no hope in earth, vnlesse they had loked for the fulfilling of them els where. But this he chiefely enforceth, and that not without good reason, that they called this life a iourney to home, euen as Moses reporteth. From if they were straungers and sonners in the lande of Chanaan, where is the Lordes promise whereby they were made heires of it? He sheweth plainely therefore, that the Lordes promise, cõcerning the possessiõ therof, had a further respect. Wherefore they purchased not one foote in the lande of Chanaan, but for burial, wherby they testified, that they did not hope that they should receiue the frute of the promise till after death. And that is the cause why Iacob so much esteemed to be buried there, that he compelled his sonne Ioseph to promise it him, and to sweare to performe it: and why Ioseph willed his bones, certaine ages after, whẽ they were long before fallen into powder, to be remoued thither.

Gen. 47 29. and 30.

Gen. 50 25.

14 Finally, it appeareth plainely, that in all the trauailes of this life they had alway set before them the blessednesse of the life to come. For to what purpose shoulde Iacob haue so much desired, and with so great daunger sought the preeminence of the first begotten, which should procure him nothing but banishment, and in a maner to be cut of from beyng his childe: but no good at all, vnlesse he had respected a hyer blessing? And he declared, that he had this meaning by the wordes which he spake among his last breathinges: Lorde, I will loke for thy saluation. What saluation coulde he haue loked for, when he sawe that he laie ready to geue vp the ghost, vnlesse he had seene in death the beginning of a newe life? But what dispute we of the holy ones and children of God, when euen he was not without a taste of such vnderstanding, which otherwise was enemie to the truthe? For what meant Balaam when he said: Let my soule die the death of the righteous, and let my laste times be like vnto theires? but that he meante the same thing that Dauid afterwarde vttered, that the death of the Saintes is precious in the sight of the Lorde, but the death of the wicked, is very euill? If the furthest bounde and ende were in death, there could in no wise be noted no difference betwene the righteous and vnrighteous, they differ one from the other by the diuersity of the estates, that after death shall befall to them both.

25 We are not yet come beyonde Moses: Which (as these men say) had no other office, but to perswade the carnal people to worship God by the fruteffullnesse of the ground & plenty of all thinges. And yet (vnlesse a man will flee the light that willingly offereth it selfe) there is already a plaine declaration of the spirituall couenant. But if we come downe to the Prophetes, there with most full brightenesse both the life euerlasting and the kingdome of Christ do vtter themselues. And first of all Dauid, which as he was before ỹ other in time, so accordinge to the order of Gods distribution, he shewed the heauenly misteries in shadowes more darkely than the rest, yet with what plainesse and certainty directeth he all his sayings to that end? How he esteemed the earthly dwelling, this sentence testifieth: I am here a forener & stranger, as all my fathers were. Euery liuing man is vanity, euery one walketh about as a shadow. But now what is my expectation, Lord? euen to thee is my hope. Truely he that confessing that in the earth there is nothinge sounde or stedfast, keepeth still a stedfastnes of hope in God, cõsidereth his felicity laied vp in an other place. To such consideration is he wont to call all the faithfull, so oft as he meaneth to comfort them truely. For in an other place, after he had spoken of the shormesse, and the transitorie and vanishing image of mans life, he addeth: but the mercy of the Lord is for euer vpon them that feare him. Like whereunto is that which is in the hundred and second Psalme. At the beginning Lord thou didst lay the foundation of the earth, and the heauens are the workes of thy handes. They shal perish, but thou abidest: they shall waxe olde like a garment, and thou shalt change them as apparell, but thou remaine the selfe same, and thy yeares shall not faile: the sonnes of thy seruauntes shall dwell, and thy posterity shalbe stablished before thee. If the Godly ceasse not for the decay of heauen & earth to be stablished before the Lord, it followeth, that their saluation is ioyned with the eternity of God. But that hope can not stand at all, vnlesse it rest vpon the promise that is set forth in Esay: The heauens (sayth the Lord) shall vanish away like smoke, the earth shalbe worne out like a garment, & the inhabitantes of it shall perish like those thinges. But my saluation shalbe for euer, & my righteousnes shall not faile: where euerlastingnes is giuẽ to righteousnes & saluation, not in respect ỹ they remaine with God, but in respect that they are felt of men.

For the Lord oftentimes leaueth his seruantes to the lust of the wicked, not only to be vexed, but also to be torne in peces & destroied: he suffereth the good to lye languishing in darkenesse & filth, while the wicked do in a manner shine among the starres. And he doth not so chere them with ỹ brightnes of his coũtenance, that they enioy long cõtinuing gladnes. Wherfore euen he also hideth not, that if the faithfull fasten their eyes vpon the present state of thinges, they shalbe striken with a sore tẽptation, as though there were no fauour or reward of innocency with God. So much doth wickednes for the most part prosper & florish, while the company of the Godly is oppressed with shame, pouerty, contempt & all kindes of crosses. It wan-
Psa. 73. 17. ted but litle (sayth he) that my foote slipped not, & my steppes fell not abroade, while the fortune of fooles grieueth me, and while I see the prosperity of ỹ wicked. At length after rehearsall of it he concludeth. I bent my thought, if I could vnderstand these thinges. But it is a trauell to my spirit, till I enter into the sanctuary of the Lord, & vnderstand the last end of them.

17 Let vs therfore learne, yet by this confession of Dauid, that the holy fathers vnder the old testament were not ignorant, how seldom or neuer God doth in this worlde performe to his seruaunres those things that he promiseth them, & that therefore they did lift vp their mindes to Gods sanctuary, wherin they had ỹ laied vp in store, which appeareth not in ỹ shadow of this present life. That was ỹ last iudgement of God, which when they coulde not see with eyes, they were content to vnderstand by faith. Trusting vpon which affiance, whatsoeuer happened in the world, yet they douted not a time would once come, when the promises of God should be fulfilled. As these sayings do witnesse, I will behold the face of God in righteousnesse: I will be

They

They shall still beare frute, they shall be fat and greene in their olde age. When he had sayd a litle before: How deepe are thy thoughtes, O Lord, while the wicked do florish, they bud out like an herbe, that they may perish for ever. Where is that faire shew and beauty of the world fall, but when the face of this worlde shall be turned inward by disclosing of the kingdom of God? When they turned their eyes to that eternity, they despised the hardnesse enduring but a moment of present miseries, & boldly burst foorth into these words: Thou shalt not suffer for ever the righteous to die, but thou shalt throw downe the wicked headlong into ỹ pit of destruction. Where as in this world the pit of eternall destruction that may swallow vp the wicked? Amõg those felicities, this is also reckened in an other place, that they close vp the end of their life in a momẽt, without long languishing. Where is that so great stedfastnesse of the holy ones, whom Dauid himselfe teacheth where complaineth, not only to be shaken with trouble, but also to be oppressed, and vtterly broken in peeces? Forsooth, he did set before his eyes, not what the altering course of the world beareth, which is ruinable & more vnstedfast than the ebbinge and flowing of tides, but what the Lord will do, when he shall one day sitte for the eternall dealing of heauen and earth. As in an other place he excellently wel describeth it: The fooliſh do stay vpon their welthines, & are proude because of their great riches. And yet no mã, though he florish in neuer so great dignity, can redeeme his brother from death, no man can pay to God the price of his ransome, but whereas they see that both the wise do die, and that the wicked also and fooles do perish & leaue their riches to strangers, yet they thinke that their houses shall abide for ever, and their dwellings to the ende of ages, and they aduaunce their names vpon the earth, but man shall not continue in honor: he shalbe like to the beastes that die. This imagination of theirs is extreme folly, which yet their posterity do greedily follow. They shall be placed like a flocke in Hell, and death shall haue rule ouer them. When the light ariseth, the vpright shall haue dominion ouer them, the beauty of them shall perish, Hell is their dwelling house. First this is a skoffinge to scorne of the fooliſh, for that they rest on the slippery and rolling good things of the worlde, doth shew that the wise must seeke a farre other felicity. But there he more euidently discloseth the mistery of the resurrection, where after the destruction & extinguishment of them, he erecteth the kingdom of the Godly. For what rising of light (I pray you) shal we call that, but the reuealing of the new life which followeth the end of this present life.

How did they determine afflictions to end in a moment, that were in affliction in a manner their life long? where did they eſpie ſo long an enduring of Gods kindeneſſe, whereof they ſcarſely felt any litle taſt? If they had ſticked faſt vpon the earth, they coulde haue founde no ſuch thing, but becauſe they looked vpon heauen, they acknowledged that it is but a moment of time, while the Lord exerciſe his holy ones by the croſſe, but that his mercies, wherin they are gathered together, do laſt the worldes age. Againe, they did foreſee that eternall and neuer endinge deſtruction of the vngodly, which were

The Lorde ſhall keepe the feete of the holy, and the wicked ſhall be put to ſilence in darkeneſſe. Which do declare that they wel knew, that howſoeuer the holy were diuerſly caried about, yet their laſt end is life and ſaluation: and that the proſperity of the wicked is a pleſaunt way, whereby they by litle and litle ſlide forward into the gulfe of death. Therefore they called the death of ſuch, the deſtruction of proued that such doctrine was among the Iewes. For I will byandby answere him, that these sew did not in these sayinges vtter any secret wisdom, wherevnto only certaine excellent wittes were severally & privately suffered to attaine, but that as they were by the holy Ghost appointed teachers of the people, so they openly published those misteries of God that were to be vniuersally learned, and ought to be the principles of the common religion among the people. Therfore while we heare the publike oracles of the holy Ghost, wherin he spake of the spirituall life so clearly and plainly in the Church of the Iewes, it were a point of vntolerable stubbornnesse to send them away onely to the fleshly couenant, wherein is mention made of nothinge, but erth and earthly wealthinesse.

20 If I come downe to the later Prophetes, there we may freely walke as in our owne fielde. For if it were not hard for vs to get the vpper hande in Dauid, Iob, and Samuel, here it shall be much more ease. For God kept this distribution and order in disposing the couenant of his mercy, that how much the nearer it drew on in processe of time to y ful performance thereof, with so much greater encreasementes of reuelation he did day by day more brightly shew it. Therfore at the beginninge when the first promise of saluation was made vnto Adam, there glistered out but as it were smale sparkles of it. After, hauinge more added vnto it, a greater largenesse of light began to be put forth: which from thense forth brake out more and more, and displaied her brightnesse farther abroade, till at length all the cloudes were driuen away, and Christ the sonne of righteousnesse fully lightned the whole world. We neede not therefore to feare that we faile of testimonies of the Prophetes, if we seeke them to proue our cause, but because I see that there will arise a huge deale of matter, whereupon I shoulde be constrained of necessity to tary longer then the proportion of my purpose may beare, for it woulde so grow to a worke of a great volume, and also because I haue already, by those thinges that I haue sayd before, made plaine the way, euen for a reader of meane capacity, so as he may go forward without stumblinge: therefore I will at this present abstaine from longe tediousnesse: which to do is no lesse necessary: but giuinge the readers warning before hande, that they remember to opē their owne way with that key that we haue first giuen them in their hande. That is, that so oft as the Prophetes speake of the blessednesse of the faithful people, whereof scarsely the least steppes are seene in this present life, they may resorte to this distinction: that the Prophetes, the better to expresse the goodnesse of God, did as in a shadow expresse it to the people by temporall benefites, as by certaine rough drawinge of the portraiture therof: but that the perfect image, that they haue painted therof, was such as might rauish mens mindes out of the earth, & out of the elements of this worlde, and of the age that shall perish, and of necessity raise it vp to the cõsidering of the felicity of the life that is to come and spirituall.

21 We will be content with one example. When the Israelites being caried away to Babylon, saw their scattering abroade to be like vnto death, they coulde hardly be remoued from this opinion that they thought that all was but fables that Ezechiel propheciedof their restitution: because they reckened it euen all one as if he had told them that rotten carcases shoulde be restored againe to life. The Lord to shew, that euen that same difficulty could not stop him from bringinge his benefite to effect, shewed to the Prophet in a vision a fielde full of drie bones, to the which in a moment with the only power of his word he restored breath and liuelinesse. The vision dede serued to correct the incredulity at that present time: but in the meane season he did put the Iewes in minde how farre the power of the Lord extended beyond the accompt of the people, which so easily quickened with his only becke, bones already rotten and scattered abroade: wherfore you shal cõpare that with an other saying of Esaie. The dead shall rise, my carcase, they shall rise againe. Awake ye and reioyse that dwell in the dust, because the deaw of the greene fields is thy deaw, & thou shalt plucke downe the lande of the Giantes into ruine. Go my people, enter into thy tentes: shut thy dores vpon thee hide thee a little while, till my displeasure passe ouer. For behold, the Lord shall go out of his place, to visite the iniquity of the dwellers vpõ the earth against him, and the earth shall shewe forth her bloode, and shall no longer hide her slaine.

Ezec. 37. 4.

Esa. 26. 19.

22 Albeit a man should do fondly, that would go about to draw all to such a rule. For there be some places that without any couering do shew the immortality to come, that is prepared for the faithfull in the kingdome of God, of which sorte we haue recited some, and of like sorte are the most part of the rest, specially these two, the one in Esay. As a new heauen, & a new earth which I make to stande before me, so shall your seede stande, and there shalbe moneth of moneths and Sabbat of Sabbat: all flesh shall come to worshippe before my face, saith the Lord. And they shall go out and see the deade carcases of the men that haue offended against me, that their worme shall not die, and their fier shall not be quenched. The other of Daniel. In that time shall rise vp Michael the great prince, that stãdeth for the sonnes of his people, and there shall come a time of distresse, such as was not since nations first began to be, and then shall all thy people be saued that shall be founde wrytten in thy booke. And of those that slepe in the dust of the earth, there shall awake some to eternall life, and some to euerlasting shame.

23 Now as for prouing ỹ other two pointes that the fathers had Christ for pledge of their couenant, and that they reposed in him all their assurance of blessing, I will not trauaile therein at all, because they haue both lesse controuersie & more plainnesse. Let vs therfore boldly determine this, which by no engines of the deuil may be remoued, that the olde Testament or couenant which the Lord made with his people Israel, was not limited within the compasse of earthly things, but also conteined the promise of the spirituall and eternall life: the expectation wherof must nedes haue bin imprinted in all their mindes that truely consented to the couenant. But let vs put farre away this mad and pernicious opinion, that either God did set forth in his promise to the Iewes nothing else, or that the Iewes sought nothing else but filing of their belly, delites of the flesh, florishing wealth, outward power, fruitfullnesse of children, and whatsoeuer a naturall man esteemeth. For at this day Christ promiseth no other kingdom of heauen to his, but where they shall rest with Abraham, Isaac, and Iacob. And Matt. 8. 11.

the Gospel, for that they were the children of the Prophets, comprehended in the couenant, which the Lord had in the olde time made with his people. And, that the same shoulde not be witnessed with words only, the Lord also approued it by deede. For in the very mo- Mat. 27. 51. ment that he rose againe, he vouchsaued to haue many of ỹ holy men to rise againe in company with him, & made them to be seene in the City: so giuing an assured token, that whatsoeuer he did and suffered for ỹ purchasing of eternall saluation, perraineth no lesse to the faith-full of the old testamẽt, than vnto vs. For as Peter testifieth, they were Act. 15. 8. also endued with ỹ same spirit of faith, wherby we are regenerate into life. Now, when we heare that the same spirit which is in vs a certaine sparcle of immortality, wherupon it is also in an other place called the earnest of our inheritance, did likewise dwell in thẽ, how dare we take from thẽ ỹ inheritance of life? Wherby it is so much ỹ more marueil, that in the olde time the Sadduces fell to such grosseneſse of error, that they denied both the resurrection & also the substance of soules, both which pointes they saw sealed with so cleare testimonies of Scripture. And no lesse to be marueled at, euen at this day, were the fully of all that nation in looking for the earthly kingdom of Christ, if the Scriptures had not long before declared, that they ſhould haue that puniſhment for reſuſinge the Goſpell. For ſo it behoued, by the iuſt iudgement of God, to ſtrike thoſe mindes with blindenes, which in refuſing the light of heauen being offered them, did wilfully bring themſelues into darkeneſſe. Therfore they read and continually turne

And ſo ſhal it remaine couered & hidden from them, till he be turned to Chriſt, from whom now they trauaile to leade & drawe him away ſo much as in them lieth.

The xi. Chapter.

Of the difference of the one Teſtament from the other.

WHat then? wilt thou ſay: ſhall there be no difference left betwene the olde Teſtament and the New? and to what purpoſe ſerue all thoſe places of Scripture, where they are compared one againſt the other, as things moſt contrary? I do willingly allowe thoſe differences that are rehearſed in the Scripture: but ſo that they nothinge hinder the vnity already eſtabliſhed, as it ſhalbe plaine to ſee when we ſhall haue entreated of them in order. Thoſe differences are (as farre as euer I could marke or can remember) chiefely foure in number, to the which if you liſt to adioyne the 5. I am not againſt it. I ſay and truſt to proue that they are all ſuch as rather belonge to the manner of miniſtration, than to the ſubſtance of them. And by this meane they ſhall nothing hinder, but that the promiſes of both the old and new teſtament may remayne all one and all one foundation of the ſame promiſes, Chriſt. Now the firſt difference is, that although, euen, in the old time alſo, the Lordes will was to direct the mindes of his people, and to haue them raiſed vp to the heauenly inheritance: yet, that they might be the better nouriſhed in hope thereof, he gaue it to be ſeene or rather to be taſted of, vnder earthly benefites? But now hauing reueled the grace of the life to come, by the Goſpell, he more clearly and plainely directeth our mindes the ſtreight way to the meditation thereof, leauing the infancy our maner of exerciſing which he vſed with the Iſraelites. They that marke not this purpoſe of God, do not thinke that the olde people climbed any hier than to ỹ good things promiſed to ỹ body. They ſo often heare the lande of Chanaan named, as the excellent, or rather only reward for the kepers of Gods law. They heare that God threatneth nothing more ſeuerely to the tranſgreſſors of the ſame law, than that that they ſhalbe driuen out of the poſſeſſion of the ſame land, & ſcattered abroade into ſtrange regions. They ſee that in a maner to this effect come all the bleſſings & curſes that are pronounced by Moſes. Hereby they do vndoutedly determine, that the Iewes not for their owne ſakes, but for others, were ſeuered frō other nations: that is, that the Church of Chriſt might haue an image, in whoſe outward forme ſhe might ſee examples of ſpirituall things. But ſith the Scripture doth ſometimes ſhew, that God himſelfe directed all the earthly benefites that he did for them to this end, that ſo he might leade them by the hand to the hope of heauēly benefites. It was too much vnskilfulnes, I will not ſay blockiſhneſſe, not to conſider this order of diſpoſition. The iſſue or point of our controuerſie with this ſorte of men is this, that they teach that the poſſeſſiō of the land of Chanaan was to the Iſraelites their chiefe and laſt bleſſednes, & that to vs after the reueling of Chriſt, it doth but figuratiuely ſignifie ỹ heauenly inheritance. On the other ſide we affirme, that they did in the earthly poſſeſſion which they enioyed, as in a lookinge glaſſe behold the inheritance to come, which they beleued to be prepared for them in heauen.

2 That ſhall better appeare by the ſimilitude that Paul vſed to the Galatians. He compareth the nation of the Iewes to an heire, within age, which beinge not yet able to to gouerne himſelfe, followeth the guiding of the tutor or ſchoolemaiſter, to whoſe cuſtody he is committed. And whereas he applieth that ſimilitude to the ceremonies, that nothinge hindereth but that it may alſo very fitly ſerue to this purpoſe. The ſame inheritance was appointed for them, that was appointed for vs: but ſuch as yet for want of age, they were not of capacity to enter vpon and vſe. The ſame Church was among them, but thereof the age was yet but childiſh. Therefore the Lord kept them vnder this ſchooling, that he gaue them not the ſpirituall promiſes ſo naked and openly, but as it were ſhadowed w earthly promiſes. Therfore, where he called Abraham, Iſaac, and Iacob, and their poſterity vnto hope of immortality, he promiſed them the land of Chanaan to be their inheritance: not to determine their hopes vpon it, but that in beholding of it, they ſhoulde exerciſe and confirme themſelues in the hope of that true inheritance that did not yet appeare. And that they might not be deceiued, there was giuen them a hier promiſe to teſtify, that that lande was not the hieſt benefite of God. So Abraham was not ſuffred to lie ſlouthfull in the promiſe receiued of the lande, but his minde was with a greater promiſe raiſed vp vnto the Lord. For Abraham heard this ſayd vnto him: I am thy protector, & thy reward exceeding great. Here we ſee, that Abraham hath the ende of his re- Gal. 4.1 Ge. 15.1

ward set forth in the Lord, that he should not accompt vpon a transitory and slippery reward in the elementes of this worlde, but rather thinke it to be such as can not wither away. Afterward he adioyneth the promise of the land to no other intent, but that it should be a token of the good will of God, & a figure of the heauenly inheritance. And that the holy men had this meaning, their owne sayinges do declare. So Dauid riseth vpward from temporall blessings, to that same highest & last blessing, My heart (saith he) & my flesh faint for desire of thee. God is my portion for euer. Againe, The Lord is ỹ part of my inheritance, and of my cup: thou art he that sauest mine heritage for me. Againe. I haue cried vnto thee, O Lorde, I haue sayd, Thou art my hope, my portion in the land of the liuing. Truely they that dare so speake, do without dout professe that with their hope they climbe aboue the world, and all the good thinges here present. But the Prophetes do oft describe this blessednesse of ỹ world to come, vnder the figure that they had receiued of the Lord. And so are these sayings to be vnderstanded. That ỹ Godly shal possesse the lande by inheritãce, and the wicked shalbe destroied out of it. That Hierusalẽ shal abound with all kinde of richesse, and Sion ouerflow with plenty of all things. All which we see, can not properly be spokẽ of the land of our wayfaringe, or the earthly Ierusalem, but of the true contry of the faithfull, and that heauenly citie wherein the Lord hath cõmaunded blessing and life for euer.

Psa. 133 3.

3 This is the reason why it is read that the holy mẽ in time of the olde testament, did esteme the mortal life & the blessings therof more than is now meete to do. For although they knew wel ỹ they should not rest in it, as in the end of their race, yet whẽ they called to mind what markes of his grace ỹ lord had pointed therin, to exercise them according to ỹ small rate of their tendernes, they felt a greater sweetnes of it, than if they had considered it by it selfe, But as the Lorde testifying his good will toward the faithfull, by present good things did as in shadowe expresse the spirituall felicity, by such figures and signes: so on the other side he did in corporall paines shew examples of his iudgement against the reprobate. Therfore, as the benefites of God were to be seene in earthly things, so were also his punishments. While the vnskilfull do not weye this comparison or agreement, as I may call it betwene the punishmentes and the rewardes, they marueil at so much alteration in God, that in olde time was so sodainly ready to take vengeãce on euery offence of man with sterne & horrible punishmentes, & now as if he had layed away the affection of his old angrines, he punisheth both much more gentlie & seldomer, yea and for

e ſame cauſe they do almoſt imagine ſeuerall gods of ỹ old & new ſtament: which the Manichees did in dede. But wé ſhal eaſily be deered from ſuch doutes, if we lay our mindes to conſider this orderdiſpoſition of God that I haue ſpoken of, whoſe will was for the me to ſignifie & ſet forth in figure both the grace of the eternall fe-city to come, by temporall benefites, and the greuouſnes of the ſpi-uall death, by corporall paines. Whereby he deliuered his Teſtamét the Iſraelites, as yet after a certaine maner folded vp.

4 An other difference of the olde and newe Teſtament is ſayd to e in the figures: for that the olde teſtament did ſhew onely an image abſence of the trueth, and a ſhadow in ſteede of the body. But the w teſtament giueth the trueth preſent, and the ſounde body it ſelfe. nd this difference is mentioned commonly whereſoeuer the newe ſtament is in compariſon ſet againſt the olde: but it is more largely treated of in the epiſtle to the Hebrues than any where elſe. There e Apoſtle diſputeth againſt them, which thought that the obſeruaon of Moſes law might not be taken away, but that they ſhould al-draw with them the ruine of all religion. To confute this errour, vſeth that which had bin foreſpoken by the Prophete concerning e prieſthoode of Chriſt. For whereas there is giuen him an eternall Pſa. 100 ieſthoode, it is certaine, that that prieſthoode is taken away, wherin 10. w ſucceſſours were daily put in, one after an other. But he proueth ment. And that it was neceſſary ſo to be, he proueth by this reaſon: 11. & 19 akenes, euen this, that it had certaine outward righteouſnes of the h, which could not make the obſeruers of them perfect, according conſcience: that by ſacrifices of beaſtes, it could neither wipe away nes, nor purchaſe true holines. He concludeth therfore that there s in it a ſhadow of good thinges to come, but not the liuely image the thinges themſelues: & that therfore it had no other office, but be as an introduction into a better hope, which is deliuered in Goſpell. Here is to be ſeene, in what point the couenant of the is compared with the couenant of the Goſpell: and the miniſtery Chriſt with the miniſtery of Moſes. For if the compariſon concerthe ſubſtance of the promiſes, then were there great difference weene the two teſtamentes: but ſith the point of our caſe leah vs an other way, we muſt tende to this ende, to finde out the trueth. Let vs then set forth here the couenant which he hath stablished to be eternall, and neuer to perish. The accomplishment therewherby it attaineth to be stablished & continuing in force, is Christ.

While such establishment was in expectation, the Lord did by Moapoint ceremonies, to be as it were solemne signes of the confir-tion. Now this came there in question, whether the ceremonies that were ordained in ỹ law ought to giue place to Christ or no. Although these ceremonies were in dede only accidents, or verily additions and things adioyned, or (as the people call them) acceſſary thinges to the couenant, yet becauſe they were instrumentes or meanes of the administration therof, they beare the name of the couenant it selfe, a the like is wont to be attributed to other Sacramentes. Therefore in ſumme, the olde Testament is in this place called the solemne forme of confirming the couenant, contained in Ceremonies and Sacrifices.
The Apoſtle ſayth, that becauſe in it is nothinge perfect, vnleſſe we paſſe further, therefore it behoued that they ſhould be diſcontinued and abrogate, that place might be giuen to Christ the aſſurer and mediatour of a better teſtament, by whom eternall ſanctification is obpurchaced to the elect, and the tranſgreſſions blotted out that rema-ned vnder the law. Or, if you like it better, thus: That the olde teſta-ment of the Lord was that, which was deliuered, wrapped vp in the ſhadowiſh and effectuall obſeruation of ceremonies: and that therefore it was but for a time, becauſe it did but (as it were) hang in ſuſpevntill it might ſtay vpon a more ſtedfaſt and ſubſtantiall confirma-and that then onely it was made newe and eternall, after that it w conſecrate and ſtabliſhed by the blood of Christ. Whereupon Chri calleth the cup that he gaue at his ſupper to his Diſciples; The cup Mat. 26 28. of the new teſtament in his blood: to ſignifie, that then the teſtam of God attaineth his trueth: by which it becommeth new & eternal when it is ſealed with his blood.

5 Hereby appeareth in what ſenſe the Apoſtle ſayd: that in the Gal. 3. 24. & 4. ſchoolinge of the law, the Iewes were brought vnto Christ, before that he was ſhewed in the fleſh. And he confeſſeth, that they were the children and heires of God, but yet ſuch, as for their yong age were be kept vnder the cuſtody of a ſchoolemaiſter. For it behoued, that ere the ſonne of righteouſneſſe was yet riſen, their ſhould neither be ſo great brightneſſe of reuelation, nor ſo great deepe ſight of vnder-ſtandinge. Therefore God ſo gaue them in meaſure the light of his word, that they ſaw it as yet farre of and darkely. Therefore Paule ex-preſſeth this ſclenderneſſe of vnderſtandinge by the tearme of yong age, which the Lordes will was to haue to be exerciſed with the elementes

rentes of this world & with outward obseruations, as rules of instruction for children vntill Christ should shine abroad, by whom it behoued that the knowledge of the faithfull people should grow to full age. This distinction Christ himselfe meant of, when he said, that the Mat.11. 13.
law and the Prophetes were vntill Iohn, and that from thensefoorth the kingdom of God is preached. What did the law & the Prophetes open to men of their time? euen this, they gaue a tast of that wisdom which in time to come should be plainly disclosed: and they shewed it before as it were twinclingly shining a far of. But whē it came to passe that Christ might be pointed to with the finger, thē was the kingdom of God set opē. For in him are laied abroade the treasures of all wisdom and vnderstanding, whereby we attaine, euen in a manner, into the se- Col.1.9 cret closets of heauen.

6 And it maketh not against vs, that there can scarsely any one be found in the Christian Church, that in excellency of faith may be cōpared with Abraham, or that the Prophetes excelled in such force of spirite, that euen at this day they lighten the whole world withall. For our question is not here, what grace the Lord hath bestowed vpon a fewe, but what ordinarie disposition he vsed in teaching his people: such as is declared in the Prophetes themselues, which were endued with peculiar knowledge aboue the rest. For euen their preachinge is darke and enclosed in figures, as of thinges a farre of. Moreouer how marueilous knowledge soeuer appeared in them aboue other, yet forasmuch as they were driuen of necessity to submit them to the common childish instructiō of the people, they themselues also were reckoned in the number of children. Finally, there neuer chaunged any such cleare sight to any at that time, but that it did in some parte sauour of the darkenesse of the time. Whereupon Christ sayd, Many Mat.13. 17.
kings and Prophetes haue desired to see the thinges that ye see, and haue not seene them: and to heare the things that ye heare, and haue Luc.10. 24.
not heard them. Therefore blessed are your eyes, because they see, & your eares because they heare. And truely it was meete that the presence of Christ should haue this excellency of prerogatiue, that from it should arise the cleare reuealing of the heauenly misteries. And for this purpose also maketh that, which euē we now alleaged out of the first epistle of Peter: that it was opened to them, that their trauaile was 1.Pet.1. 12.
profitable, principally for our age.

7 Now I come to the third difference, which is taken out of Ie- Ier.31. 31.
remie, whose wordes are these. Behold the dayes shall come, sayth the Lord, and I will make a new couenant with the house of Israell, & the house of Iuda, not according to the couenant that I made with your

Fathers, in the day when I tooke them by the hande, to leade the out of the lande of Ægypt, the couenant that they made voide although I ruled ouer them. But this shal be the couenant that I will make with the house of Israell. I will put my lawe in their bowelles, and I will wryte it in their heartes, and I will be mercifull to their iniquity. And no man shall teach his neighbour, and no man his brother. For they shall all know me, from the least vnto the most. Of which wordes the Apostle tooke occasion to make this comparison betwene the law & the Gospell, that he called the law a literall, and the Gospell a spirituall doctrine: the law, he said, was fashioned out in Tables of stone, the Gospell written in heartes: that the law was the preaching of death, the Gospell the preaching of life: the law the preaching of damnation, the Gospell the preachinge of righteousnesse: that the lawe is made voide, that the Gospell abideth. Sith the Apostles purpose was but to declare the meaninge of the Prophet, it shall be sufficient that we weye the wordes of one of thē, to attaine the meaning of them both. Albeit, there is some vnlikenes betwene them. For the Apostle speaketh more odiously of the law than the Prophet doth: and that not in simple respect of the law, but becausе there were certaine naughty men, hauing a wrong zeale to the law, which did with peruerse loue of the ceremonies, obscure the brightnesse of the Gospell. He disputeth of the nature of the law, accordinge to their errour and foolish affection. Therefore it shall be good to note that peculiarly in Paul. But both of them, becausе they do by comparison set the olde and the new testament, the one against the other: do consider nothing in the law, but that which properly belongeth vnto it. As for example. The law doth commonly in euery place containe promises of mercy, but becausе they are borowed from elsewhere, therefore they are not reckened as part of the law, whē the mere nature of the law is spoken of. The onely thing they ascribe vnto it, to commaunde thinges that are right, and to forbid wicked doings: to promise reward to the followers of righteousnesse, and to threaten punishment to the transgressours: but in the meane time neither to change nor amende the peuersenes of heart, that is naturally in all men.

1. Cor. 3 6.

8 Now let vs expounde the Apostles comparison, one peece after an other. The old testament is literal, becausе it was published without the effectuall workinge of the spirite: The new is spirituall, which the Lord hath spiritually grauen in the heartes of men. Therfore the second diuersity is as it were a declaration of the first. The old is deadly, becausе it can do nothinge but wrappe all mankinde within the curse. The new is the instrument of life, becausе it deliuereth from curse, & restoreth reſtoreth into fauour with God. The olde is the miniſtery of damnation, becauſe it condemneth all Adams children of vnrighteouſneſſe. The new is the miniſtery of righteouſneſſe, becauſe it reuealeth the mercy of God, by which we are made righteous. The laſt diuerſity is to be referred to the ceremonies. Becauſe the old teſtament had an image of thinges abſent, it behoued that it ſhould in time decay & vaniſh away: but the Goſpell, becauſe it giueth the true body in deede, keepeth ſtill a firme & perpetuall ſtedfaſtnes. Ieremie in deede calleth euen the morall lawes, a weake and fraile couenant: but that is for another reaſon, becauſe by the ſodaine falling away of the vnthankefull people, it was byandby broken, but foraſmuch as ſuch breakinge of it was the fault of the people, it can not properly be layd vpon the teſtament. But the ceremonies, foraſmuch as by their owne weakeneſſe were diſſolued by the cõming of Chriſt, had the cauſe of their weakeneſſe within themſelues. Now, that difference of the letter and ſpirite is not ſo to be takẽ, as though the Lord had giuen his lawes to the Iewes without any frute at all, hauing none of thẽ conuerted vnto him: But it is ſpoken by way of compariſon, to aduaunce the aboundance of grace, wherewith the ſame lawmaker as it were putting on a new perſonage, did honorably ſet forth the preaching of the Goſpell. For if we recken vp the multitude of theſe whom the Lord out of all peoples hath by the preaching of the Goſpel regenerate with his ſpirite, and gathered into the communion of his Church, we ſhall ſay, that there were very fewe, or in a manner none in the olde time in Iſraell, that with affection of minde and entirely from their heart embraced the couenant of the Lord: who yet were very many, if they be reckened in their owne number without compariſon.

9 Out of the third differẽce riſeth ỹ fourth. For the Scripture calleth the old teſtament, the teſtamẽt of bondage, for that it ingendreth feare in mens mindes: but the new teſtament, the teſtament of liberty, becauſe it raiſeth them vp to confidence & aſſurednes. So ſaith Paule in the eight to the Romaines. Ye haue not receiued the ſpirit of bondage againe to feare, but ỹ ſpirit of adoption, by which we crie Abba, father. Hereunto ſerueth that in the epiſtle to the Hebrues, that the faithfull are not now come to the bodily mount, and to kindled fire, & whirlewinde, darkenes and tempeſt, where nothing can be heard or ſeene but that ſtriketh mens mindes with terrour, in ſomuch that Moſes himſelfe quaked for feare, when the terrible voice ſounded, which they all beſought, that they might not heare: But that we are come to the Mount Sion, and the Citie of the liuinge God, the heauenly Hieruſalem. But that which Paule ſhortely toucheth in the

Ro. 8. 15

Heb. 12. 18.

ſentéce that we haue alleaged out of the epiſtle to the Romaines, he ſetteth out more largely in the Epiſtle to the Galatians, when he maketh an allegory of ỳ two ſonnes of Abraham, after this manner, that Agar the bondwoman is a figure of the mount Sinai, where the people of Iſrael receiued the law: Sara the freewoman is a figure of the heauenly Hieruſalem, from whenſe proceedeth the Goſpell. That, as the ſeede of Agar is borne bonde, which may neuer come to ỳ inheritance, and the ſeede of Sara is borne free, to whom the inheritance is due: ſo by the law we are made ſubiect to bondage, by the Goſpel only we are regenerate into freedom. But the ſumme commeth to this effect, that the old teſtament did ſtricke into conſciences feare & tremblinge: but by the benefite of the new teſtament it commeth to paſſe, that they are made ioyfull. The olde did hold conſciences bound vnto the yoke of bondage, by the liberality of the new they are diſcharged of bondage, and brought into freedom. But if out of the people of Iſrael they obiect againſt vs the holy fathers, who ſith it is euident, that they were endued with the ſame ſpirit that we are, it followeth that they were alſo partakers both of the ſelfe ſame freedom & ioy. We anſwere, that neither of both came of the law. But that when they felt themſelues by the law to be both oppreſſed with eſtate of bondage, and wearied with vnquietnes of conſcience, they fled to the ſuccour of the Goſpell, & that therfore it was a peculiar frute of the new teſtament, that beſide the common law of the old teſtament they were exempted frō theſe euils. Moreouer, we wil deny that they were ſo endued with the ſpirit of freedom and aſſurednes, that they did not in ſome parte feele both feare and bondage by the law. For howſoeuer they enioied that prerogatiue which they had obtained by grace of the Goſpell, yet were they ſubiect to the ſame bondes and burdēs of obſeruation, that the commō people were. Sith therfore they were compelled to the carefulll keepinge of thoſe ceremonies, which were the ſignes of a ſchooling much like vnto bondage, and the handewritinges whereby they confeſſed themſelues gilty of ſinne, did not diſcharge them from being bonde: it may rightfully be ſaid, that in comparíſon of vs they were vnder the teſtament of bondage and feare, while we haue reſpect to that common order of diſtribution that the Lord then vſed with the people of Iſrael.

Gala 4. 21.

10 The three laſt compariſons that we haue recited, are of the law and the Goſpel. Wherfore in them by the name of the Old teſtament is meant the lawe, and by the name of the New teſtament is meant the Goſpel. The firſt ſtretched further, for it comprehendeth vnder it the promiſes alſo that were publiſhed before the lawe, but wherein Auguſtine denieth that they ought to be reckened vnder the name of the olde teſtament, therein he thought very well, and meant euen the ſame thing that we do nowe teach, for he hadde regarde to thoſe ſayinges of Hieremie and Paule, where the olde teſtament is ſeuered from the worde of mercie and grace. And this alſo he very aptely addeth in the ſame place, that the children of promiſe regenerat of God, which by faith working through loue, haue obeyed the commaundements, do from the beginning of the worlde belong to the new Teſtamẽt, and that in hope not of fleſhly, earthly and temporall, but ſpirituall, heauenly, and eternall good thinges, principally beleeuing in the Mediatour, by whome they doubted not that the ſpirit was not miniſtred vnto them, both to do good, and to haue pardon ſo oft as they ſinned. For the ſame thing it is that I minded to affirme, that all the Saincte whome the Scripture reherſeth to haue been from the beginning of the worlde choſen by God, were partakers of the ſelfe ſame bleſſing with vs vnto eternall ſaluation. This difference therefore is betweene our diuiſion and Auguſtines: that oures (according to that ſaying of Chriſt: The lawe and the Prophets were vnto Iohn: from thenſeforth the kingdome of God is preached) doth make diſtinction betweene the cleereneſſe of the Goſpell, and the darker diſtribution of the worde that went before: and Auguſtine doth onely cõſider the weakneſſe of the lawe from the ſtrength of the Goſpell. And here alſo is to be noted cõcerning the holy fathers, that they ſo liued vnder the olde teſtament, that they ſtayed not there, but alway aſpired to the newe, yea and imbraced the aſſured partaking thereof. For the Apoſtle condemneth them of blindeneſſe and accurſedneſſe, which being cõtented with preſent ſhadowes, did not ſtretch vp their minde vnto Chriſt. For (to ſpeake nothing of the reſt) what greater blindeneſſe can be imagined, than to hope for the purging of ſinne by the killing of a beaſt, than to ſeeke for the cleanſing of the ſoule in outwarde ſprinkeling of water? than to ſeeke to appeaſe God with olde ceremonies, as though he were much delited therewith? For to all theſe abſurdities do they fall, that ſticke faſt in the obſeruations of the lawe without reſpect of Chriſt.

Auguſtine

Lib. 3. ad Boni. ca. 4.

Mat. 11. 13.

11 The fifth difference that we may adde, lieth in this: that vntill the comming of Chriſt the Lord had choſen out one nation, within which he woulde keepe ſeuerall the couenant of his grace. When the hieſt did diſtribute the nations, when he diuided the ſonnes of Adam (ſaith Moſes) his people fell to his poſſeſſion: Iacob the corde of his inheritance. In an other place he thus ſpeaketh to the people: Beholde the heauen and earth and all that is in it, are the Lord thy

Deu. 32. 8.

Deu. 10. 14.

Gods. He cleaued onely to thy fathers, he loued them, to chose their seede after them euen your selues out of all nations. Therefore he voutchesaued to graunt the knowledge of his name to that people onely, as if they onely of all men belonged vnto him: he layed his couenant as it were in their bosome: to them he openly shewed the presence of his Godhead: them he honored with all prerogatiues. But (to omit the rest of his benefites, and speake that which onely here is to our purpose) he bound them to him by the communicating of his worde, that he might be called and compted their God. In the meane season he suffered other nations to walke in vanitie, as though they had not any entercourse or any thing to do with him: neither did he to helpe their destruction, geue them that which was onely the remedie, namely the preaching of his worde. Therefore Israell was then the Lordes sonne that was his derling, other were straungers. Israell was knowen to him and receyued into his charge and protection, other were left to their owne darkenesse: Israell was sanctified by God, other were prophane: Israel was honored with the presence of God, other were excluded from comming nie vnto him. But when the fullnesse of time was come, appointed for the restoring of all men, and that same reconciler of God and men was deliuered in deede, the particion was plucked downe, which had so long holden the mercy of God enclosed within the boundes of Israell, & peace was preached to them that were farre of, euen as to them that were neere adioyned, that being together reconcilied to God, they might growe into one people. Wherefore, nowe there is no respect of Greke or Iewe, circumcision or vncircumcision, but Christ is all in all, to whome the nations are geuen for his inheritaunce, and the endes of the earth for his peculiar possession, that vniuersally without difference he might haue dominion from sea to sea, and from the riuers to the vttermost endes of the worlde.

12 Therfore the calling of the Gentiles is a notable token, whereby is clearely shewed the excellencie of the newe Testament aboue the olde. It had in deede bin before testified by many, & most plaine oracles of the Prophetes, but so as the performance thereof was still differred vnto the kingdome of Messias. And Christ him selfe did not procede vnto it at the first beginning of his preaching, but differred it so long vntil that all the partes of our redemption being performed, and the time of his abacement ended, he receyued of his father a name that is aboue all names, before whome all knees shoulde bowe. For which cause when this conuenience of time was not yet fulfilled, he said to the woman of Chanaan, that he was not sent but to the lost

sheepe of the house of Israell. And he suffred not his Apostles at the first sending, to passe these boundes. Go not ye, (saith he) into the way of the Gentiles, nor entre into the Cities of the Samaritanes, but rather go ye to the lost sheepe of the house of Israell. But howesoeuer it was before vttered by so many testimonies, yet when the Apostles were first to beginne it, it seemed so newe and strange a thing vnto them, that they were afraide of it, as of some monster. Truely very fearefully and not without sticking at it, they first did set vpon it. And no maruell, for it seemed against reason, that the Lorde which by so many ages had chosen out Israel from all other nations, should nowe vndo that choise, as it were, sodenly changing his purpose. It was indeede spoken afore by prophecies: but they coulde not geue so great heede to the prophecies, as to be nothing moued with the newnesse of the thing that they sawe. And these examples which the Lorde had shewed of the calling of the Gentiles that shoulde one day come to passe, were not sufficient to moue them. For biside this that he hade called veey fewe, he did after a certaine maner engraffe them into the householde of Abraham, to adde them vnto his people as percell of them: but by this generall calling the Gentiles, were not onely made egall with the Iewes, but also it appeared that they came into the place of the Iewes, that were become deade. And yet all those strangers whome God hath before that time brought into the bodie of the Church, were neuer made egall with the Iewes. And therefore not without a cause doth Paule so extoll this mysterie hidden from ages and generations, and which he also saith to be marcellous to the very Angles. Col. 1. 16.

13 In these fower or fiue pointes, I thinke, I haue well & faithfully set forth the whole difference of the olde and newe Testament, so much as sufficeth to ỹ simple ordre of teaching. But because many report this varietie in gouerning the Church, this diuers manner in teaching, so great alteration of vsages and ceremonies, to be a great absurditie: they are also to be answered before that we passe forth to other thinges. And that may be done shortly, bycause the obiections are not so strong that they nede a curious confutation. It hangeth not together (say they) that God which doth alway stedfastly agree with him selfe, shoulde suffer so great an alteration, as afterwarde to disalow the same thing, which he had before both commaunded and commended. I answere, that God ought not therfore to be compted inconstant, for that he applied diuerse formes to diuerse ages, as he knew to be expediēt for euery one. If the husbandman apoint to his household one sorte of businesse in winter, & an other in sommer, shall we therfore accuſe him of inconſtancie, or thinke that he ſwarueth from the right rule of husbandrie which agreeth with the continuall order of nature? Likewiſe if a father of a houſeholde do inſtruct, rule and ordre his children of one ſorte in childhoode, of an other in youth, and of an other in mans ſtate, we can not therefore ſay that he is fickle & forſaketh his owne purpoſe. Why therfore do we charge God with reproch of inconſtancie, for that he hath feuered the diuerſitie of times with fit and agreable markes? The laſt ſimilitude ought fully to ſatisfie vs. Paule maketh the Iewes like vnto children, & Chriſtians to yongmen. What diſordre is there in this gouernement of God that he helde them in their childiſh leſſons, which accordinge to the capacity of their age were fit for them, and inſtructed vs with ſtronger and as it were more manly diſcipline? Therefore herein appeareth the conſtancie of God, that he taught one ſelfe ſame doctrine in all ages, and continueth in requiring the ſame worſhippe of his name, which he commaunded from the beginning. But wheras he chaunged the outwarde forme and manner thereof, in that he ſhewed not him ſelfe ſubiect to change: but ſo farre he tempered him ſelfe to the capacitie of man, which is diuerſe and chaungeable.

14 But whenſe (ſay they) commeth this diuerſitie, but by cauſe God willed it to be ſuch? Coulde he not as well from the beginning as ſins the comming of Chriſt, reuele the eternall life in plaine wordes without any figures, inſtruct thoſe that are his with a few ſacramentes and eaſy to perceaue, geue his holy ſpirite, and poure abroad his grace throughout the whole worlde? This is euen like as if they ſhoulde quarell with God for that he hath created the worlde ſo late, ſith he might haue created if from the beginning: or for that his will was to haue enterchaunged courſes betwene winter and ſommer, betwene day and night. But as for vs, euen as al Godly men ought to thinke, let vs not doubte that whatſoeuer God hath done, is wiſely and righteouſly done, although oftentimes we know not the cauſe why it ought ſo to haue been done. For that were to take preſumptuouſly to much vpon vs, not to geue God leaue to haue the cauſes of his owne purpoſe ſecret to himſelfe from vs. But it is meruellous (ſay they) that he now refuſeth and abhorreth the ſacrificing of beaſtes, and all that furniture of the Leuiticall prieſthode, wherewith in the olde time he was delited. As though theſe outward and trāſitorie thinges did delite God, or any way moue affection in him. We haue already ſaid that he did none of theſe for his owne cauſe, but diſpoſed them all for the ſaluation of men. If a Phiſicion do heale a yong man after one very good meane from his diſeaſe, and afterward do vſe an other manner of healing with the same man being olde: shall we therefore say, that he hath refused the manner of healing which before pleased him, but rather continuing still in the same, he hath consideration of age? So behoued it, that Christ being absent, shoulde be expressed in figure by one sort of signes, and by an other sort be before shewed that he was to come: and it is mete that now being already deliuered, he be represented by other signes. But as concerning Gods callyng, nowe at the comming of Christ more largely spread abrode among all peoples than it was before, and the graces of the holy ghost more plenteously poured out, who, I pray you, can denie it to be right, that that God haue in his owne hande and will the disposing of his owne graces, to geue light to what nations it pleaseth him? to raise vp the preaching of his worde in what places it pleaseth him? to geue what doctrine and howe great profiting and successe of doctrine it pleaseth him? and in what ages he will, to take away the knowledge of his name out of the worlde for their vnthankefulnesse? and againe when he will to restore it for his owne mercie? We see therefore, that the cauillations are to much vnmeete, wherwith wicked men do in this point disquiet the mindes of the simple, to make them call either the righteousnesse of God, or the faith of the Scripture into doubte.

The xij. Chapter.

That it behoued, that Christ, to performe the office of the Mediatour, shoulde be made man.

NOwe, it much behoued vs that he shoulde be both God and man, which shoulde be our Mediatour. If a man aske of the necessitie, it was not in deede a simple or absolute necessitie, as they commonly call it, but it proceded from the heauenly decree, whereupon hanged all the saluation of men. But the most merciful father apointed that which should be best for vs. For whereas our owne iniquities had, as it were, cast a cloude betwene him and vs, and vtterly excluded vs from the kingdome of heauen, no man coulde be the interpreter for restoring of our peace, but he that could atteine vnto God. But who coulde haue atteined vnto him? cōulde any of the sonnes of Adam? But all they did with their father shunne the sight of God for feare. Coulde any of the Angels? but they also had neede of a head, by whose knitting together they might perfectly and vnseuerably cleaue vnto God. What then? It was past all hope, vnlesse the very maiestie of God would descend vnto vs, for we coulde not ascēde vnto it. So it behoued that the sonne of God shoulde become for vs Immanuell, that is, God with vs; and that in this sort, that by mutuall ioyning, his godhed and the nature of man might growe into one together. Otherwiſe neither coulde the neereneſſe be neere enough, nor the alliance ſtrong enough for vs to hope by, that God dwelleth with vs. So great vas the diſagreement betwene our filthineſſe, and the moſt pure cleanneſſe of God. Although man had ſtand vndefiled without any ſpot, yet was his eſtate to baſe to atteine to God without a Mediator. What coulde he then do being plonged downe into death and hell with deadly fall, defiled with ſo many ſpottes, ſtinking with his owne corruption, and ouerwhelmed with all accurſednesse?

1 Tim. 2.3. Therefore not without cauſe, Paule meaning to ſet forth Chriſt for the Mediator, doth expreſſely recite that he is Man. One Mediatour (ſaith he) of God and man, the man Ieſus Chriſt. He might haue ſaid, God: or at the leaſt he might haue left the name of Man as well as of God. But bycauſe the holy Ghoſt ſpeaking by his mouth, knewe our weakeneſſe: therefore to prouide for it in time, he vſed a moſt fit remedy, ſetting among vs the ſonne of God familiarly as one of vs. Therfore leaſt any man ſhoulde trouble himſelf to know where the Mediatour is to be ſought, or which way to comme vnto him, in naming Man, he putteth vs in minde that he is nere vnto vs, yea ſo nere that he toucheth vs, for aſmuch as he is our owne fleſh. Truely he meaneth there euen the ſame thing that in an other place is ſet out with moe wordes: that we haue not a biſhop that can not haue Hebr.4. 15. compaſſion of our infirmities, for aſmuch as he was in all thinges tempted as we are, onely ſinne excepted.

2 That ſhall alſo appere more plainely, if we conſider how it was no meane thing that the Mediatour had to do: that is, ſo to reſtore vs into the fauour of God, as to make vs of the children of men, the children of God: of the heires of hell, the heires of the kingdome of heauen. Who could do that, vnleſſe the ſonne of God were made alſo the ſonne of manne, and ſo take oures vpon him to conuey his vnto vs, and to make that oures by grace, which was his by nature? Therefore by ths earneſt we truſt, that we are the children of God, bycauſe the naturall ſonne of God hath ſhapen for himſelfe a body of our body, fleſh of our fleſh, bones of our bones, that he might be all one with vs. He diſdained not to take that vpon him which was propre vnto vs, to make againe that to belong to vs which he had propre to himſelfe, and that ſo in common together with vs, be might be both the ſonne of God and the ſonne of man. Herevpon commeth that holy brotherhode which he commendeth with his owne mouth when he

Ihō.10. 17. ſaith: I go vp to my father and your farher, my God and your God. By this meane is the inheritance of the kingedome of heauen aſſured vnto vnto vs: for that the onely ſonne of God, to whome it wholly did proprely belong, hath adopted vs into his brethren: bycauſe if we be brethren, then are we partakers of the inheritaunce. Moreouer it was Rom.8. for the ſame cauſe very profitable, that he which ſhoulde be our re- 17. deemer, ſhoulde be both very God and very manne. It was his office to ſwallowe vp death: who coulde do that but life it ſelfe? It was his office to ouercome ſinne: who coulde do that but righteouſneſſe it ſelfe? It was his office to vanquiſh the powers of the worlde and of the aire: who coulde do that but a power aboue both worlde and aire: Nowe in whoſe poſſeſſion is life, or righteouſneſſe, or the empire and power of heauen, but in Gods alone? Therefore the moſt merciful God, in the perſone of his onely begotten ſonne, made himſelfe our redemer, when his will was to haue vs redemed.

3 An other principall point of our reconciliation with God was thus that man which had loſt by his diſobedience, ſhoulde for remedy ſet obedience againſt it, ſhoulde ſatisfie the iudgement of God, and paye the penaltie of ſinne. Therefore there came forth the true man, our Lorde, he put on the perſone of Adam, and toke vpon him his name to entre into his ſtede in obeyeng his father, to yeld our fleſh the price of the ſatisfaction to the iuſt iudgement of God, and in the ſame fleſh ſuffer the paine that we had deſerued. For aſmuch as therefore neither being onely God he coulde fele death, nor being onely man he coulde ouercome death, he coupled the nature of man with the nature of God, that he might yelde the one ſubiect to death to ſatisfie for ſinnes, and by ỹ power of the other he might wraſtle with death, and get victorie for vs. They therfore that ſpoile Chriſt either of his godhed or of his manhode, do in deede either diminiſh his maieſty and glory, or obſcure his goodnes: but on the other ſide they do no leſſe wrong vnto men whoſe faith they do therby weaken and ouerthrow, which can not ſtād but reſting vpon ths foundatiō. Beſide that, it was to be hoped, that the Redemer ſhoulde be the ſonne of Abraham and Dauid, which God had promiſed in the lawe and the Prophetes. Wherby the godly mindes do gather this other frute, that being by the very courſe of his pedigree brought to Dauid and Abraham, they do the more certainly know that this is the ſame Chriſt that was ſpoken of by ſo many oracles. But this which I euen nowe declared, is principally to be holden in minde, that the common nature betwene him and vs is a pledge of our felowſhip with the ſonne of God: that he clothed with our fleſh vanquiſhed death and ſinne together, that the victorie ſo might be oures and the triumph oures: that he offred vp for ſacrifice the fleſh that he receyued of vs, that hauing made ſatisfaction he might wipe away our giltineſſe, and appeaſe the iuſt wrath of his father.

4 He that ſhalbe diligently hedefull in conſidering theſe things as he ought, wil eaſily neglect theſe wandring ſpeculations that ranne vnto them light ſpirites and deſirous of noueltie: of which ſort is, that Chriſt ſhould haue been man, although there had been no need of remedie to redeeme mankinde. I graunt that in the firſt degree of creation, and in the ſtate of nature vncorrupted, he was ſet as head ouer Angels and men. For which cauſe Paule calleth him the firſt be-
Col. 1. 15. gotté of all creatures. But ſith all the Scripture crieth out, that he was clothed with fleſh, that he might be the Redeemer: it is to much rash preſumptiõ to imagine any other cauſe or ende. To what end Chriſt was promiſed from the beginning, it is well enough knowen: euen to reſtore the world fallen in ruine, and to ſuccour men being loſt. Therefore vnder the lawe, the image of him was ſet forth in ſacrifices, to make the faithfull to hope that God woulde be mercifull to them, when after ſatisfaction made for ſinne, he ſhoulde be reconciled. But whereas in all ages, euen when the lawe was not yet publiſhed, this Mediatour was neuer promiſed without bloud: we gather that he was apointed by the eternall counſell of God to purge the filthineſſe of men, for that the ſheding of bloud is a token of expiation. The Prophetes ſo preached of him, that they promiſed that he ſhoulde be the reconciler of God and men. That one ſpecially notable teſtimonie of Sith we heare that Chriſt is properly apointed by God to helpe wretched ſinners, who ſo euer proſeſſeth beyond theſe boũdes, he doth to much follow fooliſh curioſitie. If the aduerſarie obiecte againe, that this purpoſe of God did hang vpon the fall of man which he did foreſee: it is enough and more for me, to ſay, that they with wicked boldneſſe breake forth to faine them a new Chriſt, who ſo euer ſuffer themſelues to ſearche for more, or hope to know more of Chriſt thā God hath foreapointed them by his ſecret decree. And for good cauſe did Paule, after he had ſo diſcourſed of

Ephe. 3. 16. the proper office of Chriſt, wiſh to the Epheſians the ſpirite of vnderſtanding, to comprehend what is the length, heygth, bredth, and depth, euen the loue of Chriſt that ſurmounteth all knowledge: ende as if of purpoſe he would ſet barres about our mindes, that when mētiō is made of Chriſt, they ſhould not, be it neuer ſo litle, ſwarue from the grace of reconciliation. Wherefore, ſithe this is a faithfull ſaying

1 Tim. 1. 15. (as Paule teſtifieth) that Chriſt is come to ſaue ſinners, I do gladly reſt in the ſame. And wheras in an other place the ſame Apoſtle teacheth that the grace which is nowe diſcloſed by the Goſpell, was geuen vs in Chriſt before the times of the worlde: I determine that I ought conſtantly to abide therein to the ende. Againſt this modeſtie Origen carpeth vniuſtly which hath againe in this time vnhappily ſtirred this queſtion before lightly moued by a fewe. He accuſeth them of preſumption that ſay, that the ſonne of God ſhould not haue appeared in the fleſh, if Adam had not fallen, bycauſe this inuention is conteined by no teſtimonie of Scripture. As though Paule did not bridle ſuch

Tim. 3. 9 ward curioſitie, when after he had ſpoken of redemption purchaſed by Chriſt, he by and by commaundeth to auoide fooliſh queſtions. The madneſſe of ſome did burſt out ſo farre, that while they diſcourſedly coueted to ſeeme witty, they moued this queſtion, whether the Sonne of God might haue taken vpon him the nature of an Aſſe. This monſtruouſnes which all the godly do worthily abhorre as rable, let Oſiander confute with this pretenſe that it is neuer expreſſly confuted in the Scripture. As though when Paule accompteth nothing precious or worthy to be knowen, but Chriſt crucified, he doth therefore admit an Aſſe to be the author of ſaluation. Therefore he that in an other place reporteth, that Chriſt by the eternall counſell of his father was ordeined to be a head to gather all thinges together: will neuer the more acknowledge an other that hath no office of redeming apointed him. Ephe. 4. 22.

6 But as for the principle that he braggeth of, it is very trifling. He would haue it, that man was created after the image of God, bycauſe he was faſhioned after the paterne of Chriſt to come, that he might reſemble him, whome the father had already decreed to clothe with our fleſh. Wherevpon he gathereth, that if Adam had neuer fallen frō his firſt and vncorrupted originall ſtate, yet Chriſt ſhould haue bene man. How trifling this is & wreſted, all men that haue ſounde iudgement, do eaſily perceiue of themſelues. In the meane time firſt he thinketh that he hath ſeene what was the image of God, that forſoth the glorie of God did not onely ſhine in thoſe excellent giftes wherewith he was garniſhed, but alſo that God himſelfe eſſentially dwelt in him. But as for me, although I graunt that Adam did beare the image of God, in ſo much as he was ioyned to God, (which is the true & hyeſt perfection of dignitie) yet I ſay, that the likeneſſe of God is no where els to be ſought, but in thoſe markes of excellencie wherewith he had adorniſhed Adam aboue other liuing creatures. And that Chriſt was alſo the image of God, all men doe graunt with one conſent, and therefore that what ſo euer excellencie was grauen in Adam, it proceeded from this, that by the onely begotten ſonne he approched to the glorie of his creator. Therefore man was created after the image of God, in whome the creators will was to haue his glorie ſeene as in a looking glaſſe. To this degree of honour was he aduaunced by the benefite of the onely begotten ſonne: But I ſay further, that the ſame ſonne was a common head as well to Angels as to men, ſo that the ſame dignitie that was beſtowed vpon man, did alſo belong vnto Angels. For when we heare them called the children of God, it were inconuenient to denie, that there is ſomthing in them wherein they reſemble their father. Nowe if his will was to haue his glorie to be repreſented as well in Angels as in menne, and to be ſeene in both natures, Oſiander doth fondely trifle in ſayinge, that the Angels were ſet behinde menne, bycauſe they did not beare the image of Chriſt. For they coulde not continually enioy the preſent beholding of God, vnleſſe they were like him. And Paul teacheth, that men are Gene. 1. 27. Gala. 3. 10.

no otherwiſe renewed after the image of God, but if they be coupled with Angels, that they may cleaue together vnder one head. Finally, if we beleue Chriſt, this ſhalbe our laſt felicitie, to be made of like forme to the Angels, when we ſhalbe receyued vp into heauen. But if Oſiander will conclude, that the originall paterne of the image of God was in Chriſt as he is man, by the ſame reaſon a manne may ſay, that Chriſt muſt needes haue been partaker of the nature of Angels, bycauſe the image of God perteineth alſo to them.

7 Therefore, Oſiander hath no cauſe to feare, that God ſhoulde be found a lier, vnleſſe it had ben firſt ſtedfaſtly and vnchangeably decreed in his minde, to haue his ſonne incarnate: bycauſe if the integritie of Adam had not fallen, he ſhoulde with the Angels haue been like vnto God, and yet it ſhoulde not therefore haue ben neceſſary, that the ſonne of God ſhoulde be made either man or Angel. And in vaine he feareth that abſurditie, leaſt vnleſſe the vnchangeable counſell of God had been before the creation of man that Chriſt ſhoulde be borne, not as the redemer but as the firſt man, he ſhoulde haue loſt his prerogatiue: for aſmuch as nowe he ſhoulde be borne not onely by an accident cauſe, that is to reſtore man kinde being loſt, and ſo it might be gathered therevpon, that Chriſt was created after the image of Adam. For why ſhoulde he ſo muche abhorre that which Hebr.4. 15. the Scripture ſo openly teacheth, that he was made like vnto vs in all Luke 3. 38. thinges, except ſinne? Wherevpon Luke doubteth not to recken him the ſonne of Adam in his Genealogie. And I woulde faine know why 1.Cor. 15.47. Paule calleth Chriſt the ſecond Adam, but bycauſe the eſtate of man was appointed for him, that he might raiſe vp the poſteritie of Adam out of their ruine. For if he were in order before that creation, he ſhoulde haue been called the firſt Adam. Oſiander boldly affirmeth that bycauſe Chriſt was alredy before knowen man in the minde of God, men were formed after the ſame paterne. But Paule in naming him the ſecond Adam, ſetteth meane betwene the firſt beginning of man and the reſtitution which we obteine by Chriſt, the fall of man wherby grew the neceſſity to haue nature reſtored to her firſt degree. Wherupō it foloweth, that this ſame was the cauſe why the ſonne of God was borne to become man. In the meane time, Oſiander ſoundeth ill and vnſauorily, that Adam, ſo long as he had ſtande without falling, ſhoulde haue bin the image of himſelfe and not of Chriſt. I aunſwere by the contrarie, bycauſe though the ſonne of God had neuer put on fleſh, neuertheleſſe both in the body and in the ſoule of man ſhoulde haue ſhined the image of God, in the bright beames whereof it alway appered, that Chriſt is verily the head, and haue the ſoueſoueraigne ſupremicie in all. And ſo is that fooliſh ſutteltie aſſoyled, which Oſiander bloweth abroade, that the Angels ſhoulde haue lacked this head, vnleſſe it had bene purpoſed by God to clothe his ſonne with fleſh, yea though there had bine no fault of Adam. For he doth to raſhly ſnatche holde of that which no manne in his right wit will graunt, that Chriſt hath no ſupremicie ouer Angels, that they ſhoulde haue him for their Prince, but in ſo much as he is man. But it is eaſily gathered by the wordes of Paule, that in as much as he is the eternall worde of God, he is the firſt begotten of all creatures: not that he is create, or ought to be reckened among creatures: but becauſe the ſtate of the worlde in integritie, ſuch as it was at the beginning garniſhed with excellent beautie, had no other originall: and then, that in as much as he was made man, he was the firſt begotten of the dead. For the Apoſtle in one ſhorte clauſe ſetteth forth both theſe pointes to be conſidered: that all thinges were create by the ſonne, that he might beare rule ouer Angels: and that he was made man, that he might beginne to be the redemer. Of like ignorance is it that he ſaith, that men ſhoulde not haue had Chriſt to their king, if he had not bene man. As though the kingdome of God coulde not ſtand, if the eternall ſonne of God, although not clothed with the fleſh of man, gathering together both Angels and men into the fellowſhip of his heauenly glorie and life, ſhoulde himſelfe beare the ſoueraintie. But in this falſe principle he is alway deceyued, or rather deceyueth himſelfe, that the Church ſhoulde haue bene without a head, vnleſſe Chriſt had appeared in the fleſh. As though, euen as the Angels enioyed him their heade, he coulde not likewiſe by his diuine power rule ouer men, and by the ſecret force of his ſpirite quicken and nouriſh them like his owne body, till being gathered vp into heauen, they might enioy all one life with the Angels. Theſe trifles that I haue hetherto confuted, Oſiander accompteth for moſt ſtrong oracles: euen ſo as being dronke with the ſweeteneſſe of his owne ſpeculations, he vſeth to blowe out fonde Bacchus cries of matters of nothing. But this one that he bringeth after, he ſaith is much more ſtrong, that is the prophecie of Adam, which, ſeyng his wife ſaid, this bowe is a bone of my bones, and fleſh of my fleſh. But howe proueth he that to be a prophecie? Bycauſe in Matthew Chriſt geueth the ſame ſaying to God. As though that what ſo euer God hath ſpoken by men, conteyneth ſome prophecie. Let Oſiander ſeeke prophecies in euery commaundement of the lawe, which, it is certaine haue come from God the author of them. Beſide that, Chriſt ſhould haue bene groſſe and earthly, if he had reſted vpon the literall ſenſe. Bycauſe he ſpeaketh not of the miſticall vnion wherevnto he hath vouchesaued to receiue his church, but only of faithfulneſſe betwene man and wife: for this cauſe he teacheth, that God pronounced that man and wife ſhalbe one fleſh, that no man ſhoulde attempt to breake that inſoluble knot by diuorce. If Oſiander loth this ſimplicitie, let him blame Chriſt, for that he led not his diſciples further to a miſterie, in more ſuttely expounding the ſaying of his father. Neither yet doth Paule mainteine his errour, which after he had ſaid that we are fleſh of the fleſh of Chriſt, by and by addeth, that this is a great miſterie, for his purpoſe was not to tell in what meaning Adam ſpake it but vnder the figure and ſimilitude of mariage. to ſet forth the holy coupling together, that maketh vs one with Chriſt. And ſo doe the wordes ſound. Bycauſe when he geueth warning that he ſpeaketh this of Chriſt and his church, he doth as it were by way of correction, ſeuere the ſpirituall ioyning of Chriſt and his church from the lawe of mariage. Wherefore this fickle reaſon eaſily vaniſheth away. And I thinke I neede no more to ſhake vp any more of that ſort of chaffe, bycauſe the vanitie of them all his ſone found out by this ſhort confutation. But this ſobrietie ſhall aboundantly ſuffice to feede ſoundly the children of God: that when the fulneſſe of times was come, the ſonne of God was ſent, made of woman, made vnder the lawe, to redeeme them that were vnder the lawe, Ephe. 3. 30.

The xiij. Chapter.

That Chriſt toke vpon him the true ſubſtance of the fleſh of man.

NOwe, vnleſſe I be deceiued, it were ſuperfluous to entreate againe of the godhead of Chriſt, which hath already in an other place ben proued with plaine and ſtrong teſtimonies. It remaineth therefore to be ſeene, howe he being clothed with our fleſh, hath fulfilled the office of Mediatour. The truethe of his humaine nature hath in the olde time ben impugned both by the Manichees and the Marcionites: of whome, the Marcionites fained a ghoſt in ſtede of the body of Chriſt, and the Manichees dreamed that he had a heauenly fleſh. But both many and ſtrong teſtimonies of the Scripture do ſtand againſt them both. For the bleſſing is promiſed neither in a heauenly ſeede, nor in the coũterfaite ſhape of man, but in the ſeede of Abraham and Iacob. Neither is the eternal throne promiſed to a man made of aire, but to the ſonne of David & to the frute of his wombe. Therefore being deliuered in the fleſh, he is called the ſonne of David and Abraham: not bycauſe he is onely borne of the wombe of the Virgine, and create in the aire, but becauſe (as Paule expoundeth it) he is according to the fleſh made of the ſeede of Dauid: as in an other place the Apoſtle teacheth, that he deſcended of the Iewes. For which cauſe the Lord himſelfe not contented with the bare name of man, doth oftentimes call himſelfe the ſonne of man, meaning to expreſſe more plainly that he was man truely iſſued of the ſeede of mankinde. Sith the holy Ghoſt hath ſo oft by ſo many meanes with ſo great diligence and ſimplicitie declared a thing not obſcure of it ſelfe, who woulde haue thought any men to be ſo ſhameleſſe as to preſume yet to ſpread miſtes to darken it? And yet we haue other teſtimonies at hand, if we liſted to heape vp more of them. Matt. 1. 1. Rom. 1. 3. Rom. 9. 5.

Pſal. 45. 7.

As is that ſaying of Paule: that God ſent his ſonne made of woman. Gal. 4. 4

And innumerable other places, whereby appeareth that he was ſubiect to hungre, thirſt, colde, & other infirmities of our nature. But out of many theſe are chiefly to be choſen, that may moſt auaile to edifie our mindes in true confidence. As, where it is ſaid, that he gaue not to great honour to the Angels, as to take their nature vpon him: but tooke our nature, that in fleſh & bloud he might, by death, deſtroy him that had the power of death. Againe, that by benefite of that communicating we are reckened his brethren. Againe, that he ought to haue bine made like vnto his brethren, that he might be made a mercifull and faithfull interceſſour: that we haue not a Biſhop that can not be compatient of our infirmities. And ſuch like. And for the ſame purpoſe ſerueth that which we touched a litle before, that it behoued that the ſinnes of the worlde ſhoulde be cleanſed in our fleſh: Which Paule plainely affirmeth. And truely, what ſo euer the father hath geuen to Chriſt, it doth therefore belong to vs, becauſe he is the head, from which the whole body being knit together, groweth into one. Yea, and otherwiſe that will not agree together, which is ſaid: that the ſpirite was geuen him without meaſure, that all we ſhoulde drawe of the fulneſſe thereof. For aſmuch as there is no greater abſurditie than to ſay, that God is enriched in his eſſence by any accidentall gifte. And for this cauſe Chriſt ſaith in an other place: I do ſanctifie my ſelfe for them. Hebr. 2. 16. Hebr. 1. 10. and 17. Hebr. 4. 15. Rom. 8. 3. John. 1. 16. Ioh. 17. 19.

As for the places that they bring forth to confirme their errour, they do to vnaptly wreſt them, and they nothing preuaile by their trifling ſutteltes, when they goe about to wipe away thoſe thinges that I haue alleged for our part. Marcion imagineth that Chriſt did put on a fantaſtical body in ſtede of a true body: becauſe in ſome places it is ſaid, that he was made after the likeneſſe of man, and that he was founde in ſhape as a manne. But ſo he nothing weyeth what is Phil. 2. 7.

Paules purpose in that place. For his meaning is not to teach what manner of body Christ toke vpon him, but that whereas he might haue shewed forth his godhead, he made none other shewe of himselfe, but as of an abiect and vnregarded man. For, to exhorte vs by his example to submission, he sheweth, that for asmuch as he was God, he might haue by and by set forth his glory to be seene to the worlde: but yet that he gaue ouer some of his owne right, and of his owne accord abaced himselfe, bycause he did put on the image of a seruant and contended with that humilitie, suffred his godhed to be hidden with the veile of the flesh. He doth not here teach what Christ was, but how he behaued himselfe. And also by the whole processe of the texte it is easily gathered, that Christ was abaced in the true nature of manne. For what meaneth this, that in shape he was founde as man, but that for a time the glorie of his godhead did not shine forth, but only the shape of man appeared in base and abiect estate? For otherwise that place of Peter coulde not stande together, that he was dead in the flesh, but quickened in the spirite, if the sonne of God had not bene weake in the nature of man: which Paule expresseth more plainely in sayeng, that he suffred by reason of the weakenesse of the flesh. And herevnto serueth the exaltation: bycause it is expressely said, that Christ atteined a new glorie after that he abaced himselfe, which coulde not well agree to be spoken of any, but of a man hauing flesh and soule. Manichees framed Christ a body of aire, bycause Christ is called the second Adam, heauenly of heauen. But neither in that place doth the Apostle bring in a heauenly essence of the body, but a spirituall force which being poured abrode by Christ, doth quicken vs. Nowe, as we haue already seene, Peter and Paule doe seuer the same from his flesh. But rather that doctrine which is receiued among the true teachers, concerning the flesh of Christ, is very well proued by that place. For if Christ had not all one nature of body with vs, it were a very vaine argument, that Paule with such vehemencie followeth: that if Christ be risen againe, we shall also rise againe: and if we do not rise, then that Christ also is not risen. By what cauillations so euer either the olde Manichees or their new Disciples goe about to escape, they shall not winde them selues away. It is a fowle shifte, that they fondely say, that Christ is called the sonne of manne, in so much as he is promised of menne. For it is plaine, that after the Hebrewe phrase, very man in deede is called the Sonne of manne. And Christ without doubte kepte the phrase of his owne tongue. Also it ought to make no question, what ought to be vnderstanded by the children of Adam. And (not to go farre of) the place of the eight Pſalme, which the Apoſtles apply to Chriſt, ſhalbe ſuffi-cient enough: What is man that thou art mindefull of him, or the ſonne of man, that thou viſiteſt him? In this figure is expreſſed the true manhoode of Chriſt. For though he were not immediatly begotten of a mortall father, yet his race came frō Adam. For elſe that place could not ſtande which we haue already alleaged that Chriſt is children to the ſeruice of God. In which words it is plainely determi- 14. ned, that Chriſt is made fellow & partaker of all one nature with vs.

In which meaninge alſo he ſayth, that both the author of holineſſe & they that are made holy, are all of one. For it is proued by the pro-peſſe of the text, that the ſame is referred to the fellowſhip of nature: becauſe he byandby addeth, Therfore he is not aſhamed to call them brethren. For if he had ſaid before, that the faithfull are of God in ſo great dignity, what cauſe ſhould there be to be aſhamed? But becauſe Chriſt of his infinite grace doth ioyne himſelfe to the baſe & vnnoble therefore it is ſayd, that he is not aſhamed. But in vaine they obiect, that by this meane the wicked ſhall become the brethren of Chriſt: becauſe we know that the children of God are not borne of fleſh and blood, but of the holy Ghoſt by faith. Therefore onely fleſh maketh not a brotherly ioyninge. But although the Apoſtle giue this honor to ỹ faithfull only, to be of one with Chriſt, yet it followeth not, but that the wicked may be borne of the ſame originall. As when we ſay that Chriſt was made man, to make vs the ſonnes of God: this saying extendeth not to all men, becauſe faith is the meane which ſpiritually graffeth vs into the body of Chriſt. Alſo they fooliſhly moue a brawle about the name of Firſt begottē. They ſay that Chriſt ſhould Rom. 8. haue bin borne of Adam ſtreight at the beginning, that he might be 29. the firſt begotten amonge brethren. For the title of Firſt begotten, is not referred to age, but to the degree of honor, and excellence of power. And more colour hath that which they bable, that Chriſt tooke He. 2.16 not him man and not Angels, becauſe he receiued mankinde into fa-uour. For, to ſet out more largely the honor which God vouchſaued to giue vs, he cōpared the Angels with vs, which were in this behalfe far behinde vs. And if ỹ teſtimony of Moſes be well weyed, where he ſayth that the ſeede of the woman ſhall breake the ſerpentes heade, Ge. 3.15 it ſhall vtterly ende the controuerſie. For only Chriſt is not there ſpoken of, but all mankinde. Becauſe the victory was to be gotten by Chriſt for vs, he generally pronounceth that the poſterity of the woman ſhould get the vpper hand of ỹ Deuil. Wherupon followeth, that Chriſt iſſued of mankinde, becauſe it was Gods purpoſe there to raiſe vp Eue, whom he spake vnto with good hope, that she shoulde not faint with sorow.

3 They do no lesse wickedly than foolishly entangle with allegories these testimonies where Christ is called the seede of Abraham, and the frute of the wombe of Dauid. For if the name of Seede had bin spoken in an allegory, truely Paul would not haue left it vntolde, where he plainly & without figure affirmeth, that there are not
Ga. 3. 18 many sonnes of Abraham redemers, but one Christ. Of like sorte is it that they alleage: that he is no otherwise called the sonne of Dauid, but because he was promised and at length in his due time deliuered. For after that Paule had once named him the sonne of God: in that
Ro. 1. 3. he byandby addeth, According to the flesh, he truely meaneth of nature. And so in the 9 chapter callinge him the blessed God, he setteth seuerally beside, that accordinge to the flesh he descended of the Iewes. Nowe if he were not truely begotten of the seede of Dauid, to what purpose shalbe this sayinge, that he is the frute of his wombe?
Psa. 132. 11. What meaneth this promise? Out of thy loynes shal he descende, that shall abide in thy seate. Now in the Genealogie of Christ, as it is rehearsed of Matthew, they do Sophistically mocke. For though he do not rehearse the parētes of Marie but of Ioseph, yet becausse he speaketh of a thing sufficiently knowē abrode among the people, he reckeneth it enough to shew that Ioseph came of the seede of Dauid, when it was well knowen that Mary was of the same stocke. But Luke more presseth them in teaching that saluation brought by Christ, is cōmon to all mankinde: becausse Christ the author of saluation proceeded of Adam the common parent of all. I graunt in dede, that by the Genealogie it can none otherwise be gathered that Christ was the sonne of Dauid, but in so much as he was begotten of the Virgine. But the newe Marcionites to colour their errour do to proudly, in this that to proue that Christ tooke his body of nothing, they affirme that women are seedeles, and so they ouerthrow the principles of nature. But becausse that is no question of diuinity, & the reasons that they bring are so fickle, that they may very easily be confuted: therefore I will not touch those thinges that belong to Philosophie and Physike, and will hold me contented to wipe away those thinges that they alleage out of Scripture: that is, that Aaron and Ioiadah tooke wiues of the tribe of Iehudah, & so the difference of tribes had then bin confounded, if woman hadde engendringe seede in her. But it is well enough knowen ỹ as touching ciuile order, the kindreds are reckened by the sede of the man, & yet the excellency of the kinde of man aboue woman proueth not the contrary, but that in generatiō the seede of wo-

an muſt meete. And this ſolution extendeth to all the Genealogies. Oftentimes when the Scripture reckeneth vp a Genealogie, it nameth the mẽ only: ſhal we therfore ſay, that the women are nothing? yt very children do know, that women are comprehended vnder the name of men. And after this ſorte it is ſaid, that women bring forth to their husbandes, becauſe the name of the houſehold alway remaineth with the males. Now as this is graunted to the excellency of the male kinde, that the children are compted noble or vnnoble, according to the eſtate of their fathers: ſo alſo in the ſtate of bondage the ſeede followeth the wombe, according to the iudgement of the Ciuile lawyers. Whereby we may gather, that the iſſue is engendred of the ſeede of the woman. And it hath of long time bin receiued in common vſe of al nations, that the mothers are called Genetrices, that is, begẽdrers. Wherwith Gods law alſoagreeth, which elſe ſhould wrõgfully forbid ỷ mariage of the vncle with his ſiſters daughter, becauſe there were no conſanguinity betwene them: and alſo it were lawfull for a man to marry his ſiſter by the mothers ſide, ſo that ſhe were begotten of an other father. But as I graunt that there is a paſſiue power knbed to women, ſo do I anſwere that the ſame thing is indifferently ſpoken of them that is of men. And Chriſt himſelfe is not ſayd to Ga. 4. 4. be made by the woman, but of the woman. But ſome of their company ſhaking of all ſhame do too leudly aske, whether we wil ſay that Chriſt was engendred of the menſtruall ſeede of the Virgine, for I will likewiſe aske of them, whether he did nõt congele in the bloud of his mother, which they ſhalbe conſtrained to confeſſe. Therfore it is duly gathered of Matthewes words, that becauſe Chriſt was begotten of Marie, he was engendred of her ſeede: as a like engendringe is Mat. 1. 5.
meant when it is ſayd, ỷ Booz was begotten of Rahab. Neither doth Matthew here deſcribe the Virgine as a conduit pipe through which Chriſt paſſed: but he ſeuereth this maruellous maner of generation from the common maner, for that by her Chriſt was begotten of the ſeede of Dauid. For euen in the ſame ſorte, that Iſaac was begotten of Abraham, Salomon of Dauid, and Ioſeph of Iacob, likewiſe it is ſayd that Chriſt was begotten of his mother. For the Euangeliſt ſo obſerueth the order of his ſpeach, and willinge to proue that Chriſt came of Dauid, is contented with this one reaſon, that he was begotten of Marie. Wherby it followeth, that he tooke it for a matter cõfeſſed, that Marie was of kinne to Ioſeph.

The abſurdities wherewith they woulde charge vs, are ſtuffed full of childiſh cauillations. They thinke it a ſhame and diſhonor to Chriſt, if he ſhould haue takẽ his original of men: becauſe ſo he could not be exempt from the vniuerſall law that encloſeth all the offpring of Adam without exception, vnder ſinne. But the compariſon that we Ro.5.12 read in Paule doth eaſily aſſoyle this dout: that as by one man came 1.Cor. ſinne, and by ſinne death, ſo by the righteouſneſſe of one man grace 15.47. hath abounded. Wherewith alſo agreeth an other compariſon of him Ro.8.3. the firſt Adam of earth, earthly and naturall, the ſeconde of heauen, heauenly. Therfore in an other place, the ſame Apoſtle, where he teacheth that Chriſt was ſent in the likenes of ſinfull fleſh to ſatisfie the law, doth ſo expreſſely ſeuere him from the common eſtate of men, that he be very man without fault and corruption. But very childiſhly they triſle in reaſoning thus: If Chriſt be free from all ſpot, and was by the ſecrete workinge of the holy Ghoſt begotten of the ſeede of Marie, then is not the womans ſeede, but onely the mans ſeede vncleane. For we do not make Chriſt free frō all ſpot, for this cauſe, that he is only engendred of his mother without copulation of man, but becauſe he is ſanctified by the holy Ghoſt, that the generation might be pure and vncorrupted, ſuch as ſhould haue bin before the fal of Adam. And this alway remained ſtedfaſtly determined with vs, that ſo oft as the ſcripture putteth vs in minde of the cleanneſſe of Chriſt, it is meant of his true nature of manhoode: becauſe it were ſuperfluous to ſay that God is cleane. Alſo the ſanctification that he ſpeaketh of in the ſeuenteene of Iohn, could haue no place in the nature of God. Neither are there fained two ſeedes of Adam, although there came no infection to Chriſt: becauſe the generation of mā is not vncleane or vicious of it ſelfe, but accidentall by his falling. Therfore it is no maruell, if Chriſt, by whom the eſtate of innocency was to be reſtored, were exempt from common corruption. And wheras alſo they thrid this vpon vs for an abſurdity, ỹ if the Word of God did put on fleſh, then was it encloſed in a narrow priſon of an earthly body: this is but mere waywardnes: becauſe although the infinite eſſēce of the Word did growe together into one perſon with the nature of man: yet do we faine no encloſinge of it. For the Sonne of God deſcended marueloufly from heauen, ſo as yet he left not heauen, it was his will to be marueloufly borne in the Virgins wombe, to be conuerſant on earth, & hang vpon the croſſe, yet that he alway filled the world euen as at the beginning.

The xiiii. Chapter.

Howw the twoo natures of the Mediatour do make one perſon.

Now

NOw where it is sayd, that the Word was made flesh: that is not so to be vnderstanded, as though it were either turned into flesh, or confusely mingeled with flesh, but because he chose him a temple of the Virgins wombe to dwell in: he that was the Sonne of God, became also the sonne of man, not by confusion of substance, but by vnity of person. For we so affirme the Godhead ioyned and vnited to the manhoode, that either of them haue their whole property remaining, and yet of them both is made one Christ. If any thing in all worldly thinges may be founde like to so great a mysterie, the similitude of man is most fitte, whom we see to consist of two substances, whereof yet neither is so mingeled with other, but that either keepeth the property of his owne nature. For neither is the soule the body, nor the body the soule. Wherfore both that thing may be seuerally spoken of the soule, which can no way agree with the body: and likewise of the body that thing may be sayd, which can by no meane agree with the soule: and that may be said of the whole man, which can be but vnfitly taken neither of the soule nor of the body seuerally. Finally, the properties of the soule are sometime attributed to the body, and the properties of the body sometime to the soule: and yet he that consisteth of them is but one man and not many. But such formes of speach do signifie both that there is one person in man compounded of two natures knit together, and that there are two diuerse natures which do make the same person. And so do the Scriptures speake of Christ: Sometime they giue vnto him those thinges that ought singularly to be referred to his manhoode, & sometime those things that do peculiarly belong to his godhead, & sometime those things that do comprehend both natures, & so agree with neither of them seuerally. And this conioyning of the two natures ỳ are in Christ, they do with such religiousnes expresse, that sometime they do put them in common together: which figure is among the old authors called, Communicating of properties. Ioh. 1. 14.

2 These things were but weake, vnles many phrases of Scripture, and such as be echwhere ready to finde, did proue that nothing here-of hath bin deuised by man. That same thinge which Christ spake of himselfe, saying: Before that Abraham was, I am: was farre disagreeing from his manhoode. Neither am I ignorant with what cauillation the erroneous spirites do deprave this place: for they say that he was before all ages, because he was already foreknowen the Redemer, as well in the counsell of the father, as in the mindes of the godly. But here as he openly distinguisheth the day of his manifestation from his eternall essence, & of purpose pronounceth vnto himselfe an au- Ioh. 8. 58.

It is therfore certaine, that these and such like are peculiarly ascribed Esa. 42. 1 Lu. 1. 52 Ioh. 8. 50. Matt. 13 Ioh. 14. 10 & 6. 36. Luc. 24. 39. to the godhead. But whereas he is called the seruant of the father: and wheras it is said, that he grew in age, wisdom & fauour with God and men: that he seketh not his owne glory: that he knoweth not the last day: that he speaketh not of himselfe: that he doth not his owne will: where it is sayd, that he was seene and felt: this wholly belongeth to his only manhode. For in the respect that he is God, neither can he encrease in any thinge, and he worketh all thinges for his owne sake, neither is any thing hidden from him, he doth all things according to the free choise of his owne will, and can neither be seene nor felt. And yet he doth not seuerally ascribe these things to his nature of man only, but taketh thē vpon himselfe, as if they did agree with the person of the mediatour. But the communicatinge of properties is in this Act. 20 28. 1. Cor. 2 6. 1. Ioh. 1. 1. that Paul saith, that God did by his owne bloud purchase vnto him a Church: and the Lord of glory crucified. Againe, where Iohn saith, that the Word of life was felt. Truely God neither hath bloud, nor suffereth, nor can be touched with handes. But because he which was both very God & man, Christ being crucified, did shed his bloud for vs: those thinges that were done in his nature of man, are vnproperly, and yet not without reason giuen to his godhead. A like example is
1. Ioh. 3. 16. Ioh. 3. 13. where Iohn teacheth that God gaue his soule for vs: therefore there also the property of the manhode is cōmunicate with the other nature. Againe, when Christ sayd being yet conuersant in earth, that no man hath ascended into heauē, but the sonne of man that was in heauen: truely according to his manhoode, and in the flesh that he had put on, he was not thē in heauen: but because himselfe was both God and man, by reason of the vnity of both natures, he gaue to the one that, which belonged to the other.

3 But most plainly of all do these places set forth the true subiect of Christ, which do comprehend both natures together: of which sort there are very many in the gospell of him. For that which is there read is singularly belonging neither to his godhead nor to his manhood, but both together: ẏ he hath receiued of his father power to forgiue ſalutiõ, to be made iudge ouer the quicke & the dead, to be honoured euen as the father is: Finally, that he is called the light of the world, the good ſhepherd, the only dore, the true Vine. For ſuch prerogatiues had ỹ ſonne of God, whẽ he was ſhewed in the fleſh: which though he enioyed with his father before the worlde was made, yet he had thẽ not in the ſame maner or the ſame reſpect, & which could not be giuẽ to ſuch a man as was nothing but man. In the ſame meaninge ought we to take that which is in Paule: that Chriſt after the iudgement ended, ſhall yeelde vp the kingdom to God & the father: euen the kingdom of the ſonne of God, which had no begining, nor ſhall haue any endinge: but euen as he lay hid vnder the baſeneſſe of the fleſh, and abaced himſelfe, takinge vpon him the forme of a ſeruaunt, and layinge aſide the porte of maieſty, he ſhewed himſelfe obediẽt to his father: & hauing performed all ſuch ſubiection, at lẽgth crowned with honor & glory, & auaunced to the higheſt dominiõ, that all knees ſhall bow before him: ſo ſhall he then yeelde vp to his father both that name & crowne of glory, & whatſoeuer he hath receiued of his father, that God may be all in all. For to what purpoſe is power & dominion giuen him, but that the father ſhould gouerne vs by his hande? In which ſenſe it is alſo ſayd, that he ſitteth at ỹ right hand of the father. But this is but for a time, til we may enioy the preſent beholding of the godhead. And here the errour of ỹ old fathers can not be excuſed, which while they tooke no heede to the perſon of the Mediatour, haue obſcured ỹ natural meaning of almoſt all the doctrine that is read in the goſpell of Iohn, & haue entangled themſelues iin many ſnares. Let this therefore be vnto vs the key of right vnderſtanding, that ſuch things as belong to the office of the Mediatour, are not ſpokẽ ſimply of the nature of God, nor of the nature of man. Therfore, Chriſt ſhal reigne til he come forth to iudge ỹ world, inſomuch as he ioyneth vs to his father, according to the ſmale meaſure of our weakeneſſe. But when we beinge made partakers of the heauenly glory, ſhall ſee God ſuch as he is, thẽ he hauing performed the office of Mediatour, ſhall ceaſſe to be the embaſſadour of his father, & ſhalbe cõtented with that glory which he enioyed before the makinge of the worlde. And the name of Lord doth in no other reſpect peculiarly agree with the perſon of Chriſt, but in this, that it ſignifieth ỹ meane degree betwene God & vs. For which purpoſe maketh ỹ ſaying of Paul: One God, of whom are all things, & one Lord, by whom are all things, euen he to whom the dominiõ for a time is omitted by the father, vntil his diuine maieſty be to be ſeene face to face. Frõ whom ſo far is it of that any thing ſhall decay, by yeldingvp

the dominion to his father, that he ſhall become ſo much the more glorious. For then ſhall God alſo ceſſe to be ỹ head of Chriſt becauſe Chriſtes godheade ſhall then ſhine of it ſelfe, whereas yet it is couered with a certaine veile.

4 And this obſeruation ſhall do no ſmall ſeruice to aſſoile many doutes, if the readers do fitly apply it. For it is maruelous how many the vnskilfull, yea ſome not vtterly vnlearned, are combred with ſuch formes of ſpeach, which they ſee ſpoken by Chriſt, which do well agree neither with his godheade nor with his manhoode: becauſe they conſider not that they do agree with his perſon wherin he is ſhewed both God and man, and with the office of Mediatour. And it is alway eaſie to ſee, how well all things hang together, if they haue a diligent expoſitour, to examine ſo great miſteries with ſuch deuout reuerence as they ought to be. But there is nothing that theſe furious and phrentike ſpirites trouble not. They catch hold of thoſe things that are ſpoken of his manhoode, to take away his Godhead: and likewiſe of thoſe things that are ſpoken of his godhead to take away his manhoode: and of thoſe thinges that are ſo ioyntly ſpoken of both natures, that they ſeuerally agree with neither, to take away both. But what is that elſe but to ſay, that Chriſt is not man, becauſe he is God: and that he is not God, becauſe he is man: and that he is neither man nor God, becauſe he is both man and God? We therefore do determine that Chriſt, as he is both God and man, conſiſting of both natures vnited, though not confounded, is our Lord and the true ſonne of God, euen according to this manhoode, though not by reaſon of his manhoode. For the errour of Neſtorius is to be driuen far away from vs, which when he went about rather to draw in ſunder, than to diſtinguiſh the nature, did by ỹ meane imagine a double Chriſt. Whereas we ſee that the Scripture crieth out with loude voice againſt it, where both the name of the ſonne of God is giuen to him that was borne of the Virgine, & the Virgine her ſelfe is called the mother of our Lorde. We muſt alſo beware of the madneſſe of Euticher, leſt while we go about to ſhew the vnity of the perſon, we deſtroy either nature. For we haue already alleaged ſo many teſtimonies, & therein euery where ſo many other to be alleaged, where his Godhead is diſtinguiſhed from his manhoode, as may ſtop the mouthes euen of the moſt contentious, And a litle hereafter I will adioine ſome teſtimonies to confute better that fained deuiſe, but at this preſent, one place ſhall cõtent vs. Chriſt would not haue called his body a Temple, vnleſſe the Godhead did diſtinctly dwel therin. Wherfore as Neſtorius was worthily condemned in the ſynode at Epheſus, ſo alſo was Euticher alſo and condemned in the ſynodes of Conſtantinople and Chalcedon: ſeing ſuch as it is no more lawfull to confounde the two natures in Chriſt, than it is to draw them in ſunder.

But in our age alſo there hath riſen vp no les peſtilent a mōſter, Michaell Seruettus which did thruſt in place of the ſonne of God, a fained thing made of the eſſence of God, of ſpirit, fleſh & three elementes vncreate. And firſt he denieth that Chriſt is by any other way the ſonne of God, but in this that he was begotten of ỹ holy ghoſt in the wombe of the Virgine. But to this ende tendeth his ſurtlety, that the diſtinctiō of ỹ two natures being once ouerthrowē, Chriſt might be thought to be a certaine thing mingled of God & man, & yet neither God nor man. For in his whole proceſſe he trauaileth toward this ende, that before Chriſt was opēly ſhewed in the fleſh, there were onely certaine ſhadowiſh figures in God, wherof the trueth or effect then at length was in beinge, when that word which was ordained to that honor, began truely to be the ſonne of God. And we in dede do confeſſe that the Mediatour which is borne of the Virgin, is properly the ſonne of God. For Chriſt in that he is man, could not be the miror of the inestimable fauour of God, vnleſſe this dignity were giuen him to be, and be called the onely begotten ſonne of God. But in the meane ſeaſon the definitiō of the Church ſtandeth ſtedfaſtly grounded, that he is compted the ſonne of God, becauſe he being the Word begotten of the father before all worlds, did by hypoſtatical vnion take vpō him the nature of man. Now the hypoſtaticall vniō is called with the olde fathers, that which maketh one perſon of two natures, which kinde of ſpeach was deuiſed to ouerthrow the doting errour of Neſtorius, becauſe he fained that the ſonne of God did ſo dwell in fleſh, that yet he the ſame was not man. Seruettus ſclaundereth vs, that we make two ſonnes of God when we ſay that the eternall Word was alredy the ſonne of God before that it was clothed with fleſh, as if we ſay any thing elſe but that he was manifeſted in the fleſh. Neither doth it follow, that if he were God before that he was man, he began to be a new God. And no more abſurdity it is to ſay, that the ſonne of God appeared in the fleſh, which yet had this alway from eternall being to be the Sonne, which the Angels words to Mary do ſecretly ſhew, That holy thing ỹ ſhall be borne of thee, ſhall be called ỹ ſonne of God. as if he ſhould haue ſayd, that the name of the Sonne which was obſcure in time of the law, ſhould now become famous and euerywhere knowen abroade. Wherewith agreeth that ſaying of Paul, Ro.8.15 that now by Chriſt we are the children of God, freely & with boldneſs to crie Abba, Father. But were not the holy fathers in the olde time also accompted amonge the children of God? Yea: and bearing them bold vpon that interest, they called vpon God by name of their Father. But because since ỹ only begotten sonne of God was brought forth into the world, the heauenly father hode is become more plainly knowen: therefore Paul assigneth this, as it were, a priuilege to the kingdom of Christ. But yet this is stadfastly to be holde, that God neuer was father either to Angels or men, but in respect of the only begotten sonne: and that men specially, whom their owne wickednesse maketh hateful to God, are his children by free adoption because he is the sonne of God by nature. And there is no cause why Seruetus should cauill, that this hangeth vpon filiatiō or becomming a sonne, which God had determined with himself: because our purpose is not heare to speake of the figures howe the expiation was shewed in the bloud of beastes: but because they could not in dede be the children of God, vnlesse their adoption were grounded vpon ỹ head, it is without reason to take that from the head which is common to all the members. I go yet further: Whereas the Scripture calleth the Angels the Psa. 82. 7. sonnes of God, whose so great dignity did not hang vpon the redemption to come: yet must it needes be, that the sonne is in order before them, which maketh the father to be their father. I will repeate it againe shortly, & adde the same of mankinde. Sith from at their first beginning both Angels and men were created, with this condition, that God should be common father to them both, if that saying of Paul be true, that Christ was alway the head & the first begottē of all creatures, Colo. 1. 15. to haue the first degree in all: I thinke I do rightly gather that he was also the sonne of God before the creation of the world.

6 But if his Filiation (if I may so terme it) began since he was manifested in the flesh, it shall follow, that he was also sonne in respect of his nature of man. Seruettus and other such frentike men would haue it, that Christ which appeared in ỹ flesh, is the sonne of God, because out of the flesh he coulde not be called by that name. Now let them answere me whether he be the sonne according to both natures, or in respect of both. So in deede they prate, but Paule teacheth farre otherwise. We graunt in deede, that Christ is in the flesh of man called the Sonne, but not as the faithfull are, that is by adoption only and grace, but the true and naturall, and therefore only sonne, that by this marke he may be discerned from all other. For God vouchsafeth to giue the name of his sonnes to vs, that are regenerate into a new life, but the name of the true and only begotten sonne, he giueth to Christ only. How can he be the only sonne in so great a number of brethren, but because he possesseth that by nature, which we haue receiued ſelfe. And ỹ honor we extende to the whole perſon of the Mediatour, that he be truely & properly the Sonne of God, which was alſo borne of the Virgine, & offered himſelfe for ſacrifice to his father vpon the croſſe: but yet in reſpect of his Godheade, as Paule teacheth, when he ſayth, he was ſeuered out to preach the Goſpell of God, which he had before promiſed of his ſonne, which was begotten of the ſeede of Dauid according to his fleſh, and declared the ſonne of God in power. But why, whē he nameth him diſtinctly the ſonne of Dauid according to the fleſh, ſhould he ſeuerally ſay, that he was declared the Sonne of God, vnleſſe he meant to ſhew that this did hang vpō ſome other thinge, than vpon the very fleſh? For in the ſame ſenſe in an other place he ſayth, that he ſuffered by the weakeneſſe of the fleſh, and roſe againe by the power of the ſpirite, euen ſo in this place he maketh a difference of both natures. Truly they muſt needes graunt, that as he hath that of his mother for which he is called the Sonne of Dauid, ſo he hath that of his Father for which he is called the Sonne of God: and the ſame is an other thing and ſeuerall from the nature of man. The Scripture giueth him two names, callinge him here & there ſometimes the Sonne of God, and ſomtimes the Sonne of Man. Of the ſecond there can be no cōtention moued: but according to the common vſe of the Hebrue tongue he is called the Sonne of mā, becauſe he is of the offſpring of Adā. By the contrary I affirme, that he is called the Sonne of God in reſpect of the Godhead & eternall eſſence: becauſe it is no leſſe meete that it be referred to the nature of God, that he is called the Sonne of God, than to the nature of man, that he is called the Sonne of Man. Againe, in ỹ ſame place that I alleaged, Paul doth meane that he which was according to the fleſh begotten of the ſeede of Dauid, was no otherwiſe declared the Sonne of God in power, thā he teacheth in an other place, that Chriſt which accordinge to the fleſh deſcended of the Iewes, is God bleſſed for euer. Now if in both places the diſtinctiō of the double nature be touched, by what right wil they ſay, that he which according to ỹ fleſh is the Sonne of Man, is not alſo the Sonne of God, in reſpect of the nature of God.

They do in dede diſorderly enforce for the maintenāce of their error, the place where it is ſayd, ỹ God ſpared not his owne Sonne: where the Angell commaunded, that the very ſame he that ſhould be borne of ỹ Virgine, ſhould be called the Sonne of the higheſt. But, leſt they ſhould glory in ſo fickle an obiection, let them wey with vs a while, how ſtrongly they reaſon. For if it be rightly concluded, that Chriſt from his conception, he beganne to be the Sonne of God, becauſe he that is conceiued is called the Sonne of God, then ſhall it follow, that 1.Ioh.1. he began to be the word at his manifeſting in the fleſh, becauſe Iohn

1. ſayth, that he bringeth them tidinges of the Word of life, which his handes haue handeled. Likewiſe that, which is reade in the Prophet:
Mic.5.2 Thou Bethleem in the lande of Iuda, art a litle one in thouſandes of Iuda: Out of thee ſhall be borne to me a guide to rule my people Iſrael, and his comming forth from the beginning, from the daies of eternity. How will they be compelled to expounde this, if they will be content to follow ſuch manner of reaſoning? For I haue proteſted, that we do not agre with Neſtorius, which imagined a double Chriſt: whereas by our doctrine, Chriſt hath made vs the ſonnes of God with him, by right of brotherly conioyninge, becauſe he is the only begotten ſonne of God in the fleſh which he tooke of vs. And Auguſtine doth wiſely admoniſh vs, that this is a bright glaſſe, wherein to behold the marueilous and ſingular fauour of God, that he aſſigned honor in reſpect that he is man which he coulde not deſerue. Therfore Chriſt was adorned with this excellency euen according to the fleſh frō the wombe of his mother, to be the Sonne of God. Yet is there not in the vnity of perſon to be fained ſuch a mixture, as may take away that which is proper to the Godheade. For it is no more abſurdity, that the eternall word of God and Chriſt, by reaſon of the two natures vnited into one perſon, be diuerſe wayes called the Sonne of God, than that he be accordinge to diuerſe reſpectes, called ſometime the Sonne of God, and ſometime the ſonne of Man. And no more doth that other cauillation of Seruettus accomber vs that before that Chriſt appeared in the fleſh, he is no where called the Sonne of God, but vnder a figure, becauſe although the deſcribing of him, thē was ſomewhat darke: yet where as it is already clerly proued that he was no otherwiſe eternall God, but becauſe he was the word begotten of the eternall father, and that this name doth no otherwiſe belonge to the perſon of the Mediatour which he hath taken vpon him, but becauſe he is God openly ſhewed in the fleſh: and that God the Father hath not bin called Father from the beginning, Ep.3.15 if there had not then bin a mutuall relation to the Sonne, by whome all kinred or fatherhood is reckened in heauen and in earth: hereby it is eaſie to gather, that euen in the time of the law and the Prophets he was the Sonne of God, before that this name was commōly knowen in the Church. But if they ſtriue onely about the onely worde, Salomon diſcourſing of the infinite highneſſe of God, affirmeth as well his Sonne as himſelfe to be incomprehenſible. Tell his name if ment, that with the contentious this testimony will not be of sufficient force: neither do I much grounde vpon it, sauing that it sheweth that they do maliciously cauill, that deny Christ to be the Sonne of God, but in this respect that he was made man. Beside that, all the oldest writers with one mouth and consent haue openly testified the same: so that their shamelesnesse is no lesse worthy to be scorned than to be abhorred, which dare obiect Ireneus & Tertulliã against vs, both which do confesse that the Sonne of God was inuisible, which afterward appeared visible.

8 But although Seruetus hath heaped vp horrible monstruous deuises, which paraduenture the other woulde not allow: yet if ye presse them hard, ye shall perceiue that all they that do not acknowledge Christ to be the sonne of God but in the flesh, do graunt it only in this respect, that he was conceiued in the wombe of the Virgin by the holy Ghost, like as the Maniches in olde time did foolishly affirme, that man hath his soule (as it were) by deriuation from God, because they reade that God breathed into Adam the breath of life. For they take so fast hold of ỹ name of Sonne, that they leaue no difference betwene the natures, but babble disorderly, that Christ being man, is the Sonne of God, because according to his nature of man, he is begotten of God. So the eternall begetting of Wisdom, that Salomon speaketh of, is destroied, and there is no accompt made of the Godheade in the Mediatour, or a fantasied Ghost is thrust in place of the Manhoode. It were in deede profitable to confute the grosser deceites of Seruetus, wherewith he hath bewitched himselfe and some other, to the ende that the Godly readers admonished by this example, may hold themselues within the compasse of sobernes and modestly: sauing that I thinke it should be superfluous, because I haue already done it in a booke by it selfe. The summe of them commeth to this effect, that the Sonne of God, was a forme in minde from the beginning, and euen then he was before appointed to be man that should be the essentiall image of God. And he doth acknowledge no other Word of God, but in outward shew. This he expoundeth to be the begetting of him, that there was begotten in God from the beginning a will to begette a Sonne, which also in act extended to the nature it selfe. In the meane time he confoundeth the Spirite with the Word, for that God distributed the inuisible Word and the Spirite into flesh and soule. Finally the figuration of Christ, hath with them the place of begetting, but he saith, that he which then was but a shadowish sonne in forme, was at length begotten by the word, to which he assigneth the office of seede. Whereby it shall follow that Ecc. 24. 14.

hoges and dogs are as well the children of God, because they were create of the originall seede of the word of God. For although he compound Christ of three vncreate elements to make him begotten of the essence of God, yet he faineth that he is so the first begotten among creatures, that the same essentiall godheade is in stones, according to their degree. And least he should seeme to strippe Christ out of his godhead, he affirmeth that his flesh is consubstantial with God, and that the Word was made man by turninge the flesh into God. So while he can not conceiue Christ to be the Sonne of God, vnlesse his flesh came from the essence of God, and were turned into godhead, he bringeth the eternall person of the Word to nothinge, and taketh from vs the sonne of Dauid, that was promised to be the Redeemer. He oft repeateth this, that the Sonne was begotten of God by knowledge and predestination, and that at length he was made man of that matter which at the beginning shined with God in the three elementes, which afterward appeared in the first light of the worlde, in the cloude and in the piller of fire. Now how shamefully he sometime disagreeth with himselfe, it were too tedious to rehearse. By this shorte recitall the readers that haue their sounde witte may gather, that with the circumstances of this vncleane dogge the hope of saluation is vtterly extinguished. For if the flesh were the godheade it selfe, it shoulde ceasse to be the temple thereof. And none can be our redemer, but he that begotten of the seede of Abraham and Dauid, is accordinge to the flesh, truely made man. And he wrongefully standeth vpon the wordes of John, that the Word was made flesh. For as they resist the errour of Nestorius, so they nothing further this wicked inuention, whereof Eutiches was author, forasmuch as the only purpose of the Euangelist was to defend the vnity of persons in the two natures.

The xv. Chapter.

That we may know vs, to what end Christ was sent of his Father, and what he brought vs: three things are principally to be considered in him, his Propheticall office, his Kingdom, and his Priesthoode.

AVgustine saith rightly, that although the Heretikes do braggue of the name of Christ, yet they haue not all one foundation with the godly, but that it remaineth onely proper to the Church. For if these thinges be diligently considered, that belong to Christ. Christ shall be founde among them onely in name, and not in very deede. So at this day the Papistes, although the name of the Sonne of God redemer of the worlde, sounde in their mouth

...en both a Prophet, a King, and a Priest. Albeit, it were but small pro-
...fite to know those names, without knowledge of the ende and vse of ...hem. For they are also named amonge the Papistes, but coldly and
...o no great profite, where it is not knowen what eche of these titles
...ontaineth in it. We haue said before, how, though God sending Pro-
...hets by continual course one after an other did neuer leaue his peo-
...le destitute of profitable doctrine, and such as was sufficient to sal-...uation: that yet the mindes of the godly hadde alway this persuasi...on, that full light of vnderstandinge was to be hoped for onely at the ...ommynge of Messias: yea and the opinion thereof was come, e...uen to the Samaritans, who yet neuer knew the true religion, as ap-
...eareth by the sayinge of the woman: When Messias commeth, he Io.4.25 ...hall teach vs all thinges. And the Iewes had not rashly gathered this ...pon presumptions in their mindes: But as they were taught by as...ured oracles, so they beleued. Notable amonge the other is that say-
...ng of Esay: Behold, I haue made him a witnesse to peoples, I haue Esa 55.
...iuen him to be a guide and Schoolemaister to peoples: euen as in 4.
...n other place he had called him ỹ Angell or interpreter of the great
...ounsel. After this maner the Apostle commending the perfection of
...he doctrine of the gospell, after that he had sayd, that God in the old Heb.1.1
...ime spake to the Fathers by the Prophetes diuersly, and vnder ma-
...ifolde figures, addeth that last of all he spake vnto vs by his belo-
...ued Sonne. But because it was the common office of the Prophetes
...o keepe the Church in suspense, and to vphold it vntill the comming
...of the Mediatour, therfore we reade that in their scattering abroade,
...he faithfull cõplained that they were depriued of that ordinary be...efite, saying: We see not our tokens: there is not a Prophet amonge Ps.74.9
...s: there is no more any that hath knowledge. But when Christ was
...ow not farre of, there was a time appoynted to Daniell to seale vp Dani.9.
...he vision and the Prophet, not onely that the Prophecie, which is 24.
...here spoken of, shoulde be stablished in assured credit, but also that ...he faithfull shoulde learne with contented minde to want the Pro-
...hetes for a time, because the fulnesse and closing vp of all reuelati-
...ons was at hand.

2 Now it is to be noted, that the title of commendation of Christ belongeth to these three offices. For we know that in the time of the law, as well the Prophetes as Priestes and Kings were anointed with holy oyle. For which cause the renoumed name of Messias was geuen to the promised Mediatour. But though in deede I confesse (as I haue also declared in an other place,) that he was called Messias by peculiar consideration and respect of his kingdome: yet the annoyntinges in respect of the office of Prophet & of priest, haue their place, and are not to be neglected of vs. Of the first of these two is expresse Esa. 61. 1 mention made in Esay, in these words: The spirit of the Lord Iehoua vpon me. Therfore the Lord hath anointed me, that I should preach to the meeke, should bring health to the contrite in heart, should declare deliuerance to captiues, shoulde publish the yeare of good will, &c. We see that he was anoynted with the Spirit, to be the publisher and witnesse of the grace of the Father. And that not after the common manner: for he is seuered from other teachers, that had the like office. And here againe is to be noted, that he tooke not the anoynting for himselfe alone, that he might execute the office of teaching but for his whole body, that in his continuall preachinge of the Gospell, the vertue of the Spirite shoulde ioine withall. But in the meane time this remaineth certaine, that by this perfectiō of doctrine which he hath brought, an ende is made of all prophecies: so that they do diminish his authority, that beinge not content with the Gospell, do patch any foraine thinge vnto it. For that voice which thundred Mat. 3. 17. from heauen, saying: This is my beloued Sonne, heare him: hath auaunced him by singular priuilege aboue the degrees of all other. Then, this oyntment is poured abroade from the head vnto all the Ioel. 2. 28. members: as it was foretolde by Ioel: Your children shall prophecy, 1. Cor. 1 30. and your daughters shall see visions. &c. But where Paule sayth, that he was giuen vs vnto wisdom: and in an other place, that in him are

Col. 2. 3 hidden all the treasures of knowledge and vnderstanding: this hath somewhat an other meaninge: that is, that out of him there is nothinge profitable to knowe, and that they which by faith perceaue what he is, haue comprehended the whole infiniteneſſe of heauenly good thinges. For which cause he wryteth in an other place: I haue
1. Cor. 2 2. counted it precious to know nothing, but Iesus Christ, and him crucified: which is most true, because it is not lawfull to passe beyonde the simplicity of the Gospell. And hereunto tendeth the dignity of a Prophetes office in Christ, that we might know that in the summe of the doctrine, which he hath taught, are contained all pointes of perfect wisdom.

3 Now come I to his kingdome, of which were vayne to speake, the readers were not firſt warned, that the nature thereof is ſpiri-all. For thereby is gathered, both to what purpoſe it ſerueth, and hat it auaileth vs, and the whole force and eternitie therof, and alſo e eternitie which in Daniel the Angell doth attribute to the peron of Chriſt: and againe the Angell in Luke doth worthily applie to e ſaluation of the people. But that is alſo double or of two ſortes, r the one belongeth to the whole bodie of the Church, the other proper to euery membre. To the firſt is to be referred that which ſaid in the Pſalme: I haue ones ſworne by my holineſſe to Dauid, Pſa. 89. will not lie, his ſeede ſhall abide for euer, his ſeate ſhall be as the 36. nne in my ſight, it ſhall be ſtabliſhed as the Moone for euer, and faithfull witneſſe in heauen. Neither is it doubtfull, but that God th there promiſe, that he wil be by the hande of his ſonne an eter-all gouerner and defender of his Church. For the true perfour-ance of this prophecie can be founde no where els but in Chriſt: e aſmuch as immediatly after the death of Salomon, the greater rte of the dignitie of the kingdome fell away, and was to the diſnour of the houſe of Dauid conueyed ouer to a priuate man, and erwarde by litle and litle was diminiſhed, till at length it came to er decaie with heauy and ſhamefull deſtruction. And the ſame eaning hath that exclamation of Eſaie: Who ſhall ſhewe forth his Eſa. 53. neration? For he ſo pronounceth that Chriſt ſhall remaine aliue 8. er death, that he ioyneth him with his membres. Therefore, ſo ſt as we beare that Chriſt is armed with eternall power, let vs rember that the euerlaſting continuance of the Church is vpholden y this ſupport, to remaine ſtill ſafe amõg the troubleſome toſſinges, herewith it is continually vexed, and among the greuous and ter-le motions that threaten innumerable deſtructions. So when Da- Pſal. 2. d ſcorneth the boldneſſe of his enemies, that go about to breake 3.4. e yoke of God and of Chriſt, and ſaith, that the kinges and peoples ged in vaine, by cauſe he that dwelleth in heauen is ſtrong enough breake their violent aſſaultes: he aſſureth the Godly of the conti-all preſeruatiõ of the Church, and encourageth them to hope well oft as it happeneth to be oppreſſed. So in an other place, when he Pſal. 110 ith in the perſon of God: ſit on my right hande, till I make thine emies thy foote ſtoole: he warneth vs, that how many and ſtrong emies ſo euer do conſpire to beſiege the Church, yet they haue not ength enough to preuaile againſt that vnchangeable decree of God, herby he hath apointed his ſonne an eternall kinge: wherevpon followeth, that it is impoſſible that the Deuell with all the prepa-ation of the worlde, may be able at any time to deſtroy the Church, which is grouded vpon the eternall seate of Christ. Now for so much as concerneth the speciall vse of euery one, the very same eternal continuance ought to raise vs vp to hope of immortality. For we see, that whatsoeuer is earthly and of the worlde, endureth but for a time, yea and is very fraile. Therefore Christ, to lift vp our hope vnto heauen, pronounceth that his kingdome is not of this worlde. Finally, when any of vs heareth, that the kingdome of Christ is spirituall, let him be raised vp with this saying, and let him pearce to the hope of a better life: and whereas he is nowe defended by the hande of Christ, let him looke for the full frute of this grace in the worlde to come.

Ioh. 18. 36.

4 That, as we haue saide, the force and profite of the kingedome of Christ can not otherwise be perceiued by vs, but when we know it to be spirituall, appeareth sufficiently though it were but by this, that while we must liue in warfare vnder the crosse, during the whole course of our life, our estate is harde and miserable: what then should it profit vs to be gathered together vnder the dominion of a heauenly king, vnlesse we were certaine to enioy the frute thereof out of the state of this earthly life? And therefore it is to be knowen, that whatsoeuer felicitie is promised vs in Christ, it consisteth not in outward commodities, that we shoulde leade a merry and quiet life, florish in wealth, be assured from all harmes, and flowe full of those delectable thinges that the flesh is wont to desire, but that it wholy belonged to the heauenly life. But as in the worlde the prosperous and desired state of the people is partely mainteined by plentie of good thinges and peace at home, and partly by strong forceable defenses, whereby it may be safe against outwarde violence: so Christ also doth enrich his with all thinges necessarie to eternall saluation of soules, and fortifieth them with strength, by which they may stande inuincible against all assaultes of spirituall enemies. Whereby we gather, that he reigneth more for vs than for himselfe, and that both within & without: that being furnished, so farre as God knoweth to be expedient for vs, with the giftes of the spirite, whereof we are naturally empty, we may by these first frutes perceiue that we are truely ioyned to God vnto perfect blessednesse. And then, that bearing vs bolde vpon the power of the same spirit, we may not doubt that we shall alwaies haue the victorie against the Deuill, the worlde, and euery kinde of euill thing. To this purpose tẽdeth the aunswere of Christ to the Phariseis, that becausse the kingdome of God is within vs, it shal not come with obseruation. For it is likely that becausse he professed that he was the same king, vnder whome the soueraigne blessing of God was to be hoped for, they in scorne required him to shew forth his signes sneſſe, peace and ioy in the holy Ghost. Hereby we are briefely 17. ught, what the kingdome of Christ auaileth vs. For, bycause it is not rthly or fleshly, subiect to corruption, but spirituall: he lifteth vs vp en to eternall life, that we may patiently passe ouer this life in miries, hunger, colde, contempt, reproches, and other greues, contend with this one thing, that our king will neuer leaue vs destitute, but ccour vs in our necessities, till hauing ended our warre, we be cald to triumph. For such is his maner of reigning, to communicate th vs all that he hath receiued of his father. Nowe whereas he areth and furnisheth vs with power, and garnisheth vs with beautie d magnificence, enricheth vs with wealth: hereby is ministred vnto most plentifull matter to glorie vpon, and also bolde courage to st without feare against the Deuill, sinne and death. Finally, that ched with his righteousnesse, we may valiantly ouercome all the proches of the worlde, and as he liberally filleth vs with his giftes, we againe for our parte, may bring forth frute to his glorie.

5 Therefore his kingly anointing is set forth vnto vs, not done th oyle or ointmēres made with spices, but he is called the anoin-d of God, because vpon him hath rested the spirit of wisdome, vn-rstanding, counsell, strength and feare of God. This is the oyle of dnesse, wherewith the Psalme reporteth that he was annointed oue his fellowes, because if there were not such excellencie in him, should be all needy and hungry. For, as it is already said, he is not Ioh.3. iustly enriched for him selfe, but to poure his plenty vpō vs being 34. gry and drie. For as it is said, that the father gaue the spirite to his Ioh.1.
ne, not by measure, so there is expressed a reason why, that all we 16. uld receiue of his fulnesse, and grace for grace. Out of which foune floweth that liberall geuing, whereof Paule maketh mention, Eph.4.7 reby grace is diuersly distributed to the faithfull, according to the asure of the gift of Christ. Hereby is that which I said, sufficiently rmed, that the kingdome of Christ consisteth in the spirit, not in thly delites or pompes, and therefore we must forsake the worlde t we may be partakers of it. A visible signe of this holy anointing Iohn.1. s shewed in the baptisme of Christ, when the holy Ghost rested vp- 32. n him in the likenesse of a doue. That the holy Ghost and his gifts Luc.3. meante by the worde Anointing, ought to seeme neither nouel- 22. nor absurditie. For we are none other way quickened, specially for much as concerneth the heauenly life: there is no droppe of liuely force in vs, but that which the holy Ghoſt poureth into vs, whi hath choſen his ſeate in Chriſt, that from thenſe the heauenly cheſſe might largely flowe out vnto vs, whereof we are ſo needy. A whereas both the faithfull ſtande inuincible by the ſtrength of th king, and alſo his ſpirituall richeſſe plenteouſly flowe out vnto the they are not vnworthily called Chriſtians. But this eternitie where we haue ſpoken, is nothing derogate by that ſaying of Paule: Th 1. Cor. 15. 24. he ſhall yelde vp the kingdome to God and the Father. Againe: Th 1. Cor. 15. 28. ſonne him ſelfe ſhall be made ſubiecte, that God may be all in thinges: for his meaning is nothing els, but that in that ſame p fect glorie, the adminiſtration of the kingedome ſhall not be ſuch it is now. For the father hath geuen all power to the ſonne, that the ſonnes hande he may gouerne, cheriſh and ſuſteine vs, defe vs vnder his ſauegarde, and helpe vs. So while for a litle time we wauering abroad from God, Chriſt is the meane betweene God vs, by litle and litle to bring vs to perfect conioyning with God. A truely, whereas he ſitteth on the right hande of the father, that is much in effect, as if he were called the fathers deputee, vnder whom is the whole power of his dominion, bycauſe it is Gods will to and defende his Church by a meane (as I may ſo call it) in the p ſon of his Sonne. As alſo Paule doth expounde it in the firſt cha ter to the Epheſians, that he was ſet at the right hande of the fathe to be the heade of the Church, which is his body. And to no oth meaning tendeth that which he teacheth in an other place, th Phi. 2 9 there is geuen him a name aboue all names, that in the name of Ie all knees ſhould bow, and all tongues confeſſe that it is to the gl of God the Father. For euen in the ſame wordes alſo he ſeme out in the kingdome of Chriſt an ordre neceſſarie for our preſen weakeneſſe. So Paule gathereth rightly, that God ſhall then be him ſelfe the onely head of the Church, bycauſe Chriſtes office defending of the Church, ſhall be fulfilled. For the ſame reaſon th Scripture commonly calleth him Lorde, bycauſe his Father did him ouer vs to this ende, to exerciſe his owne Lordely power him. For though there be many lordeſhippes in the worlde, y is there to vs but one God the father, of whome are all thinges a we in him, and one Lord Chriſt, by whome are all thinges and we him, ſaith Paule. Wherevpon is rightly gathered that he is the ſa ſame God, which by the mouth of Eſaie affirmed him ſelfe to be Eſa. 33. 22. kinge and the lawemaker of the Church. For though he do where call all the power that he hath, the benefit and gifte of the F ther, yet he meaneth nothing els, but that he reigneth by power God

od: bycause he hath therfore put on ỹ personage of the Mediator, t descendinge from the bosome & incomprehensible glory of the ther, he might approch nie vnto vs. And so much more rightfull is hat we be with all consent prepared to obey, and that with great erefulnesse we direct our obediences to his commaundement. For he ioyneth the offices of king and pastor toward them that wil-gely yeelde themselues obedient: so on the other side we heare Psal. 2. t he beareth an yron scepter, to breake and broose all the obstinate 9. e potters vessels: we heare also that he shalbe the iudge of nati- Psa. 110 , to couer the earth with deade corpses, and to ouerthrowe the 6. gh that standeth against him. Of which thing there are some ex-ples seene at this day: but the full proufe thereof shalbe at the last gement, which may also properly be accompted the last act of his dome.

6 Concerning his Priesthood, thus it is briefly to be holden, that ende and vse of it is, that he shoulde be a Mediator pure from all me, that shoulde by his holinesse reconcile vs to God. But bycause iuste curse possesseth the entrie, and God according to his office of ge is bente against vs, it is necessarie that some expiation be vsed, t he being a priest may procure fauour for vs, to appease the wrath God. Wherefore, that Christ might fulfill this office, it behoued t he shoulde come forth with a sacrifice. For in the lawe it was not efull for the priest to entre into the sanctuarie without bloud, that faithfull might know, that though there were a priest become é for vs to make intercession, yet God coulde not be made fa-rable to vs before that our sinnes were purged. Vpō which point Apostle discourseth largely in the epistle to the Hebrues, from the enth chapiter almost to the ende of the tenth. But the summe of commeth to this effect, that the honour of priesthoode can be ap-d to none but to Christ, which by the sacrifice of his death hath ed away our giltinesse, & satisfied for our sinnes. But how weighty atter it is, we are enfourmed by that solemne othe of God, which spoken without repentance: Thou art a priest for euer, accor- Psa. 110 g to the ordre of Melchisedech. For without doubt his will was 4. establish that principall pointe, which he knewe to be the chiefe se wherevpon our saluation hanged. For, as it is said, there is no open for vs or for our prayers to God, vnlesse our filthinesse be purged, the priestes do sanctifie vs and obteine grace for vs, from ich the vncleanesse of our wicked doinges and sinnes doth de-e vs. So do we see, that we must beginne at the death of Christ, the efficacie and profite of his Priesthoode may come vnto vs.

Of this it followeth that he is an eternall interceſſor, by whoſe m diation we obteine fauour, whervpon againe ariſeth not only affi to pray, but alſo quietneſſe to godly conſciences, while they ſtay leane vpon the fatherly tenderneſſe of God, and are certainly perſ ded that it pleaſeth him whatſoeuer is dedicated to him by the M diator. But whereas in the time of the lawe, God commaunded ſac fices of beaſtes to be offered to him: there was an other and a new o dre in Chriſt, that one ſhould be both the ſacrificed hoſt, & y Pr becauſe there neither could be found any other meete ſatisfactio ſinnes, nor any was worthy ſo great honour to offer vp to God h onely begotten ſonne. Now Chriſt beareth the perſon of a prieſt onely by eternall meane of reconciliation to make the Father fa rable & mercifull vnto vs, but alſo to bring vs into the felowſhip o great an honour. For we that are defiled in our ſelues, yet being ma Dani. 9. 24. whereof mention is made in Daniell. For the compariſon of contr rietie is to be noted betweene this anointing, and that ſhadow anointing that then was in vſe: as if the Angell ſhould haue ſaid, th the ſhadowes being driuen away, there ſhould be a cleere prieſth in the perſon of Chriſt. And ſo much more deteſtable is their mac tion, which not contented with the ſacrifice of Chriſt, haue preſum to thruſt in them ſelues to kill him: which is daily enterpriſed amo the Papiſtes, where the Maſſe is reckened a ſacrificing of Chriſt.

But here it behoueth ...weye diligently, how ſaluation is purchaſed by him for vs: that we ...y not onely be perſwaded that he is the author of it, but alſo em- ...cing ſuch things as are ſufficient to the ſtedfaſt vpholdinge of our ...th, we may refuſe all ſuch thinges as might drawe vs away hether ...thether. For ſith no man can deſcende into him ſelfe, and earneſtly ...ſider what he is, but feeling God angry and bent againſt him, he ...th neede carefully to ſeeke a meane and way to appeaſe him, which ...maundeth ſatisfaction: there is no common aſſuredneſſe requi- ...d, becauſe the wrath and curſe of God lieth alwaie vpon ſinners, ...they be looſe from their giltineſſe: who, as he is a righteous iudge. ...ſereth not his lawe to be broken without puniſhment, but is rea- ...armed to reuenge it.

2 But before we goe any further, it is to be ſeene by the way, ...w it agreeth together, that God which preuented vs with his mer- ...e, was our enemie vntil he was reconciled to vs by Chriſt. For how, ...uld he haue geuen vs in his only begotten Sonne a ſingular pledge ...his loue, vnleſſe he had already before that embraced vs with his ...e fauour? Bycauſe therefore here ariſeth ſome ſeeming of con- ...rietie, I will firſt vndo this knot. The holy Ghoſt commonly ſpea- Rom. 5. ...th after this maner in the Scriptures, that God was enemie to men, 10. ...they were reſtored into fauour by the death of Chriſt: that they Gal. 3. ...re accurſed till their iniquitie was purged by his ſacrifice: that they 10. his body. Such maner of phrases are applied to our capacitie, that we may the better vnderstand how miserable and wretched our estate is being out of Christ. For if it were not spoken in expresse words that the wrath and vengeance of God, and euerlasting death did rest vpon vs, we woulde lesse acknowledge how miserable we shoulde be without Gods mercie, and woulde lesse regarde the benefit of deliverance. As for example. If a man heare this spoken to him: If God, in such time as thou wast yet a sinner, had hated thee, and cast thee away as thou hadst deserued, thou shouldest haue suffered horrible destruction: but because he hath willingly and of his owne free kindenesse kept thee in fauour, & not suffred thee to be estrāged frō him, he hath so deliuered thee from that perill: truely he will be moued with, and in some parte feele how much he oweth to the mercie of God. But if he heare on the other side that which the Scripture teacheth, that he was by sinne estraunged from God, the heir of wrath, subiect to the curse of eternall death, excluded from all hope of saluation, a stranger from all blessing of God, the bondeslaue of Satan, captiue vnder the yoke of sinne. Finally, ordeined vnto and already entangled with horrible destruction, that in this case Christ became an intercessor to entreat for him, that Christ toke vpon him and suffered the punishment which by the iust iudgement of God did hang ouer all sinners, that he hath purged with his blonde those euils that made them hatefull to God, that by this expiation is sufficient satisfaction and sacrifice made to God the father: that by this intercessor his wrath was appeased: that within this foundation resteth the peace betwene God and men: that vpon this bonde is conteined his good will towards them: shall not he be so much the more moued with these, as they are more liuely represented, out of how great miserie he hath been deliuered? In a summe: because our minde can neither desirously enough take holde of life in the mercy of God, nor receiue it with such thankfulnesse as we ought, but when it is before striken and throwne downe with the feare of the wrath of God and dreade of eternall death, we are so taught by holy Scripture, that without Christ we may see God in maner wrathfully bent against vs, and his hande armed to our destruction: and that we may embrace his goodwill and fatherly kindnesse no otherwhere, but in Christ.

3 And although this be spoken according to the weakenesse of our capacitie, yet is it not falsely saide. For God which is the highest righteousnesse, can not loue wickednesse which he seeth in vs all. Therefore we all haue in vs that, which is worthy of the hatred of God. Therefore in respect of our corrupted nature, and then of our adiudged vnto it, truely we are all in displeasure of God, guilty in his sight, and borne to damnation of hell. But because the Lord will not hate that which is his in vs, he findeth yet somewhat that he of his goodnesse may loue. For howsoeuer we be sinners by our owne fault, yet we remaine his creatures. Howsoeuer we haue purchaced death vnto ourselues, yet he made vs vnto life. So is he moued by meere and free louing of vs, to receiue vs into fauour. But sith there is a perpetuall and vnappeasable disagreement betweene righteousnesse and iniquitie, so long as we remaine sinners, he can not receiue vs wholy. Therefore, that taking away all matter of disagreement, he might reconcile vs vnto him, he doth by expiation set forth in the death of Christ, take away whatsoeuer euill is in vs, that we, which before were vncleane and vnpure, may now appeare righteous and holy in his sight. Therefore God the Father doth with his loue preuent and 1. Iohn. 4. 19.

goe before our reconciliation in Christ: yea, bycause he first loued vs, therefore he afterwarde doth reconcile vs vnto himselfe. But bycause, vntill Christ with his death come to succour vs, there remaineth wickednesse in vs, which deserueth Gods indignation, and is accursed and damned in his sight, therefore we are not fully and firmely ioyned with God, vntill Christ do ioyne vs. Therefore if we will assure our selues to haue God made well pleased and fauourable vnto vs, we must lift vp our eyes and mindes vpon Christ onely: as in deede we obteine life by him onely, that our sinnes be not imputed to vs, the imputing whereof, draweth with it the wrath of God.

4 And for this reason Paule saith, that the same loue, wherewith God had embraced vs before the creation of the worlde, was stayed and grounded vpon Christ. These thinges are plaine and agreable with the Scripture, and do make those places of Scripture to accorde very well together, where it is saide: that God declared his loue towarde vs in this, that he gaue his onely begotten sonne to death: and yet that he was our enemie till he was made fauourable againe to vs by the death of Christ. But that they may be more strongly proued to them that require the testament of the olde Church, I will allege one place of Augustine, where he teacheth the very same that we do. The loue of God (saith he) is incomprehensible and vnchangeable. For he began not to loue vs, since the time that we weare reconciled to him by the bloude of his sonne. But before the making of the worlde he loued vs, euen before that we weare any thing at all, that we might also be his children with his only begotten Sonne. Therefore wheras we are reconciled by the death of Christ, it is not so to be taken as though the Sonne did therefore reconcile vs vnto him, that he might nowe beginne to loue vs whome he hated before: but we are reconciled to him that already loued vs, to whome we were enemies by reason of sinne. And whether this be true or no that I say, let the Apostle beare witnesse. He doth commende (saith he) his loue towards vs, because when we were yet sinners, Christ died for vs. He therefore had a loue to vs, euen thē when we were enemies to him & wrought wickednesse. Therfore after a maruellous and diuine maner he loued vs, euen then when he hated vs. For he hated vs in that we were such as he had not made vs, and because our wickednesse had on euery side wasted away his worke, he knew how in euery one of vs, both to hate that which we our selues had made, and to loue that which he had made. These be the wordes of Augustine.

Rom. 5. 8.

5 Nowe where it is demaunded, howe Christ hath done away our sinnes, and taken away the strife betwene vs and God, and purchased such righteousnes as might make him fauourable and well willing towarde vs: it may be generally answered, that he hath brought it to passe by the whole course of his obedience. Which is proued by ỹ testimony of Paul. As by one mans offense many were made sinners, so by one mās obediēce we are made righteous. And in an other place he extendeth thē cause of the pardō that deliuereth vs from the curse of the lawe, to the whole life of Christ, saying: When the fulnesse of time was come, God sente his sonne made of a woman, subiect to the lawe, to redeeme them that were vnder the lawe: And so affirming that in his very baptisme was fulfilled one parte of righteousnes, that he obediently did the commaundement of his father. Finally, from the time that he toke vpon him the person of a seruaunt, he began to paye the raunsome to redeeme vs. But the Scripture to set out the maner of our saluation more certainely, doth ascribe this as peculiar and proprely belonging to the death of Christ. He himselfe pronounced that he gaue his life to be a redemption for many. Paule teacheth that he died for our sinnes. Iohn the Baptist cried out that Christ came to take away the sinnes of the worlde, bycause he was the Lambe of God. In an other place Paule saith, that we are iustified freely by the redemption that is in Christ, bycause he is set forth a reconciler in his owne bloude. Againe, that we are iustified in his bloude, and reconciled by his death. Againe. He that knewe no sinne, was made sinne for vs, that we might be the righteousnes of God in him. I will not recite all the testimonies, because the number woulde be infinite, and many of them must be hereafter alleaged in their order. Therefore in the summe of beleefe, which they call the Apostles creede, it is very ordrely passed immediatly from the holy from the beginning to the ende in saying, that he abaced him lfe, taking vpon him the forme of a seruant, and was obedient to his ne death his willing submissiō hath the first degree, because the sa-fice, vnlesse it had bene willingly offred, had nothing profited to-rde righteousnesse. Therefore, where the Lorde testified, that he Ioh.10.

s way tried. And this was no slender shew of his incomparable e towarde vs, to wrastle with horrible feare, and in the middest of se cruell tormentes, to cast away all care of himselfe, that he might ude for vs. And this is to be beleued, that there could no sacrifice wel offered to God any otherwise, but by this that Christ forsaking his owne affection, did submitte and wholy yelde him selfe to his hers will. For proofe whereof, the Apostle doth fitly allege that te- Heb.10 nsed therefore for good cause we are directed thither, and in the th of Christ is appointed for vs the matter of life. Nowe forasmuch as by our owne giltinesse, curse was due vnto vs, before the ueuly iudgement seate of God, therefore first of all is recited how was condemned before Ponce Pilate president of Iurie: that we lde know that the punishment whereunto we were subiect, was tly laide vpon vs. We coulde not escape the dreadfull iudgement God: Christ, to deliuer vs from it, suffred himselfe to be condem-before a mortall man, yea a wicked & heathen man. For the name e president is expressed not onely to procure credit to the histobut that we shoulde learne that which Esaie teacheth, that that Esa. 53. sement of our peace was vpon him, and that by his stripes we 9. e healed. For to take away our damnation, euery kinde of death sufficed not for him to suffer, but to satisfie our redemption, one speciall kinde of death was to be chosen, wherein both drawing away our damnation to him selfe, and taking our giltinesse vpon himself, he might deliuer vs from them both. If he had bene murthered by theues, or had bene rashly slaine in a commotion of the common people: in such a death there shoulde haue bene no apparance of satisfaction. But when he was brought to be arrained before the iudgment seate, when he was accused and pressed with witnesses against him, and was by the mouth of the iudge condemned to die: by these tokens we vnderstand, that he did beare the person of a guilty man and of an euill doer. And here are two thinges to be noted, which both were afore spoken by the prophecies of the Prophetes, and bring a singular comfort and confirmation of faith. For when we heare that Christ was sent from the iudges seate to death, and was hanged among theues, we haue the fulfilling of that prophecie which is alledged by the Euangelist. He was accompted among the wicked.

Esa. 53. 12. And why so? euen to take vpon him the stede of a sinner, not of a man righteous or innocent, bycause he suffred death not for cause Mar. 15. 28. of innocencie, but for sinne. On the other side when we heare that he was acquited by the same mouth whereby he was condemned, for Pilate was compelled openly more than ones to beare witnesse of his innocencie: let that come in our minde which is in the other Pro-Psa. 69. 5. phet: that he repayed that which he had not taken away. And so we shall beholde the person of a sinner and euill doer represented in Christ: and by the open apparance of his innocencie it shall become plaine to see, that he was charged rather with others offence than his owne. He suffred therefore vnder Ponce Pilate, and so by the solemne Ioh. 18. 38. sentence of the President, was reckened in the number of wicked doers: but yet not so, but that he was by the same iudge at the same time pronounced righteous, when he affirmed that he found no cause of condemnation in him. This is our acquital, that the giltines which made vs subiect to punishment, is remoued vpon the head of the sonne of God. For this setting of the one against the other, we ought principally to holde fast, least we tremble and be carefull all our life long, as though the iuste vengeance of God did hang ouer vs, which the sonne of God hath taken vpon himselfe.

6 Byside that, the very maner of his death is not without a singular mysterie. The Crosse was accursed, not onely by opinion of men, but also by decree of the lawe of God. Therefore when Christ was lifted vp to the Crosse, he made himselfe subiect to the curse. And so it behoued to be done, that when the curse was remoued from him, we might be deliuered from all curſe that for our ſinnes was epared for vs, or rather did already reſt vpon vs. Which thing as alſo by ſhadowe expreſſed in the lawe. For the ſacrifices and ſa-ſfactorie oblations that were offred for ſinnes, were called Aſheoth: Which worde proprely ſignifieth ſinne it ſelfe. By which firatiue chaunge of name, the holy Ghoſt ment to ſhewe, that they ere like vnto cleanſing playſters to drawe out to them ſelues, and are the curſe due to ſinnes. But that ſame which was figuratiuely reſented in the ſacrifices of Moſes, is in deede deliuered in Chriſt e originall paterne of all the figures. Wherefore he, to performe erfect expiation, gaue his owne ſoule to be an aſham, that is a Eſa. 53.

r the father deſtroyed the force of ſinne, when the curſe thereof as remoued and layed vpon the fleſh of Chriſt. It is therefore deued by this ſaying, that Chriſt was in his death offred vp to his fa-er for a ſatisfactorie ſacrifice, that the whole ſatisfaction for ſinne ing ended by his ſacrifice, we might ceſſe to dread the wrath of od. Nowe is it plaine, what that ſaying of the Prophet meaneth, Eſa. 53.

f this, the croſſe whereunto he was faſtened was a token, as the oſtle teſtifieth. Chriſt (ſaith he) redeemed vs from the curſe of Gala. 3.

inely learne that the burden wherewith we were oppreſſed was d vpon him. And yet it is not ſo to be vnderſtanded, that he toke on him ſuch a curſe, wherewith himſelfe was ouerloden, but rar that in taking it vpon him, he did treade downe, breake and dey the whole force of it. And ſo faith conceiueth acquitall in the condemnation of Christ, and blessing in his being accursed. Wherefore Paule doth not without a cause honorably reporte the triumph that Christ obteined to him selfe on the crosse, as if the crosse which was full of shame, had bene turned into a Chariot of triumph. For Col. 2. 15. he saith, that the hande writing which was against vs, was fastened to the crosse, and the Princely powers were spoyled and led openly.

Heb. 9. 27. And no maruell: bycause (as the other Apostle testifieth) Christ offred vp himselfe by the eternall spirite. And therevpon procee-deth that turning of the nature of thinges. But that these thinges may take steadfast roote, and be throughly settled in our heartes, let us alway thinke vpon his sacrifice and washing. For we coulde not cer-tainely beleue that Christ was the raunsome, redemption, and satisfaction, vnlesse he had bene a sacrificed hoste. And therefore there is so often mention made of bloud, where the Scripture shewethe maner of our redeming. Albeit the bloude of Christ that was shed, serued not onely for sacrifice, but also in steede of washing, to cleanse away our filthinesse.

7 It followeth in the Crede, that he was dead and buried. Whereagaine it is to be seene, howe he did euery where put him selfe in our stede, to paie the price of our redemption. Death held vs bounde vnder his yoke, Christ in our stede did yelde him selfe into the power Heb. 2. 9. of death, to deliuer vs from it. This the Apostle meaneth where he writeth, that he tasted of death for all men. For he by dying brought to passe that we shoulde not die, or (which is all one) by his death he did redeme life for vs. But in this he differed from vs, that he gaue him selfe to death as it were to be deuoured, not that he shoulde be swallowed vp with the gulfes of it, but rather that he shoulde swal-lowe vp it, of which we shoulde haue bene presently swallowed vp: he gaue himselfe to death to be subdued, not that he shoulde be oppressed with the power thereof, but rather that he shoulde ouer-throw death which approched nere vs, yea and had already beaten Heb. 2. 14. vs downe and triumphed vpon vs. Finally, that by death he might destroy him that had the power of death, that is the Deuil: and might deliuer them that by feare of death were all their life long subiect to bondage. This is the first fruite that his death did bring vs. An other is, that by enterpartening of him selfe with vs, he mortifieth our earthly membres, that they shoulde no more bring after vse their owne workes: and killeth our olde manne, that he shoulde no more liue and beare frute. And to the same purpose per-teineth his buriall, that we being partakers thereof, shoulde also be Gal. 2. buried to sinne. For when the Apostle teacheth that we are gra-no the likeneſſe of the death of Chriſt, and buried with him to the death of ſinne, that by his croſſe the worlde was crucified to vs, and we to the worlde, that we are dead together with him, he doth not onely exhorte vs to expreſſe the example of Chriſtes death, but declareth that there is ſuch effectualneſſe in it, as ought to appere in all Chriſtians, vnleſſe they will make his death vnprofitable and fruteleſſe. Therefore in the death and buriall of Chriſt, there is offred vs a double benefit to be enioyed, that is deliuerance from death, wherevnto we were become bonde, and the mortifying of our fleſh. 19. and 9.14. Col.3.3

8 But it is not meete to ouerpaſſe his going downe to the helles, wherein is no ſmall importaunce to the effect of redemption. For although it appeareth by the writinges of the olde fathers, that that parte which is read in the Crede was not in olde time ſo much vſed in the Churches: yet in entreating of the ſumme of our doctrine, it is neceſſarie that it haue a place allowed it, as a thing that containeth a very profitable and not to be deſpiſed myſtery of a right weighty matter. And there are alſo ſome of the olde writers that do not leaue it out. Whereby we may geſſe, that it was after a certaine time added, and did not preſently but by litle and litle growe in vſe in the Churches. But this certainely is out of queſtion, that it proceded of the common iudgement of all the godly: For as much as there is none of the Fathers that doth not, in his writinges make mention of Chriſtes going downe to the helles, although after diuerſe maner of expoſition. But by whome, or at what time it was firſt added, maketh litle to the purpoſe. But rather in the Creede that is to be taken heede vnto, that we therein certainely haue a full and in all pointes perfect ſumme of our faith, whereinto nothing may be thruſt, but that which is taken out of the moſt pure worde of God. Nowe if any will not for preciſe curioſitie admit it into the Crede, yet ſhall it ſtreight way be made to appere plainely, that it is of ſo great importance to the ſumme of our redemption, that if it be left out, there is loſt a great parte of the fruit of the death of Chriſt. There are againe ſome that thinke, that there is no newe thing ſpoken in this article, but that in other wordes the ſame thing is repeted which was ſpoken before of his buriall: for aſmuch as the worde Infernus, hell, is in the Scripture oftentimes vſed for the graue. I graunt that to be true which they allege of the ſignification of the worde, that Hell is oftentimes taken for the graue: but there are againſt their opinion two reaſons, by which I am eaſily perſwaded to diſſent from them. For what an idleneſſe were it, when a thing not harde to vnderstand, hath ones bene set out in plaine and easy wordes, afterwarde with darker implication of wordes, rather to pointe towarde it than to declare it. For when two maners of speking that expresse one thing be ioyned together, it behoueth that the later be an exposition of the former. But what an exposition were this, if a man shoulde say thus: Whereas it is saide that Christ was buried, thereby is meante that he went downe to hell? Againe, it is not likely that such a superfluous vaine repetition coulde haue crept into this abridgement, wherein the chiefe pointes of our faith be summarily noted in as fewe wordes as was possible. And I doubte not that so many as shall haue somewhat diligently weyed the matter selfe, will easily agree with me.

9 Some expounde it otherwise, and say, that Christ went downe to the soules of the fathers that died in the time of the law, to carie them tidinges, that the redemption was performed, and to deliuer them out of the prison wherein they were kept enclosed: and to the profe herof they do wrongfully draw testimonies out of the Psalme, that he brake the brasen gates and yron barres. Againe out of Zacharie, that he redemed them that were bounde, out of the pit wherein was no water. But whereas the Psalme speaketh of their deliuerances that in farre countries are caste captiue into bondes, and Zacharie compareth the Babylonicall ouerthrow, wherein the people was oppressed, to a drie pit or bottomlesse deapth, and therewithall teacheth that the saluation of the whole Church is as it were a comming out of the deepe helles. I wote not howe it is come to passe, that they which came after, thought that there was a certaine place vnder the earth whereunto they haue fained the name of Limbus. But this fable, although they were great authours, and at this day many do earnestly defende it for a truth: is yet nothing els but a fable. For, to enclose the soule of dead men as in a prison, is very childish. And what neede was it that Christes soule shoulde go downe thether to set them at liberte? I do in deede willingly confesse, that Christ shined to the by the power of his spirit, that they might know that the grace which they had onely tasted of by hope, was then deliuered to the worlde. And to this purpose may the place of Peter be probably applied, where he sayeth, that Christ came and preached to the spirites that were in a dongeon or prison, as it is comonly translated. For the very processe of the text leadeth vs to this, that y faithfull which were dead before that time, were partakers of y same grace that we were: because he doth therby amplifie the force of Christs death, for that it pearced euen to the dead, when the godly soules enioyed the e preſent ſight of that viſication which they had carefully looked con the other ſide it did more plainly appere to the reprobate that y were excluded from all ſaluation. But wheras Peter in his ſaying reth no diſtinction betwene them, that is not ſo to be taken, as ough he mingeled together the godly and vngodly without diffe- nce: but only he meant to teach that generally they both had one mmon feling of the death of Chriſt.

o but concerning Chriſts goinge downe to the hels, beſide the ſideration of the Crede, we muſt ſeeke for a more certaine expo- ſition, and we aſſuredly haue ſuch a one out of the word of God, as is t only holy & godly, but alſo full of ſingular comfort. Chriſts death d bin to no effect, if he had ſuffered onely a corporall death: but it houed alſo that he ſhould feele the rigour of Gods vengeãce: that might both appeaſe his wrath and ſatiſfie his iuſt iudgement. For ich cauſe alſo it behoued that he ſhoulde as it were hand to hand alle with the armies of the hels & the horrour of eternall death. We haue euen now alleaged out of ỹ Prophet that the chaſtiſement Eſa. 53. 5. our peace was layd vpon him: that he was ſtriken of his father for r ſinnes, and broaſed for our infirmities. Whereby is meant, that was put in the ſteede of wicked doers, as ſurety & pledge, yea and the very guiltie perſon himſelfe, to abide & ſuffer all the puniſhments ſhould haue bin layd vpon them: this one thing excepted, that could not be holden ſtill of the ſorrowes of death. Therefore it is Act. 2. 24. marueil if it be ſaid that he went downe to the hels, ſith he ſuffe- d that death wherewith God in his wrath ſtriketh wicked doers. d their exception is very fond, yea and to be ſcorned, which ſay, t by this expoſition the order is peruerted, becauſe it were an ab- rdity to ſet that after his buriall which went before it. For after the ing forth of thoſe thinges that Chriſt ſuffered in the ſight of men, very good order followeth that inuiſible and incomprehenſible ngeance which he ſuffered in the ſight of God: that we ſhoulde ow that not only the body of Chriſt was giuen to be the price of r redemption, but that there was an other greater and more excel- t price payed in this, that in his ſoule he ſuffred the terrible tor- ents of a damned and forſaken man.

According to this meaninge doth Peter ſay, that Chriſt roſe a- ne hauing looſed ỹ ſorrowes of death, of which it was impoſſible Act. 2. 24. he ſhould be holden, or ouercome. He doth not name it ſimply t whereby he expreſſeth that the ſonne of God was wrapped in the rrowes of death, which proceede from the curſe & wrath of God. ch is the originall of death. For how ſmale a matter had it bin, careleſſely and as it were, in ſporte to come foorth to ſuffer death.

But this was a true prouſe of his infinite mercy, not to ſhun death which he ſo ſore trembled at. And it is no dout that the ſame is the He. 5. 7. Apoſtles meaning to teach, in the Epiſtle to the Hebrues, where he wryteth: that Chriſt was heard of his owne Feare: ſome tranſlate it Reuerence or piety, but how vnfitly, both the matter it ſelfe and the very manner of ſpeakinge proueth. Chriſt therefore prayinge with teares and mighty crie, is heard of his owne feare: not to be ſaued from death, but not to be ſwallowed vp of death as a ſinner: becauſe in that place he had but our perſon vpon him. And truely there can be imagined no more dreadfull bottomleſſe depth, than for a man to fele himſelfe forſaken and eſtraunged from God, and not to be heard when he calleth vpon him, euen as if God himſelfe had conſpired to his deſtruction. Euen thither we ſee that Chriſt was throwen downe, ſo farre that by enforcemēt of diſtreſſe he was compelled to crie out Pſal. 22. 2. Mat. 27 46. My God, My God, why haſt thou forſaken me? For whereas ſome would haue it taken, that he ſo ſpake rather according to the opinion of other, thā as he felt in himſelfe: ỹ is in no caſe probable, ſo much as it is euident, that this ſaying proceeded out of the very anguiſh of the bottome of his heart. Yet do we not meane thereby, that God was at any time his enemy or angry with him. For how could he be angry Vide Cyrill. lib. 2. de rect. offide ad Regin. Li. 4. de Trin. Li. 2. & Lib. 3. with his beloued ſonne, vpon whom his minde reſted? Or how could Chriſt by his interceſſiō appeaſe his fathers wrath toward other, by minge him hatefully bent againſt himſelfe? But this is our meaning, that he ſuffered the greeuouſneſſe of Gods rigour, for that he being ſtriken and tormented with the hande of God, did fele all the tokens of God when he is angry and puniſheth. Wherupon Hylary argueth thus, that by this goinge downe we haue obtained this, that death is ſlayne. And in other places he agreeth with our iudgement, as when he ſayth. The croſſe, death, and hels are our life. Againe in an other place. The ſonne of God is in the hels, but man is caried vp to heauen. But why do I alleage the teſtimony of a priuate man, when the Apoſtle affirmeth the ſame, rehearſing this for a proufe of his ſtory, that they were deliuered which were by feare of death all their life long ſubiect to bondage? It behoued therfore, that he ſhould come that feare, that naturally doth continually torment and oppreſſe all mortall men: which coulde not be done but by fighting with it.
Moreouer, that his feare was no common feare or conceiued vpon a ſclender cauſe, ſhall by and by more plainely appeare. So by fighting hande to hande with the power of the Deuill, with the horrour of death, with the payns of the hels it came to paſſe, that he both had victory of them, and triumphed ouer them, that we now in death oulde no more feare thoſe thinges, which our Prince hath ſwal-wed vp.

Here ſome leud men, although vnlearned, yet rather moued by alice than by ignoraunce, crie out that I do a hainous wronge to hriſt, becauſe it was againſt conueniency of reaſon, that he ſhoulde e fearefull for the ſaluation of his ſoule. And then they more hardly force this cauillation with ſayinge, that I aſcribe to the ſonne of od deſperation, which is cõtrary to faith. Firſt they do but malicily moue controuerſie of Chriſts feare and tremblinge, which the angeliſtes do ſo plainely reporte. For a litle before that the time of is death approched, he was troubled in ſpirite and paſſioneth with eauineſſe, and at his very meeting with it, he began more vehemẽt-y to tremble for feare. If they ſay that he did but counterfait, that is o foule a ſhift. We muſt therfore as Ambroſe truly teacheth, bold-y confeſſe the ſorowfulneſſe of Chriſt, vnleſſe we be aſhamed of his roſſe. And truely if his ſoule had not bin partaker of payne, he had n only a redeemer for bodies. But it behoued that he ſhould wra-le, to raiſe vp them that lay throwen downe. And his heauenly yneth theſe two thinges together, that Chriſt was in all thinges mpted as we are, and yet that he was without ſinne. Therefore re is no cauſe that the weakenes of Chriſt ſhould make vs afrayd, herunto he was not by violence or neceſſitye compelled, but by eere loue of vs and by mercy was led to ſubmit himſelfe. And what euer he of his owne will ſuffered for vs, diminiſheth nothinge of his ower. But in this one poynte are theſe backebiters deceiued, that y do not perceiue in Chriſt an infirmity cleane and free from all ult and ſpot, becauſe he kept himſelfe within the boundes of obeience. For whereas there can be found no moderation in our corrupt ature, where all our affectiõ do with troubleſome violence excede ll meaſure, they do wrong to meaſure ỹ forme of God by that ſtan-rd. But when man was in his vncorrupted ſtate, then there was a

Whereby, it might well be that he was like vnto vs in sorrow, grief and fearefulnes, and yet that by this marke he differed from vs. Being so confuted, they leape to an other cauillation, that though Christ feared death, yet he feared not the curse and wrath of God frō which he knew himselfe to be safe. But let the godly readers weye how dishonorable this is for Christ, that he was more tender and more fearefull than the most part of the very rascall sort of men. Theues and other euill doers do obstinatly hast to death, many do with haute courage despise it: some other do mildly suffer it. But what constancy or stout courage were it, for the sonne of God to be astonished and in a maner striken dead with feare of it? For euen that w̄ among the common sorte might be accompted miraculous, is reported of him, that for vehemency of griefe, very droppes of bloud did fall from his face. Neither did he this to make a shew to the eyes of other, but whē in a secret corner whither he was gone out of company, he groned vnto his father. And this putteth it out of all dout, that it was nedefull that he should haue Angels to come downe from heaven to relieue him with an vnwonted maner of comforting. How shamefull a tenderness as I sayd, should this haue bin, to be so farre tormented for feare of common death, as to melt in bloudy sweate, and not to be able to be Mat. 26. 39. comforted but by sight of Angels? What? doth not that praier thrise repeated, (Father, if it be possible, let this cuppe depart from me) proceeding from an incredible bitternesse of heart, shew that Christ had a more cruell and harder battell than with common death? Wherein appeareth that those triflers against whom I now dispute, do babble vpon things that they know not, because they neuer earnestly considered what it is, or of how great importance it is that we be redeemed from the iudgement of God. But this is our wisdom, well to vnderstande howe deere our saluation did cost the sonne of God. Now if a man should aske me, if Christ went then downe to hel, when he prayed to escape that death: I answere, that thē was the beginning of it: whereby may be gathered, how grieuous and terrible torments he suffered, when he knew himselfe to stande to be arained for our cause before the iudgement seate of God. But although for a moment of time, the diuine power of the spirite did hide it selfe, to giue place to the weakenesse of the flesh: yet must we know, that the tentation by feeling of sorrow and feare was such as was not against faith. And Act. 2. 24. so was that fulfilled which is in the Sermon of Peter, that he could not be holden of the sorrowes of death, because whē he felt himself as it were forsaken of God, yet he did nothing at all swarue from the will of his goodnesse. Which is proued by that his notable calling yon God, when for extremity of peine he cried out, My God, my God, why haſt thou forſaken me? For though he was aboue meaſure preſſed, yet he ceſſeth not to cal him his God, of whom he crieth out that he was forſaken. Moreouer hereby is confuted as well the error of Apollinaris, as theirs that were called Monothelites. Apollinaris fained that Chriſt had an eternall ſpirite in ſteade of a ſoule, ſo that he was onely but halfe a man. As though he could cleanſe our ſinnes any other way, but by obeying his father. But where is the affection or will of obedience but in the ſoule? which ſoule of his we knowe was troubled for this purpoſe to driue away feare, and bringe peace and quietneſſe to our ſoule. Againe, for confuſion of the Monothelites, we ſee how now he willed not that thing according to his nature of manhoode, which he willed according to his nature of godhead. I omit to ſpeake how he did ſubdue the aforeſaid feare with a contrary affection. For herein is a plaine ſhew of contrariety. Father deliuer me from this hour. But euen herefore I came euen into this hour. Father glorifie thy name. In which perplexity yet was there no ſuch outrage in him as is ſeene in vs, euen then when we moſt of all endeuour to ſubdue our ſelues.

Mat. 27 47.

Ioh. 12. 27.

13 Now followeth his reſurrection from the dead, without which all that we haue hitherto, were but vnperfect. For ſith there appeareth in the croſſe, death, & buriall of Chriſt nothing but weakeneſſe: faith muſt paſſe beyond all thoſe things, that it may be furniſhed with full ſtrength. Therefore although we haue in his death a full accompliſhment of ſaluation, becauſe by it both we are reconciled to God, and his iuſt iudgement is ſatisfied, & the curſe taken away, and the penalty fully payed: yet we are ſayd to be regenerate into a liuinge hope, not by his death, but by his riſinge againe. For as he in riſinge againe ſet vp the vanquiſher of death, ſo the victory of our faith conſiſteth in the very reſurrection: but how this is, is better expreſſed in y words of Paule. For he ſayth, that Chriſt died for our ſinnes, and was raiſed vp againe for our iuſtification: as if he ſhould haue ſayd: that by his death ſinne was taken away, and by his riſing againe righteouſnes was reſtored and reſtored. For how coulde he by dyinge deliuer vs from death if he himſelfe hadde lyen ſtill ouercome by death? How coulde he haue gotten victory for vs, if himſelfe hadde bin vanquiſhed in deede? wherefore we do ſo parte the matter of our ſaluation betwene the death and reſurrection of Chriſt, that by his death we ſay ſinne is taken away and death deſtroied, and by his reſurrection righteouſneſſe was repaired, and life raiſed vp againe: but ſo that by meane of his reſurrection, his death doth ſhew foorth her force and effect vnto vs. Therefore Paule affirmeth, that in his very reſurrection he was declared the ſonne of God, becauſe then at laſt he vttered his heauenly power, which is both a cleare glaſſe of his godheade, and a ſtedfaſt ſtay of our faith. As alſo in an other place he teacheth, that

1.Pet. 1. 21. ter: that God raiſed him vp from the deade and gaue him glory, that our faith and hope might be in God: not that our faith being vpholden by his death ſhould wauer, but that the power of God which hopeth vs vnder faith, doth principally ſhew it ſelfe in the reſurrection. Therfore let vs remember, that ſo oft as mention is made of his death onely, there is alſo comprehended that which properly belongeth to his reſurrection: and like figure of comprehenſion is there in the word Reſurrectiō, as oft as it is vſed ſeuerally without ſpeaking of his death, ſo that it draweth with it that which peculiarly pertayneth to his death. But foraſmuch as by riſing againe he obtained the crowne of conqueſt, ſo that there ſhould be both reſurrection and life: there-1.Cor. 15.17. fore Paule doth for good cauſe affirme that faith is deſtroyed, and the Goſpell is become vaine & deceitful, if the reſurrection of Chriſt be not faſtened in our heartes. Therefore in an other place, after he had gloried in the death of Chriſt agaynſt all the terrours of dam-

Furthermore as we haue before declared, that vpon the partakinge of his croſſe hangeth the mortification of our fleſh: is it to be vnderſtanded, that by his reſurrection we obtaine an other commodity which aunſwereth that mortification. For (ſayth the Apoſtle) we are therefore graffed into the likeneſſe of his death, that

Col. 3. 1. with Chriſt, he gathereth therupon that we ought to ſeeke for thoſe thinges that are aboue, and not thoſe that are vpon the earth. By which wordes we are not onely exhorted to be raiſed vp after the example of Chriſt, to folow a newneſſe of life. But we are taught that it is wrought by his power that we are regenerate into righteouſnes. We obtaine alſo a third frute of his reſurrection, that we are, as by an meſt deliuered vs, aſſured of our owne reſurrection, of which we owe that his reſurrection is a moſt certaine argument. Whereof diſputeth more at large in the fifteene chapter of his firſt Epiſtle the Corinthians. But by the way this is to be noted, that it is ſayd, at he roſe againe from the dead: in which ſayinge is expreſſed the eth both of his death and of his reſurrection: as if it had bin ſayd, at he did both dye the ſame death that other menne naturally do , and receiued immortality in the ſame fleſh which he had put on ortall.

4 To his reſurrection is not vnfitly adioyned his aſcending into auen. For although Chriſt beganne more fully to ſet forth his glo-and power by riſinge againe, for that he had now layd away that more to be deſired, becauſe they were thē taught by more aſſured perience, that the authoritie which he enioyeth, and the power ich he vſeth, is ſufficient for the faithfull, not onely to make them e bleſſedly, but alſo to die happily. And truely we ſee howe much eater abundance of his ſpirite he then poured out, how much more ally he then aduaunced his kingdome, howe much greater power then ſhewed, both in helpinge his, and in ouerthrowinge his enees. Being therfore taken vp into heauen, he toke away the preſence his body out of our ſight: not to ceſſe to be preſent with the faith-l that yet wandred in the earth, but with more preſent power to gone both heauen and earth. But rather the ſame that he had promid, that he would be with vs to the end of the worlde, he performed this his aſcendinge, by which as his bodie was lifted vppe aboue heauens, ſo his power and effectuall workinge was poured and is, that all creatures both heauenly and earthly may with admir ke vpon his maiestie, be gouerned with his hande, beholde his countenance, and be subiect to his power. And the Apostles meane Heb. 1. 7 nothing els, when they so oft rehearse it, but to teach, that all thinges are left to his will. Therefore they thinke not rightly, which thinke that blessednesse is onely meant by it. And it forceth not, that in the Act. 7. 56.

Actes, Stephen testifieth that he saw him stãding, because we speake not heere of the gesture of his body, but of the maiesty of his dominion: so that to Sit is nothing else, but to be chiefe iudge in the heauenly iudgement seate.

16 Hereupon doth fayth gather manifolde frute: For it learneth, that the Lord by his ascending into heauen, hath opened the entrie of the heauenly kingdom, which before had bin stopped vp by Adã. For when he entred into it in our flesh as in our name, thereupon followeth that which the Apostle sayth, that we do already in him after Eph. 2. 6 a certaine manner sit in heauen. For that we do not with bare hope looke for heauen, but already in our heade we possesse it. Moreouer fayth perceiueth that he sitteth with his father to our great benefite. For he is entred into a sanctuary not made with hands, and there ap- Heb. 7. 25 & 9. 11.

his throne, filling it with grace & mercifulnes, which otherwise would be vnto him full of horrour to wretched sinners. Thirdly, faith conceiueth his power, wherein consisteth our strength, might, welth, & glorie against the hels. For ascending into heauẽ he led captiuity cap- Ephe. 4. 6.
tiue, & spoiling his enemies he enriched his people, and daily filleth them with heapes of spirituall richesse. He sitteth therefore on hie, that from thense pourynge out his power vnto vs, he may quicken vs to a spirituall life, sanctifie with his spirit, and garnish his church with the diuerse giftes of his grace, preserue it safe against all hurtes by his protectiõ, restraine with the strength of his hand the raging enemies of his crosse and of our saluation: finally, hold all power both in hea- Psal. 110. 1. uen and in earth, till he haue ouerthrowen all his enemies which are also our enemies, & made perfect the building vp of his Church. And this is the true state of his kingdome: this is the power that his father hath giuen him, till he make an end of the last act, when he commeth to iudge the quicke and the dead.

17 Christ doth in dede here shew to thẽ that be his, plaine proues of his power present among them: but because vnder the basenes of flesh his kingdom doth in a manner lie hidden in earth, therefore for good cause is faith called to thinke vpon that visible presence, which a gard of Angels. From thense therefore we are bidden to looke for him to come our redemer at that day, whē he shal seuere the Lambes from the Goates, the chosen from the forsaken: & there shalbe none of all either the quicke or the dead, that shall escape his iudgement.

this place expound the wordes of the quicke and the dead otherwise: and we see that some of the olde wryters did sticke in doute vpon the construction of this article. But as the aforesayd meaning is plaine & easie to perceiue: so doth it better agree with the Crede w is cōtained that it was wrytten according to the capacity of the common people.
Heb. 9. 17. And herewith nothing disagreeth that which the Apostle affirmeth, that it is appointed to all men once to die. For although they which shall remaine in mortall life at the last iudgement shall not die after naturall manner and order: yet that change which they shal suffer, because it shalbe like a death, is not vnproperly called death. It is 1. Cor. 15. 51. deede certaine, that not all shall slepe, but all shalbe chaunged. What meaneth that? In one moment their mortall life shall perish and be swallowed vp and be vtterly transformed into a newe nature. The perishinge of the flesh no man can deny to be a death: and yet in the meane time it remaineth true, that the quicke & the dead shalbe immoned to the iudgement: becaus the dead that are in Christ shal

Act. 10. 42 likely that this article was taken out of the sermon of Peter, which
2. Tim. 4 1. Luke reciteth, and out of the solemne protestation of Paule to Timothe.

18 Hereupon ariseth a singular comfort, when we heare that he iudge, which hath alredy appointed vs parteners with him in iudgso far is it of, that he will go vp into the iudgement seate to condem vs. For how shoulde the most mercifull prince destroy his owne people? how should the head scatter abroade his owne members? how Rom. 5. 33. shoulde the patrone condemne his owne clientes? For if the Apostle dare crie out, that while Christ is intercessour for vs, there can no ome forth that can condemne vs: it is much more true, that Christ himselfe beinge our intercessour, will not condemne them whom he hath receiued into his charge and tuition. It is truely no small assu-rednes, that we shalbe brought before no other iudgement seate, but of our owne redeemer, from whom our saluation is to be looked for: moreouer that he which now by the Gospel promiseth eternall bles-sednesse, shall then by sittinge in iudgement performe his promise.

Therefore to this end the father hath honored the sonne, in giuinge Ioh. 5.

them that be his, trembling for feare of the iudgemēt. Hither to I haue followed the order of the Apostles Crede, because whereas it shortly in fewe wordes contayneth the chiefe articles of our redemption, it may serue vs for a table, wherein we do distinctly and seuerally see those thinges that are in Christ worthy to be taken heede vnto. I call it the Apostles Creede, not carefully regarding who were the author of it. It is truely by great consent of the olde wryters ascribed to the Apostles, either because they thought that it was by common tradicion wrytten and set out by the Apostles; or for that they iudged that this abridgement being faithfully gathered out of the doctrine, deliuered by the handes of the Apostles, was worthy to be confirmed with such a title. And I take it for no dout, that whense so euer it proceded at the first, it hath euen from the first beginning of the church, and from the very time of the Apostles, be vsed as a publike confession, and receiued by consent of all men. And it is likely that it was not priuately wrytten by any one man, forasmuch as it is euident that euen from the farthest age it hath alway continued of sacred authority and credit amonge all the godly. But that thinge which is onely to be cared for, we haue wholly out of controuersie, that the whole history of our faith is shortly and wel in distinct order rehearsed in it, and that there is nothinge contayned in it that is not sealed with manifest testimonies of the Scripture. Which beinge vnderstanded, it is no purpose either curiously to dout, or to striue with any manne; who were the auctor of it vnlesse perhappe it be not enough for some man to be assured of the truth of the holy Ghost, but if he do also vnderstand either by whose mouth it was spoken, or by whose hand it was wrytten.

But forasmuch as we do see, that the whole summe of our sal-uation, and all the partes thereof, are comprehended in Christ, we Act. 4. must beware, that we do not draw away from him any parte thereof 12. be it neuer so litle. If we seeke for saluation, we are taught by the very

Ga. 5. 13 to sorrow with vs: if we seeke for redemption, it is in his passion: if we seeke for absolution, it is in his condemnation: if we seeke for remission of the curse, it is in his crosse: if we seeke for satisfaction, it is in his sacrifice: if we seeke for cleansing, it is in his bloude: if we seeke for reconciliation, it is in his going downe to the hels: if we seeke for mortification of the flesh, it is in his buriall: if we seeke for newnesse of life, it is in his resurrection: if we seeke for immortality, it is in the same: if we seeke for the inheritance of the kingdom of heauen, it is in his entrance into heauen: if we seeke for defense, for assurednesse, for plenty and store of all good thinges, it is in his kingdome: if we seeke for a dredlesse looking for the iudgement, it is in the power given vnto him to iudge. Finally, sith the treasures of all sortes of good things are in him, let vs draw thense and from no where else, euen till we be fil-withall. For they which, being not content with him alone, are caried hither and thither into diuerse hopes, although they haue principall regard to him, yet eue in this they are out of the right way, that they turne any parte of their knowledge to any other where. Albeit no distrust can not creepe in, where the aboundance of his goodnes hath once bin well knowen.

The xvij. Chapter.

That it is truely and properly sayd, that Christ hath deserued Gods fauour and saluation for vs.

THis question is also to be assoyled for an addition. For there are some suttle men after a wronge manner, which although they confesse that we obtaine saluation by Christ, yet can not abide to heare the name of deseruing, by which they thinke the grace of God to be obscured: and so they will haue Christ to be only the instrumẽt or minister, not the author, guide, or Prince of life, Act. 3. 10. as Peter calleth him. In deede I confesse, that if a man will set Christ simply and by himselfe against the iudgement of God, then there shalbe no roome for deseruinge: because there can not be found in Li. 1. de praed sanctorum. man any worthines that may deserue the fauour of God: But as Augustine most truely wryteth, the most cleare light of predestination and grace is our Sauiour himselfe, the man Christ Iesus, which hath obtayned so to be, by the nature of man, without any deseruinges of workes or of fayth goinge before. I beseeche you me be answered, whereby that same Man deserued to be taken by the Word that is coeternall with the father into one person, d so to be the only begotten sonne of God. Let therfore appeare in r head the very fountaine of grace, from whom according to the easure of euery one, it floweth abroade into all his mẽbers. By that ace euery one from the beginning of his faith is made a Christian, which that same man from his beginninge was made Christ. A- De bo-nor in an other place: there is no plainer example of predestination no per-no the Mediatour himselfe. For he that made of the seede of Da- seuerat.

seruinge of his will goinge before, euen the same he doth of vn-hteous make them righteous that are the members of that heade: d so forth as there followeth. Therfore when we speake of Christs seruinge, we do not say that in him is the beginning of deseruinge, t we climbe vp to the ordinance of God, which is the first cause ereof: because God of his owne meere good will appoynted him ediatour, to purchase saluation for vs. And so is the deseruinge of rist vnfitly set against the mercy of God. For it is a common rule, t things orderly one vnder an other do not disagree. And therfore ay well stand together, that mans iustification is free by the meere rcy of God, and that there also the deseruinge of Christ come beene which is contained vnder the mercy of God. But against our rkes are aptly set, as directly contrary, both the free fauour of God, the obedience of Christ, either of them in their degree. For Christ uld not deserue any thinge but by the good pleasure of God, and t because he was appointed to this purpose, with his sacrifice to apase the wrath of God, and with his obedience to put away our of-ces. Finally in a summe: because the deseruinge of Christ hangeth on the only grace of God, which apointed vs this meane of saluan, therefore as well the same deseruinge, as that grace, is fitly set anst all the workes of men.

This distinction is gathered out of many places of the Scripture.
d so loued the world, that he gaue his onely begotten sonne, that Ioh. 3. soeuer beleueth him, shall not perish. We se how the loue of God 16. eth the first place, as the soueraigne cause or original, & the foloth faith in Christ, as the second or nerer cause. If any man take ception and say, that Christ is but the formall cause, he doth more with his power than the wordes may beare. For if we obtayne nciliacion by fayth that resteth vpon him, then is the matter of saluation to be sought in him, which is in many places plainely ered. Not that we first loued him, but he first loued vs, and sent his Ioh. 4.

ſonne to be the appeaſing for our ſinnes. In theſe wordes is ſhewed, that God to the ende that nothing ſhould withſtand word Appeaſinge, is of great weight: becauſe God after a vnſpeakeable manner, euen the ſame time that he loued vs, w angry with vs, vntill he was reconciled in Chriſt. And to this this praiſe is giuen him ſeuerally from his father, that it is and procedeth from him.

3 But it is truely and perfectly gathered by many places Scripture, that Chriſt by his obedience hath purchaced vs with his father. For this I take for a thinge confeſſed, that hath ſatisfied for our ſinnes, if he hath ſuffered the puniſhme vnto vs, if by his obedience he hath appeaſed God, finally, if ing righteous, hath ſuffred for the vnrighteous, then is ſalvation chaſed for vs by his righteouſneſſe: which is as much in effect Ro.5.11 deſerue it. But, as Paule witneſſeth, we are reconciled and ceiued reconciliation by his death. But reconciliation hath no but where there went offence before. Therefore the meanin

God, to whom we were hatefull by reason of sinne, is by ẏ death soone appeased, so that he might be fauorable vnto vs. And the rison of contraries that followeth a litle after, is diligently to ed as by the transgressiō of one man, many were made sinners: Ro.5.19 by the obedience of one, many are made righteous. For the ng is thus: As by the sinne of Adam we were estranged from t ordained to destruction, so by the obedience of Christ we are ed into fauour as righteous. And the future time of the verbe not exclude present righteousnes, as appeareth by the processe text: For he had said before, that the free gift was of many vnto iustification.

But when we say, that grace is purchased vs by the deseruing of t, we meane this, that we are cleansed by his bloud, and that his 1. Ioh.1 was a satisfaction for our sinnes. His bloud cleanseth vs from 5.
This bloud is it that is shed for remission of sinne. If this be the Luc.22.
of his bloud shed, ẏ sinnes be not imputed vnto vs: it foloweth, 20. with that price the iudgement of God is satisfied. To which pur-serueth that saying of Iohn the Baptist: Behold ẏ lambe of God, Iohn.1. taketh away the sinne of the world. For he setteth in compari- 29.
Christ against all the sacrifices of the law, to teach that in him was fulfilled ẏ which those figures shewed. And we know, what s eche where sayth: Iniquity shalbe cleansed, sinne shalbe put and forgiuen. Finally we are very well taught in the old figures, is the force and effect of the death of Christ. And this point the stle setteth out in the Epistle to the Hebrues, very fitly takinge He.9.22 principle, that remissiō is not wrought without sheding of bloud. rupon he gathereth, that Christ for the abolishing of sinne, ap-ed once for all by his sacrifice. Againe: that he was offered vp to away ẏ sinnes of many. And he had sayd before, that not by the d of goates or of calues, but by his owne bloude he once en-into the holy place, finding eternall redemption. Now when he reasoneth: If the bloud of a calfe do sanctifie, accordinge to the nes of the flesh, that much more cōsciences are cleansed by the d of Christ from deade workes: it easily appeareth that the grace Christ is too much diminished, vnles we graunt vnto his sacrifice power of cleansing, appeasinge and satisfyinge. As a litle after he th: This is the mediatour of the new testament, that they which

For if Christ had not satisfied for our [illegible] it could not haue bin said, that he appeased God by taking vpon [illegible] the payne whereunto we were subiect. Wherewith agreeth that which foloweth in the same place: For the sinne of my people I [illegible]

Being iustified by his grace, through the redemption which is in Christ, whom God hath set to be the propitiatory by faith which is in his blood. Paul cōmendeth the grace of God in this point, because he hath geuen the price of redēption in the death of Christ: & then he biddeth vs to [illegible] vnto his bloud, that hauinge obtayned righteousnesse, we may stand boldly before the iudgement of God. And to the same effect is the
1. Pet. 1 18. saying of Peter: that we are redeemed, not by gold and siluer, but by the precious bloud of the vnspotted Lambe. For the comparison would not agree, vnles with that price satisfaction had bin made for
1. Cor. 6 20. sinnes: for which reason Paule sayth, that we are preciously bought. Also that other saying of his would not stand together: There is one mediatour that gaue himselfe to be a redemptiō, vnles the paine had bin cast vpon him which we had deserued: Therfore the same Apostle defineth, that the redemption in the bloud of Christ is the forgeuenes

Ga. 2. 21 great weight in these wordes of Paule: If we be iustified by the [illegible] of the law, thē Christ died for nothing. For hereby we gather, that we must fetche from Christ that which the lawe woulde giue, if [illegible] man can fulfill it: or (which is all one) that we obtayne by the [illegible] of Christ that, which God promised to our workes in the [illegible] mies. For therevpon we gather, that he had no reſpect of himſelfe Ioh. 17. and that ſame he plainely affirmeth in ſaying: I ſanctifie my ſelfe for them. For he that geueth away the frute of his holineſſe vnto others, doth thereby teſtifie that he purchaceth nothing for himſelfe. And truely this is moſt worthily to be noted, that Chriſt, to geue him ſelfe wholy to ſaue vs, did after a certaine maner forget him ſelfe. But to this purpoſe they doe wrongfully drawe this teſtimonie of Paule:

Phil. 2. 9. Therefore the father hath exalted him, and geuen him a name, &c. For by what deſeruinges coulde man obteine to be iudge of the worlde, and the heade of the Angels, and to enioy the ſouereigne dominion of God, and that in him ſhoulde reſt that ſame maieſtie, the thouſandth parte wherof all the powers of men and Angels can not reach vnto? But the ſolution thereof is eaſy and plaine, that Paule
Luc. 24. 26. doth not there entreate of the cauſe of exalting of Chriſt, but only to ſhewe the effect enſuyng thereof, that it might be for an example to vs. And no other thing is meante by that which is ſpoken in an other place, that it behoued that Chriſt ſhoulde ſuffer, and ſo enter into the glorie of his Father.

THE THIRD BOOKE OF THE INSTITVTION OF CHRISTIAN RELIGION, WHICH intreateth of the maner how to receiue the grace of Chriſt, and what profites do grow vnto vs, and what effectes enſue thereof.

The firſt Chapter.

That thoſe thinges which are ſpoken of Chriſt, do profite vs by ſecret working of the holy Ghoſt.

NOwe it is to be ſeene how thoſe good things do come vnto vs, which the Father hath geuen to his only begotten Sonne, not for his owne priuate vſe, but to enriche them that were without them and needed them. And firſt this is to be learned, that ſo long as Chriſt is out of vs, and we be ſeuered from him, whatſoeuer he ſuffered or did for the ſaluation of mankinde, is vnprofitable and nothing auaileth vs.

Therefore that he may enterparten with vs thoſe thinges that he h receiued of his Father, it behoueth that he become ours, and d to enquire of the ſecret effectual working of the Spirit, by which is brought to paſſe, that we enioy Christ and all his good thinges. haue before entreated of the eternall godheade and eſſence of the rite, at this preſent let vs be content with this one ſpeciall article, at Christ ſo came in water and bloude that the Spirite ſhould te-ie of him, leaſt the ſaluation that he hath purchaced, ſhould ſlippe ay from vs. For as there are alleged three witneſſes in heauen, the 1. Ioh. 5. ther, the Worde and the Spirite, ſo are there alſo three in earth, 7.

Water, Bloude and the Spirite. And not without cauſe is the teſtimoe of the Spirite twiſe repeted, which we feele to be engraue in our artes in ſteede of a ſeale: whereby commeth to paſſe, that it ſeath the waſhing and ſacrifice of Christ. After which meaning Peter 1. Pet. 1. ſo ſaith, that the faithfull are choſen in ſanctification of the ſpirite nto obedience and ſprinkeling of the bloude of Christ. By which ords he telleth vs, that to the entent the ſheding of that holy bloud oulde not become voide, our ſoules are cleanſed with it by the ſeete watering of the holy Spirite. According wherevnto Paule alſo eaking of cleanſing and iuſtification, ſayeth that we are made par-kers of them both in the name of Ieſus Christ and in the Spirite f our God. Finally this is the ſumme, that the holy Spirite is the onde wherewith Christ effectually bindeth vs vnto him. For proofe hereof alſo do ſerue all that we haue taught in the laſt booke be-re this, concerning his anointing.

3 But that this, being a matter ſpecially worthy to be knowen, ay be made more certainely euident, we muſt bolde this in minde, at Christ came furniſhed with the holy Spirite after a certaine peliar maner, to the ende that he might ſeuer vs from the worlde, and ther vs together into the hope of an eternall inheritance. For this ule he is called the Spirite of ſanctification, becauſe he doth not ely quicken and nouriſh vs with that generall power which ap-ereth as well in mankinde as in all other liuinge creatures, but alſo is in vs the roote and seede of heauenly life. Therefore the Prophets do principally commende the kingdome of Christ by this title of prerogatiue, that then should florish more plentifull abundance of the Spirite. And notable aboue all the rest is that place of Ioel Ioel 2. 28. In that day I will poure of my Spirite vpon all flesh. For though the Prophet there seeme to restraine the giftes of the Spirite to the office of prophecying, yet vnder a figure he meaneth, that God by the enlightning of his Spirite will make those his scholers which before were vnskillfull and voide of all heauenly doctrine. Now forasmuch as God the Father doth for his Sonnes sake geue vs his holy Spirite, and yet hath left with him the whole fulnesse therof, to the ende that he shoulde be a minister and distributer of his liberal gifte: he is sometime called the Spirite of the Father, and sometime the Spirite of the

Rom. 8. 9. Sonne. Ye are not (saieth Paule) in the flesh, but in the Spirite, for the Spirite of God dwelleth in you. But if any haue not the spirite of Christ, he is not his. And hereupon he putteth vs in hope of full renuing, for that he which raised vp Christ from the deade, shall quicken our mortall bodies because of his Spirite dwelling in vs. For it is

Rom. 8. 11. no absurditie, that to the Father be ascribed the praise of his owne giftes, whereof he is the author: and yet that the same be ascribed to Christ, with whome the giftes of the Spirite are lefte, that he may geue them to those that be his. Therefore he calleth all them that

Iohn. 7. 37. thirst, to come to him to drinke. And Paule teacheth that the Spirite Ephe 4. 7. is distributed to euery one, according to the measure of the gifte of Christ. And it is to be knowen, that he is called the Spirite of Christ, not only in respect that the eternall Worde of God is with the same Spirite ioyned with the Father, but also according to his person of Mediator, because if he had not had that power, he had come to vs

1. Cor. 15. 45. in vaine. After which meaning he is called the second Adam geuen from heauen, to be a quickning Spirite: whereby Paule comprehendeth the singular life that the sonne of God breatheth into them that be his, that they may be all one with him, with the naturall life that is also common to the reprobate. Likewise where he wisheth to the faithfull the fauour of Christ and the loue of God, he ioyneth withall the common partaking of the Spirite, without which no man can tast neither of the fatherly fauour of God, nor of the bountifulnesse of

Rom. 5. 5. Christ. As also he saith in an other place: The loue of God is powred out into our heartes by the holy Spirite that is geuen vs.

3 And here it shalbe profitable to note, with what titles the Scripture setteth out the holy Spirite, where it entreateth of beginning and whole restoring of our saluation. First he is called the Spirite of adop-doption, because he is a witnesse vnto vs of the free goodwill of God, wherewith God the Father hath embraced vs in his beloued only begotten Sonne, that he might be a father vnto vs, and doth encourage vs to praie bouldely, yea and doth minister vs wordes to praie with out feare Abba, Father: by the same reason he is called the Gal. 4. 6 same is set out plainely enough, that all our mindes be bente vpon the holy Ghost, Christ lyeth in a manner idle, by cause we coldely espie him without vs, yea & farre away from vs. But we know that he pro-cureth none other but them whose heade he is, and the first begotten and we againe possesse him.

4 But forasmuch as faith is his principall worke, to it are most parte referred all those thinges, that we commonly finde ken to expresse his force and working: because he bringeth vs Iohn. 1. the light of the Gospell by nothing but by faith: as Iohn 18. teacheth, that this prerogatiue is geuē to them the beleue in that they be the children of God which are borne not of flesh bloude, but of God: where setting God against flesh and he affirmeth it to be a supernaturall gifte that they receue by faith, who otherwise shoulde remaine subiect to their owne delitie. Like wherevnto is that aunswere of Christ: Flesh and Mat. 16. hath not reuealed it to thee, but my Father which is in heauen.
17. thinges I do nowe but shortly touche, bycause I haue treated of them at large. And like also is that saying of Paule, Ephe. 1. the Ephesians were sealed vp with the holy Spirite of promise.
13. Paule sheweth that he is an inwarde teacher, by whose worke promise of saluation pearceth into our mindes, which other shoulde but beate the aire or our eares. Likewise when he saith 2. Thess. the Thessalonians were chosen of God in the sanctification of 13. spirite and beleuing of the truth: by which ioyning of them ther, he briefely admonisheth that faith it selfe proceedeth from
2. Iohn. thing els but from the holy spirite: which thing Iohn setteth
3. 24. & plainely, saying: We knowe that there abideth in vs of the 4. which he hath geuen vs. Againe, By this we knowe that we Iohn. 14. in him, and he in vs, because he hath geuen vs of his spirite.
17. fore Christ promised to his Disciples the Spirite of truth worlde can not receiue, that they might be able to receiue the ueuly wisedomes. And he assigneth to the same spirite this fice, to put them in minde of those thinges that he had taught by mouth. Because in vaine shoulde the light shewe it selfe blinde, valesse the same spirite of vnderstanding shoulde eyes of their minde: so as a man may rightly call the holy keye by which the treasuries of the heauenly kingdome are vnto vs: & may call his enlightning, the eyesight of our minde 2. Cor. 3. Therefore doth Saint Paule so much commend the ministerie 6. spirite: bycause teachers shoude crie without profiting, valesse him selfe the inwarde maister shoulde drawe them with his that are geuen him by his Father. Therefore as we haue perfect saluation is founde in the person of Christ: so that we Luk. 3. made partakers thereof, he doth baptize vs in the holy 16. fire, lightning vs into the faith of his Gospell, and so newe that we may be newe creatures: and purging vs from vnholy filthinesse, doth dedicate vs to be holy temples to God.

The ij. Chapter.

Of faith, wherein both is set the definition of it, and the properties that it hath, are declared.

BVT all these thinges shalbe easie to vnderstand, when there is shewed a plaine definitiō of faith, that the readers may know the force and nature thereof. But first it is conuenient to call to minde againe these thinges that haue bene already spoken, that God doth appoint vs by his lawe what we ought to do, if we in any point thereof, the same terrible iudgement of eternall death he pronounceth doth rest vpon vs. Againe, that forasmuch as it not onely hearde but altogether aboue our strength and beyonde our power to fulfill the lawe, if we onely beholde our selues, and ye what estate is worthy for our deseruinges, there is no good ye left, but we lie cast away from God vnder eternall destruction. rdly this hath been declared, that there is but one meane of de-rance to draw vs out of so wretched calamitie: wherein appeareth ist the Redeemer, by whose hande it pleased the heauenly father, ing mercie vpon vs of his infinite goodnesse and clemencie, to ue vs, so that we with sounde faith embrace this mercie, and with fast hope rest vpon it. But nowe it is conuenient for vs to weye what maner of faith this ought to be, by which all they that are ged by God to be his children, do enter vpon the possessiō of the enly kingdome, forasmuch as it is certaine that not euery opiniō yea euery perswasion is sufficient to bring to passe so great a thing: d with so much the more care and study must we looke about for, l search out the natural propretie of faith, by how much the more full at this day is the errour of many in this behalfe. For a great of the world, hearing the name of faith, conceiueth no hier thing, a certaine common assent to the historie of the Gospel, Yea when y dispute of faith in the scholes, in barely calling God the obiect eith, they do nothing but (as we haue saide in no other place) by speculation rather draw wretched soules out of the right way, direct them to the true marke. For whereas God dwelleth in a 1. Tim. 6. 16.

beſide this that with their darke definition they do deface maner bring to naught the whole force of faith; they haue deuiſe of vnexpreſſed faith, with which name they garniſhing moſt groſſe ignorance do with great hurte deceyue the ſilly yea (to ſay truely and plainely as the thing is in deede) this doth not onely burie but vtterly deſtroy the true faith. Is this leue, to vnderſtand nothing, ſo that thou obediently ſubmit to the Church? Faith ſtandeth not in ignorance but in d that not onely of God, but of the will of God. For neither do e obteine ſaluation by this that we either are ready to embrace for e whatſoeuer the Church appointeth, or that we do commit to it the office of ſearching and knowing: but when we acknowledge od to be a merciful father to vs by the recõciliatiõ made by Chriſt, d that Chriſt is geuen vs vnto righteouſneſſe, ſanctification, and

e. By this knowledge, I ſay, not by ſubmitting of our ſenſe, we at-ne an entrie into the kingdome of heauen. For when the Apoſtle Rom.10 th, that with the hearte we beleue to righteouſneſſe, and with the 10. outh confeſſiõ is made to ſaluatiõ, he ſheweth that it is not enough, a man vnexpreſſedly beleue that which he vnderſtãdeth not, nor keth to learne: but he requireth an expreſſed acknowledging of ods goodneſſe, in which conſiſteth our righteouſneſſe.

3 In deede I denie not (ſuch is the ignorance wherewith we are mpaſſed) that there nowe be and hereafter ſhalbe many thinges pped and hidden from vs, till hauing put of the burden of our h we come neerer to the preſence of God: in which very thinges t be hidden from vs, nothing is more profitable than to ſuſpend r iudgement, but to ſtay our minde in determined purpoſe to kepe tie with the Church. But vnder this colour to intitle ignoraunce pered with humilitie by the name of faith, is a great abſurditie. faith lieth in knowledge of God and of Chriſt not in reuerence Iohn 17 the Church. And we ſee what a maze they haue framed with this 3. r hidden implication, that any thing whatſoeuer it be without any ſe, ſo that it be thruſt in vnder title of the Church, is greadily reed of the ignorant as it were an oracle, yea ſomtime alſo moſt ſtrous errours. Which vnaduiſed lightneſſe of beliefe, whereas a moſt certaine downefal to ruine, is yet excuſed by them, for that eleueth nothing determinatly, but with this condition adioyned. he faith of the Church be ſuch. So do they faine, that truth is den in errour, light in blindneſſe, true knowledge in ignoraunce. becauſe we will not tarry long in confuting them, we do onely ne the readers to compare their doctrine with ours. For the very neſſe of the truth it ſelfe will of it ſelfe miniſter a confutation y enough. For this is not the queſtion among them, whether be yet wrapped with many remnauntes of ignorance, but they inioly ſay that they beleue aright, which ſtande amaſed in their rance, yea & do flatter them ſelues therein, ſo that they do agree e authoritie and iudgement of the Church, concerning thinges owene. As though the Scripture did not euery where teach, that faith is ioyned knowledge.

4 But we do graunt, that so long as we wander from home in this worlde, our faith is not fully expressed, not only because many things are yet hidde from vs, but because being compassed with many mists of erroures, we atteine not all thinges. For the highest wisedome of the most perfect is this, to profite more and proceede on further forwarde with gentill willingnesse to learne. Therfore Paule exhorteth the faithfull, if vpon any thing they differ one from an other, to abide for reuelation. And truely experience teacheth, that till we be vnclothed of our flesh, we atteine to know lesse than were to be wished, and daily in reading we light vpon many darke places which do conuince vs of ignorance. And with this bridle God holdeth vs in modesty, assigning to euery one a measure of faith, that euery very best teacher may be ready to learne. And notable examples of this vnexpressed faith, we may marke in the Disciples of Christ, before that they had obteined to be fully enlightned. We se, how they hardely tasted the very first introductions, how they did sticke even in the smallest pointes, how they hanging at the mouth of their master did not yet much proceede, yea when at the womens information they ranne to the graue, the Resurrection of their master was like a dreame vnto them. Sith Christ did before beare witnesse to their faith, we may not say that they were vtterly without faith: but rather, if they had not ben perswaded that Christ should rise again, all care of him woulde haue perished in them. For it was not superstition that did drawe the women to embalme with spices the corpse of a dead man of whome there was no hope of life: but although they beleued his wordes whome they knew to be a speaker of trueth, yet the grosnesse that still possessed their mindes so wrapped their sense in darkenesse, that they were in a maner amased at it. Wherefore it is saide, that they then at the last beleued when they had by the thing it selfe proued the trueth of the wordes of Christ: not that they then beganne to beleue, but bycause the seede of hidden faith which was as it were dead in their hartes, then receiuing liuelihed did springe vp. There was therefore a true faith in them but an vnexpressed faith, because they reuerently embraced Christ for their onely teacher, and then being taught of him, they determined that he was the author of their saluation: Finally, they beleued that he came from heauen, by the grace of his father to gather his Disciples to heauen. And we neede not to seke any more familiar proofe hereof than this, that in all thinges alway vnbelefe is mingled with faith.

Phili. 3. 15.

5 We may also call it an vnexpressed faith, which yet in deede is nothing but a preparation of faith. The Euangelistes do record

ſet many beleued, which onely being rauiſhed to admiration with miracles, proceded no further but that Chriſt was the Meſſias which had bene promiſed, albeit they taſted not ſo much as any ſclender learning of the Goſpell. Such obedience which brought them in ſubiectiō willingly to ſubmit them ſelues to Chriſt, beareth the name of faith where it was in dede but the beginning of faith. So the courtier that beleued Chriſtes promiſe, cōcerning ỹ healing of his ſonne, when he came home, as the Euangeliſt teſtifieth, beleued againe: by- Iohn. 4. wiſe he receiued as an oracle that which he hearde of the mouth of 3. Chriſt, and then ſubmitted him ſelfe to his authoritie to receiue his doctrine. Albeit it is to be knowen, that he was ſo tractable and ready to learne, that yet in the firſt place the worde of beleuing ſignifieth particular beleefe: and in the ſecond place maketh him of the number of the Diſciples, that profeſſed to be the ſcholers of Chriſt. Alike example doth Iohn ſet forth in the Samaritanes, which ſo beleued Iohn. 4. the womans reporte, that they ranne earneſtly to Chriſt, which yet when they had hearde him, ſaide thus: Now we beleue not bycauſe of thy report, but we haue hearde him, and we know that he is the Sauiour of the worlde. Hereby appeareth that they which are not yet inſtructed in the firſt introductions, ſo that they be diſpoſed to obedience, are called faithfull, in deede not proprely, but in this reſpect, that God of his tender kindeneſſe vouchſaueth to graunt ſo great honour to that godly affection, but this willingneſſe to learne, with a deſire to proceede further, differeth farre from that groſſe ignorance, wherin they lie dull that are content with the vnexpreſſed faith, ſuch as the Papiſtes haue imagined. For if Paule ſeuerely 2. Tim. condemneth them which alway learning, yet neuer come to the 3.7. knowledge of trueth, how much more greuous reproche do they deſerue, that of purpoſe ſtudie to know nothing?

6 This therefore is the true knowledge of Chriſt, if we receiue him ſuch as he is offered of his Father, that is to ſay, clothed with his Goſpell. For as he is appointed to be the marke of our faith, ſo we can not go the right way to him, but by the Goſpell going before to guide vs. And truely there are opened to vs the treaſures of grace, which being ſhut vp, Chriſt ſhoulde litle profite vs. So Paule ioyneth with an vnſeparable companion to doctrine, where he ſaith: Ye haue not ſo learned Chriſt, for ye haue bene taught what is the trueth in Ephe. 4. Chriſt. Yet do I not ſo reſtraine faith to the Goſpell, but that I con- 20. feſſe that there hath bene ſo much taught by Moſes & the Prophets, as ſuffiſed to the edification of faith, but becauſe there hath bene declared in the Goſpell a fuller opening of faith, therefore it is wor-

Rom.10 thily called of Paule, the doctrine of faith. For which cause also he 4. saith in an other place, that by the comming of faith the law is taken away, meaning by this word faith, the new and vnaccustomed manner of teaching, wherby Christ since he appeared our scholemaster, hath more plainely set forth the mercy of his father, and more certainely testified of our saluation. Albeit it shalbe the more easie and more conuenient ordre, if we descend by degrees from the generalitie to the specialtie. First we must be put in minde that there is a general relation of faith to the worde, and that faith can no more be seuered from the worde, than the sunnebeames from the sunne from whence Esa. 55. they procede. Therefore in Esaie God crieth out: Heare me and your
3. soule shall liue. And that the same is the fountaine of faith, Iohn Ioh.10. sheweth in these wordes: These thinges are written that ye may be-
13. leue. And the Prophet meaning to exhorte the people to beleefe Psa.95. saith: This day if ye shall heare his voice. And to heare is commonly
8. ly taken for to Beleue. Moreouer, God doth not without cause Esaie set this marke of differēce betwene the children of the Church and straungers, that he will instruct them all, that they may be taught of him. For if it were a benefit vniuersall to all, why shoulde he his wordes to a fewe? Wherewith agreeth this that the Euangelists do commonly vse the wordes Faithfull, and Disciples, as seuered Act. 6. wordes expressing one thing, and specially Luke very oft in the Acts 2. and.9. of the Apostles. Yea and he stretcheth that name euen to a woman and.26. in the ninth chapiter of the Actes. Wherefore if faith do swerue and.11. neuer so litle from this marke, to which it ought to be directly ledde 26. and led, it kepeth not her own nature, but becometh an vncertaine light and. 13. nesse of beliefe and wandring errour of minde. The same Worde is and.14. the foundation wherewith faith is vpholden and susteined, from which if it swarue, it falleth downe. Therefore take away the Worde and then there shall remaine no faith. We do not here dispute whether ther the ministerie of man be necessarie to sowe the word of God, that faith may be conceiued therby, which question we wil elsewhere intreate of: but we say that the worde it selfe, howesoeuer it be offered ueied to vs, is like a mirrour when faith may beholde God. Where God doth therein vse the seruice of man, or worke it by his owne only power, yet he doth alway shew him selfe by his worde to Ro.1.5. whome his will is to drawe vnto him: wherevpon Paule defineth faith to be an obedience that is geuen to the Gospell. Rom.1. And Phili.2. an other place he praiseth the obedience of faith in the Philippians.
27. For this is not the onely purpose in the vnderstanding of faith, that we knowe that there is a God, but this also, yea this chiefely, that derſtand what will he beareth towarde vs. For it not ſo much beoueth vs to knowe what he is in himſelfe, but what a one he will be vs. Nowe therefore we are come to this point, that faith is a know-dge of the will of God, perceyued by his worde. And the foun-tion hereof is a foreconceiued perſuaſion of the truthe of God.

Of the aſſuredneſſe whereof ſo long as thy minde ſhall diſpute with ſelfe, the worde ſhall be but of doubtfull and weake credit, yea ra-er no credit at all. But alſo it ſufficeth not to beleue that God is a ue ſpeaker, which can neither deceiue nor lie, vnleſſe thou further olde this for vndoubtedly determined, that whatſoeuer procedeth om him, is the ſacred and inuiolable truthe.

7 But becauſe not at euery worde of God mans hearte is raiſed to faith, we muſt yet further ſearch what this faith in the worde ith proprely reſpect vnto. It was the ſaying of God to Adam: Thou Gene. 2. alt die the death. It was the ſaying of God to Cain: The bloude 17. and f thy brother crieth to me out of the earth. Yet theſe are ſuch ſay- 4.10. ges as of them ſelues can do nothing but ſhake faith, ſo much leſſe e they able to ſtabliſh faith. We deny not in the meane ſeaſon that it the office of faith to agree to the truthe of God, howe ofte euer, what ſoeuer, and in what ſorte ſoeuer it ſpeaketh: but nowe r queſtion is onely, what faith findeth in the worde of the Lorde leane and reſt vpon. When our conſcience beholdeth onely ingnation and vengeance, howe can it but tremble and quake for re? And howe ſhoulde it but flee God, of whome it is afraide? t faith ought to ſeeke God, and not to flee from him. It is plaine erefore, that we haue not yet a full definition of faith, bycauſe it not to be accompted for faith to knowe the will of God, of what rte ſo euer it be. But what if in the place of will, whereof many nes the meſſage is ſorrowefull and the declaration dreadfull, we kindeneſſe or mercie? Truely ſo we ſhall come nerer to the nae of faith. For we are then allured to ſeeke God, after that we ue learned that ſaluation is laied vp in ſtore with him for vs. Which ng is confirmed vnto vs, when he declareth that he hath care and e of vs. Therefore there needeth a promiſe of grace, whereby he y teſtifie that he is our mercifull father, for that otherwiſe we can approch vnto him, and vpon that alone the hearte of man may ly reſt. For this reaſon commonly in the Pſalmes theſe two things rcie and Truth do cleaue together, becauſe neither ſhoulde it any Pſal. 40 ng profite vs to know that God is true, vnleſſe he did mercifully 11.

truth and thy ſaluation, I haue not hidden thy goodneſſe and thy truth. Thy goodneſſe and thy trueth keepe me. In an other place. Pſal 36. Thy mercie to the heauens, thy trueth euen to the cloudes. Againe. 6. All the wayes of the Lord are mercie and trueth, to them that keepe Pſa 107 his couenant. Againe. His mercie is multiplied vpon vs, and the truth Pſa 138 of the Lorde abideth for euer. Againe. I will ſinge to thy name vpon thy mercie and trueth. I omit that which is in the Prophetes to the ſame meaning, that God is mercifull and faithfull in his promiſes. For we ſhall raſhely determine that God is mercifull vnto vs, vnleſſe him ſelfe do teſtifie of him ſelfe and preuent vs with his calling, leaſt his will ſhoulde be doubtefull and vnknowen. But we haue alreadie ſeene, that Chriſt is the onely pledge of his loue, without whome on euery ſide appeare the tokens of hatred and wrath. Nowe forſmuch as the knowledge of Gods goodneſſe ſhall not much preuaile, vnleſſe he make vs to reſt in it, therefore ſuch an vnderſtanding is to be baniſhed as is mingled with doubting, and doth not ſoundly agree in it ſelfe, but as it were, diſputeth with it ſelfe. But mans wit, as it is blinde and darkened, is farre from atteining and climbing vp to perceiue the very will of God: and alſo the hearte of man, as it wauereth with perpetuall doubting, is farre from reſting aſſured in that perſuaſion. Therfore it behoueth both that our wit be lightned, and our hearte ſtrengthened by ſome other meane, that the worde of God may be of full credit with vs. Nowe we ſhall haue a perfect definition of faith, if we ſay, that it is a ſtedfaſt and aſſured knowledge of Gods kindneſſe toward vs, which being grounded vpon the truth of the free promiſe in Chriſt, is both reueled to our mindes, and ſealed in our heartes by the holy Ghoſt.

8 But before I procede any further, it ſhalbe neceſſarie, that I make ſome preambles to diſſolue certaine doubtes that otherwiſe might make ſome ſtoppe to the readers. And firſt I muſt confute that diſtinction that flieth about in the ſcholes, betwene faith formed and vnformed. For they imagine that ſuch as are touched with no feeling of God, with no feeling of godlineſſe, do beleue all that is neceſſarie to ſaluation. As though the holy Ghoſt in lightening our heartes vnto faith, were not a witneſſe to vs of our adoption. And yet preſumptuouſly, when all the Scripture crieth out againſt it, they giue the name of faith to ſuch perſwaſion voide of the feare of God. We neede to ſtriue no further with their definition, but ſimply to vnderſtande the nature of faith, ſuch as it is declared by the worde of God. Whereby ſhall plainely appeare howe vnſkilfully and foolithly they rather make a noiſe than ſpeake of it. I haue alreadie touched re, the reſt I will adde hereafter as place ſhall ſerue. At this pree I ſay, that there can not be imagined a greater abſurditie, than s inuention of theires. They wil haue faith to be an aſſent, whereeuery deſpiſer of God may receiue that which is vttered out of e Scripture. But firſt they ſhoulde haue ſeene whether euery man his owne power do bring faith to him ſelfe, or whether the holy hoſt be by it a witneſſe of adoption. Therefore they do childiſh-plaie the fooles, in demaunding, whether faith, which qualitie ad-th doth fourme, be the ſame faith or an other and a newe faithe. hereby appeareth certainly, that in ſo babling they neuer thought the ſingular gifte of the holy Ghoſt. For the beginning of bele-g doth already conteine in it the reconciliation, whereby man procheth to God. But if they did weye that ſaying of Paule: Rom. 10 th the hearte is beleued to righteouſneſſe, they woulde ceſſe to 10. ne that ſame colde qualitie. If we hadde but this one reaſon, it oulde be ſufficient to ende this contention: that the very ſame aſt (as I haue already touched, and will againe more largely repete) ather of the hearte than of the braine, rather of affection than of derſtanding. For which cauſe it is called the obedience of faith, Rom. 1. uch is ſuch as the Lorde preferreth no kinde of obedience aboue 5. and that worthily, foraſmuch as nothing is more precious to ers doe as it were ſubſcribe and ſeale vnto. Sithe the matter is 25. doubtefull we doe in one worde determinately ſaie, that they ake fondely when they ſaie that faithe is fourmed by adding of dly affection vnto aſſent: whereas aſſent it ſelfe, at leaſt ſuch aſt as is declared in the Scriptures, conſiſteth of godly affection. yet there is an other plainer argument that offereth it ſelfe be alleged. For whereas faith embraceth Chriſt as he is offe-vs of the Father: and Chriſt is offered not onely for righte-neſſe, forgeueneſſe of ſinnes and peace, but alſo for ſanctifica-n, and a fountaine of liuing water: without doubte no man can r truely knowe him, vnleſſe he doe therewithall receiue the ſancation of the Spirite. Or, if any man deſire to haue it more inely ſpoken, Faithe conſiſteth in the knowledge of Chriſt. And riſt can not be knowene, but with ſanctification of [illegible] Spirite: refore it followeth, that faith can by no meane be ſeuered from dly affection.

Whereas they are wonte to laie this againſt vs, that Paule 1. Cor.
th: If a man haue all faith, ſo that he remoue mountaines: if he 12.10. e not charitie, he is nothing: whereby they woulde deforme faith, in ſpoyling it of charitie: they conſider not what the Apoſtle in that place meaneth by faith. For when in the chapiter next before it, he had ſpoken of the diuerſe giftes of the holy Ghoſt, among the which he had reckened the diuerſe kindes of languages, power and prophecie, and had exhorted the Corinthians to follow the beſt of theſe giftes, that is to ſay, ſuch giftes whereby more profit and cõmoditie might come to the whole body of the Church: he ſtraight way ſaide further, that he woulde ſhewe them yet a more excellent way. That all ſuch giftes, how excellent ſoeuer they be of themſelues, yet are nothing to be eſteemed, vnleſſe they ſerue charitie. For they were geuen to the edifying of the Church, and vnleſſe they be applied therevnto, they loſe their grace. For proofe of this he particularly reherſeth them, repeting the ſelfe ſame giftes that he had ſpoken of before, but in other names. And he vſeth the wordes Power and Faith, for all one thing, that is for the power to do miracles. Seeing therefore this, whether ye call it power or faith, is a particular gift of God, which euery vngodly man may both haue and abuſe, as the gifte of tongues, as prophecie and other giftes of grace: it is no maruell if it be ſeuered from charitie. But all the errour of theſe men ſtandeth in this, that where this worde Faith, hath diuerſe ſignifications, they not conſidering the diuerſitie of the thing ſignified, diſpute as though it were taken for one thinge in all places alike. The place of Iames which they allege for maintainance of their errour, ſhall be els where diſcuſſed. But although for teaching ſake, when we meane to ſhewe what manner of knowledge of God there is in the wicked, we graunt that there are diuerſe ſortes of faithe: yet we acknowledge and ſpeake of but one faithe of the godly, as the Scripture teacheth. Many in deede doe beleeue that there is a God, they thinke that the Hiſtorie of the Goſpell and other partes of the Scripture are true (as commonly we are wonte to iudge of ſuch thinges, as either are reported being done long ago, or ſuch as we our ſelues haue bene preſente at and ſeene). There be alſo ſome that goe further, for bothe they beleeue the worde of God to be a moſte aſſured oracle, and they do not altogether deſpiſe his commaundementes, and they ſomewhat affect the ſorte are moued with his threateninges and promiſes. It is in deede teſtified that ſuch haue faith: but that is ſpoken out by abuſe, becauſe they do not with open vngodlineſſe fight againſt the word of God, or refuſe or deſpiſe it: but rather pretende a certaine ſhew of obedience.

10 But this image or ſhadowe of faith, as it is of no value, it not worthy of the name of faith. From the ſound trueth wherhow farre it differeth, although it ſhall be hereafter more largely treated, yet there is no cauſe to the contrary, why it ſhoulde not w be touched by the way. It is ſayd that Simon Magus beleued, Act. 8. uch yet within a litle after bewraied his owne vnbeliefe. And wher- 13. & 18 it is ſaid that he beleued, we do not vnderſtand it as ſome do, that fayned a beliefe when he had none in his heart: but we rather inke that being ouercome with the maieſty of the Goſpell, he had certaine faith ſuch as it was, and ſo acknowledged Chriſt to be the thor of life and ſaluation, that he willingly profeſſed himſelfe to one of his. After the ſame manner it is ſaid in the Goſpel of Luke, Luk. 8. 7 t they beleue for a time, in whom the ſeede of the word is cho- & 13.

ted with a certaine taſt of the word do greedily receiue it, and bene to feele the diuine force of it: ſo farre that with deceitful counfayth, they beguile not onely other mens eyes, but alſo r owne mindes. For they perſwade themſelues, that that reuece which they ſhew to the word of God, is moſt true godlineſſe, auſe they thinke that there is no vngodlyneſſe but manifeſt and feſſed reproch or contempt of his word. But what manner of aſ-of faith, nor do truely feele the effectual working of the Goſpel, they that are foreordained to ſaluation: yet experience ſheweth the reprobate are ſometime moued with the ſame feelinge that lect are, ſo that in their owne iudgement they nothing differ frō lect. Wherefore it is no abſurdity, that the Apoſtle aſcribeth to Heb.6. them the taſt of the heauenly giftes, that Chriſt aſcribeth to them faith for a time: not that they ſoundely perceaue the ſpirituall force of grace and aſſured light of faith: but becauſe the Lord, the more to cõdemne them and make them inexcuſable, conueyeth himſelfe into their mindes ſo farre foorth, as his goodneſſe may be taſted without the ſpirite of adoption. If any obiect, that then there remayneth nothing more to the faithfull whereby to proue certainely their adoption: I anſwere that though there be a great likeneſſe and affinity betwene the elect of God, and them that are endued with a falling faith for a time, yet there liueth in the elect only that affiance which Paul ſpeaketh of, that they crie with full mouth, Abba, Father. Therefore as God doth regenerate onely the elect with incorruptible ſeede forever, ſo that the ſeede of life planted in their hearts neuer perisheth: ſo ſoundly doth he ſeale in them the grace of his adoptiõ, that it may be ſtable & ſure. But this withſtandeth not but that that other mirrour working of the Spirite may haue his courſe, euen in the reprobate. In the meane ſeaſon the faithful are taught, carefully & humbly to examine themſelues, leaſt in ſteade of aſſurednes of faith, do creep in careleſſe confidẽce of the fleſh. Beſide that, the reprobate do not conceiue but a confuſed feelinge of grace, ſo that they rather take holde of the ſhadow than of the ſounde body, becauſe the holy Spirite doth properly ſeale the remiſſion of ſinnes in the elect onely, that they apply it by ſpeciall faith to their vſe. But yet it is truely ſaid that the reprobate beleue God to be mercifull vnto them, becauſe they receiue the gift of reconciliation, although confuſedly and not plainely enough: not that they are partakers of the ſelfe ſame ſpirite or regeneration with the children of God, but becauſe they ſeeme to haue as well as they, the ſame beginning of faith, vnder a cloke of Hypocriſie. And I denie not, that God doth ſo farre giue light of grace to theyr mindes, that they acknowledge his grace, but he maketh that ſame feelinge ſo different from the peculiar teſtimonie which he giueth to his elect, that they neuer come to the ſounde effect and fruition thereof. For he doth not therefore ſhewe himſelfe mercifull vnto them, for that he hauinge truely deliuered them from death, doth receiue them to his ſauegarde, but onely he offereth to them a preſent mercye. But he vouchſaueth to graffe in the onely elect the liuely roote of fayth, ſo that they continue to the ende. So is that obiection aunſwered, if God do truely ſhewe his grace, that the ſame remayneth perpetually ſtabliſhed. Now that there is no cauſe to the contrarie, but that God may enlighten ſome with a preſent feelinge of his grace, which afterwarde th away.

Also though faith be a knowledge of Gods kindenes toward nd an assured persuasion of the trueth thereof: yet it is no mar- l that the feelinge of Gods loue in temporall thinges doth vanish y: which although it haue an affinity with faith, yet doth it much er from faith. I graunt, the will of God is vnchaungeable, and trueth thereof doth alway stedfastly agree with it selfe, but I y that the reprobate do proceede so farre as to attaine vnto that rete reuelation, which the Scripture sayth to belonge to the e- onely. Therefore I deny that they do either conceiue the will God as it is vnchaungeable, or do stedfastly embrace the trueth reof, because they abide in a feeling that vanisheth away: Like tree that is not planted deepe enough to take liuely rootes, in cesse of time waxeth drie, although for a fewe yeares it bring- foorth not onely blossomes and leaues, but also frute. Finally, y the fall of the first man, the Image of God might haue beene ted out of his minde, and soule, so it is no maruell, if God do e vpon the reprobate with certaine beames of his grace, which rward he suffereth to be quenched. And there is no cause to the rary, but that he may lightly ouer wash some, and throughly soke er some with the knowledge of his Gospell. This is in the meane e to be holden for trueth, that how small and weake soeuer faith the elect, yet because it is to them a sure pleadge of the Spirite God, and a seale of their adoption, the printe thereof can neuer lotted out of their heartes: as for the reprobate, that they are spred with such a light as afterwarde commeth to nought. And the Spirite is not deceitefull, because he geueth not life to seede that he casteth in their heartes, to make it abide alwayes rruptible, as he doth in the elect. I go yet further, for whereas uident by the teachinge of the Scripture and by dayely experi- , that the reprobate are sometime touched with the feelinge of s grace, it must needes be that there is raised in their heartes a ne desire of mutuall loue. So for a time there liued in Saul a affection to loue God, by whom he knew himselfe to be father- deled, and therefore was delited with a certaine sweetenesse of oodnesse. But as the persuasion of the fatherly loue of God is ll rooted in the reprobate, so do they not soundely loue him a- e as his children, but are led with a certayne affection like hi- rmunnes. For to Christ onely was that Spirite of loue giuen, to nde, that he shoulde poure it into his members. And truely ying of Paule extendeth no further, but to the elect only: The Ro. 5.5

loue of God is poured abroade into our heartes by the holy Spirit that is giuen vs, euen the same loue that engendreth the same confidence of calling vpon him, which I haue before touched. As on the contrary side we see God to be maruelously angry with his children whom yet he ceſſeth not to loue: not that in himſelfe he hateth but becauſe his will is to make them afrayd with the feelinge of his wrath, but to the entent to abate their pride of fleſh, to ſhake of drouſineſſe, and to moue them to repentance. And therefore at one time they conceiue him to be both angry with them for their ſinnes, and alſo mercifull vnto them: becauſe they not fayndly do pray to appeaſe his wrath, to whom yet they flee with assured truſt. Hereby it appeareth that it is not true that some counterfaite a ſhewe of faith, which yet do lacke the true faith, while they are caried with a ſodayne violent motion of Zeale, deceiue themſelues with falſe opinion, And it is no dout that giſhneſſe ſo poſſeſſeth them, that they do not well examine heart as they ought to haue done. It is likely that they were now our queſtion is, What is that faith which maketh the chilof God different from the vnbeleuers, by which we call vpon

God by the name of our Father, by which we passe from de life, and by which Christ the eternall saluation and life dwel vs. The force and nature thereof I thinke I haue shortly and p ly declared.

14 Now let vs againe go through all the partes of it, euen fr beginning which being diligently examined, (as I thinke) there remaine nothing doutfull. When in defining faith we call it k ledge, we meane not therby a cõprehending, such as men vse to of those thinges that are subiect to mans vnderstandinge. For far aboue it, that mãs wit must go beyond & surmoũt it selfe to which it feeleth, but while it is persuaded of that which it conce not, it vnderstandeth more by the very assuredneſſe of perſu the Lord hath disclosed to his Saintes the secrete of his will was hidden from ages and generations, therefore by good r faith is in Scripture sometime called an acknowledginge: and that those thinges which we vnderstande by faith, are yet a from vs and are hidden from our sight. And hereupon we dete that the knowledge of faith standeth rather in certainty than in prehending.

15 We further call it, a sure and stedfast knowledge, to exp thereby a more sound constancy of persuasion. For as faith is not tented with a doutful and rowling opinion, so is it also not co with a darke and entangled vnderstanding: but requireth a full & assuredneſſe, such as men are wont to haue of things founde by rience and proued. For vnbeliefe sticketh so fast and is so deepe ted in our heartes, and we are so bent vnto it, that this which al ly ſo oft as God doth ſo cōmend his word vnto vs, he doth ther-the way reproche vs with our vnbeleuingneſſe: becauſe that mendation tendeth to no other end, but to roote vp all peruerſe ings out of our hearts. There be alſo many which ſo cōceiue the y of God, that they take litle comfort therof. For they be euen withall pinched with a miſerable carefulneſſe, while they dout her he will be mercifull to them or no, becauſe they encloſe n to narrow boundes the very ſame mercifulneſſe, of which they e themſelues, moſt aſſuredly perſwaded. For thus they thinke themſelues, that his mercy is in deede great and plentifull pou-ut vpon many, offring it ſelfe and ready for all men: but that it is ertaine whether it will extende vnto them or no, or rather whethey ſhall attaine vnto it or no. This thought when it ſtayeth in idde race, is but a halfe. Therefore it doth not ſo confirme the with aſſured quietnes, as it doth trouble it with vnquiete doutſſe. But there is a far other feeling of full aſſuredneſſe, which in criptures is alway aſſigned to faith, euen ſuch a one as plainely g before vs the goodnes of God, doth clearely put it out of dout. that can not be, but that we muſt needes truely feele and proue Ephe. 3. r ſelues the ſweteneſſe thereof. And therefore the Apoſtle out 12. th deriueth aſſured confidence, and out of it againe boldneſſe. hus he ſayth, that by Chriſt we haue boldneſſe, and an entrance confidence, which is through faith in him. By which words true-ſheweth, that it is no right fayth, but when we are bolde with mindes to ſhew our ſelues in the preſence of God. Which bold-procedeth not but of aſſured confidence of Gods good will and aluation. Which is ſo true, that many times this word Faith, is for Confidence.

16 But hereupon hangeth the chiefe ſtay of our faith, that we do not thinke the promiſes of mercy which the Lord offreth vs, true only in other beſide vs, & not at all in our ſelues: but rather that in inwardly embracinge them, we make them our owne. From hence Ro. 5.1. proceedeth that confidence which the ſame Paule in an other place calleth peace, vnles ſome had rather ſay, that peace is deriued of it, is an aſſuredne ſs that maketh the cõſcience quiete & chereful before God, without which the conſciẽce muſt of neceſſity be vexed, & as a maner torne in peeces with troubleſome trembling, vnleſſe perhaps it do forget God and it ſelfe, and ſo ſlomber a litle while. And I may truely ſay, For a litle while, for it doth not longe enioy that miſerable forgetfulnes, but is with oftẽ recourſe of the remembrance of God's iudgement ſharply tormented. Briefely, there is none truely faithfull but he that being perſuaded with a ſounde aſſuredneſſe that God is his mercifull and louing father, doth promiſe himſelfe all thinges vpon truſt of Gods goodneſſe: and none but he that truſting vpon the promiſes of Gods good will toward him, conceiueth an vndoubted He. 3.13 looking for of ſaluation: as the Apoſtle ſheweth in theſe wordes: we keepe ſure to the ende our confidence and glorying of hope. For hereby he meaneth that none hopeth well in the Lorde, but he that with confidence glorieth that he is heire of the kingedome of heauen. There is none (I ſay) faithfull, but he that leaning vpon the aſſuredneſſe of his owne ſaluation, doth confidently triumphe vpon the Deuill and death, as we are taught by that notable concluding Rom. 8. ſentence of Paule: I am perſuaded (ſaith he) that neither death, 38. life, nor Angels, nor principalties, nor powers, nor thinges preſent, nor things to come, ſhalbe able to ſeparate vs from the loue of God wherewith he embraceth vs in Chriſt Ieſu. And in like manner the ſame Apoſtle thinketh, that the eyes of our minde are by no meane well lightened, vnleſſe we ſee what is the hope of the Ephe 1. inheritance to which we are called. And ech where his common 18. maner of teaching is ſuch, that he declareth that no otherwiſe we do well comprehend the goodneſſe of God, vnleſſe we gather of it the frute of great aſſuredneſſe.

17 But (ſome man will ſay) the faithfull do finde by experience farre other thing within themſelues, which in recording the grace of God toward them, are not onely tempted with vnquietenes, which oftentimes chaunceth vnto them, but alſo are ſometime ſhaken with moſt grieuous terrours: ſo great is the vehemency of temptations to throw downe their mindes: which thing ſeemeth not ſufficiently to agree with that aſſuredneſſe of faith. Therefore this doubt swered, if we will haue our aforesayd doctrine to stand. But truely, when we teache that fayth ought to be certaine and assured, we do not imagine such a certainetie as is touched with no doutinge, nor such an assuredneſſe as is assayled with no carefulneſſe: but rather we say, that the faithfull haue a perpetuall strife with their owne fearefullneſſe. So farre be we from settlinge their consciences in such a peaseable quietenesse, as may be interrupted with no troubles at all. Yet on the other side we say, that in what sorte soeuer they be tossed, they do neuer fall and departe from that assured confidence which they haue conceiued of the mercy of God. The Scripture setteth forth no example of faith more plaine, or more notable than Dauid, specially if a man beholde the whole continuall course of his life. But yet howe he was not alway of quiete minde, himselfe declareth by innumerable complaintes, of which at this time it shall be sufficient to choose out a fewe. When he reprocheth his owne soule with troublesome motions, what is it else but that he is angry with his owne vnbeleuingneſſe? Why trembleſt thou my soule (sayth he) and why art thou disquieted within me? trust in God. And truely the same discouragement was a playne token of destruction, euen as he thought himselfe to be forsaken of God. And in an other place he made a larger cõfession therof, where he saith: I sayd in my ouerflow, I am cast out from the sight of thy eies. Also in an other place he disputeth with himselfe in carefull and miserable perplexity, yea & reasoneth of the very nature of God, sayinge: Hath God forgotten to be mercy? will he cast of for euer? And yet harder is that which followeth: But I haue sayd, To die is mine: charges are of the right hande of the hieſt. For, as in despeare he condemneth himselfe to destruction, and not only confesseth himselfe to be tossed with douting, as if he were vanquished in battell, he leaueth nothing to himself, because God hath forsaken him, and hath turned to destroy him, the right hande that was wont to be his helper. Wherefore not without cause he exhorteth his soule to returne to her quieteneſſe, because he had found by experience, that he was tossed amõg troublesome waues. And yet (which is marueilous) in all these assaultes, faith vpholdeth the heartes of the godly, and is truely like vnto a Date tree to endure and rise vpward against all burdens, howe great soeuer they be: and when he might seeme to be vtterly ouerwhelmed, yet in striuing himselfe, ceſſeth not to rise vp to God. And truely he that wrestleth with his owne weakeneſſe, resorteth to faith in his troubles, and is ready in a manner conqueror. Which may be gathered by this sentence and other like: Waite for the Lord, be strong, he shal strengthen thy heart:waite for the Lord. He reprocheth himselfe of fea-fulnes, & in repeating the same twise, cõfesseth himselfe to be times subiect to many troublesome motions. And in the meane he doth not onely become displeased with himselfe in these but earnestly endeuoureth to amendement. Truely if we will nerely by good examination compare him with Achaz, there chaz? As it was before sayd, that his heart was moued as the the woode are shaken with winde, though he hearde the he cessed not to quake for feare. This therefore is the propre & punishment of vnbeliefe, so to tremble for feare, that in he turneth himselfe away from God, that doth not open to the gate by faith. Contrariwise the faithfull whom the weight den of temptations maketh to stoupe, and in a maner oppressed constantly rise vp, although not without trouble and hardnesse because they know their owne weakenesse, they pray with the phet: Take not the word of trueth away from my mouth Psa.119 43. ly. By which words we are taught, that somtime they become as though their faith were vtterly ouerthrowen, yet they nor turne their backes, but proceede in their battel, & with encourage their slouthfulnesse, least by fauoringe themselues should grow to vnsensible dulnesse.

18 For the vnderstanding therof, it is needefull to returne to diuision of the flesh and the spirite, whereof we made mention other place, which doth in this behalfe most clearely appeare. godly heart therefore feeleth a diuision in it selfe, which is delited with sweteneesse by acknowledging of the goodnesse and partly griened with bitterneesse by feelinge of his owne partly resteth vpon the promise of the Gospell, and partly by reason of the testimony of his owne wickednesse: partly with conceiuing of life, and partly quaketh for feare of death. variation commeth by imperfection of faith, forasmuch as we be in so good case in the course of this present life, as beinge from all disease of distrustfulnesse to be altogether filled & with faith. Hereupon proceede those battels, when the fulnes that abideth in the remnants of the flesh, riseth vp to faith that is inwardly conceiued. But if in a faithfull minde be mixed with doutfulnesse, come we not then alway to this that faith standeth not in a certaine and cleare knowledge, cke & doutfully entangled knowledge of Gods will toward vs? No, t ſo. For though we be diuerſely drawen with ſundry thoughtes, yet e we not therfore by and by ſeuered from faith: though we be vexed h toſſing vp and downe of diſtruſtfulneſſe, yet are we not therfore owned in the bottomleſſe depth therof: and though we be ſhaken, be we not thruſt downe out of our place. For this is alway the de of this battell, that faith doth at length with wraſtling ouercome oſe hard troubles wherewith when ſhe is ſo beſieged, ſhe ſeemeth be in danger.

19 Let this be the ſumme of all. So ſoone as any drop of faith, be euer ſo ſmall, is poured into our hearts; we by and by beginne to holde the face of God milde and pleaſaunt, and louing toward vs: the ſame we ſee from a farre of, & farre diſtant from vs, but with ſure ſight, that we know we are not deceiued. Frō thenſe forward, we much we profit (as we ought continually to profit) as it were proceeding further, we come vnto ſo much the nerer, & therfore rainer beholding of him, & by very continuance he is made more diar vnto vs. So we ſee, that the minde enlightened with the owledge of God, is firſt holden wrapped in much ignorance, which tle and litle is wiped away. Yet the ſame minde is not ſo hinde- by being ignorant of ſome things, or by darkely ſeing that which ſeeth, but that ſhe enioyeth a clere knowledge of Gods wil toward , which is the firſt and principall point in faith. For as if a man be- ſhut vp in priſon, haue beames of the ſunne ſhininge in, ſidelonge narrowe window, or as it were but halfe glummeringe, he wan- h in deede the free beholdinge of the ſunne, yet he ſeeth with his s an vndouted brightneſſe thereof, and receiueth the vſe of it: ſo being bounde with the fetters of an earthly body, howſoeuer we on eche ſide ſhadowed with much darkenes, yet we are ſufficient- enlightened vnto perfect aſſuredneſſe, by the light of God, exten- g his beames of light vpō vs, though it be but a litle, to ſhew forth mercy.

20 Both theſe pointes the Apoſtle very well teacheth in diuerſe ces. For when he ſayth, that we know vnperfectly, and prophecie perfectly, and ſee by a darke ſpeakinge as by a glaſſe, he ſheweth w ſclender a litle portion of the true godly wiſedom is giuen vs in preſent life. For though thoſe words do not expreſſely ſhew that faith is vnperfect ſo longe as we grone vnder this burden of the , but that it happeneth vnto vs by our owne imperfection that we e neede to be continually exerciſed in learning: yet he ſecretly de- eth that that thinge which is infinite, can not be comprehended 1. together both much doutinge and fearefull trembling, ſpecially inaſmuch as our heart, by a certaine naturall inſtinct of it ſelfe, is enc-ned to vnbeleuingneſſe. Beſide that, there be tentations which both infinite in number, and diuerſe in kinde, do oftentimes with great didaine violence aſſaile vs. But ſpecially our owne conſcience oppre-ſed with heauy burden of ſinnes lying vpon it, doth ſomtime lament and grone with it ſelfe, and ſometime accuſeth it ſelfe: ſometime ſe-cretely murmureth, and ſometime is openly troubled. Whether the-fore aduerſities do ſhewe an apparance of the wrath of God, or the conſcience doth finde in it ſelfe any proufe or matter of his wrath, from thenſe vnbeliefe doth take weapons and engines to vanquiſh faith withall: which are alway directed to this ende, that we thinke God to be our aduerſarie and hatefully bent againſt vs, ſhoulde bee not hope for any helpe at his hande, & alſo be afraid of him as of an deadly enemy.

21 To beare theſe aſſaultes, faith doth arme & fortifie her ſelfe with the word of God. And when ſuch a tentation aſſaileth, that God is our enemy, becauſe he is ſharpe againſt vs: faith on the other ſide an-ſwereth, that euen when he puniſheth he is alſo mercifull becauſe his chaſtiſement commeth rather of loue than of wrath. When faith is ſtriken with this thought that God is a reuenger of iniquities, againſt that ſtroke he ſetteth his pardon ready for all offenſes, ſo oft as the ſinner reſorteth to the mercifulneſſe of the Lorde. So a godly man, howſoeuer it be in maruelous wiſe toſſed and vexed, yet at length riſeth vp aboue all daungers, & neuer ſuffereth the confidence of Gods mercy to be plucked away from it: But rather whatſoeuer commodo trouble and wery it, in the ende they turne to the aſſuredneſſe of this confidence. And hereof this is a proufe: that the holy ones, when they thinke theſelues moſt of all preſſed with the vengeance of God, yet euen then do make their complaintes to the ſame God: and when it ſeemeth that they ſhall not be heard at all, euen then neuertheleſſe they call vpon him. For to what purpoſe were it, to make their mo-him from whom they hoped for no comfort? truely they would uer finde in their heartes to call vpon him, vnlesse they beleued at there were some helpe at his hande prepared for them. So the Mat. 8.

ed in deede that they perished, but yet they called to him for help. nd when he rebuketh them for their small faith, yet he doth not ect them from the number of his, nor maketh them of the number the vnbeleuers, but stirreth them to shake of that fault. Therefore e affirme againe that which we haue aboue spoken, that the roote faith is neuer plucked out of a godly heart, but sticketh so fast in e bottome, that howsoeuer it be shaken and seeme to bende this ay or that way, the light therof is so neuer quenched or choked vp, t that it lieth at least hidden vnder some embers: and by this token plainely shewed, that the worde which is an vncorruptible seede, ngeth forth frute like to it selfe, the spring whereof doth neuer wi-er & vtterly perish. For whereas this is the extremest matter of de-eire to the holy ones, to feele according to the cõsidertaion of pre-nt thinges, the hande of God bent to their destruction: yet Iob af- Iob. 13. meth that his hope shal proceede so farre, that though God do kill 15. m, yet he will not therfore cesse to trust in him. This is the trueth erefore: Vnbeliefe reigneth not within the heartes of the godly, t outwardly assaileth them: neither doth she deadly wounde them th her wepons, but only troubleth them, or so hurteth thẽ, that yet e woũd is curable. For faith, as Paul teacheth, serueth vs for a shield Ephe. 6.

em, that it either vtterly driueth thẽ backe, or at least so breaketh eir violẽce, that they can not pearce them to danger of life. There when faith is shaken, it is like as if a stronge souldiour with the olent stroke of a dart be compelled to remoue his foote, and geue ounde a litle: and when faith it selfe is woundgd, that is like as if his ckler by some stroke be in some parte broken, but yet so that it is t striken through. For alway the godly minde will attaine to rise so hie as to say with Dauid, If I walke in the middest of the sha- Psa. 23.
w of death, I will feare none euill, because thou art with me. It is in 4. ede terrible to walke in the darkenes of death, and it can not be but t the faithful, how much strength soeuer they haue, must be afraid it. Yet because this thought surmounteth it, that they haue God sent with them, and prouiding for their safety, that feare is ouerme with assuredneſſe. For (as Augustine sayth) how great engines uer the deuil raiseth vp against vs, so long as he possesseth not the ce of the heart, where faith dwelleth, he is cast out of the dores.

And ſo if we may iudge by the ſucceſſe, the faithfull not only eſcape ſafe from euery battell, ſo that byandby receiuing freſh courage they are ready to come againe into the field: but alſo that is fulfilled which

1. Ioh. 5 4. Iohn ſaith in his canonical Epiſtle: This is the victory that ouercommeth the world, euen your faith. For he affirmeth that it ſhal not only winne the victory in one or few battels, or againſt ſome one aſſault, but alſo that it ſhall get the ouerhande of the whole world, although it be a thouſand times aſſailed.

22 There is an other kinde of feare and trembling, but ſuch a one as by it the aſſuredneſſe of faith is ſo nothing at all diminiſhed, that thereby it is the more ſoundly ſtabliſhed. That is, when the faithfull either in thinking that the examples of Gods vengeance againſt the wicked are ſhewed for leſſons for them to learne by, do carefully beware that they happen not to prouoke Gods wrath againſt themſelues with the ſame offenſes: or recordinge with themſelues their owne miſery, do learne to hang altogether vpon the Lord without whom they ſee themſelues to be more fickle and ſooner vaniſhinge than any blaſt of winde. For when the Apoſtle, in ſettinge ſoorth the ſcourge

1. Cor. 10. 11. wherewith the Lord in olde time had puniſhed the people of Iſrael, putteth the Corinthians in feare that they entangle not themſelues with like euils: he doth not thereby abate their affiance, but only taketh away the dulnes of the fleſh by which faith is wont more to be

Rom. 11 22. oppreſſed than ſtrengthned. And when he taketh occaſion of ſ Iewes fall to exhort him that ſtãdeth, to take heede that he fall not, he doth not thereby bid vs to wauer, as though we were not fully aſſured of our ſtedfaſtneſſe, but only he taketh away arrogant preſumption and raſh truſting to much in our owne ſtrẽgth, that after the thruſting out of the Iewes, the Gentiles being receiued into their place, ſhould not to much outragiouſly triumphe againſt thẽ. Albeit he ſpeaketh then not only to the faithfull, but alſo in the ſame ſaying comprehendeth the Hypocrites that gloried onely in outward ſhew. For neither doth he admoniſh euery man particularly, but makinge a compariſon betwene the Iewes & the Gentiles, after ſ he had ſhewed that the Iewes in this that they were reiected, did ſuffer iuſt puniſhment for their vnbeliefe and vnthankefolneſſe, he alſo exhorted the Gentiles that they ſhould not, by being proud and extolling themſelues, looſe the grace of adoption lately conueyed into them. But as in that generall caſting of the Iewes, there remained yet ſome that were not fallen from the couenant of adoption, ſo out of the Gentiles there might ariſe ſome, which without true faith, ſhould be puffed vp onely with fooliſh confidence of the fleſh, and ſo abuſe Gods louing kindeneſſe to their ne destruction. But although you take this as ſpoken to the elect & thfull, yet thereupon ſhall folow no inconuenience. For it is one nge to holde downe the raſh preſumption which out of the rem- ntes of the fleſh creepeth ſometime euen into the holy ones, that h vaine confidence it waxe not outragiouſly wanton: and an other ng to ſtrike the cõſcience with feare, that it reſt not with full aſſu- lneſſe in the mercy of God.

3 Thẽ, when he teacheth, that with feare & trembling we ſhould ke our owne ſaluation, he requireth nothinge elſe, but that we ould accuſtome vs with much abacing of our ſelues, reuerently to ke vp vnto the mightineſſe of God. For truely nothing doth ſo ch awake vs to caſt all our confidence & aſſurance of minde vpon e Lord as doth the diſtruſt of our ſelues and carefulnes conceiued knowledge in cõſcience of our own wretchednes. And according this meaning is that ſaying in the Prophet to be taken: In the mul- ude of thy goodneſſe I will entre into thy temple: I will worſhip in re. Where he comely cõioyneth the boldnes of faith that leaneth on Gods mercy with a reuerent feare, wich we muſt needes feele oft as comming into the ſight of Gods maieſty, we perceiue by the rious brightneſſe thereof, how great is our owne filthineſſe. And lomon ſayth truely, where he pronounceth the man bleſſed, that ntinually maketh his owne heart afraid, for by hardninge thereof en fall hedlong into euill. But ſuch feare he meaneth as may make more heedefull, not ſuch wherby we ſhould be troubled & vtterly keuen ſuch a feare as when the minde confounded in it ſelfe, doth couer it ſelfe againe in God: when deſpeiring it ſelfe, it reuiueth by ſt in him. Therfore there is no cauſe to the contrary, but that the thfull may at one time both be in feare, and alſo enioy moſt aſſu- cõfort, in reſpect that ſometime they turne their eyes to behold eir owne vanity, & ſometime they caſt the thought of their minde on the trueth of God. But how (will ſome man ſay) ſhall feare and th dwell both in one minde? euen thus, as contrarily vnſenſible lneſſe, and carefulneſſe. For wheras the wicked trauaile to procure themſelues a want of griefe, that no feare of God might trouble en, yet, the iudgement of God ſo preſſeth them, that they can not ame that which they deſire. So there is nothing to withſtande, but t God may exerciſe them that be his to humility, that in fighting ſiandly, they may reſtraine themſelues vnder the bridle of modeſty nd by the proceſſe of the text it appeareth, that this was the entẽt the Apoſtle, where he aſſigneth the cauſe of feare, and trembling be the good pleaſure of God, whereby he giueth to them that be his both to will well, and valiantly to go through with it. Accordinge Ose. 3 5 to this meaning ought we to take that sayinge of the Prophet: The children of Israel shall feare God and his goodnesse: because not only, godlines engēdreth the reuerence of God, but the very sweetnes and pleasant tast of grace, filleth man beinge discouraged in himselfe with feare & admiration, to make him hang vpon God, and humbly yeelde himselfe subiect to his power.

24 Yet we do not hereby make roome to that most pestilent Philosophie, which many halfe papistes at this day beginne to coyne in corners. For, because they can not defende that grosse doctrine which hath bin taught in Schooles, they flie to an other deuise, to make a confidēce mingled with distrustfulnes. They confesse, that as oft as we looke vnto Christ, we finde in him full matter to hope well: but because we are alwayes vnworthy of those good things that are offred vs in Christ, they would haue vs to wauer & stagger in beholdinge of our owne vnworthinesse. Briefely, they place conscience betwene hope & feare, that it altereth from the one to the other, by enterchangeable times & courses: and they so compare faith & hope together, that when the one springeth vp, the other is pressed downe, when the one ariseth, the other againe falleth. So when Satan seeth that those open engines wherewith before time he was wont to destroy the assuredneſse of faith, do now nothinge preuaile, he endeareth by crooked vnderminings to ouerthrow it. But what maner of confidence shall that be, which shall now and then yeelde to desperation? If (say they) thou consider Christ, there is assured saluation: but if thou returne to thy selfe, there is assured damnation. Therefore of necessity distrust and good hope must by enterchaungeable course reigne in thy minde: As though we ought to imagine Christ standing a farre of, and not rather dwellinge within vs. For therefore we looke for saluation at his hande, not because he appeareth a farre of vnto vs, but because he hath grafted vs into his body, & so maketh vs partakers not onely of all his good thinges, but also of himselfe. Therefore I thus turne this their argument against themselues: If thou consider thy selfe, there is certaine damnation. But because Christ with his good thinges is by way of communicatinge so giuen vnto thee that all his thinges are made thine, and thou art made a member of him, yea & all one with him: his righteousnesse drowneth thy sinne, his saluation taketh away thy damnation: he by his worthinesse commeth betwene thee and God, that thy vnworthinesse come not in the sight of God. Briefely, this is the trueth: we ought neither to separate Christ from vs, nor vs from him, but with both handes to holde fast him

e fellowſhip whereby he hath coupled himſelfe vnto vs. So the oſtle teacheth vs: The body in dede (ſaith he) is dead by reaſon of Rom. 8. ne: but the Spirite of Chriſt that dwelleth in you, is life for righte- 10. ſneſſe. According to theſe mens trifeling deuiſe he ſhoulde haue le, Chriſt in deede hath life with himſelfe: but you, as you be ſin-s, remaine ſubiect to death & damnation. But he ſaith farre otherſe. For he teacheth that that damnation which we deſerue of our es, is ſwallowed vp by the ſaluation of Chriſt, and to proue it, he th the ſame reaſon that I haue alleged, becauſe Chriſt is not with-vs, but dwelleth within vs, and cleaueth vnto vs not onely with ioudable knot of fellowſhip, but with a certaine maruellous comnion daily more and more groweth with vs into one body, till he made altogether one with vs. And yet I denie not, as I haue ſaid le before, that ſometime there happen certaine inrerruptions of h, as the weakeneſſe thereof is amonge violent ſodeine motions wed hether or thether. So in the thicke miſte of tẽtations the light reof is choked, but what ſo euer happeneth, it ceſſeth not from leuour to ſeeke God.

And no otherwiſe doth Bernarde argue, when he purpoſely reateth of this queſtion in his fift Homelie in the Dedication of temple. Oftentimes (I ſay) by the benefite of God ſtudying vpõ ſoule, me thinkes I finde in it two thinges as it were contrarie. If holde the ſoule it ſelfe, as it is in it ſelfe and of it ſelfe, I can ſay hing more truely of it, than that it is vtterly brought to nought. ut neede I now to recken vp particularly all the miſeries of the le, how it is loaden with ſinnes, couered with darkneſſe, entan-d with deceitfull enticementes, itching with luſtes, ſubiect to paſs, filled with illuſions, alway enclined to euill, bent to all kindes ice, finally ful of ſhame and confuſion? Now if all the very righteneſſes of it being looked vpõ by the light of trueth be found like Eſa. 64. che ſtained with floures, then what ſhall the vnrighteouſneſſes 6 reof be accompted? If the light that is in vs be darkeneſſe, how Matt. 6. t ſhall the very darkeneſſe be? What then? without doubte man 13. ade like vnto vanitie: man is brought to naught: man is nothing. how then is he vtterly nothing, whome God doth magnifie? How is he nothing, towarde whome Gods hearte is ſet? Brethren, let ke hearte againe. Though we be nothing in our owne heartes, aduenture there may ſomewhat of vs lie hidden in the hearte of O father of mercies? O father of the miſerable, how doeſt thou y hearte towarde vs? For thy hearte is where thy treaſure is. how be we thy treaſure, if we be nothing? All nations are ſo before thee as if they were not, they ſhalbe reputed as nothing. Euen before thee, not within thee: ſo in the iudgement of thy truth, but not in the affection of thy pitie. Thou calleſt thoſe thinges that are not, as though they were. Therefore both they are not, becauſe thou calleſt thoſe thinges that are not, & alſo they are bycauſe thou calleſt them. For though they are not, in reſpect of them ſelues, yet with thee they are, according to that ſaying of Paule, not of the workes of Rom. 9. 12. righteouſneſſe, but of him that calleth. And then he ſaieth, that this coupling together of both cõſideracions is maruellous. Truely thoſe thinges that are knit together, doe not the one deſtroy the other. Which alſo in the concluſion he more plainely declareth in theſe wordes. Now if with both theſe conſiderations we diligently looke vpon our ſelues what we be, yea in the one conſideration how we be nothing, and in the other how much we be magnified, I thinke our glorying ſemeth to be tempered, but paraduenture it is more encreaſed. Truely it is perfectly ſtabliſhed, that we glorie not in our ſelues but in the Lorde. If we thinke thus: if he hath determined to ſaue vs, we ſhall byandby be deliuered: now in this we may take courage. But let vs climbe vp into a hier watche toure, and ſeeke for the citie of God, ſeeke for the temple, ſeeke for the houſe, ſeke for the ſpouſe. I haue not forgotten, but I ſay it with feare and reuerence, we liue not be, but in the harte of God. We be, but by his allowing as worthie, not by our owne worthineſſe.

26 Now, the feare of the Lorde, whereof commonly in ech place witneſſe is borne to all the holy ones, and which is in ſome places Prou. 1. 7. Pſa 100 11. Pro. 15. 14. Mala. 1. 7. Iob 8. 28. ces called the beginning of wiſedome, and in ſome places wiſedome it ſelfe, although it be but one, yet it procedeth from a double vnderſtanding. For God hath in himſelfe the reuerence both of a father and of a Lorde. Therefore he that will truely worſhip him, muſt endeuor to ſhewe himſelfe both an obedient ſonne and a ſeruant vnto him. The obedience that is geuen to him as to a father, the Lorde by his Prophet calleth honor: the ſeruice that is done him as to a lorde, he calleth feare. The ſonne (ſaieth he) honoreth the father, and the ſeruant the lorde. If I be a father, where is my honor? If I be a lorde, where is my feare? But how ſoeuer he putteth the difference betwene them, thou ſeeſt how he confoundeth them both together. Therefore let the feare of the lorde be vnto vs a reuerence mingled with that ſame honor and feare. Neither is it any maruell that one minde receiue both thoſe affections. For he that conſidereth with himſelfe what a father God is vnto vs, hath cauſe enough, though there were no helles at all, why he ſhoulde drede his [illegible] more grieuouſely than any death. But alſo (ſuch is the wanton-ſe of our fleſh to runne to licentiouſneſſe of ſinning) to reſtraine ſame by all meanes, we ought therewithall to take holde of this ught, that the Lorde vnder whoſe power we liue, abhorreth all untie, whoſe vengeance they ſhall not eſcape, that in liuing wicly doe prouoke his wrath againſt themſelues.

7 But that which Iohn ſaieth, that feare is not in charitie, but perfect charitie caſteth out feare, becauſe feare conteineth puniſh- 1. Ioh. 4. 18. nt, diſagreeth not with this that we ſay. For the wicked feare not d in this reſpect that they drede to incurre his diſpleaſure, if they ght do it without puniſhment: but becauſe they know him to be ed with power to reuenge: therefore they ſhake for feare at the ring of his wrath. And alſo they ſo feare his wrath, becauſe they ke that it hangeth ouer them, for that they looke euery moment en itſhall fall vpon their heades. As for the faithfull: they (as is re ſaid) both feare his diſpleaſure more than puniſhment, and are troubled with feare of puniſhment as if it did hang ouer their kes, but they are made the more ware not to procure it. So ſaith Apoſtle, when he ſpeaketh to the faithfull: Be ye not deceiued: Ephe. 5. 6. this commeth the wrath of God vpon the children of vnbeleefe. Col 3.6 threateneth not that Gods wrath will come vpon them, but put-them in minde to thinke vpon this, that the wrath of God is pared for ſuch wicked doinges as he had recited, that they themes ſhoulde not be willing alſo to proue it. Albeit it ſeldome hapeth that the reprobate be awakened with only and bare threate-ges, but rather being already groſſe and vnſenſibly dull with their e hardneſſe, ſo oft as God thundreth from heauen they harden mſelues to obſtinacie, but when they are ones ſtriken with his de, then whether they will or no, they be enforced to feare. This e they commonly call a ſeruile feare: and in compariſon ſet it for trarie to free natured and willing feare which becommeth chil-n. Some other do ſuttelly thruſt in a middle kinde, becauſe that e ſeruile and conſtrained affection ſometime ſo ſubdueth mens des, that they come willingly to the feare of God.

8 Now we vnderſtand, that in the good will of God, whereunto h is ſaide to haue reſpect, the poſſeſſion of ſaluation and eternall is obteined. For if we can wante no good thing while God is fa-able vnto vs, it abundantly ſufficeth vs to the aſſuredneſſe of ſalua-, when he himſelfe doth aſſure vs of his loue. Let him ſhewe his (ſaith the Prophet) and we ſhalbe ſafe. Wherupon the Scriptures Pſal. 80 rmine this to be the ſumme of our ſaluation, that God putting 4.

Ephe.2. 14. away all enmities, hath receiued vs into fauour. Whereby they know that when God is reconciled vnto vs, there remaineth no perill, but that all thinges shall prosper well with vs. Therefore faith, hauing taken holde of the loue of God, hath promises of the present life and of the life to come, and perfect assuredneſſe of all good thinges: but that same such as may be gathered out of the word of God. For faith doth not certainely promise to it selfe either the length or honour or wealth of this life, for asmuch as God willed none of these things to be apointed vnto vs, but is contented with this assuredneſſe, that God will neuer faile how so euer many thinges faile vs that pertain to the maintenance of this present life. But the chiefe assurednesse of faith resteth in expectation of the life to come, which is set out doubt by the worde of God. But what so euer miseries and calamities betide vnto them whome God loueth, they can not worke the contrarie, but that his good will is perfect felicitie. Therefore when we did meane to expresse the summe of blessednesse, we named the fauor of God, out of which spring do flow vnto vs al kindes of good thinges. And this we may cõmonly note throughout the Scripture, that when so euer mention is made not onely of eternall saluation but also of any good thing in vs, we be alway called backe to the loue

Psa. 63. 4. of God. For which cause Dauid saieth, that the goodneſſe of God when it is felt in a godly hearte, is swetter and more to be desired than life it selfe. Finally, if all thinges els do flow vnto vs according to our owne wishing, and we be vncertaine of Gods loue or hatred, our felicitie shalbe accursed, and therefore miserable. But if the fauorable face of God do shine vnto vs, euen our very miseries shalbe blessed

Rom. 8. 35. because they are turned to helpes of our saluation. As Paule, when he heaped vp a rehearsall of all aduersities, yet he glorieth that he was not by them seuered from the loue of God: and in his prayers alway beginneth at the fauour of God, from whence floweth all

Psa. 23. 4. sperities. Likewise Dauid setteth the onely fauour of God against the terrors that trouble vs. If (saith he) I shall walke in the middes of the shadowe of death, I will feare no euils, because thou art with me. And we alway feele that our mindes do wauer, vnlesse being contented with the fauour of God, they seeke their peace in it, and

Psa. 33. 12. this inwardely fixed in them that is said in the Psalme, Blessed is the people whose God is the Lord, and the nation whome he hath chosen to him for his inheritance.

29 We make the fundation of faith to be the free promise of God, bycause faith proprely stayeth vpon it. For though faith doth beleue God to be true in all thinges, whether he commaunde bidde, whether he promise or threaten, and also obediently receiueth his commaundementes, and beware th of thinges that he prohibiteth, and hath regard to his threateninges, yet properly it beleeueth at the promise, and therein continueth, and therevpon entreateth. For faith seeketh for life in God, which is not founde in commaundementes or declarations of penalties, but in promise of mercie, and in no other promise, but such as is freely geuen. For the conditionall promise, by which we are sente to our owne workes, doth no otherwise promise life, but if we perceiue it to stande in our selues. Therefore if we will not haue our faith to tremble and wauer, we must ioyne it with that promise of saluation, which is willingly and liberally offered vs of the Lorde, rather in respect of our miserie, than of our righteousnesse. Wherefore the Apostle beareth this witnesse of the Gospell, that it is the word of faith: which name he taketh both from the commaundementes and also from the promises of the lawe, because there is nothing that can stablish faith, but that liberall embassage, by which God reconcileth the worlde to himselfe. Therefore the same Apostle oftentimes maketh a relatiō of faith and the Gospell together, when he teacheth that the ministerie of the Gospell is committed to him vnto the obedience of faith. that the same is the power of God, to saluation to euery one that beleeueth: that in it is reuealed the righteousnes of God from faith to faith. And no marueil. For sith the Gospell is the ministerie of reconciliation, there is no other testimonie sure enough of Gods good will towarde vs, the knowledge wherof faith requireth. Therefore when we say that faith doth rest vpon free promise, we do not denie but that the faithful do euery way embrace and receiue the word of God, but we apoint the promise of mercie to be the propre marke of faith. Euen as the faithfull ought in deede to acknowledge God to be the iudge and punisher of wicked doinges, and yet they properly haue regard vnto his mercifull kindenesse: for asmuch as he is described to them to be considered such a one as is louing and mercifull, farre from wrath, full of much goodnesse, gentle vnto all, pouring forth his mercie vpon all his workes.

30 Neither yet do I regarde the barkinges of Pighius, or such other dogges, when they finde faulte with this restraint, as though in speaking faith, it did take holde but of one peece thereof. I graunt (as I haue already saide) that the generall obiect of faith (as they terme it) is the truthe of God, whether he threaten or put vs in hope of fauour. Wherefore the Apostle ascribeth this to faith, that Noe feared the destruction of the worlde, when it was not yet seene. If the feare of a punishment shortly to come, was the worke of faith, t ought not the threateninges to be excluded out of the definicon faith. This is in deede true. But the cauillers do vniustly accuse as though we denied that faith hath respect to all the partes of t worde of God. For our meaning is onely to shew those two thin first, that faith neuer stedfastly standeth vntill it come to the promise: and than that we are no otherwise by it to be reconciled God, but becawse it coupleth vs to Christ. Both those pointes worthily to be noted. We seeke such a faith, which may make di rence betwene the children of God and the reprobate, betwene faithfull and the vnbeleuing. If a man do beleue that God both ly commaundeth all that he commaundeth, and truely threatneth shall he be therefore called faithfull? Nothing lesse. Therefore the can be no stedfast stay of faith, vnlesse it be grounded vpon the cie of God. But now to what ende do we dispute of faith? Is it that we may learne the way of saluation? But how doth faith bri Therefore there is no inconuenience, if in the definition we do force the principall effect therof, & do ioyne vnto the general in stede of a difference that marke that seuereth the faithfull fro vnbeleuing. Finally, the malicious haue nothing to finde fault wi Rom.10 8. in this doctrine, but they must wrappe vp Paule with vs in the blame, which calleth the Gospell properly the word of faith.

Psa. 9. 11. neede the liuely roote of the tree, becawse none other (as Da stifieth) can trust in the Lorde, but they that know his name. Bu knowledge is not according to euery mans imagination, but so as God himselfe is witnesse of his owne goodnesse. Which the

Where is to be noted the relation of faith to the worde, and how saluation followeth. And yet in the meane time we do no clude the power of God, with beholding whereof, vnlesse steine it selfe, it can neuer geue vnto God his due honour. Paule ſometimes creepe into mans minde, he ſhall well perceiue that they which do highly eſteeme it as it is worthy, haue not a litle profited in faith. We all will confeſſe that God is able to do whatſoeuer he will, but when euen the leaſt tentatiõ throweth vs downe with feare, and amaſeth vs with horrour, thereby appeareth plainely, that we di-miſh the eſtimation of Gods power, when we preferre aboue it thoſe thinges, that Satan threatneth againſt Gods promiſes. This is the reaſon why Eſaie, meaning to print into the hartes of the people the aſſuredneſſe of ſaluation, doth ſo honorably entreate of the infinite power of God. It ſeemeth oft that ſo ſone as he hath begonne to ſpeake of the hope of pardon and reconciliation, he byandby turneth to an other thing, and wandereth about in long and ſuperfluous circumſtances, reherſing how maruelouſly the Lorde gouer-neth the frame of heauen and earth and the whole ordre of nature: as if there nothing that ſerueth not fittly for the circumſtãce of the matter that he ſpeaketh of. For vnleſſe the power of God whereby he is able to do all thinges be preſently ſet before our eyes, our eares will hardely heare the worde, or will not eſteeme it ſo much as it is worth. Beſide that, here is declared his effectuall power, becauſe god-neſſe (as we haue already ſhewed in an other place) doth alway ap-poynte the power of God to vſe and worke, ſpecially it ſetteth before it thoſe workes of God, whereby he hath teſtified himſelfe to be father. Herevpon commeth that in the Scriptures is ſo often mention made of the redemption, whereby the Iſraelites might haue learned that God which was ones the author of ſaluation, will be an euerlaſting preſeruer thereof. And Dauid putteth vs in minde by his owne example, that thoſe benefites which God hath particularly beſtowed vpon euery man, do afterwarde auaile to the confirmation of our faith. Yea when God ſeemeth to haue forſaken vs, it behoueth vs to ſtrech our wittes further, that his auncient benefites may re-comforte vs, as it is ſaide in an other Pſalme: I haue bene mindefull Pſa.100 ginning. But becauſe without the worde all quickely vaniſheth away 11. out of our mindes, if we conceiue of the power of God and of his workes, therefore we do not without cauſe affirme that there is no faith, vnleſſe God do alſo light vnto it with teſtimonie of his grace. But here a queſtion might be moued, what is to be thought of Sara and Rebecca, both Gen.16. which being moued as it ſeemeth with zele of faith, paſſed beyonde the bondes of the worde. Sara, when ſhe feruently deſired the pro-miſed iſſue, gaue her bondemaide to her husbande. It can not be denied but that she many wayes sinned: but nowe I touch onely faulte, that being carried awaye with her zele, she did not rest herselfe within the boundes of Gods word, yet it is certaine that Gen.26 desire proceeded of faith. Rebecca being certified by the oracle God of the electiō of her sonne Iacob, procured his blessing by crafty meanes: she deceiued her housbande the witnesse and of the grace of God: she compelled her sonne to lie: she by guiles and deceites corrupted the trueth of God. Finally in a scorne of his promise, she did as much as in her laie, destroie yet this act, how much soeuer it was euill, and worthy of blame, not without faith, for it was necessarie that she shoulde many offenses, that she might so earnestly endeuour to attein which without hope of earthly profite was full of great troubles daungers. As we may not say that the holy Patriarche Isaac was gether without faith, because he being by the same oracle of admonished of the honour transferred to the yonger sonne, yet sed not to be more fauourably bente to his first begotten sonne Truely these examples do teach, that oftetimes erroures are with faith: but yet so that faith if it be a true faith, hath alwaye vpper hande. For as the particular errour of Rebecca did not voide the effect of the blessing, so neither did it make voide her which generally reigned in her minde, and was the beginning cause of that doinge. Neuertheless therein Rebecca vttered ready mans minde is to fall so sone as he geueth him selfe litle libertie. But though mans defaut and weakenesse doth faith, yet it doth not quenche it: in the meane time it putteth minde, how carefully we ought to hange vpon the mouth of and also confirmeth that which we haue taught, that faith awaye, vnlesse it be vpholden by the worde: as the mindes Sara, and Isaac and Rebecca had become vaine in their crooked deringes out of the way, vnlesse they had bene by Gods secret holden in obedience of the worde.

32 Againe, not without cause we include all the promises in Rom. 1. 17. foraſmuch as in the knowledge of him the Apostle includeth Gospell: and in an other place he teacheth, that all the 2. Cor. 1 20. God are in him, yea and Amen. The reason whereof is shewed. For if God promise any thing, he therein sheweth will: so that there is no promise of his, that is not a testimonie loue. Neither maketh it any matter that the wicked when they great and continual benefites of Gods liberalitie heaped vpon do therby wrap themselues in so much the more grieuous ſith they do neither thinke nor acknowledge that thoſe thinges y do not with them ſelues conſider his goodneſſe, therfore they not thereby be better taught of his mercie than brute beaſtes, ich according to the meaſure of their eſtate, do reect iut the ſame e of Gods liberalitie, and yet they perceiue it not. Neither doth ny more make againſt vs, that many times in refuſing the proſes appointed for them, they do by that occaſion procure to them es the greater vengeance. For although the effectuall working of promiſes do then onely appeare, when they haue founde faith h vs, yet the force and naturall propretie of them is neuer extinſhed by our vnbeleefe or vnthankfulneſſe. Therefore when the de by his promiſes doth prouoke man not onely to receiue, but to thinke vpon the frutes of his bountifulneſſe, he doth there-hall declare vnto him his loue. Wherevpon we muſt returne to pointe, that euery promiſe is a teſtifying of Gods loue towarde was partly vnexpreſſed, not onely concerning Chriſtes perſon, but alſo concerning his power and the office committed vnto him of the Father. Yet in the meane time it is certaine, that they were instructed in ſuch principles, as gaue then ſome taſt of Chriſt, although but very ſmall. Neither ought this to ſeeme ſtrãge. For neither would the Eunuche haue come in haſt to Ieruſalem from a farre country to worſhip an vnknowene God, neither did Cornelius whẽ he had once embraced the Ieweiſh religion ſpende ſo much time, without being acquainted with the firſt groundes of true doctrine. As for Naaman it had bene to fonde an abſurditie for Elizeus when he taught him of ſmall things, to haue ſaide nothing of the principall point. Therefore although there were among them a darke knowledge of Chriſt yet it is not likely ỹ there was no knoweledge becauſe they did exercise them ſelues in the ſacrifices of the lawe, which muſt haue bene concerned by the very ende of them, that is Chriſt, from the falſe ſacrifices of the Gentiles.

33 But this bare and outward declaration of the worde of God ought to haue largely ſufficed to make it be beleued, if our owne blindeneſſe and ſtubbourneſſe did not withſtande it. But oure mynde hath ſuch an inclination to vanitie, that it can neuer cleaue faſt vnto the trueth of God, and hath ſuch a dulneſſe, that it is alwaie blinde and can not ſee the light thereof. Therefore there is nothing auailably done by the worde without the enlightning of the holy Ghoſt. Whereby alſo appeareth, that faith is farre aboue mans vnderſtanding. Neither ſhall it be ſufficient that the minde be lightned with the ſpirit of God, vnleſſe the hearte be alſo ſtrengthened & ſtabliſhed with his power. Wherein the Schoolemen do altogether erre, which in conſidering of faith, do onely take holde of a bare and ſimple aſſent by knowledge, leauing out the confidence and aſſurednes of the hearte. Therefore faith is both waies a ſingular gift of God, both that the minde of man is cleanſed to taſt the trueth of God, and that his hearte is ſtabliſhed therein. For the holy Ghoſt not onely is the beginner of faith, but alſo by degrees encreaſeth it, vntill he 2. Tim. 1 bring vs to the heauenly kingdome. That good thing (ſaith Paule) 14. which was committed to thy keping, kepe in the holy Ghoſt which Gal. 3. 2. dwelleth in vs. But how Paule ſaith that the holy Ghoſt is gotten the hearing of faith, we may eaſily diſſolue it. If there had been one onely gifte of the holy Ghoſt, then it had bene an abſurditie him to call the holy Ghoſt the effect of faith, which is the cauſe of faith. But when he maketh report of the giftes where God garniſheth his Church, and by encreaſinges of faith bringeth to perfection, it is no meruell if he aſcribe thoſe thinges which maketh vs vnfit to receiue them. This is reckened a moſt ſtrãge conclusion, when it is ſaid, that no man but he to whome it is geuen, can beleue in Christ. But that is partely bycauſe they do not conſider either how ſecret and hie the heauenly wiſedome is, or how great mans dulneſſe is in conceiuing the miſteries of God: and partely bycauſe they looke not vnto that aſſured and ſtedfaſt conſtantneſſe of heart, that is to ſay, the chiefe parte of faith.

34 But if (as Paule preacheth) no man is witneſſe of the will of man, but the ſpirit of man that is within him, then how ſhoulde man be ſure of the will of God? And if the trueth of God be vncertaine among vs, in thoſe thinges that we preſently beholde with our eye, howe ſhoulde it be aſſured and ſteadfaſt among vs there where the Lord promiſeth ſuch thing as neither eye ſeeth, nor wit comprehendeth? But herein mans ſharpneſſe of vnderſtãding is ſo ouerthrowene and faileth, that the firſt degree of profiting in Gods ſchoole, is to forſake his owne wit. For by it as by a veile caſt before vs, we are hindred that we can not atteine the miſteries of God, which are not diſcloſed but to litle ones. For neither doth fleſh and bloude diſcloſe, nor naturall man perceiue thoſe thinges that are of the Spirite, but vnto him the learning of God is fooliſhneſſe, becauſe it is ſpiritually to be iudged. Therefore herein the helpe of the holy Ghoſt is neceſſarie, or rather herein his force only reigneth. There is no man that knoweth the minde of God, or hath bene his counſeller: but the holy Spirit ſearcheth out all thinges, euen the depe ſecretes of God, in whome it is brought to paſſe, that we knowe the minde of Christ. No man (ſaith he) can come to me, vnleſſe my father that ſent me, drawe him. Euery one therefore that hath hearde and learned of my father, commeth. Not that any man hath ſeene the father, but he that is ſent of God. Euen as therefore we can not come vnto Chriſt, but being drawene by the Spirite of God: ſo when we be drawene, we are lifted vp in wit and minde aboue our owne vnderſtanding. For the ſoule enlightned by him, taketh as it were a new ſharpneſſe of vnderſtanding, wherewith it may beholde heauenly miſteries, with brightneſſe whereof it was before daſeled in it ſelfe. And ſo mans vnderſtanding receiuing brightnes by the light of the holy Ghoſt, doth then truely beginne to taſt of thoſe thinges that belong to the kingdome of God, being before altogether vnſauourie and without iudgement of taſt to take aſſay of them. Therefore when Chriſt notably ſet our vnto two of his Diſciples ỹ miſteries of his kingdome, yet he nothing preuailed, vntill he opened their ſenſes that they might vnderſtand the Scriptures. When the Apoſtles were ſo taught by his Godly mouth, yet the Spirit of trueth muſt be ſent vnto them, to poure into their mindes the ſame doctrine which they had hearde with their eares. The worde of God is like vnto the ſunne that ſhineth vnto all them to whome it is preached, but to no profit among blinde men. But we are all in this behalfe blinde by nature, therefore it can not pearce into our minde but by the inward mouing of the holy Ghoſt, making by his enlightning an entrie for it.

35 In an other place, when we had to entreat of the corruption of nature, we haue more largely ſhewed how vnfit men are to beleeue. Therfore I will not wery the readers with repeting the ſame againe. 2. Cor. 4. 13. Let this be ſufficient that the ſpirit of faith, is called of Paule faith ſelfe, which the ſpirit geueth vs, but not which we haue naturally. 2. Theſ. 1. 11. Therefore he prayeth that God fulfill in the Theſſalonians all the good pleaſure, and the worke of faith in power. Wherin calling faith the worke, of God, and geuing it that title for a name of addition, and calling it by figure of appoſitiō Gods good pleaſure, he denieth that it is of mans owne motion: and not contented therewith he addeth further, that it is a declaration of Gods power: writing to the Corinthians, where he ſaith, that faith hangeth not vpon the wiſedome of men, but is grounded vpō the power of the holy Ghoſt. He ſpeaketh in deede of outwarde miracles: but becauſe the reprobate are blinded at the beholding of them, he comprehendeth alſo that inwarde ſecret whereof he maketh mention in an other place. And God, the more glorioufly to ſet forth his liberalitie in ſo noble a gifte, vouchſafeth not to graunt it to all vniuerſally without difference, but by ſingular priuilege geueth it to whome he will. For proofe whereof we haue alleged teſtimonies before. Of which Auguſtine being a faithfull expoſitor, crieth out that it woulde pleaſe the Sauiour to teache him, and that the very beleeuing it ſelfe, is of gift and not of deſert. No man (ſaith he) commeth to me, vnleſſe my father drawe him, and to whome it is geuen of my father. It is maruellous that two heare, the one deſpiſeth, the other aſcendeth vp. Let him that deſpiſeth, impute it to himſelfe: let him that aſcende not, it arrogate aſſigne to himſelfe. In an other place. Why is it geuen to one and to an other? It greueth me not to ſay it, this is the depth of the croſſe. Out of I wote not what depth of the iudgements of God which may not ſearche, procedeth all that we can. What I can, I ſee: what I can, I ſee not, ſauing that I ſee thus farre, that it is of God. But why him, and not him? That is muche to me. It is a bottomeleſſe depth, it is the depth of the croſſe. I may crie out with wonder, but not ſhewe it in diſputing. Finally the ſumme commeth to t Chriſt when he enlightneth vs vnto faith by the power of his irit, doth there withall graffe vs into his body, that we may be ade partakers of all good thinges.

36 Nowe remaineth that that which the minde hathe receiued, y be further conueyed into the heart. For the word of God is not roughly receiued by faith, if it ſwimme in the toppe of the braine, t when it hath taken roote in the bottome of the heart that it may e an inuincible defenſe to beare and repulſe all the engines of tẽtaons. Nowe if it be true, that the true vnderſtanding of the minde is e enlightning thereof, then in ſuch confirmation of the hearte, his wer much more euidẽtly appereth, euen by ſo much as the diſtruſt-neſſe of the hearte is greater than the blindneſſe of the wit: and it is harder to haue the minde furniſhed with aſſuredneſſe, than the t to be inſtructed with thinking. Therefore the Spirite performeth e office of a ſeale, to ſeale vp in our heartes thoſe ſame promiſes, e aſſurance whereof it firſt emprinted in oure wits, and ſerueth for earneſt to confirme and ſtabliſh them. Sith ye beleued (ſaith the poſtle) ye are ſealed vp with the holy Spirite of promiſe, which is Eph. 1. e earneſt of oure inheritance. See you not how he teacheth that 13 the ſpirit the heartes of the faithfull are grauen as with a ſeale? and w for the ſame reaſon he calleth him the Spirit of promiſe, byſe he ratifieth the Goſpẽll vnto vs? Likewiſe to the Corinthians he 2. Cor. 1

Heb.10. 36. 38 Hereby we may iudge how pestilent is that doctrine of the Scholemen, that we can no otherwise determine of the grace of God towarde vs, than by morall coniecture as euery man thinketh himselfe worthy of it. Truely if we shall wey by oure workes how God is minded towarde vs, I graunt that we can atteine it with any coniecture, be it neuer so sclender: but sith faith ought to haue relation to a simple and free promise, there is lefte no cause of doubting. For wat what confidence (I beseeche you) shall we be armed, if we say that God is fauourable vnto vs vpon this condition, so that the purenes of oure life do deserue it? But bycause I haue appointed one place proprely for the discussing hereof, therefore I will speake no mor of them at this present, specially for asmuch as it is plaine enough that there is nothing more contrary to faith, than either coniectu or any thing neere vnto doubting. And they do very ill wryth to th purpose that testimonie of the Preacher which they haue oft in the 39 But they alleage that it is a point of rash presumption, to take on vs an vndoubted knoweledge of Gods will. I would in deede aunt it vnto them, if we did take so much vpon vs, that we woulde

Ser. 1. in Annun-tiatione. more rightly doth Bernard teach: I beleue (saith he) that ỹ testimony of conscience, which Paul calleth the glory of ỹ godly, consisteth in three thinges. For first of all it is necessary to beleue ỹ thou canst not

2. Cor. 1. haue forgiuenes of sinnes, but by ỹ pardon of God: then ỹ thou canst haue no good worke at all, vnles he also giue it: last of all ỹ thou canst by no works deserue eternal life, vnles it also be giuen freely. After after he addeth ỹ these things suffice not, but that there is a certaine beginning of faith, because in beleuing ỹ sinnes can not be forgiuen but of God, we ought also to beleue ỹ they are not forgiuē vs, til also we be perswaded by ỹ testimony of the holy Ghost, ỹ saluation is laid vp in store for vs: because God forgiueth sinnes, he himselfe giueth merites, & he himselfe also giueth rewards, that we may not stay in this beginning. But these & other things shalbe to be entreated of in places fit for them. Now let it only suffice to know what faith is.

42 Now whersoeuer this liuely faith shalbe, it can not be possible but that it hath with it ỹ hope of eternall saluation, as an vndeuided cōpanion: or rather that it engendreth or bringeth it foorth out of it selfe, which hope being taken away, how eloquently, gloriously soeuer we talke of faith, yet we are conuicted to haue no faith at all, for if faith (as is aboue said) be an assured persuasion of Gods trueth, that it can not lye vnto vs nor deceiue vs, nor become voide, then they that haue conceiued this assuredneſſe, truely do therwithal looke for a time to come that God shall performe his promises, which in their persuasion can not be but true: so that briefely, hope is nothing else but a looking for those thinges which faith hath beleued to be truely promised of God. So faith beleueth that God is true, hope looketh for the performāce of his trueth in conuenient time. Faith beleueth that he is our Father, hope looketh for him to shew himselfe such one towarde vs. Faith beleueth that eternall life is giuen vs, hope looketh that it be one day reuealed. Faith is the foundation whereupon hope resteth, hope nourisheth & sustaineth faith. For as no man can looke for any thing at Gods hand, but he that hath first beleued his promises: so againe the weakenesse of our faith must with patient hope and expectation be susteined and cherished, that it fall not

Rom. 8. 24. as fainting for wearinesse. For which reason Paul doth well place our saluation in hope. For hope, while it in silence looketh for the Lord restrayneth faith that it fall not headlonge with too much haste: hope strengthneth faith, that it wauer not in Gods promises, nor begin to dout of the trueth of them: hope refresheth faith that it wax not weary: Hope stretcheth faith to the vttermost bounde, that it faint not in the midde course nor in the very beginning. Finally, hope bringeth ally renuinge and reſtoringe, it maketh it now and then to riſe freſher than it ſelfe to continuance. But howe many wayes the pes of hope are neceſſary to the ſtrengthning of faith, ſhall better peare, if we conſider with how many ſortes of temptations they aſſaded and ſhaken, that haue embraced the word of God. Firſt e Lord in differing his promiſes doth oftentimes hold our mindes ger in ſuſpenſe than we woulde wiſh: here it is the office of hope performe, that which the Prophet commaundeth, that though Heb.2.3

And now it is e how fooliſhly Peter Lomberd laieth two foundations of hope is the grace of God, & the deſeruinge of workes. Hope can haue other marke to be directed vnto, but faith: and we haue already de- ed that faith hath one only marke the mercy of God, to which it t to looke (as I may ſo ſpeake) with both eyes. But it is good to heare what a liuely reaſon he bringeth. If (ſayth he) thou darſt hope for any thing without deſeruinges, ỹ ſhall not be worthy to be called hope, but preſumptiõ. Who (gentle reader) wil not worthily abhorre ſuch beaſtes, that ſay, it is a raſh and preſumpteous deede, if a man haue confidence that God is true of his worde? For where the Lord willeth vs to looke for all thinges at his goodneſſe, they ſay it is preſumption to leane and reſt vpon it. But as for vs, whom we ſee that we are commaunded by the oracles of God to conceaue a hope of ſaluation, let vs gladly preſume ſo much vpon his truth, as truſting vpon his only mercy, caſting away the confidence of works, to be bold to hope well. He will not deceiue that ſaid: Be it vnto you Matt. 9. 29. according to your faith.

The iij. Chapter.

That vve are regenerate by faith. VVherein is entreated of Repentance.

ALbeit we haue already partely taught howe faith poſſeſſeth Chriſt, and howe by it we enioy his benefites: neuertheleſſe this were yet darke, vnleſſe we did alſo make declaration of the effectes that we feele therby. Not without cauſe it is ſaid that the ſum of the Goſpell ſtandeth in repentance and in forgiuenneſſe of ſinnes. Therefore leauinge out theſe two pointes, whatſoeuer we ſhall ſay of faith, ſhalbe but a hungry & vnperfect, yea and in manner vnprofitable diſputation of faith. Now foraſmuch as Chriſt doth giue both vnto vs, and we obtaine both by faith, that is to ſay both newneſſe of life and free reconciliation, reaſon and order of teaching requireth, that in this place I begin to ſpeake of both. Our next paſſage from faith ſhalbe to Repentance, becauſe when this article is well perceiued, it ſhall the better appeare how man is iuſtified by only faith and mere pardon, & yet how reall holineſſe of life (if I may ſo call it) is not ſeuered from free imputation of righteouſneſſe. Now it ought to be out of queſtion, that Repentance doth not immediatly follow faith, but alſo ſpring out of it. For whereas pardon and forgiuenes is therfore offered by the preachinge of the Goſpell, that the ſinner beinge deliuered from the tyranny of Satan, from the yoke of ſinne, and from miſerable bondage of vices, may paſſe into the kingdom of God, truely no man can embrace the grace of the Goſpell, but he muſt returne from the errours of his former life into the right way, and apply all his ſtudy to the meditation of repentance. As for them that thinke that repentance doth rather go e faith than flow or spring foorth of it, as a frute out of a tree, they er knewe the force therof, and are moued with too weake an arment to thinke so.

Christ (say they) and Iohn in their preachinges do first exhorte Mat. 3. e people to repentance, & then they afterward say that the king- 2. m of heauen is at hande. Such commaundement to preach, the Mat. 3.7 postles receiued, such order Paule followed, as Luke reporteth. But Act. 20. ile they superstitiously sticke vpon the ioyninge together of silla- 21. s, they marke not in what meaning the wordes hang together. For en the Lorde Christ and Iohn do preach in this manner: Repent for the kingdome of heauen is come neare at hande: do they not he the cause of repentance from very grace and promise of salua-? Therefore their wordes are asmuch in effect as if they had said: cause the kingdome of heauen is come nere at hand, therefore ret ye. For Matthew, when he hath shewed that Iohn so preached, ight the pathes of our God. But in the Prophet that voice is comnded to beginne at comfort and glad tidinges. Yet when we ree the beginninge of repentance to faith, we do not dreame a cere meane space of time, wherein it bringeth it out: but we meane hewe that a man can not earnestly apply himselfe to repentance, esse he know himselfe to be of God. But no man is truely perswathat he is of God, but he that hath first receiued his grace. But e thinges shalbe more plainely discussed in the processe following. aduenture this deceiued them, that many are first by terroures of science tamed, or framed to obedience, before that they haue oughly digested, yea before they haue tasted the knowledge of

e. And this is the feare at the beginning, which some accompt ag vertues, because they see that it is nere to true and iust obedi-
e. But our question is not here how diuersely Christ draweth vs him, or prepareth vs to the endeuour of godlinesse: only this I that there can be no vprightnesse founde where reigneth not Spirite which Christ receiued to communicate the same to his bers. Then according to that saying of the Psalme: With thee is Psa.130 cifulnesse, that thou mayest be feared. No man shall euer reuerent 4.

turne to the Lord, becauſe he hath plucked vs, and he will heal he hath ſtriken vs, and he will cure vs, becauſe the hope of par vſed as a pricke to make them not to lie dull in their ſinnes. But dotinge errour is without all colour of reaſon, which to begin repentance do appoint certaine dayes to their newe conuerts, ring the which they muſt exerciſe themſelues in penance: & thoſe dayes are once paſt, they admit them to the communió of grace of the Goſpel. I ſpeake of many of the Anabaptiſtes, ſpeci thoſe that marueloufly reioyce to be compted ſpirituall, & their panions the Ieſuites, & ſuch other dregges. Such frutes forſooth ſpirit of giddineſſe bringeth foorth, to determine repentance compaſſe of a few daies, which a Chriſtian man ought to exerci continuance throughout his whole life.

3 But certaine learned men, euen long before theſe times, ning to ſpeake ſimply and ſincerely of repentance, according trueth of Scripture, haue ſaid that it conſiſteth of two partes, fication, & viuification. Mortification they expounde to be a of the ſoule & feare conceiued of the acknowledging of ſinne, of the feelinge of the iudgement of God. For when a man is brought into true knowledge of ſinne, then he truely begineth hate & abhorre ſinne: then he heartily miſliketh himſelfe, confe himſelfe to be miſerable and loſt, & wiſheth himſelfe to be an man. Further, when he is touched with ſome feling of the iudge of God (for the one immediatly foloweth vpon the other) the lieth ſtriken and ouerthrowen, then he trembleth, humbleth downe, thē he is diſcouraged & deſpeireth. This is the firſt part pentance, which they haue commonly called Contritió. Vi they expounde to be the comfort that groweth of faith, when ouerthrowen with conſcience of ſinne, & ſtriken with feare of looking afterward vnto the goodnes of God, vnto the mercy & ſaluation that is through Chriſt, raiſeth vp himſelfe, taketh againe, recouereth courage, and returneth as it were from life. And theſe words, if they haue a right expoſitió, do aptly expreſſe the nature of repentance. But where they take V for the cherefulnes, which the minde receiueth being brought quietneſſe from trouble & feare, therin I agree not with them much it rather ſignifieth a deſire to liue holily and godly which weth of regeneration, as if it were ſaid, that man dieth to him beginne to liue to God.

4 Some other, becauſe they ſaw this word diuerſly take in ture, haue made two ſortes of Repentance: and becauſe they le them differently knowen by some marke, they haue called the Repentáce of the Law, by which the sinner wounded with the ing iron of sinne, & worne away with feare of the wrath of God, eth fast in that trouble and can not winde himselfe out of it. The er Repentance they call of the Gospell, by which the sinner is in de grieuously vexed with himselfe, but he riseth vp higher & tah holde of Christ, the salue of his sore, the comfort of his feare, heauen of his miserie. Of the repentance of ỹ law they put those Ge. 4. 13

ing. Therefore their repentance was nothinge else but a certaine rie of hel, whereinto they being entred in this present life began ady to suffer punishmẽt, from the face of the wrath of Gods may. The repentance of the Gospell, we see in all them, that beinge ed with the spurre of sinne in themselues, but recomforted and thed with confidence of the mercy of God, are turned vnto the de bitterly, but he cessed not to hope well.

Although all these things be true, yet the very name of repen-ce (so farre as I can learne by the Scriptures) is otherwise to be n. For where they cõprehend faith vnder repentãce, it disagreeth that which Paule sayth in the Actes, that he testified to the Ie- Act. 20.
& Gentiles repentance vnto God & faith in Iesus Christ. Where 21. reckeneth repentance and faith as two diuerse thinges. What ? Can true repentance stande without faith? No. But though y can not be seuered, yet they must be distinguished. As faithis not without hope, and yet faith and hope are diuerse thinges [illegible] pentance an faith, although they hang together with one perpe all bond, yet they rather would be conioyned than confounded. truely I am not ignorant, that vnder the name of repentance is co prehended the whole turning vnto God, whereof faith is not the l parte: but in what meaninge it is so comprehended, shall most ea appeare when the force and nature therof shalbe declared. The n of repentance in Hebrue is deriued of conuertinge or returninge, Greke of chaunging of the minde or purpose, & the thing it selfe d not ill agree with either deriuations, whereof the summe is, that departing from our selues should turne vnto God, & puttinge of old minde, should put on a new. Wherefore in my iudgement, repe tance may thus not amisse be defined: that it is a true turninge of life vnto God, proceeding from a pure & earnest feare of God, w consisteth in the mortifying of the flesh and of the olde man, an the quickening of the spirite. In this sense are to be taken all the pa chinges wherin either the Prophets in olde time, or the Apostles af ward exhorted the men of their time to repentance. For this on thinge they trauailed to perswade, that confounded with their o sinnes, and pricked with feare of the Lordes iudgement, they sho fall downe and be humbled before him, against whom they had Mat. 3. fended, and with true amendement returne into his right way. Th 2. fore these wordes; To be turned or returne vnto the lord, To rep 1.Sa. 7. or do penance, are among them vsed without difference in all on gnification. And therefore also the holy history saith, that men re after the Lorde, when they that liued wantonly in their owne l not regardinge him, do beginne to follow his worde, and are rea Luc.3.8 their captaines commaundement to go whether he calleth them. Ro.6.4. Iohn and Paule vsed these wordes, to bring forth frutes worthy o Act.26. pentance, for, to leade such a life as may represent and testifie 20. amendement in all their doings.

6 But before we go any further, it shalbe profitable that we more plainly set out at large the definitiō that we haue made. W in there be chiefely three pointes to be considered. First when we it a turning of life vnto God, we require a transforming, not on outward workes, but also in the soule it selfe, which when it ha of her oldnesse, then beginneth to bring foorth the frutes of Ezec.18. agreeable to her renuinge. Which when the Prophet goeth a 31. expresse, he commaundeth them whome he calleth to repentan make them a newe heart. Therefore Moses oftentimes m shew how the Israelites might repent, and so be rightly

e Lorde, teacheth that it be done with all their heart, and with all eir soule (which maner of speakinge we see often repeated of the ophets) and naming it the circumcising of the heart, he shaketh ay all inward affections. But there is no place whereby a man may ter perceiue what is the naturall propriety of repentance thā the rth Chapter of Ieremie. If thou returne to me, O Israel, (saith the Ier. 4. 3 rd) returne to me, plowe vp your arable lande and sow not vpon rnes. Be circumcised to the Lord, and take away the vncircumci-skinnes of your heartes. See how he pronounceth that they shall kuoors of hipocrites, which did in deede busily go about an out-d repentance in ceremonies, but in the meane time they had no e to loose the bundles of wickednes wherwith they helde poore n fast tied. Where also he very well sheweth in what duetie vned repentance properly standeth.

The second point was, that we taught that repentance procees of an earnest feare of God. For, before that the mind of a sinner nclined to repentance, it must be stirred vp with thinkinge vpon iudgement of God. But when this thought is once throughly ed, that God will one day go vp into his iudgement seate, to ree an accompt of all sayings & doings: it will not suffer the sily mā est, nor to take breath one minute of time, but cōtinually stirreth vp to thinke vpon a new trade of life, whereby he may safely ape at that iudgement. Therefore oftentimes the Scripture, when horteth to repentance, maketh mention of the iudgement: as in mie: least paraduenture my wrath go out as fire, & there be none Ier. 4. 3.

etime it declareth by the punishmentes already extended that is a iudge, that sinners should thinke with thēselues, that worse es hang ouer them if they do not repent in time. You haue an 42 Now wherſoeuer this liuely faith shalbe, it can not be possible but that it hath with it ỳ hope of eternall saluation, as an vndiuidable cōpanion: or rather that it engendreth or bringeth it foorth out of it selfe, which hope being taken away, how eloquently, gloriously soeuer we talke of faith, yet we are conuicted to haue no faith at all, for if faith (as is aboue said) be an assured persuasion of Gods trueth, that it can not lye vnto vs nor deceiue vs, nor become voide, then they that haue conceiued this assuredneſſe, truely do therwithal looke for a time to come that God shall performe his promises, which in their persuasion can not be but true: so that briefely, hope is nothing else, but a looking for those thinges which faith hath beleued to be truely promised of God. Faith beleueth that he is our Father, hope looketh for him to shew himselfe such one towarde vs. Faith beleueth that eternall life is giuen vs, hope looketh that it be one day reuealed. Faith is the foundation whereupon hope resteth, hope nourisheth & sustaineth faith. For as no man can looke for any thing at Gods hand, but he that hath first beleued his promises: so againe the weakeneſſe of our faith must with patient hope and expectation be susteined and cherished, that it fall not Rom. 8. 24. as fainting for wearineſſe. For which reason Paul doth well place our saluation in hope. For hope, while it in silence looketh for the Lord, restrayneth faith that it fall not headlonge with too much haste: hope strengthneth faith, that it wauer not in Gods promises, nor beginne to dout of the trueth of them: hope refresheth faith that it waxe not weary: Hope stretcheth faith to the vttermost bounde, that it faint not in the midde course nor in the very beginning. Finally, hope by continually ally renuinge and reſtoringe, it maketh it now and then to riſe ther than it ſelfe to continuance. But howe many wayes the es of hope are neceſſary to the ſtrengthning of faith, ſhall better eare, if we conſider with how many ſortes of temptations they aſſaded and ſhaken, that haue embraced the word of God. Furſt Lord in differring his promiſes doth oftentimes hold our mindes ger in ſuſpenſe than we woulde wiſh: here it is the office of hope performe, that which the Prophet commaundeth, that though Heb.2.3

But as for vs, whom we ſee that we are commaunded by the oracles of God to conceiue a hope of ſaluation, let vs gladly preſume ſo much vpon his truth, as truſting vpon his only mercy, caſting away the confidence of works, to be bold to hope well. The iij. Chapter.

That we are regenerate by faith. Wherein is entreated of Repentance.

ALbeit we haue already partely taught howe faith poſſeſſeth Chriſt, and howe by it we enioy his benefites: neuertheleſſe this were yet darke, vnleſſe we did alſo make declaration of the effectes that we feele therby. Not without cauſe it is ſaid that the ſum of the Goſpell ſtandeth in repentance and in forgiuenneſſe of ſinnes. Therefore leauinge out theſe two pointes, whatſoeuer we ſhall ſay of faith, ſhalbe but a hungry & vnperfect, yea and in manner vnprofitable diſputation of faith. Now forasmuch as Chriſt doth giue both vnto vs, and we obtaine both by faith, that is to ſay, both newneſſe of life and free reconciliation, reaſon and order of teaching requireth, that in this place I begin to ſpeake of both. Our next paſſage from faith ſhalbe to Repentance, becauſe when this article is well perceiued, it ſhall the better appeare how man is iuſtified by only faith and mere pardon, & yet how reall holineſſe of life (as I may ſo call it) is not ſeuered from free imputation of righteouſneſſe. Now it ought to be out of queſtion, that Repentance doth not onely immediatly follow faith, but alſo ſpring out of it. For whereas pardon and forgiuenes is therfore offered by the preachinge of the Goſpell, that the ſinner beinge deliuered from the tyranny of Satan, from the yoke of ſinne, and from miſerable bondage of vices, may paſſe into the kingdom of God, truely no man can embrace the grace of the Goſpell, but he muſt returne from the errours of his former life vnto the right way, and apply all his ſtudy to the meditation of repentance. As for them that thinke that repentance doth rather go before

e faith than flow or ſpring foorth of it,as a frute out of a tree,they er knewe the force therof, and are moued with too weake an arment to thinke ſo.

Chriſt (ſay they) and Iohn in their preachinges do firſt exhorte anded to beginne at comfort and glad tidinges. Yet when we re-re the beginninge of repentance to faith, we do not dreame a cerne meane ſpace of time, wherein it bringeth it out: but we meane ſhewe that a man can not earneſtly apply himſelfe to repentance, leſſe he know himſelfe to be of God. But no man is truely perſwa-d that he is of God, but he that hath firſt receiued his grace. But ſe thinges ſhalbe more plainely diſcuſſed in the proceſſe following. raduenture this deceiued them, that many are firſt by terroures of nſcience tamed, or framed to obedience, before that they haue roughly diſgeſted, yea before they haue taſted the knowledge of ce.And this is the feare at the beginning,which ſome accompt a-ong vertues, becauſe they ſee that it is nere to true and iuſt obedi-ce. But our queſtion is not here how diuerſely Chriſt draweth vs y, that there can be no vprightneſſe founde where reigneth not turne to the Lord, becauſe he hath plucked vs, and he will heal

he hath ſtriken vs, and he will cure vs, becauſe the hope of par
repentance do appoint certaine dayes to their newe converts, ring the which they muſt exerciſe themſelues in penance: & w thoſe dayes are once paſt, they admit them to the communió of grace of the Goſpel. I ſpeake of many of the Anabaptiſtes, ſpec thoſe that maruelouſly reioyce to be compted ſpirituall, & their panions the Ieſuites, & ſuch other dregges. Such frutes forſooth ſpirit of giddineſſe bringeth foorth, to determine repentance wi compaſſe of a few daies, which a Chriſtian man ought to extende continuance throughout his whole life.

3 But certaine learned men, euen long before theſe times, me ning to ſpeake ſimply and ſincerely of repentance, according to trueth of Scripture, haue ſaid that it conſiſteth of two partes, mor fication, & viuification. Mortification they expounde to be a ſor of the ſoule & feare conceiued of the acknowledging of ſinne, a of the feelinge of the iudgement of God. For when a man is brought into true knowledge of ſinne, then he truely begineth
hate & abhorre ſinne: then he heartily miſliketh himſelfe, confe himſelfe to be miſerable and loſt, & wiſheth himſelfe to be an ot man. Further, when he is touched with ſome feling of the iudge of God (for the one immediatly foloweth vpon the other) then lieth ſtriken and ouerthrowen, then he trembleth, humbled and downe, thé he is diſcouraged & deſpeireth. This is the firſt part of pentance, which they haue commonly called Contritió. Viuifica they expounde to be the comfort that groweth of faith, when a ouerthrowen with conſcience of ſinne, & ſtriken with feare of G looking afterward vnto the goodnes of God, vnto the mercy, fa & ſaluation that is through Chriſt, raiſeth vp himſelfe, taketh bre againe, recouereth courage, and returneth as it were from death life. And theſe words, if they haue a right expoſitió, do aptly exp expreſſe the nature of repentance. But where they take Viuifica for the cherefulnes, which the minde receiueth being brought
quietneſſe from trouble & feare, therin I agree not with them:
much it rather ſignifieth a deſire to liue holily and godly which weth of regeneration, as if it were ſaid, that man dieth to himſelf beginne to liue to God.

4 Some other, becauſe they ſaw this word diuerſly take in Scri ture, haue made two ſortes of Repentance: and becauſe they

e them differently knowen by some marke, they haue called the Repentãce of the Law, by which the sinner wounded with the
ing iron of sinne, & worne away with feare of the wrath of God, eth fast in that trouble and can not winde himselfe out of it. The
er Repentance they call of the Gospell, by which the sinner is in le grieuously vexed with himselfe, but he riseth vp higher & ta-holde of Christ, the salue of his sore, the comfort of his feare, heauen of his miserie. Of the repentance of ỹ law they put those Ge. 4. 13

uousnesse of their sinne, were afraid of the wrath of God, but in Mat. 27.
nking vpon God only as a reuenger and iudge, they fainted in that 4. ling. Therefore their repentance was nothinge else but a certaine rie of hel, whereinto they being entred in this present life began eady to suffer punishmẽt, from the face of the wrath of Gods may. The repentance of the Gospell, we see in all them, that beinge led with the spurre of sinne in themselues, but recomforted and reshed with confidence of the mercy of God, are turned vnto the de bitterly, but he ceased not to hope well.

Although all these things be true, yet the very name of repennce (so farre as I can learne by the Scriptures) is otherwise to be en. For where they cõprehend faith vnder repentãce, it disagreeth th that which Paule sayth in the Actes, that he testified to the Ie- Act. 20. s & Gentiles repentance vnto God & faith in Iesus Christ. Where 21. reckeneth repentance and faith as two diuerse thinges. What en? Can true repentance stande without faith? No. But though ey can not be seuered, yet they must be distinguished. As faithis not without hope, and yet faith and hope are diuerſe thinges [illegible] pentance and faith, although they hang together with one perpe[illegible] all bond, yet they rather would be conioyned than confounded. A[illegible] truely I am not ignorant, that vnder the name of repentance is co[illegible] prehended the whole turning vnto God, whereof faith is not the le[illegible] parte: but in what meaninge it is ſo comprehended, ſhall moſt ea[illegible] appeare when the force and nature therof ſhalbe declared. The na[illegible] of repentance in Hebrue is deriued of conuertinge or returninge, [illegible] Greke of chaunging of the minde or purpoſe, & the thing it ſelfe do[illegible] not ill agree with either deriuations, whereof the ſumme is, that [illegible] departing from our ſelues ſhould turne vnto God, & putting of [illegible] old minde, ſhould put on a new. Wherefore in my iudgement, repe[illegible] tance may thus not amiſſe be defined: that it is a true turninge of [illegible] life vnto God, proceeding from a pure & earneſt feare of God, wh[illegible] conſiſteth in the mortifying of the fleſh and of the olde man, an[illegible] the quickening of the ſpirite. In this ſenſe are to be taken all the pa[illegible] chings wherin either the Prophets in olde time, or the Apoſtles af[illegible] ward exhorted the men of their time to repentance. For this onl[illegible] thinge they trauailed to perſwade, that confounded with their ow[illegible] ſinnes, and pricked with feare of the Lordes iudgement, they ſho[illegible] fall downe and be humbled before him, againſt whom they had o[illegible]

And therefore alſo the holy hiſtory ſaith, that men rep[illegible] after the Lorde, when they that liued wantonly in their owne lu[illegible] not regardinge him, do beginne to follow his worde, and are ready [illegible]

6 But before we go any further, it ſhalbe profitable that we d[illegible] more plainly ſet out at large the definitiō that we haue made. Wh[illegible] in there be chiefely three pointes to be conſidered. Firſt when we [illegible] it a turning of life vnto God, we require a transforming, not only [illegible] outward workes, but alſo in the ſoule it ſelfe, which when it hath [illegible] of her oldneſſe, then beginneth to bring foorth the frutes of wo[illegible]

e Lorde, teacheth that it be done with all their heart, and with all eir ſoule (which maner of ſpeakinge we ſee often repeated of the ophets) and naming it the circumciſing of the heart, he ſhaketh atter perceiue what is the naturall propriety of repentance thā the rth Chapter of Ieremie. If thou returne to me, O Iſrael, (ſaith the Ier. 4. 3 ed) returne to me, plowe vp your arable lande and ſow not vpon deuours of hipocrites, which did in deede buſily go about an out-

d repentance in ceremonies, but in the meane time they had no re to looſe the bundles of wickednes wherwith they helde poore n faſt tied. Where alſo he very well ſheweth in what dueties vned repentance properly ſtandeth.

The ſeconde point was, that we taught that repentance proceeth of an earneſt feare of God. For, before that the mind of a ſinner enclined to repentance, it muſt be ſtirred vp with thinkinge vpon e iudgement of God. But when this thought is once throughly led, that God will one day go vp into his iudgement ſeate, to re-re an accompt of all ſayings & doings: it will not ſuffer the ſily mā reſt, nor to take breath one minute of time, but cōtinually ſtirreth vp to thinke vpon a new trade of life, whereby he may ſafely ap-re at that iudgement. Therefore oftentimes the Scripture, when exhorteth to repentance, maketh mention of the iudgement: as in emie: leaſt paraduenture my wrath go out as fire, & there be none Ier. 4. 3.

metime it declareth by the puniſhmentes already extended that d is a iudge, that ſinners ſhould thinke with thēſelues, that worſe ges hang ouer them if they do not repent in time. You haue an mple therof in the 29. of Exodus. But becauſe the turning begin-tance. And he calleth ſorrowfulnes according to God, when we are not only afraid of puniſhment, but do hate and abhorre ſinne it ſelfe, foraſmuch as we vnderſtand that it diſpleaſeth God. And no maruell. For vnleſſe we be ſharply pricked, the ſlouthfulnes of our fleſh could not be corrected, yea prickinges would not ſuffice for the dullnes & ſlouthfulnes therof, vnleſſe God in ſtretching out his rodde ſhould pearce more depely. This is alſo an obſtinacy which muſt be beaten downe as it were with beetles. Therfore the peruerſeneſſe of our nature enforceth God to the ſeuerity that he vſeth in threateninge, becauſe he ſhoulde in vaine call vs alluringly with faire ſpeach which lie a ſleepe. I recite not the teſtimonies that cõmonly offer themſelues to be founde. The feare of God is in an other manner alſo the beginninge of repentance. For though mans life were abſolutely furniſhed with all pointes of vertues, if it be not applied to the worſhipping of God, it may in deede be praiſed of the world, but in heauen it ſhalbe meere abhomination, foraſmuch as the chiefe parte of righteouſneſſe is to giue God his due right and honor, whereof he is wickedly robbed, when we bend not our ſelues to yeelde vs ſubiect to his gouernment.

8 Thirdly, it remaineth that we declare what is meant by that that we ſay, that Repentance conſiſteth in two partes, that is to ſay, mortifying of the fleſh, and quickening of the ſpirit. The Prophets do plainely expreſſe it, although ſomewhat ſimply and groſly, according to the capacity of the carnall people, when they ſay: Ceſſe from euill and do goodnes. Againe. Be waſhed, be cleane, take away the euill of your workes from mine eyes: Ceſſe to do peruerſly, learne to do well, ſeeke iudgement, help the oppreſſed, &c. For when they call men away frõ wickednes, they require the death of the whole fleſh which is ſtuffed full of wickednes and peruerſenes. It is in deede a vneaſie & hard thing to put of our ſelues, & to depart from our natural diſpoſitiõ. Neither can it be thought that the fleſh is throughly deade, vnleſſe all that we haue of our ſelues be aboliſhed. But forſomuch as all the affection of the fleſh is enemy againſt God, the firſt entree to the obeying of his law, is the forſaking of our owne nature. Afterward they expreſſe the renuing by the frutes that folow therof, as righteouſnes, iudgement & mercy. For it were not enough to do thoſe dueties rightly, vnleſſe the minde it ſelfe & the heart haue firſt put on the affection of righteouſnes, iudgement and mercy. That is done when the ſpirit of God hath ſo ſoked in new thoughtes & affections, our ſoules firſt waſhed with his holines, that they may againe be compted new. And truely as we are naturally turned away from God, so vnlesse the forsaking of our selues do go before, we can neer go toward that which is right. Therfore we are so oft commauned to put of the old man, to forsake the world & flesh, to bid our lues farewel, and to be renued in the spirite of our minde. Moreouer e very name of mortification doth put vs in minde how hard it is o forget our former nature: because we thereby gather that we are ot otherwise framed to the feare of God, nor do learne the princiles of godlinesse, but when we are violently slaine with the worde f the Spirit, and so brought to nought: euen as though God should ronoūce, that to haue vs to be accompted among his childrē, there eedeth a death of all our commune nature.

on of our former nature may liue no more. If we be partakers of is resurrection, by it we are raised vp into a newnesse of life, that ay agree with the righteousnes of God. In one word I expounde penitence to be regeneration, which hath no other marke wherento it is directed, but that the image of God which was by Adams fence fowly defaced and in a maner vtterly blotted out, may be reued in vs. So the Apostle teacheth, when he sayth: but we represen- 2. Cor. 3 e adopteth into the inheritance of life. And this restoring is fulfilled ot in one moment, or one day, or one yere, but by continuall, yea & metimes slow proceedinges God taketh away the corruptions of e flesh in his elect, cleanseth them from filthines, and consecrateth em for temples to himselfe, renuinge all their senses to true pure-es, that they may exercise themselues all their life in repentance, and owe that this warre hath no ende but in death. And so much the eater is the lewdnes of that filthy railer & apostata Staphilus, which we ſhoulde not ſeeke the whole fulnes & perfection of it. And yet we deny not place for entreaſces: but I ſay that how neere any man approcheth to the likenes of God, ſo much the image of God ſhineth in him. That the faithfull may attaine herunto, God aſſigneth them the race of repentance wherein to runne all their life long.

10 The children of God therefore are ſo deliuered by regeneration from the bondage of ſinne, not that hauinge now obtained the full poſſeſſion of liberty, they ſhould feele no more trouble by the fleſh, but that they ſhould haue remaining a cõtinual matter of fight wherwith they may be exerciſed, and not only be exerciſed, but alſo may better learne their owne weakeneſſe. And in this point all writers of ſounde iudgement agree together, that there remayneth in a man regenerate a feedinge of euill, from whenſe continually ſpring deſires that allure & ſtirre him to ſinne. They confeſſe alſo that the holy ones are ſtill ſo holden entangled with that diſeaſe of luſtinge, that they can not withſtand but that ſomtime they are tickled & fired either to luſt or to couetouſnes, or to ambition or to other vices. Neither is it nedefull to labour much in ſearching what the old writers haue thought herein, foraſmuch as only Auguſtine may be ſufficient for it, which hath faithfully and with great diligence gathered all their iudgementes. Therefore let the readers gather out of him, ſuch certainety as they ſhall deſire to learne of the opinion of antiquity.

Libr. ad Bonif. 4 Li. 1. & 2 contra Iulianum.

But there may ſeeme to be this differẽce betwene him and vs, that he when he graunteth that the faithfull ſo long as they dwell in a mortal body are ſo holden bound with luſtes, that they can not but luſt, yet dareth not call that diſeaſe ſinne: but being content to expreſſe it by the name of weakeneſſe, he teacheth that then onely it becommeth ſinne, when either worke or conſent is added to cõceite or receiuing, that is, when will yeeldeth to the firſt deſire: but we accompt the very ſame for ſinne, that man is tickled with any deſire at all againſt the law of God: Yea we affirme that the very corruption that engendreth ſuch deſires in vs, is ſinne. We teach therefore that there is alway ſinne in the holy ones, vntill they be vnclothed of the mortal body, becauſe there remaineth in their fleſh that peruerſenes of luſting that fighteth againſt vprightnes. And yet he doth not alwaies beare to vſe the name of Sinne, as when he ſayth: This Paule calleth by the name of ſinne, from whenſe ſpring all ſinnes vnto a fleſhly concupiſcence. This aſmuch as pertaineth to the holy ones, looſeth the kingdom in earth, and periſheth in heauen. By which wordes he confeſſeth, that the faithfull are guilty of ſinne, in ſo much as they are ſubiect to the luſtes of the fleſh.

Ser. 7. de verbis Apoſt.

But this that it is sayd, ỳ God purgeth his church frō all sinne, at he promiseth that grace of deliuerāce by Baptisme, & fulfilleth it Ephe.5. his elect, we referre rather to the giltines of sinne, than to the very 26. atter of sinne. God truely performeth this by regenerating thē that his, that in them that kingdome of sinne is abolished (for the holy hoste ministreth them strength, whereby they get the vpper hand & e cōquerours in the battel) but it cesseth only to reigne & not so to ell in them. Therfore we so say, that the old man is crucified, & the Ro.6.6. of sinne abolished in the children of God, that yet there remaine me leauings, not to haue dominiō in them, but to humble them by owledge in conscience of their owne weakenesse. And we confesse t the same are not imputed, as if they were not: but we affirme t this cōmeth to passe by the mercy of God, that the holy ones are liuered from this giltinesse, which otherwise should iustly be recke-d sinners & gilty before God. And this sentence it shal not be hard r vs to confirme, forasmuch as there are euident testimonies of the cripture vpon their matter. For what woulde we haue more plaine, an that which Paule crieth out to the Rōmaines cap.7. First both Ro.7.6. haue in an other place shewed, and Augustine proueth by stronge sons, that Paul there speaketh in the person of a man regenerate. peake not of this, that he vseth these wordes, Euill and Sinne, that y which will speake against vs may not cauill against those words? t who can deny, that a striuing against the law of God is euill? who deny a withstanding of Iustice to be sinne? Finally, who will not ount that there is a fault, where is a spirituall misery? But all these nges are reported of this disease by Paule. Againe, we haue an assud demonstration by the law, by which this whole questiō may easily discussed. For we are commaunded to loue God with al our heart, th all our soule, with all our powers. Sith all the partes of our soule ght so to be occupied with the loue of God, it is certaine, that they shē not the commaundement that cōceiue in their heart any dee, be it neuer so litle, or suffer any such thought at all to entre into ir minde, as may withdraw them from the loue of God into vani-For what? are not these the powers of the soule, to be affected with laine motions, to comprehende with wit, to conceiue with minde? herfore, when these do open a way for vaine or corrupt thoughtes entre into thē, do they not shew that they are euen so much voide the loue of God? Wherfore, who so confesseth not that all the lusts the flesh are sinnes, and that the same disease of lusting, which they ll a feedme, is the well springe of sinne, he must needes deny that transgression of the law is sinne.

12 If any man thinke it an abſurdity, that all the deſires wherwith man is naturally moued in affection, are vniuerſally cõdemned, whereas they be put into man by God the author of nature. We anſwer, that we do not condemne thoſe deſires that God hath ſo engraued into ỹ minde of man at the firſt creation, that they can not be rooted out without deſtroying the very nature of man, but onely outrageous and vnbridled motions that fight againſt the ordinance of God. But nowe ſith by reaſon of the peruerſeneſſe of nature all her powers are infected and corrupted, that in all her doinges appeareth a continuall diſorder & intemperance, becauſe the deſires can not be ſeuered from ſuch intemperance: therefore we ſay that they are corrupt. Or (if you like to haue the whole ſumme in fewer wordes) we teach that all the deſires of men are euill: and we accuſe them to be guilty of ſinne, not in that that they are naturall, but for that they are inordinate: and we call them inordinate, becauſe no pure or cleane thinge can come out of a corrupt and vncleane nature. And Auguſtine doth not ſo much vary from this doctrine as he appeareth in ſhew, while he ſomewhat too much feareth the enuie that the Pelagians labored to bring him into, he ſometime forbeareth to vſe the name of ſinne: Yet where he wryteth that the law of ſinne ſtill remaining in the holy ones, the only giltines is taken away, he plainly ſheweth that he doth not ſo much diſagree from our meaning.

Ad Boniſ.

13 We will alleage ſome other ſentences, wherby ſhall better appeare what he thought. In the ſecond booke againſt Iulian: This law of ſinne is both releaſed by the ſpiritual regeneration, and abideth in the mortall fleſh: releaſed herein, becauſe the giltines is taken away in the ſacrament wherby the faithfull are regenerate: & it abideth, becauſe it worketh the deſires againſt which the faithfull do fight. Againe. Therfore the law of ſinne (which was alſo in the members of ſo great an Apoſtle) is releaſed in baptiſme, but not ended. Againe. The law of ſinne (of which yet remaininge the giltineſſe, is in baptiſme diſcharged) Ambroſe called wickednes: becauſe it is wickednes for the fleſh to luſt againſt the Spirit. Againe. Sinne is dead in reſpect of that giltines wherein it helde vs, and euen being dead, it ſtill rebelleth till it be healed with perfection of buriall. And yet playner in the 5. booke. As the blindneſſe of heart is both a ſinne, whereby man beleueth not God: and alſo a puniſhmẽt of ſinne, whereby a proud heart is chaſtiſed with worthy correction: and the cauſe of ſinne when any thinge is committed by the errour of a blinde heart: ſo the luſt of fleſh againſt which a good ſpirit luſteth, is both ſinne, becauſe there is in it diſobedience againſt the gouernment of the minde: and alſo the puniſhnt of ſinne, becauſe it is giuen for recompenſe to the deſeruinges he diſobedient: and the cauſe of ſinne in man, when he conſen-by defection or in man, when he is borne: by infection. Here hout any doutfull ſpeach he calleth it ſinne, becauſe when errour once ouerthrowen, and the trueth confirmed, he leſſe feared nderous reportes. As in the 41. Homely vpon Iohn, where douthe ſpeaketh accordinge to the true meaninge of his minde, he h: If in the fleſh thou ſerue the lawe of ſinne, do that which the Rom. 6. oſtle himſelfe ſaith: let not ſinne reigne in your mortal body to o- 12. the deſires therof. He ſaith not, let it not be, but let it not reigne. long as thou liueſt, ſinne muſt needes be in thy members at leaſt reigne be take from it. Let not that be done which it commaunh. They that defende that luſt is no ſinne, are wont to obiect that ng of Iames: Luſt, after that it hath cõceiued, bringeth forth ſinne. Iam. 2. this is eaſily cõfuted. For vnleſſe we thinke that he ſpeaketh of y ill workes or actuall ſinnes, euill wil it ſelfe, ſhall not be accomp-ſinne. But where he calleth miſchieuous deedes and wicked offenthe offſprings of ſinne, and giueth vnto them the name of ſinne, it h not byandby folow thereof, but that to luſt, is an euill thing & nable before God.

Certaine Anabaptiſtes in this age, deuiſe I wote not what phrẽ intemperance in ſteede of ſpiritual regeneration: ſaying that the ldren of God reſtored into the ſtate of innocency, now ought no re to be carefull for bridling of the luſt of the fleſh: that the Spirit o be followed for their guide, vnder whoſe guiding they neuer go of the way. It were incredible that mans minde coulde fall to ſo at madneſſe, vnleſſe they did openly and proudly babble abroade doctrine. Truely it is monſtruous. But it is meete that ſuch ſhould er the puniſhment of ſuch blaſphemous boldeneſſe, that ſo haue waded their minde to turne the trueth of God into a lie. Shall all choiſe of honeſty and diſhoneſty, right and wrong, good & euill, ue and vice, be taken away? Such difference (ſay they) commeth he curſedneſſe of olde Adam, from which we are exempted by riſt. So now there ſhalbe no difference betwene fornication and ſtity, plaine dealinge and ſutteltie, trueth and lying, iuſtice and exion. Take away vaine feare, ſay they, the Spirite wil commaunde e no euill thinge, ſo that thou boldely and without feare yeelde e to the guidinge thereof. Who can chooſe but be aſtoniſhed at e monſtruous thinges? Yet it is a common learning among them, ch blinded with madneſſe of luſtes, haue putte of all common on, but what Chriſt (I beſeech you) do they frame vnto vs, and what ſpirit do they belch out? For we reknowledge one Chriſt a only Spirit whom the Prophets haue cõmended, whom the Go giuen vs doth preach, of whom we there heare no ſuch thinge. T Spirit is no patrone of manſlaughter, whoredom, dronkennes, contention, couetouſnes, & guile: but the author of loue, chaſtn briety, modeſty, peace, temperance & truth. It is not a giddy ſpir runneth headlong without conſideration through right and wro but is full of wiſdom and vnderſtandinge, that diſcerneth right twene iuſt and vniuſt. It ſtirreth not vnto diſſolute and vnbrid centiouſneſſe, but maketh difference betwene lawfull and vnlaw and teacheth to kepe meaſure and temperance: but why do we any longer in confuting this beaſtly rage? To Chriſtians the Spir the Lord is not a troubleſome phantaſie, which either thẽſelues brought forth in a dreame, or haue receiued being forged of oth but they reuerently ſeeke the knowledge of him at the Scripture where theſe two things be taught of him: Firſt that he is giuen w to ſanctification, that he might bringe vs into the obedience of G will, being purged from vncleanneſſe and defilinges, which obedi can not ſtande, vnleſſe luſtes be tamed and ſubdued, whereunto th men would giue the bridle at liberty. Secondly we are taught that are ſo cleanſed by his ſanctification, that we are ſtil beſieged with ny vices and much weakenes, ſo long as we are encloſed in the bon of our body: wherby it commeth to paſſe, that being farre diſtant perfection, we haue neede alway to encreaſe ſomwhat, and being tangled in vices, we haue neede daily to wraſtle with them. Whe pon alſo followeth, that ſhaking of ſlouth and careleſneſſe, we watch with heedefull mindes, that we be not compaſſed vnwar the ſnares of our fleſh. Vnleſſe paraduenture we thinke that we proceeded further thã the Apoſtle, which yet was weried of the Cor. 15. gel of Satan, that his ſtrength might be made perfect with wea c.7.6. and which did vnfainedly repreſent in his fleſh that diuiſion o fleſh and of the ſpirit.

Cor.7 15 But whereas the Apoſtle in deſcribing of repentance recke ſeauen either cauſes or effectes or partes thereof, he doth that of ry good cauſe: and theſe they be: endeuour or carefulneſſe, exc indignation, feare, deſire, zele, puniſhment. Neither ought it to any abſurdity, that I dare not certainely determine whether ought to be compted cauſes or effectes. For both may be defend diſputation. They may be alſo called affections ioyned with repe tance: but becauſe, leauinge out thoſe queſtions, we may vnderſt what Paule meaneth, we ſhalbe content with a ſimple declara hem. He ſaith therefore, that of the heauineſſe which is according God, ariſeth careſulneſſe. For he that is touched with an earneſt g of diſpleaſure bycauſe he hath ſinned againſt his God, is ther- all ſtirred vp to diligence and heedefulneſſe, to winde himſelfe ely out of the ſnares of the Deuell, to take better heede of his es, to fall no more from the gouernance of the holy Ghoſt, not e oppreſſed with ſecurity. Next is Excuſing, which in this place ſi- eth not the defenſe, whereby a ſinner to eſcape the iudgement God, either doth denie that he hath offended, or diminiſheth the nouſneſſe of his faulte, but a purgation which ſtandeth rather in ing of pardon, than in defenſe of his cauſe. Like as the children are not reprobate when they acknowledge and confeſſe their ers, do yet vſe entreating, and that it may take place, they proteſt all meanes that they can, that they haue not caſt away the reue- ce that they owe to their parentes. Finally they ſo excuſe them, as y go not about to proue themſelues righteous and innocent, but ely that they may obteine pardon. Then followeth Indignation, reby the ſinner fretteth inwardly with himſelfe, quareleth with ſelfe, is angry with himſelfe, when he recordeth his owne per- ſneſſe and his owne vnthankefulneſſe to God. By the name of re, he meaneth that trembling that is ſtriken into our mindes ſo as we thinke both what we haue deſerued, and howe horrible is ſeueritie of Gods wrath againſt ſinners. For we muſt needes then vexed with a maruellous vnquietneſſe, which both inſtructeth vs humilitie, & maketh vs more ware againſt the time to come. Now out of feare do ſpringe that carefulneſſe, whereof he had ſpoken fore, then we ſee with what linking they hang together. It ſemeth me that he hath vſed this worde Deſire for diligence in our dutie d redy cherefulneſſe to obey, whereunto the acknowledginge of r owne faultes ought chiefely to prouoke vs. And thereunto alſo ongeth zele, which he ioyneth immediatly next vnto it. For it ſi- eth a feruentneſſe, wherewith we be kindled when we be ſpurred ward with theſe pricking thoughtes: what haue I done? whether d I throwen my ſelfe hedlonge, if the mercie of God did not help ? The laſt of all is puniſhment, for the more rigorous that we be our ſelues, and the ſtreightlier that we examine our owne ſinnes, ſo ch the more we ought to truſt that God is fauorable and merci- vnto vs. And truely it is not poſſible, but that the ſoule being ken with horrour of the iudgement of God muſt needes do ſome ecution in the puniſhing of it ſelfe. Truely the godly do fele what niſhmentes are ſhame, confuſion, mourning, lothing of themſelues,

& other affectiõs that ſpring out of earneſt acknowledging of ſinne. But let vs remember that there is a meaſure to be kepte, that ſorowe do not ſwallowe vs vp, becauſe nothing more redily happeneth in fearefull conſciences than falling to deſpeire. And alſo by that crafte meane whom ſo euer Satã findeth ouerthrowen with dreade of God, he more and more drowneth them in the gulfe of ſorrow, that they may neuer riſe vp againe. Truely the feare can not be to great which endeth with humilitie, and departeth not from hope of pardon. But Heb.12.3. alway (as the Apoſtle teacheth) the ſinner muſt beware, that while he moue himſelfe to the lothing of himſelfe, he deſpeire not, oppreſſed with to great feare, for ſo do we flee away from God which calleth vs to him by repentance. Vpon which point this leſſon of lo-Sermone 11. in Cant. narde is very profitable: Sorrow for ſinnes is neceſſarie, if it be not continuall. I counſell you ſometime to returne your faute from grieuous and painefull remembrance of your owne wayes, and to climbe vp to the plaine grounde of cherefull remembrance of benefites of God. Let vs mingle hony with wormewood, that the holſome bitterneſſe may bring vs health, when it ſhalbe dronke tempered with ſweteneſſe. And if ye thinke of your ſelues in humilitie, thinke alſo of the Lorde in goodneſſe.

16 Now it may be alſo perceiued what be the frutes of repentance, euen the duties of godlineſſe toward God, and of charitie toward men, and therewithall a holines and pureneſſe in all our life. Finally, the more earneſtly that any man examineth his life by the rule of Gods lawe, ſo much the ſurer tokens he ſheweth of his repentance. Therefore the holy Ghoſt oftentimes, when he exhorteth vs to repentance, calleth vs ſometime to all the cominaundementes of the law, ſometime to the duties of the ſecond table. Albeit in other places after that he hath condemned vncleanneſſe in the very fountaine of the heart, he deſcendeth afterwarde to outwarde teſtimonies that do ſet out true repentãce: of which thing I will hereafter ſet before the readers eyes a table in the deſcription of a Chriſtian life. I will not gather teſtimonies out of the Prophets, wherein they partely ſcorne at their follies that go about to appeaſe God with ceremonies, & ſhewe that they be mere mockeries, and partely do teache that outwarde vprightneſſe of life is not the principall part of repentance, bycauſe God loketh vpon the heart: who ſo euer is euen meanely exerciſed in ỹ ſcripture, ſhall perceiue of himſelfe without any other mans putting in minde, that when we haue to do with God, we labour in vaine, vnleſſe we beginne at the inward affection of the heart.

which we vse priuately as remedies to humble our selues or to to forsake al delites. Then he that feleth how great an euell is rebellion of the flesh, seketh all remedies to bridle it. Moreouer hat well bethinketh him how greuous a thing it is to haue offenthe iustice of God, can not rest vntill he haue in his owne hu-ty geuen glorie to God. Such exercises the olde writers do often-es rehearse, when they speake of the frutes of repentance. But eit they do not place the whole force of repentance in them, yet readers shall pardon me, if I speake what I thinke: it seemeth vnto that they stand to much vpon them. And if any man will wisely t, I trust he will agree with me, that they haue two wayes gone ond measure. For whē they so much enforced, and with immesu-e commendations aduaunced that bodily discipline, this in deede y obteined, that the people did the more earnestly embrace it, they in a manner darkened that, which ought to haue bene of ch greater importance. Secondely, in geuing punishmentes they e somewhat more rigorous than ecclesiasticall mildenesse may re, as we shall haue occasion to shew in an other place.

e their errour is to be taken away. That which is there spoken of turning of the whole heart to the Lorde, of cutting their hear-and not their garmentes, is proprely belonging to repentance: weping and fasting are not ioyned as continuall or necessary ef-ies thereof, but are spoken of in respect of a speciall circumstance. cause he had prophecied, that there hāged ouer the Iewes a most uous destruction, therefore he counselleth them to preuent the th of God, not only in repenting, but also in vttering tokens of r sorrow. For as a man standing to be arrained, vseth humbly to abace himselfe with an ouergrowen beard, vncombed heare blacke apparell, to moue the iudge to pitie: so it behoued them they stode accused before the iudgement seate of God, in array to besech him not to extend his rigour. But although ashes is certaine, that weping and fasting shoulde be to a very good vse among vs, so oft as the Lord semeth to threaten vs gue or calamitie. For when he maketh any danger to appere, he after a certaine maner geue warning, that he is prepared or reuenge. Therefore the prophet did wel, when he exhorted his trimen to wepinge and fasting, that is to the sorrowfull manner cused men, whose offences he said a litle before, were had in tion. Euen as the Pastors of the Church should not do ill at this they would crie out vpon them to make hast to fasting and is not alway ioyned with repentance, but is appointed peculiarly times of miserable plagues: and therfore Christ ioyneth it with

But because all this matter shalbe to be declared againe in the where we shall entreate of the discipline of the Church, therefore do now the more slenderly touche it. But this one thing I will here by the way: when the name of repentance is applied to ward profession, then it is vnproprely turned from the naturall ning which I haue aboue set forth of it. For it is not so much a vnto God as a confession of fault, with a beseching of God Mat. 11. charge them with the paine and giltinesse. So to do penance in Luc. 10. 13. and sackcloth is nothing els, than to vtter a displeasednesse is angry with vs for greuous offenses. And this is a publike confession, whereby we condemning our selues before the 1. Cor. 1. 3. and the world, do preuent the iudgement of God. For Paule their slouthfulnesse that tenderly beare with their own faultes, if we did iudge our selues, we should not be iudged of God. But not alway necessarie to make men openly of counsell and of our repentance: but to confesse priuately to God is a part of repen

nance which can not be omitted. For there is nothing more ſonable than to loke to haue God to pardon vs the ſinnes in h we flatter our ſelues and do hide them by Hipocriſie, leaſt he d bring them to light. And it behoueth vs not onely to confeſſe ſinnes which we dayely commit, but more greuous offenſes t to drawe vs further, and to call againe into our remembrance od for the ſinnes of his youth. And truely then onely ſhall we e our drowſines to be ſhakẽ away from vs, if groning vnder our en and bewailing our euels, we aſke reliefe of God. It is more-r to be noted, that the repentance which we are commaunded inually to applie, differeth from that repentance, that lifteth vp were, from death them that either haue filthily fallen, or with idled licentiouſneſſe haue throwen forth themſelues to ſinne, fter a certaine manner of rebellious reuolting, haue ſhaken of the e of God. For the Scripture oftentimes, when it exhorteth to retance, meaneth thereby as it were a paſſage or riſing againe from th into life: and when it reherſeth that the people did penaunce, eaneth that they were turned from their idolatrie & other groſſe nces. And in like manner Paule threateneth mourning vnto ſin- 2. Cor.

vnchaſtitie. This difference is to be diligently marked, leaſt while heare that few are called to penãce, a more than careleſſe aſſurede ſhould crepe vpon vs, as though the mortifieng of the fleſh did more belong vnto vs, the care whereof, the corrupt deſires that y tickle vs, and the vices that commonly budde vp in vs, do not r vs to releaſe. Therefore the ſpeciall repentance which is requibut of ſome, whom the Deuell hath violently carried away from feare of God, and faſt bound with damnable ſnares, taketh not y the ordinary repentance which the corruptneſſe of nature cometh vs to applie throughout all the whole courſe of our life.

19 Now if that be true, which is moſt euidently certaine, all the ſumme of the Goſpell is conteined in theſe two principall pointes, Repentance and forgeueneſſe of ſinnes: do we not ſee that the Lord doth therfore freely iuſtifie thē that be his, that he may by the ſanctification of his Spirite reſtore them into true righteouſneſſe? Iohn the Angel ſent before the face of Chriſt to prepare his Mat.11.10 Mat.3.2 wayes, preached: Repent ye, for the kingdome of heauen is at hande. In calling thē to repentance, he did put them in mind to acknowledge themſelues ſinners, and all that was theirs, to be damnable before the Lorde, that they might with all their hearts deſire the mortifieng of their fleſh and a newe regeneration in the Spirit. In telling them of the kingdome of God, he called them to faith. For by the kingdome of God which he taught to be at hand, he meant forgeueneſſe of ſinnes, ſaluation, and life, and all that we Mat.1.4 Luc.3.3 get in Chriſt. Wherefore in the other Euangeliſtes it is written, Iohn cam preaching the Baptiſme of repentance vnto forgeueneſſe of ſinnes. And what is that els, but that they being oppreſſed and wearied with the burden of ſinnes, ſhold turne to the Lorde, and ſo Mar.1.15. ceiue good hope of forgeueneſſe and ſaluation? So Chriſt also began his preachings: The kingdome of God is come nere at hand, repent ye and beleue the Goſpell. Firſt he declareth that the treaſures of Gods mercie are opened in him, and then he requireth repentance, and laſt of all confidence in the promiſes of God. Luc.24.46. Therefore when he meant briefly to comprehēd the whole ſumme of the Goſpell, he ſaid, that he muſt ſuffer & riſe againe from the dead, and that repentance and forgeueneſſe of ſinnes muſt be preached in his name. The Apoſtles alſo preached the ſame after his reſurrection, that he was raiſed vp by God, to geue to Iſraell repentance and forgeueneſſe of ſinnes. Repentance is preached in the name of Chriſt, when men do heare by the doctrine of the Goſpell that all their thoughts, their affections, and their endeuors are corrupt and faulty, and therefore it is neceſſarie that they be borne againe if they will enter into the kingdome of God. Forgeueneſſe of ſinnes is preached when Rom.1.30. men are taught that Chriſt is made to them redemption, righteouſneſſe, ſaluation and life: in whoſe name they are freely accompted righteous and innocent in the ſight of God, whereas both theſe graces are receiued by faith, as I haue in an other place declared. But becauſe the goodneſſe of God whereby ſinnes are forgeuen, is the proofe obiect of faith, therefore it ſhalbe good that it be diligently diſtinguiſhed from repentance.

20 Now as the hatred of ſinne, which is the beginning of repentance

e,openeth vs the firſt entrie vnto Chriſt,which ſheweth himſelfe one but to miſerable and afflicted ſinners, which grone, labour, oden,are hungry and thirſty,and pine away with ſorrow and mi- : ſo muſt we endeuor toward repentance, throughout all our pplie it, and follow it to the ende, if we will abide in Chriſt. For ame to call ſinners, but to repentance: he was ſent to bleſſe the orthy, but ſo that euery one ſhould turne himſelf from his wic- eſſe. The Scripture is full of ſuch ſayings. Wherefore when God eth forgeueneſſe of ſinnes, he likewiſe vſeth to require on our e repentance, ſecretly declaring thereby, that his mercie ought e to men a cauſe to repent them. Do (ſaith he) iudgement and teouſneſſe,bycauſe ſaluation is come nere at hand. Againe. There come to Sion a Redemer, and to them that in Iacob repēt from r ſinnes. Againe. Seke the Lord while he may be found: call vpon while he is nere. Let the wicked leue his way and the wickednes s thoughts,and be turned to the Lorde,and he ſhall haue mercy im. Againe. Turne ye and repent, that your ſinnes may be done . Where yet is to be noted, that this condition is not ſo annexed ough our repentance were a ſoundation to deſerue pardon,but er (becauſe the Lorde hath determined to haue mercy vpon men his ende that they ſhould repent) he teacheth men whither they trauaile if they will obteine grace. Therefore ſo long as we ſhall ll in the priſon of our body,we muſt continually wraſtle with the s of our corrupt fleſh,yea with our owne naturall ſoule. Plato ſaith rtaine places, that the life of a Philoſopher is a meditation of h, but we may more truely ſay, that the life of a Chriſtian man is rpetuall ſtudie and exerciſe of mortifieng the fleſh, till it being ly ſlaine, the Spirit of God get the dominion in vs. Therefore I ke that he hath much profited, that hath learned much to mi- himſelfe: not that he ſhoulde ſticke faſt in that mire and go her, but rather that he ſhould haſt and long toward God, that g grafted into the death and life of Chriſt. he ſhould ſtudie vpon a nuall repentance: as truely they can not otherwiſe do, that haue turall hatred of ſinne: for no man euer hated ſinne, vnleſſe he firſt in loue with righteouſneſſe. This doctrine, as it was moſt le of all other, ſo I thought it beſt to agree with the truth of the pture.

Now that Repentance is a ſingular gift of God, I thinke it be el knowen by the doctrine aboue taught, that I neede not to re- a long diſcourſe to proue it againe. Therefore the Church prai- and hath in admiration the benefit of God, that he hath geuen of the wrong vnderstanding whereof, the Nouatians in old time e gathered matter to play the mad men: with whose rigorous-e certaine good men being offended, beleued this to be a coun-st Epistle in the Apostles name, which yet in all partes doth true-our of an Apostolike spirit. But bycause we contend with none with them that allow it, it is easy to shew, how these sentences nothing maintaine their errour. First it is necessarie that the Ale agree with his maister, whiche affirmeth that all sinne and phemie shall be forgeuē, except the sinne against the holy Ghost, ch is not forgeuen neither in this world, nor in the world to come.

reupon followeth, that pardon is denied to no speciall offenbut onely to one, which proceding of a desperate rage, can not scribed to weakenesse, and openly sheweth that a man is possessed

But to discusse this, it behoueth to enquire what is that same mble offense, that shall haue no forgeueneſſe. Whereas Augu-in one place defineth it an obstinate stifneſſe euen vnto death, desperie of pardō, that doth not well agree with the very wor-of Christ, that it shall not be forgeuen in this world. For either is spoken in vaine, or it may be committed in this life. But if stines definitiō be true, then it is not committed, vnlesse it cone eōe vnto death. Whereas some other say, that he sinneth against holy Ghost, that enuieth the grace bestowed vpon his brother: I not from whense that is fetched. But let vs bring a true definitiō, h being ones proued with sure testimonies, shall easily by it selfe throwe all the reste. I say therefore, that they sinne against the Ghost, which of set purpose resist the truth of God, with bright-e whereof they are so daseled, that they can not pretend igno-e: which they do onely to this ende to resist. For Christ men, Mat. 12.

24 But whereas ſome do thinke it to harde and to far from the der merciefulneſſe of God, that any are put away that flee to be-ching the Lords mercie: that is eaſily aunſwered. For he doth not , that pardon is denied them if they turne to the Lorde: but he erly denieth, that they can riſe vnto repentance, bycauſe they are the iuſte iudgement of God ſtriken with eternall blindneſſe for ir vnthankefulneſſe. And it maketh nothing to the contrarie that erward he applieth too this purpoſe the example of Eſau, which in ne attempted with howling & weping to recouer his right of the ſt begotten. And no more doth that threatening of the Prophet, en they crie, I will not heare. For in ſuch phraſes of ſpeache is Zach. 7.

extremity to loke vnto ỹ which before they careleſly neglected, at there is no good thing for thẽ but in ỹ Lorde helpe. But this they not ſo much call vpon, as they mourne that it is taken from them.

Therefore the Prophet meaneth nothing els by Crying, and the Apoſtle nothing els by Weping, but that horrible torment which by deſperatiō fretteth & vexeth the wicked. This it is good to marke diligently: for els God ſhould diſagree with himſelfe, which cryeth

And as I haue alredy ſaid, it is certaine that the minde of man is not turned to better, but by Gods grace preuenting it. Alſo his promiſe concerning calling vpon him, will neuer deceiue. But that horrible torment wherewith the reprobate are diuerſly drawen, when they ſee that they muſt needes ſeeke God, that they may finde remedie for their euels, and yet do flee from his preſence, is vnpropetly called Conuerſion and prayer.

1. Reg. 28.29. God is appeaſed with fained repentance, how Achab obteined pardon and turned away the puniſhment pronounced vpon him, when yet it appereth by the reſte of the courſe of his life to haue been onely ſtriken amaſed with ſodeine feare. He did in deede put on ſackcloth, ſcattered aſhes vpon him, lay vpon the ground, and (as it is ſtified of him) he was humbled before God: but it was not enough to cut his garmentes when his heart remained thicke & ſwollen with malice. Yet we ſee howe God is turned to mercy. I anſwere that ſomtimes hypocrites are ſpared for a time, but yet ſo that euer the wrath of God lieth vpon them, and that is done not ſo much for their ſakes, as for common example. For whereas Achab had his puniſhment mitigate vnto him, what profit got he thereby, but that he ſhould fele it a liue in earth? Therefore the courſe of God, although it were hidden, yet had a faſt abiding place in his houſe, and he himſelf went Gen.27 18. into eternall deſtruction. This ſame is to be ſeene in Eſau. For though he had a repulſe, yet a temporell bleſſing was graunted him at weping. But bycauſe the ſpirituall inheritance, by the oracle of God could not reſt but with one of the brethren, when Iacob was choſen and Eſau refuſed, that putting away did exclude the mercie of God: this comfort was left him as to a beaſtly man, that he ſhoulde be fed with the fat of the earth and the deaw of heauen. And this is it that I ſaid euen nowe, that it ought to be referred to the example of other, that we ſhould learne the more chereſully to applie our minddes and endeuours to repentance, bycauſe it is not to be doubted that when we are truely and hartily turned, God will be ready to forgiue vs, whoſe mercifulneſſe extendeth it ſelfe euen to the vnworthy, ſo longe as they ſhew any grieſe at all. And therwithal we be alſo taught how terrible iudgement is prepared for all the obſtinate, which e it a sport with no lesse shameleſſe face than iron heart to despise set nought by the threateninges of God. After his manner he entimes reached out his hand to the children of Israell, to releue ir miseries, although their cries were counterfait, and their heart ble and false, as himselfe in the Psalme complaineth, that they by Psal. 78 l by returned to their nature, and so minded with so frendly gentle 36. ling to bring then to earnest conuersion, or to make them vnex- ble. Yet in releasing punishmentes for a time, he doth not binde nselfe to a perpetuall lawe thereby, but rather riseth somtimes re rigorously against Hypocrites, and doubleth their peines, that reby may appere howe much fayning displeaseth him. But (as I e said) he sheweth some examples of his redinesse to geue par- n, by which the godly may be encouraged to amendement of life, l their pride may be the more greuously condemned, that stub- rnely kick against the pricke.

The iiij. Chapter.

That all that the Sophisters babble in their scholes of Penance, is far from the purenesse of the Gospell. VVhere is entreated of Confession and Satisfaction.

NOw I come to discusse those things, which the Schole So- phisters haue taught of repentance. Which I will run ouer in as few words as may be, bycause I minde not to go through all, least this boke, whiche I labour to drawe into a short ridgment, should growe to a huge greatnesse. And the Sophisters ue entangled it in so many volumes, being a matter otherwise not ry hard, that a man shall hardly finde how to get out, if he ones fall o their dregges. First, in defining it, they shew that they neuer vn- rstode what repentance was. For they take hold of certaine sayings the olde writers, which do nothing at all expresse that nature of pentance, as that to repent is to wepe for sinnes passed, and not to mmit sinnes to be wept for: Againe, that it is to lament euels pas- d, and not to commit againe other euels to be lamented. Againe: at it is a certaine sorowfull reuēge, punishing in himselfe that which is sory to haue committed. Againe: that it is a sorrow of heart, and rrenesse of soule, for the euels that a man hath committed or to hich he hath consented. But, to graunt these thinges well saide of e fathers, (which a contentious man might easily enough denie) t they were not spoken to this entent to describe repentance, but ely to exhort them to whom they wrote, that they should not fall aine into the same offenses, out of which they had ben drawen. But if we list to turne all such titles of commendation into definitions then other may also be adioined as rightfully as they. As that Chrysostome, Repentance is a medicine that destroyeth sinne, a gift geuen from heauen, a maruellous vertue, a grace surmounting the force of the law. Yea and the doctrine which they after ward teach is somwhat worse than these definitions. For they sticke so earnestly in outward exercises, that a manne can gather nothinge els out of infinite volumes, but that repentance is a discipline and rigorous diet that serueth partly to tame the fleth, and partly to chastise and punish vices: but they kepe maruellous silence of the inward renewing of the minde that draweth with it correction of life. There is in deed much talke among them of Contrition and Attrition, they torment soules with many doubtes, & do thrust into them much trouble and carefulnesse: but when they seeme to haue throughly wounded the hearres, they heale the bitternesse with a light sprinkeling of ceremonies. And when they haue thus curiously defined repentance, they diuide it into contrition of hearte, confession of mouth, and satisfaction of worke, no more logically than they defined it, although they wolde seeme to haue wasted all their age in framinge of syllogisms. But if a man will go about to proue by the definition (which kinde of argument is of force among logicians) that a man may wepe for his sinnes passed, and commit no more to be wept for, that he may bewaile his euels passed, and commit no more to be bewailed, and that he may punish himself for that which he was sory to haue committed. &c. although he do not confesse with his mouth: howe will they maintaine their diuision? For if that true penitent man do not confesse, then repentance may be without confession. But if they answer, that this diuision is referred to repentance, in respect that it is a sacrament, or is meant of the whole perfection of repentance which they comprehend not in their definitions, thē is there no cause to blame me, but let them lay the fault in themselues that make not a purer and plainer definition, I truely (according to my profession) when any thing is disputed of, do referre all things to the very definition, which is the stay and grounde of the whole disputation. But admitte that to be their masterlike licence. Now let vs particularly consider all the partes in ordre. Wheras I do negligently leape ouer trifles those things that they with great grauitie of countenance do publish for misteries, I do it not vnwittingely, neither were it vnpaineful for me to cōfute al that they thinke thēselues to haue deeply and suttlely disputed) but I woulde thinke it against conscience to wery the readers with such trifles without any profit. Truely to know by the queſtiõs which they moue and toſſe, and where-h they miſerably encomber themſelues, that they prate of things e they know not. As for example: whether the repentance of our e pleaſeth God, when obſtinacie endureth in other. Againe: ether the puniſhmentes layed vpon man by God, do auaile to ſa-faction. Againe: whether repentance may be oftentimes reiterate deadly ſinnes: where they fowly and wickedly define, that pence is daily done but for veniall ſinnes. Likewiſe they very much ment themſelues with a groſſe errour, vpon the ſayinge of Hie-me, that repentance is a ſecond bourde after ſhipwracke. Wherin y ſhewe that they neuer waked from their brutiſh dulneſſe, to le ſo much as a farre of the thouſandth part of their faultes.

But I wold the readers ſhould note, that here is not a quarel at the ſhadow of an aſſe, but the moſt earneſt matter of all other is reated of, that is to ſay, forgeueneſſe of ſinnes. For wheras they quire three things to repentance, contrition of heart, confeſſion mouth, and ſatisfaction of worke: they do therwithall teach that oſe three things are neceſſarie to the obteining of forgeuenes of nes. But if it behoue vs to knowe any thinge at all in all oure reli-on, this truely behoueth vs moſt of all, I meane to vnderſtand and owe well by what meane, with what lawe, vpon what condition, th what eaſineſſe or hardneſſe the forgeueneſſe of ſinnes is obtai-
d. If this knowledge ſtande not plaine and certaine, the cõſcience n haue no reſt at all, no peace with God, no confidence or aſſuredeſſe, but continually trembleth, wauereth, is troubled, is tormented, vexed, horribly dreadeth, hateth and fleeth the ſight of God. But the forgeueneſſe of ſinnes hang vpon thoſe conditions to which ey do binde it, then nothing is more miſerable, nothing in more mentable caſe than we. They make Contrition the firſt parte of beining pardon, and they require that to be a due contrition, that to ſay perfect and full: but in the meane time they do not deter-ine when a man may be aſſured, that he hath to the full meaſure rfectly perfourmed this contrition. Truely I graunt that euery man ught diligently and earneſtly to enforce himſelfe, with bitterly eping for his ſinnes, to whet himſelfe more and more to a lothing d hatred of them. For this is a ſorrowe not to be repented, that reedeth repentance vnto ſaluation. But when there is ſuch a bitter-eſſe of ſorrowe required as may proportionally aunſwer the great-eſſe of the fault, and ſuch as may in balaunce counterpaiſe with the uſt of pardon, here the pure conſciences are maruellouſly tormend and troubled, when they ſee them ſelues chaunged with a due contrition of ſinnes, and do not ſo atteme the meaſure of that de that they can determine with them ſelues, that they haue duely pe formed ſo much as they duely oughte. If they ſay that we muſt do much as lieth in vs, then come we ſtill to the ſame pointe that we were at before: for how dare any manne aſſure himſelfe that he ha employed all his force to bewaile his ſinnes? So when the conſcie ces hauinge longe wraſtled with them ſelues, and longe bene exer ciſed with battailes, do at length finde no heauen to reſt in, yet ſome what to eaſe them ſelues, they enforce them ſelues to a ſorrowe, a wringe out teares to make perfect their contrition.

3 But if they ſay that I ſlaundre them: Let them come forth an ſhewe any one man, that by ſuch doctrine of contrition hath not o ther bene driuen to deſpeire, or hath not ſet for his defenſe a cou terfaitng of ſorrowe in ſteede of true ſorrowe, againſt the iudgement of God. We haue alſo our ſelues ſaid in one place, that forgeuenes of ſinnes neuer commeth without repentance, bycauſe none but th afflicted and wounded with conſcience of ſinnes, can fincerely c vpon the mercie of God: but we haue therewithall further ſaid, tha repentance is not the cauſe of the forgeueneſſe of ſinnes. As in thoſe tormentes of ſoules, which they ſay muſt be perfourmed duetie, we haue taken them away: we haue taught the ſinner not loke vpon his owne contrition nor his owne teares, but to faſten bo his eyes vpon the onely mercie of God. We haue onely put him minde that Chriſt called the laboring and loden, when he was ſen to publiſh glad tidings to the poore, to heale the contrite in heart, t preach remiſſion to captiues, to deliuer priſonners, and to comfor them that mourne. From which ſhoulde be excluded both the Pha riſes, that filled with their owne righteouſneſſe, do not acknowlege their owne pouertie, and alſo the deſpiſers that careleſſe of Gods wrath do ſeke no remedy for their euels. For ſuch do not labour, no are loden, nor contrite in heart, nor bounde nor captiue. But there great difference betweene teaching a man to deſerue forgeueneſſe o ſinnes with due and full contrition, which the ſinner can neuer pe fourme: and inſtructing him to hunger and thirſt for the mercie o God, that by the acknowledging of his owne miſerie, by his owne vnquietneſſe, wearineſſe and captiuitie, it may be ſhewed him, whe he ought to ſeeke for releeſe, reſt and libertie: and finally, he may be taught in the humbling of himſelfe, to geue glorie to God.

entes they proue this confeſſion, either Formed or Vnformed to e the commaundement of God. The Lord (ſay they) ſent the le-ous men to the prieſtes. But what? Sent he thē to confeſſion? Who er heard it ſpoken, that the Leuiticall prieſtes were appointed to are confeſſions? Therefore they flie to Allegories, and ſay: It was mmaunded by the law of Moſes, that the prieſtes ſhould diſcerne twene leproſie and leproſie: ſinne is a ſpirituall leproſie: therefore is the prieſtes office to pronounce vpon it. Before that I aunſwere em, I aske this by the way, If this place make thē iudges of the ſpi-uall leproſie, why do they draw to thē the knowledge of nāturall d fleſhly leproſie? This forſooth is not to mocke with the Scriptus. The law giueth to the Leuiticall prieſtes the knowledge of Le-roſie, therfore let vs take it vpō vs. Sinne is a ſpiritual leproſie, ther-re let vs alſo be examiners of ſinne. Now I anſwere: ſith the prieſtoode is remoued, it is neceſſary that the law be remoued alſo. All rieſthoodes are remoued to Chriſt, and fulfilled and ended in him, herefore to him onely all the right and honor of prieſthoode is alſo moued. If they loue ſo well to follow allegories, let them ſet Chriſt efore them for the only prieſt, and heape vpon his iudgement ſeate e free iuriſdiction of all things: this we can eaſily be cōtent to ſufr. Moreouer their allegorie is very vnfit, that ſetteth among the ce-monies that lawe which is merely politike. Why then did Chriſt nde the leprous men to the prieſtes? That the prieſtes ſhoulde not uill that he did breake the law that commaunded the man healed f the leproſie, to be ſhewed before the prieſt and purged with offeng of ſacrifice: therefore he commaunded the leprous men beinge eanſed, to do that which belonged to the law. Go (ſayth he) and ſhew your ſelues to the prieſt, and offer the gift that Moſes had commaunded in the law that it ſhoulde be for a witneſſe vnto them. And truely this miracle ſhoulde haue bin a witneſſe vnto them, for they had pronounced them leprous, and now they pronounce them healed. Are they not whether they will or no compelled to become witneſſes of Chriſtes miracles? Chriſt leaueth to them his miracle to be examined, they can not deny it. But becauſe they ſtill dally with it, therefore this worke is for a witneſſe vnto them. So in an other place: This Goſpell ſhalbe preached in all the world, for a witneſſe vnto all nations. Againe: Ye ſhalbe led before kings and gouernours, for a witneſſe to them, that is: that in the iudgement of God they may be more ſtrongly conuinced. But if they had rather folow Chriſoſtome, he alſo teacheth that Chriſt did this for ỹ Iewes ſake, that he ſhould not be accompted a breaker of the law. Albeit in ſo cleare a matter I am aſhamed to alleage the witneſſe of any man: wheras Chriſt pronounceth that he leaueth the right of the lawe whole to the prieſtes as to the profeſſed enemies of the Goſpell, which were alway bent to carpe againſt it, if their mouth had not bin ſtopped. Wherefore that the popiſh ſacrificing prieſtes may ſtill keepe this poſſeſſion, let them openly take partes with them which muſt of neceſſity be conſtrained by force, that they ſpeake not ill againſt Chriſt. For this nothinge belongeth to his true miniſters.

5 They bring their ſecond argument out of the ſame fountaine, that is from an allegorie, as though allegories were of great force to confirme any doctrin. But let them be of force, if I do not proue that I can make a fairer ſhew of thẽ for my ſide, than they can for theirs. They ſay, The Lord commaunded his Diſciples, that when Lazarus was raiſed vp, they ſhould vnbinde and looſe him from his bondes. Here firſt they lie: for it is no where read that the Lord ſaid this to the Diſciples: and it is much more likely that he ſayd it to the Iewes that ſtoode by him, that the miracle might be made the more euident without ſuſpicion of fraude, and his power appeare the greater, that without any touching, with his only word he raiſed vp dead men. For thus I expounde it: that the Lord, to take away all wrongfull opinion frõ the Iewes, willed them to rolle away the ſtone, to feele the ſtinke, to behold aſſured tokens of death, to ſee him riſing by the only power of his worde, and them firſt to feele him liuinge. And this is the iudgement of Chryſoſtome. But let vs graunt: that this was ſpoken to the Diſciples: what will they get therby? That the Lord gaue his Apoſtles power to looſe. But how much more fitly and more handſomely might theſe thinges be applied by way of allegorie, to ſay that by ſigne the lord meant to inſtruct his faithfull, to looſe them that had raiſed vp: that is, that they ſhould not call into remembrance ſe ſinnes that he had forgotten: that they ſhould not condemne for ſinners whom he had acquited: that they ſhould not reproch n with thoſe things that he had forgiuen: that they ſhould not be orous to puniſh, and lightly offended, where he is mercifull and ily entreated to ſpare? Truely nothing ought to moue vs more to dineſſe to forgiue, than the example of the Iudge that threatneth t he will be vnappeaſable to them that be too rigorous & vngen- Now let them go and boaſt of their allegories.

But now they ioyne more neere hande with vs, when they fight s they thinke) with open ſentences. They that came to Iohns bap- me, did confeſſe their ſinnes, & Iames willeth that we confeſſe our nes one to an other. No maruell if they that wold be baptiſed did nfeſſe their ſinnes, for it was ſayd before that Iohn preached the ptiſme of repẽtance, & baptiſed in water vnto repentance. Whom ould he then haue baptized, but them that had confeſſed themſel- ſinners? Baptiſme is a token of the forgiueneſſe of ſinnes: and o ſhould be admitted to this tokẽ but ſinners, & they that acknow- dge thẽſelues to be ſuch? Therfore they cõfeſſed their ſinnes, that y might be baptiſed. And not without a cauſe doth Iames bid vs nfeſſe one to an other. But if they did marke what followeth next er, they would vnderſtand, that this alſo maketh litle for thẽ. Con- ſſe (ſaith he) one to an other your ſinnes, & pray one for an other. e ioyneth together mutuall confeſſion & mutual praier. If we muſt nfeſſe to prieſtes only, thẽ muſt we alſo pray for prieſtes only. Yea, hat and if it might folow of the words of Iames that only prieſtes ight confeſſe? for when he willeth that we ſhould confeſſe one to other, he ſpeaketh only to them that may heare the confeſſions of her: his word is in Greke Allelous, mutually, interchaungeably, by rnes, or (if they ſo like beſt to tearme it) by way of reciprocatiõ one an other. But ſo interchãgeably none can cõfeſſe, but they that are ete to heare cõfeſſions. Which prerogatiue ſith they vouchſaue to raunt only to prieſtes, we do alſo put ouer the office of confeſſing to em only. Therfore away with ſuch trifelings, & let vs take the very eaning of the Apoſtle which is ſimple & plaine: that is, ỹ we ſhould y our weakenes one in an others boſome to receiue mutual coun- l, mutual cõpaſſion & mutual comfort one of an other: then that we eing naturally priuie to ỹ weakeneſſes of our brethren, ſhould pray r thẽ to ỹ Lord. Why do they then alleage Iames againſt vs, which o ſo earneſtly require ỹ cõfeſſion of the mercy of God? but no man

Iah. 3. 2. Ro. 3.9. can confesse Gods mercy, vnlesse he haue first confessed his owne misery. Yea we rather pronounce him accursed that doth not before God, before his Angels, before the Church, yea and before all men confesse himselfe a sinner. For the Lorde hath concluded all vnder sinnes that all mouthes might be stopped, and all flesh humbled before God, and he only iustified and exalted.

7 But I maruell with what face they dare affirme, that the confession whereof they speake, is of the lawe of God: the vse whereof we graunt in dede to be very auncient, but such as we are able to prove in old time to haue bin at liberty. Truely euen their owne cronicles declare, that there was no certaine lawe or constitution of it before the times of Innocent the third. Surely if they had had a more auncient law, they woulde rather haue taken hold thereof, than haue bin contented with the decree of the counsell of Laterane, and so made themselues to be laughed at, euen of children. In other things they sticke not to make forged decrees, which they father vpon the most auncient Counsells, that they may with very reuerence of antiquity dasell the eyes of the simple. In this point, it came not in their minde to thrust in such a false packe. Therfore by their owne witnesse, there are not yet passed three hundred yeres since Innocent the third laid that snare vpon men, and charged them with necessity of Confession. But, to speake nothinge of the time: the very barbarousnesse of the wordes minisheth the credit of that lawe. For where these good fathers commaunde euery one of both kindes, male and female, once euery yeare to confesse all his sinnes to his owne priest, pleasant men do merily take exception, that in this commaundement are contained only Hermaphrodites, & say that it belongeth not to such a one as is either male or female only. Since that time, a more grosse beastliness hath bewrayed it selfe in their scholers, that can not expound what is meant By his owne priest. Whatsoeuer all the Popes hyred bablers do prate, we hold both that Christ was neuer the author of this law that compelleth men to recken vp their sinnes, and also that there passed a thousande and two hundred yeares from the resurrection of Christ before that any such law was made. And so, that this tyranny was then first brought in, when all godlinesse & learning being destroyed, the visiors of Pastors had without choise taken all licentiousnesse vpon them. Moreouer there are euident testimonies both in histories and other auncient writers, which teach that this confession was a politicke discipline redeemed by the Bishops, not a lawe made by Christ or his Apostles. I will alleage but one out of many, which shall be a plaine proufe thereof. Sozomenus reporteth that this constitution of hops was diligently kept in all the west Churches, but specially at me. Wherby he sheweth that it was no vniuersall ordinance of all urches. But he saith that there was one of the priestes peculiarly ointed to serue for this office. Whereby he doth sufficiently con- e that which these men do falsely say of the keyes giuen for this vniuersally to the whole order of priesthoode. For it was not the mmon office of all priestes, but the speciall duety of some one that s chosen therunto by the bishop. The same is he, whom at this day all cathedrall Churches they call Penitentiarie, the examiner of ynous offenses, and such whereof the punishment pertaineth to od example. Then he saith immediatly after, that this was also the anner at Constantinople, till a certaine woman fayninge that she me to confession, was founde so to haue coloured vnder that pre- nce the vnhoneſt company that she vsed with a certaine Deacon. r this act, Nectarius a man notable in holinesse and learninge, bi- op of that Church, tooke away that custome of confessinge. Here, re let these asses lift vp their eares. If auricular confession were the w of God, how durst Nectarius repelle and destroy it? Will they ac- se for an heretike and schismatike Nectarius a holy man of God, lowed by the consenting voices of all the olde fathers? But by the me sentence they must condemne the Church of Constantinople, which Sozomenus affirmeth that the maner of confessing was not ely let slip for a time, but also discontinued euen till within time his remembrance. Yea let them condemne of apostasie not onely e Church of Constantinople, but also all the east Churches which ue neglected that law, which (if they say true) is inuiolable & com- anded to all Christians.

3 This abrogation Chrysostome, which was also bishop of Con- antinople, doth in so many places euidently testifie, that it is maruel at these dare mutter to the contrary. To the Lord ſhew thy woundes which hath care of thee, that is both gentle & a Phiſition. Afterward he bringeth in God ſpeaking thus: I compel thee not to come into the mids of a ſtage, to call many witneſſes, tell thy ſinne to me alone priuatly, ỹ I may heale thy ſore. Shall we ſay that Chryſoſtome did ſo raſhly, when he wrote this and other like thinges, that he would deliuer mens conſciences from theſe bonds wherewith they be bound by ỹ law of God? [not] But he dare not require that as of neceſſity, which he doth not vnderſtand to be commaunded by the word of God.

9 But that the matter may be made the plainer and eaſier, firſt we will faithfully rehearſe, what kinde of cõfeſſion is taught by the word of God: and then we wil alſo declare their inuentions, but not all (for who could draw drie ſuch an infinite ſea?) but only thoſe wherin they comprehend the ſome of their ſecret cõfeſſion. Here I am loth to rehearſe how oft the old tranſlatour hath giuen in tranſlation this word Confeſſe in ſtede of Praiſe: which the groſſeſt vnlearned men commonly know: ſauing that it is good to haue their preſumptuouſnes bewraied, that do giue away that which was wrytten of the praiſes of God, to their owne tyrannicall commaundement. To proue that confeſſion auaileth to cheare the mindes they thruſt in that place of the Pſal. 13. 5. Pſalme: In the voice of reioiſing & cõfeſſion. Becauſing they are ſo become paſt ſhame, let the godly readers remember that by the iuſt vengeãce of God they haue bin caſt into a reprobate minde, that their preſumption ſhould be ỹ more deteſtable. But if we will reſt in the ſimple doctrine of the Scripture, we ſhall not be in danger of any ſuch deceites to begnile vs. For therin is apointed our order of confeſſinge, that foraſmuch as it is the Lord that forgiueth forgetteth, and putteth away ſinnes, therefore we ſhould confeſſe our ſinnes to him for to obtaine pardon, he is the Phiſician, therfore let vs ſhew our diſeaſes vnto him. It is he that is grieued & offẽded, therfore let vs ſeke peace at his hand. He is the knower of heartes, & purueie to all thoughtes, therfore let vs make haſt to poure out our hearts before him. Finally it is he that calleth ſinners, therfore let vs not delay to come to him. I haue (ſaith Dauid) made my ſinne knowen vnto Pſal. 51. 5. thee, & haue not hiddẽ my vnrighteouſnes. d man. I haue (saith he) sinned to the Lorde, that is to say, now I leage nothing for my excuse, I vse no shiftes, but that all men may dge me a sinner, and that the same thing which I would haue had cret frõ the Lord, may be also open to men. Therfore a willing con ssion before men alway soloweth the secret cõfession that is made God, so oft as it is profitable for ẏ glory of God or for ẏ humbling our selues. For this reason the Lord in old time ordained in ẏ peo- Leu. 16 le of Israell, ẏ the priest should first speake the words, & the people 19. ying after him should openly cõfesse their iniquity in ẏ church. For e foresaw ẏ this help was necessary for thẽ that euery man might be e better brought to a iust reknowledging of himselfe. And mete it ẏ with ẏ confessiõ of our owne miserywe should among our selues, before all the world glorifie the goodnesse & mercy of our God.

11 And it is conuenient ẏ this kinde of confessiõ be both ordinay in the church, and also extraordinarily vsed in speciall maner, if it appen at any time the people to be gilty of any generall fault. Of is second kinde we haue an example in ẏ solemne confession which ll the people vsed by the meanes & guiding of Esdras and of Nehemias. For where as that long banishment, the destruction of the City Neh. 9.

on reuolting of them all: they could not acknowledge the benefit of liuerance in such sort as was mete, vnlesse they did first condemne hemselues. Neither maketh it matter, if in a whole Congregation

some few sometime be innocent. For sith they be the members of a feeble and diseased body, they ought not to boast of healthfulnesse. Yea it is not possible but they must also thēselues gather some infection and beare part of the blame. Therefore so oft as we be afflicted, either with pestilence or warre, or barennesse or any other plague: if it be our duety tō flie to mourning, to fasting and to other tokens of giltinesse: then confession it selfe, wherupon all these things do hang, is not to be neglected. As for the ordinary cōfession, beside that it is commended by the Lordes owne mouth, there is no wiseman that considering the profit thereof, dare disallow it. For where as in all holy assemblies we make our apparaunce in the sight of God and the Angels: what other beginning may there be of our pleading, but our acknowledging of vnworthinesse? But ẏ (some man will say) is done by euery prayer. For so oft as we pray for pardon, we therby confesse our sinnes. I graunt. But if you consider how great is our carelesnesse, or drousinesse, or sluggishnesse, you will graunt me that it shoulde be a profitable ordinance, if by some solemne vse of confession, the Christian common people shoulde be exercised to humbling themselues. For though the ceremonie that the Lord commaunded the Israelites, was parcel of the nurture of the law, yet in some maner it also belongeth to vs. And truely we see that this vse is in well ordered churches profitably obserued, that euery Sonday the minister should rehearse a forme of confession in the name of himselfe and of all the people, wherein he accuseth all of wickednes, and craueth pardon of the Lord. Finally with this keye the gate to prayer is opened as well priuatly to euery man, as vniuersally to all men.

12 Moreouer the Scripture alloweth two formes of priuate confession, one that is made for our owne sake, whereof that sayinge of Iames is spoken, that we should confesse our sinnes one to an other, for his meaning is, that disclosing our wickednesses one to an other, we should one help an other with mutuall counsell and comfort. The other forme, that is to be vsed for our neighbours sake, to appease him & reconcile him vnto vs, if he haue in any thing bin offended by vs. Now in the first kinde of confession, although Iames in this hath assigned no man by name, into whose bosome we shoulde vnlode our selues, leaueth vs a free choise, to confesse to him that shall seeme meetest vnto vs of all the flocke of the church: yet we ought principally to chose the Pastors, because they are for the most part in comparison of the other to be iudged meetest. I say that they are meetest in comparison of the rest, because the Lorde appointeth them by the very calling of their ministery, at whose mouth we shoulde be instruc-

ded to subdue and correct our sinnes, and also may receiue comfort by mult of pardon. For as the office of mutuall admonishment & reprouing is committed to all men, yet it is specially enioyned to the ministers. So when as we all ought to comfort and confirme one an other in confidence of Gods mercy: yet we see that the ministers, to assure our consciences of the forgiuenesse of sinnes, are ordayned as it were witnesses and pledges thereof, in so much that they be said to forgiue sinnes and loose soules. When thou heatest this to be ascribed vnto them, thinke that it is for thy profit. Therefore let euery one of the faithfull remember this to be his duety, if he be priuely so vexed and troubled with the feelinge of sinnes that he cannot winde out himselfe without help of an other, not to neglect the remedy that the Lord hath offered him: that is, for his releefe to vse the priuate confession to his owne Pastor: and for his comfort to craue the priuate help of him, whose duety it is both publiquely and priuely to comfort the people of God with the doctrine of the Gospel. But alway this moderation is to be vsed, where God appointeth no certainetie, not to binde consciences with a certayne yoke. Hereupon followeth that such Confession ought to be free: not to be required of all men, but to be commended to those onely that shal vnderstand themselues to haue nede of it. Then that euen they that seek for their nede, should not be compelled by any commaundement or trayned by any doctrine, to reckon vp all their sinnes, but so farre as they shall thinke it behoueful for them, that they may receiue some frute of comfort. Faithfull Pastors ought not only to leaue this liberty to the churches, but also to maintaine it, & stoutly stand in defence of it, if they will haue tyranny absent from their ministery and superstition from the people. Mat. 18. Iohn. 3. 23.

13 Of the other sorte of confession Christ speaketh in Matthew. When thou offer thy gift at the altar, & there remembrest that thy brother hath any thing against thee, leaue thy gift there, & go, & first be reconciled to thy brother, & then come and offer thy gift. For so charity that hath bin appaired by our fault, is to be repaired by acknowledging & craning pardon of the offence that we haue committed. Vnder this kinde is contained their confession that haue sinned euen to the offending of the whole church. For if Christ maketh so great a matter of the priuate offence of one mā, to forbid from holy misteries all them that haue sinned against their brother, till they be with iust amendes reconciled: how much greater reason is it, that he that hath offended the church with any euill example, should recouer the fauour of the church with acknowledging his fault? So was the Corin- Matt. 5. 23. 2. Cor. 2. 6.

by confession when he absolueth & retained sinnes, or by sentence when he excommunicated and receiueth againe to partaking of the Sacramentes. Finally, when they vnderstand that they be not yet out of this dout, but that it stil may be obiected against them, that oftentimes their priests do binde and loose men vnworthy, which are not therfore bounde or looſed in heauē: then (which is their last refuge) they answere that the giuing of the keyes, must be construed with a limitation, that is to say, that Christ hath promised, that before his iudgement seate such sentence of the Priest shalbe allowed as hath bin iustly pronounced, accordinge as the deseruinges of him that is bounde or looſed, did require. Moreouer they say, that these keyes are giuen by Christ to all Priests, and are deliuered to them by their Bishoppes, at the time of their promotinge to priesthoode: but the free vse of them, remaineth only with such as do exercise Ecclesiasticall offices: and that the excommunicate & suspended Priestes haue in deede the keyes, but rusty & bounde vp. And they that say these things may well seeme modest & sober in cōparison of ỹ rest, which vpon a new anuicide haue forged new keyes with which they say the treasure of the church is locked vp. These keyes we shall hereafter trie in place fit for it.

16 Now I will in few wordes answere to euery one of these particularly. But at this present I speake not by what right or what wronge they binde the soules of the faithfull with their lawes, forasmuch as we will consider that when place serueth. But where they charge men with a law of reckeninge vp all their sinnes: where they say that sinne is not forgiuen but vpon condition, if there be an intent conceiued to confesse it: where they babble that there remaineth no entre into Paradise, if occasion of confessinge be neglected: that is in no wise to be suffered. Must all sinnes be reckened vp? But Dauid, (Who as I thinke) had well studied vpon the confession of his sinnes, yet cried out: Who shall vnderstand his errours? Lord cleanse me from my secret sinnes. And in an other place. My iniquities haue passed about my heade, and like a weighty burden haue waxed heauy about my strength. Truely he vnderstoode how great was the bottomles

yon die numbring of his sinnes, whē he seeth that Dauid can make no number of his?

With this butchery, the soules that haue bin touched with any feelinge of God, haue bin more cruelly vexed. First they called themselues to accompt: then they deuided sinnes into armes, into bowes, into braunches, and into twigges, according to these mens iudgemēt they weyed the qualities, quantities, and circumstances. And so the matter went a litle forward. But when they had proceeded a litle further, than was on ech side skie, and on ech side seae, no haue, no safe roade: the mo that they had passed ouer, the greater heape alway did thrust it selfe into their sight, yea they rose vp as hye mountaines, & there appeared no hope, not so much as after long cōpasings, any way to escape. And so they did sticke fast betwene the sauce & the stone, & at last was found no other issue but desperation. Then these cruel butchers, to ease the woundes that themselues had made, did certaine gentle plaisters, that euery man should do as much as he could. But new cares againe rose vp, yea new tormentes did slea the silly soules, as to thinke: I haue not employed time enough, I haue not endeuored my selfe with such diligence as I ought, I haue passed ouer many things by negligēce & the forgetfulnes that commeth by negligence is not excusable. Thē were there ministred other plaisters to asswage such paines, as Repent thee of thy negligence: if it be not thy owne carelesse, it shall be pardoned. But all these things can not close vp the wounde, and are not so much easmens of the euill, as poison couered with honey, that they should not with their bitternesse offend the first taste but enter into the bowels before that they be perceiued. Therfore this terrible saying alway calleth vpon thē & soundeth in their eares: Confesse all thy sinnes. And this horrour can not be appeased but by assured cōfort. Here let the readers consider, how profitable it is to bring into accompt all the doings of a whole yere, & to gather together what sinnes they haue done euery day: for asmuch as experience proueth to euery man, that when at euenings he shall ouerlooke vp the faultes but of one day, his memory is confounded therwith, so great a multitude & diuersity presenteth it selfe. For I speake not of grosse & blockish hypocrites that thinke they haue done [illegible]

And to forbid and correct our sinnes, and also may receiue comfort by mutuall pardon. For as the office of mutuall admonishment & remission is committed to all men, yet it is specially enioyned to the ministers. So when as we all ought to comfort and confirme one another in confidence of Gods mercy: yet we see that the ministers, to driue our consciences of the forgiuenesse of sinnes, are ordayned as vaine witnesses and pledges thereof, in so much that they be Mat. 18. some few sometime be innocent. For sith they be the members of a feeble and diseased body, they ought not to boast of healthfulnesse. Yea it is not possible but they must also themselues gather some infection and beare part of the blame. Therefore so oft as we be afflicted, either with pestilence or warre, or barennesse or any other plaguell is be our duety to flie to mourning, to fasting and to other tokens of giltinesse: then confession it selfe, wherupon all these things do hang, is not to be neglected. As for the ordinary cõfession, beside that it is commended by the Lordes owne mouth, there is no wiseman that considering the profit thereof, dare disallow it. For where as in all holy assemblies we make our apparaunce in the sight of God and the Angels: what other beginning may there be of our pleading, but our acknowledging of vnworthinesse? But ỳ (some man will say) is done by euery prayer. For so oft as we pray for pardon, we thereby confesse our sinnes. I graunt. But if you consider how great is our carelesnesse, or drousinesse, or sluggishnesse, you will graunt me that it shoulde be a profitable ordinance, if by some solemne vse of confession, the Christian common people shoulde be exercised to humbling themselues. For though the ceremonie that the Lord commaunded the Israelites, was parcel of the nurture of the law, yet in some maner it also belongeth to vs. And truely we see that this vse is in well ordered churches profitably obserued, that euery Sonday the minister should rehearse a forme of confession in the name of himselfe and of all the people, wherein he accuseth all of wickednes, and craueth pardon of the Lord. Finally with this keye the gate to prayer is opened as well priuatly to euery man, as vniuersally to all men.

12 Moreouer the Scripture alloweth two formes of priuate confession, one that is made for our owne sake, whereof that sayinge of Iames is spoken, that we should confesse our sinnes one to an other, for his meaning is, that disclosing our wickednesses one to an other, we should one help an other with mutuall counsell and comfort. The other forme, that is to be vsed for our neighbours sake, to appease him & reconcile him vnto vs, if he haue in any thing bin offended by vs. Now in the first kinde of confession, although Iames in this hath assigned no man by name, into whose bosome we shoulde vnlode our selues, leaueth vs a free choise, to confesse to him that shall seeme meetest vnto vs of all the flocke of the church: yet we ought principally to chose the Pastors, because they are for the most part in comparison of the other to be iudged meetest. I say that they are meetest in comparison of the rest, because the Lorde appointeth them by the very calling of their ministery, at whose mouth we shoulde be instru-

And to forbidde and correct our sinnes, and also may receiue comfort by mutuall of pardon. For as the office of mutuall admonishment & remonstrance is committed to all men, yet it is specially enioyned to the Pastors. So when as we all ought to comfort and confirme one an other in confidence of Gods mercy: yet we see that the ministers, to assure our consciences of the forgiuenesse of sinnes, are ordayned as it were witnesses and pledges thereof, in so much that they be sayd to forgiue sinnes and loose soules. When thou hearest this to be attributed vnto them, thinke that it is for thy profit. Therefore let euery one of the faithfull remember this to be his duety, if he be priuately so vexed and troubled with the feelinge of sinnes that he can not winde out himselfe without help of an other, not to neglect the remedy that the Lord hath offered him: that is, for his releefe to vse the priuate confession to his owne Pastor: and for his comfort to take the priuate help of him, whose duety it is both publiquely and priuately to comfort the people of God with the doctrine of the Gospel. But alway this moderation is to be vsed, where God appointeth no certainetie, not to binde consciences with a certayne yoke. Hereupon followeth, that such Confession ought to be free: not to be required of all men, but to be commended to those onely that shall vnderstand themselues to haue nede of it. Then that euen they that vse it for their nede, should not be compelled by any commaundement or trayned by any deceite, to reckon vp all their sinnes, but so farre as they shall thinke it behoueful for them, that they may receiue sound fruite of comfort. Faithfull Pastors ought not only to leaue this liberty to the churches, but also to maintaine it, & stoutly stand in defence of it, if they will haue tyranny absent from their ministery and superstition from the people. Mat. 18. Iohn. 3. 23

than receiued againe to the communion, when he had yelded himselfe obedient to correction. Also this forme of confession was vsed in ỹ old church, as Ciprian maketh mention. They do penance (saith he) in due time, & then they come to confession, and by laying on of the handes of the bishop & the Clergy, they receiue leaue to come to the cõmunion. Any other order or forme of cõfessing, the Scripture vtterly knoweth not, & it is not our duety to binde consciences with new bonds, whom Christ most sharply forbiddeth vs to bring in bõdage. In the meane time I do so much not speake against it that the shepe should present themselues to their shepeherd whẽ they meane to be partakers of the holy supper, that I would most gladly haue it euery where obserued. For both they that haue an encombred conscience, may from thence receiue singular profit, & they that are to be admonished do by that meane prepare place for admonishment, but so alway that tyranny and superstition be away.

14 In these three kindes of confession, the power of ỹ keies hath place: that is, either when the whole church with solemne reknowledging of their faultes craueth pardon: or when a priuate man, that by any notable fault hath bred cõmon offence, doth declare his repentance: or when he that for the vnquietnes of his conscience, doth nede help of ỹ minister discloseth his weakenes vnto him. But there are diuerse ways of taking away offence, because although thereby also the peace of conscience is prouided for, yet the principal end is, that hatred should be takẽ away, & mens mindes knit together with a bond of peace. But this vse that I haue spoken of, is not to be despised, that we may the more willingly cõfesse our sinnes. For when the whole church standeth as it were before the iudgemẽt seate of God, confesseth it selfe gilty, and hath one only refuge vnto the mercy of God: it is no slender or light comfort to haue there present Christs embassadour, hauing cõmaundemẽt of reconciliatiõ, of whom it may heare absolution pronounced vnto it. Here the profitablenes of the keies is worthily cõmended, whẽ this embassage is performed rightly, & with such order & religiousnes as beseemeth it. Likewise when he that had in a maner estranged himselfe from the Church, receiueth pardon & is restored into brotherly vnity: how great a benefite is it that he vnderstandeth himselfe to be forgiuẽ by thẽ, to whom Christ hath sayd: To whom soeuer ye forgiue sinnes in earth, they shal be forgiuen in heauen. And of no lesse effectualnes & profit is priuate absolutiõ, when it is asked by them that haue neede of speciall remedy to relieue their weakenes. For it happeneth oftẽtimes, that he which heareth the generall promises that are directed to ỹ whole congregaded of the faithful, remaineth neuertheles in some dout, & hath stil an vnquiet minde, as though he had not yet obtained pardon: & the same man if he haue disclosed to his person ỹ secret sore of his mind, & heareth peculiarly directed to himselfe that saying of the Gospel, Thy sinnes are forgiue thee, be of good hope, stablisheth his minde with assurednes & is deliuered frō that trembling, wherewith he was before tormented. But when we speake of the keyes, we must take hede that we dreame not of a certaine power seuered from the preaching of ỹ Gospel. In an other place we shal haue occasion more fully to declare this matter again, where we shal entreat of the gouernment of the church: & there shall we see that all the power to binde & to loose, which Christ hath giuen to his church, is bound to the worde. But this is most true in the ministery of the keyes, the whole force whereof standeth in this, ỹ the grace of the Gospel be publikely & priuatly sealed vp in the heartes of the faithful, by them whom the Lord hath ordained: which can not be done but by only preaching. Mat. 9. 2.

15 But what say the Romish diuines? They decree that euery one of either kinde, so soone as they come to the yeres of discretiō, must yearly once at the least confesse all their sinnes to their owne priest: & that their sinne is not forgiuen, vnlesse they haue firmely conceiued an intent to confesse it: which intent if they performe not when occasion is offred that they may do it, there is now no more entry open for the into Paradise. And that the priest hath the power of the keies, wherwith he may loose & binde a sinner: because the word of Christ is not in vaine, Whatsoeuer ye binde. &c. About this power they stout lyght amonge themselues. Some say that there is but one keye in substance, that is the power to binde & loose, and as for knowledge, that it is in dede requisite for a good vse, but that it is only as an accessary & is not essentially ioyned with the other. Some other, because they saw this to be too much an vnbridled licence, haue reckened vp two keies, discretion, & power. Other againe, when they saw the lewd boldnes of priestes to be restrained by this moderation, haue forged other keies, that is to say, authority of discerning which they should vse in giuing determinate sentence: & power, which they should practise in executing of their sentence: & that knowledge standeth by as a coniseller. But they dare not simply expound this binding & loosing to be to forgiue and put away sinnes, because they heare the Lorde crynge out in the Prophet: It is I, and none other but I: it is I, it is I that put away thy sinnes, O Israell, But they say it is the priestes office to pronounce who be bounde or loosed, and to declare whose sinnes are forgiuen or retained: and that he doth declare it, either C. by confeſſion when he abſolueth & retained ſinnes, or by ſentence when he excommunicated and receiueth againe to partaking of the Sacramentes. Finally, when they vnderſtand that they be not yet out of this dout, but that it ſtil may be obiected againſt them, that oftentimes their prieſts do binde and looſe men vnworthy, which are not therfore bounde or looſed in heauē: then (which is their laſt refuge) they anſwere that the giuing of the keyes, muſt be conſtrued with a limitation, that is to ſay, that Chriſt hath promiſed, that before his iudgement ſeate ſuch ſentence of the Prieſt ſhalbe allowed as hath bin iuſtly pronounced, accordinge as the deſeruinges of him that is bounde or looſed, did require. Moreouer they ſay, that theſe keyes are giuen by Chriſt to all Prieſts, and are deliuered to them by their Biſhoppes, at the time of their promotinge to prieſthoode: but the free vſe of them, remaineth only with ſuch as do exerciſe Eccleſiaſticall offices: and that the excommunicate & ſuſpended Prieſtes haue in deede the keyes, but ruſty & bounde vp. And they that ſay theſe things may well ſeeme modeſt & ſober in cōpariſon of ỹ reſt, which vpon a new anuielde haue forged new keyes with which they ſay the treaſure of the church is locked vp. Theſe keyes we ſhall hereafter trie in place fit for it.

16 Now I will in few wordes anſwere to euery one of theſe particularly. But at this preſent I ſpeake not by what right or what wronge they binde the ſoules of the faithfull with their lawes, foraſmuch as we will conſider that when place ſeruieth. But where they charge men with a law of reckeninge vp all their ſinnes: where they ſay that ſinne is not forgiuen but vpon condition, if there be an intent conceined to confeſſe it: where they babble that there remaineth no entrie into Paradiſe, if occaſion of confeſſinge be neglected: this is in no wiſe to be ſuffered. Muſt all ſinnes be reckened vp? But Dauid, (Who as I thinke) had well ſtudied vpon the confeſſion of his ſinnes, yet cried out: who ſhall vnderſtand his errours? Lord cleanſe me from my ſecret ſinnes. And in an other place. My iniquities haue paſſed aboue my heade, and like a weighty burden haue waxed heauy aboue my ſtrength. Truely he vnderſtoode how great was the bottomleſſe depth of our ſinnes: how many were the ſortes of our miſchieuous doinges, how many heades this monſter Hydra did beare, & how long a taile ſhe drew after her. Therefore he went not about to recken vp a regiſter of them, but out of the depth of euills, he cried vnto the Lord: I am ouerwhelmed, I am buried and choked, the gates of hels haue compaſſed me, let thy hand draw me out, which am drowned in the great pit, and am fainting and ready to die. Who now may thinke vpon the numbring of his sinnes, whē he seeth that Dauid can make no numbre of his?

By With this butchery, the soules that haue bin touched with any feelinge of God, haue bin more cruelly vexed. First they called themselues to accompt: then they deuided sinnes into armes, into bowes, into braunches, and into twigges, according to these mens rules: then they weyed the qualities, quantities, and circumstances. And so the matter went a litle forward. But when they had proceeded a litle further, than was on ech side skie, and on ech side seae, no haue, no safe roade: the mo that they had passed ouer, the greater heape alway did thrust it selfe into their sight, yea they rose vp as hye mountaines, & there appeared no hope, not so much as after long cō pasinge, any way to escape. And so they did sticke fast betwene the sacrifice & the stone, & at last was found no other issue but desperation. Then these cruel butchers, to ease the woundes that themselues had made, laid certaine gentle plaisters, that euery man should do as much as he could. But new cares againe rose vp, yea new tormentes did slea the silly soules, as to thinke: I haue not employed time enough, I haue not endeuored my selfe with such diligence as I ought, I haue passed ouer many things by negligēce & the forgetfulnes that commeth by negligence is not excusable. Thē were there ministred other plaisters to asswage such paines, as Repent thee of thy negligence: if it be not altogether careleſſe, it shall be pardōned. But all these things can not close vp the wounde, and are not so much easment of the euill, as poisons couered with honey, that they should not with their bitternesse offend the first tast but enter into the bowels before that they be perceiued. Therfore this terrible saying alway calleth vpon thē & soundeth in their eares: Confesse all thy sinnes. And this horrour can not be appeased but by assured cōfort. Here let the readers consider, how possible it is to bring into accompt all the doings of a whole yere, & to gather together what sinnes they haue done euery day: forasmuch as experience proueth to euery man, that when at euening he shall reckon vp the faultes but of one day, his memory is confounded therwith, so great a multitude & diuersity presenteth it selfe. For I speake not of grosse & blockish hypocrites that thinke they haue done sufficiently, if they haue noted three or foure of the greatest sinnes: but I speake of the true worshippers of God, which when they see themselues oppressed with the examination that they haue made, do adde also this saying of Iohn: If our owne heart do accuse vs, God is greater than our heart: and so they quake for feare at the sight of that iudge, whose knowledge farre surmounteth our vnderstanding. 1. Ioh. 3. 20.

18 But whereas a great parte of the world reſted them vpon ſuch flatteries, wherewith ſo deadly a poyſon was tempered, this came not ſo to paſſe, becauſe they beleued ỹ God was ſatisfied, or becauſe they themſelues were fully ſatisfied: but that the anchor caſt as it were in the midde ſea, ſhoulde reſt a litle from ſaylinge, or as a wayfaringe man weary and faintinge, ſhoulde lye downe in the way. I laboure not much in prouinge this. For euery man may be witneſſe to himſelfe. I will in a ſhorte ſumme ſhew, what maner of law this was. Firſt ſimply it is impoſſible, and therefore it can do nothing but deſtroy, damne, confounde, and caſt in ruine and deſperation. And then whē it hath ledde ſinners from the true feelinge of their ſinnes, it maketh them hypocrites and ignoraunt of God & themſelues. For while they are wholly buſied in reckening vp of their ſinnes, in the meane time they forget the ſecrete ſinke of vices, their hidden Iniquities, and inward filthineſſe, by knowledge whereof they ſhoulde chiefely haue weyed their miſery. But this was a moſt certaine rule of confeſſion, to acknowledge and confeſſe the bottomleſſe depth of our euill to be ſo great as paſſeth our vnderſtandinge. After this rule we ſee that the Publicanes confeſſion was made. Lorde be mercifull to me a ſinner: as if he ſhould ſay: All that euer I am, I am altogether a ſinner, and I can not attaine with witte or expreſſe with tongue the greatneſſe of my ſinnes: let the bottomleſſe depth of thy mercy ſwallow vp the bottomleſſe depth of my ſinne. But then thou wilt ſay, what? are not all our ſinnes to be confeſſed? is no confeſſion acceptable to God, but that which is knitte vp in theſe two wordes, I am a ſinner? No, but rather we muſt endeuour our ſelues as much as in vs lyeth, to poure out our heart before the Lorde, and not onely in one worde confeſſe our ſelues ſinners, but alſo truely and heartily acknowledge our ſelues to be ſuch: and with all our thought recorde, howe great and diuerſe is our filth of ſinnes, not onely that we be vncleane, but what, how great, and in howe many partes is our vncleanneſſe: not onely that we be detters, but with howe great dettes we be loden, and howe many wayes charged: not onely that we be wounded, but alſo with howe many and deadly ſtrokes we be wounded. With this reknowledging when the ſinner hath wholly poured out himſelfe before God, lette him earneſtly and ſincerely thinke, that yet there remayne moe ſinnes, and that the ſecret corners of their euils are ſo depe, that they cā not be throughly diſcloſed. And he crieth out with Dauid: Who vnderſtanderh his errours? Lord cleanſe me frō my hidden ſinnes. Now where they affirme, that ſinnes are not forgiuen but with an intent of confeſſinge firmely conceiued, and that the gate of para-

gratie is shut against him that neglecteth occasion offered when he may be confessed, God forbid that we shoulde graunt them that. For there is no other forgiuenes of sinnes, than alway hath bin. It is not read that all they haue cõfessed their sinnes in the eare of some priest, that we reade to haue obtained forgiuenesse of sinnes at Christes hand. And truely they could not confesse, where there were neither any priests cõfessors, nor any cõfessing at all. And in many ages after, this confession was vnheard of, at which time sinnes were forgiuen without this condition. But that we may not neede to dispute longer about this, as about a doutfull matter, the word of God is plain, which standeth for euer: Whensoeuer the sinner repenteth, I will no more remember all his iniquities. He that dare adde any thing to this word, Eze. 18. 21. bindeth not sinnes, but the mercy of God. For whereas they say, that Iudgement can not be giuen but when the cause is hearde, we haue absolution in readinesse, that they do presumptuously take that vpon themselues, which haue made themselues iudges. And it is a marueil, that they do so boldly frame to themselues such principles, as no man in his right wit will graunt. They boast that the office of Binding and Loosing is committed to them, as though it were a certaine iurisdictiõ ioyned with Inquisitiõ. Moreouer their whole doctrine crieth out, that this authority was vnknowen to the Apostles. Neither doth it belong to the priest, but to him which desireth absolution, to know certainely whether the sinner be loosed or no: forasmuch as he that heareth can neuer know whether the reckning be iust and perfect. So should there be no absolution but such as is restrained to his wordes that is to be iudged. Moreouer the whole order of loosing standeth of faith & repentance, which two things are hidden frõ the knowledge of mã, when sentence must be giuen vpon an other man. It foloweth therefore, that ỹ assurance of binding & loosing is not subiect to the iudgement of an earthly iudge: because the minister of the word, when he doth his office, can not giue absolution but cõditionally: but that this is spoken for the sinnes sake, Whose sinnes ye forgiue. &c. that they should not dout that the pardõ which is promised by the commaundement and word of God, shall be ratified in heauen.

19 Therefore it is no marueil, if we condemne and desire to haue vtterly taken away this Auricular confession, a thing so pestilent & so many waies hurtful to the Church: but if it were a thing by it selfe indifferent, yet forasmuch as it is to no vse nor profite, and hath giuen cause to so many wickednesses, sacrileges and errours, who will not thinke that it ought to be presently abolished? They do in dede reckon vppe some good vses, which they boast vpon as very profitable, but these either false or of no value at all. One only they commend with a singular prerogatiue, that shame is a great punishment of him that cõfesseth, wherby the sinner both is for time to come made warer, & preuenteth the punishment of God in punishing himselfe. As though we did not humble a mã with shamefastnes enough when we cal him to ỹ hie iudgement seate of heauen, I meane to the hearing of God. It is forsooth very well profited, if for shame of one mans knowledge we cesse to sinne, and be not ashamed to haue God witnes of our euil conscience. Although the very same is also most false, for it is to be seene that by nothing groweth greater confidence or licentiousnesse to sinne, than when men hauinge made confession to a priest, thinke that they may wipe their mouth and say, I did it not. And not onely they are made all ỹ yeare long the bolder to sinne: but all the rest of the yeare bearing themselues bolde vpon confession, they neuer sigh vnto God, they neuer returne to themselues, but heape sinnes vpon sinnes till they vomit vp all at once as they thinke. And when they haue once vomited them vp, they thinke themselues discharged of their burden, and that they haue taken away from God the iudgemẽt that they haue giuen to the priest, & that they haue brought God in forgetfulnes when they haue made the priest priuie. Moreouer who doth merily see the day of confession at hande? Who goeth to confession with a cherefull heart, and commeth not to it rather against his will, & as it were drawinge backeward, like as if he were taken by the necke & drawen to prison? vnlesse paraduenture it be the very priestes, that vse ioyfully to delite themselues with mutuall rehearsals of their doings, as were with merry tales? I will not defile much paper with monstruous abhominations whereof auricular confession swarmeth full. Onely this I say, If that holy mã did not vnwisely, that for one rumor of fornication tooke away confession out of his Church, yea, out of the remembrance of his flocke: then we be thereby put in minde what is needefull to be done at this day vpon infinite whordomes, adulteries, incestes and bawderies.

20 Where the Confessionars alleage for this purpose the power of the keyes, and do therupõ set the peupé and prore of their kingedome, as the prouerbe is: it is to be seene how much they ought to auayle. Then (say they) are the keyes giuen without cause? Is it sayd without cause: Whatsoeuer you loose vpon earth, shall be also loosed in heauen? Do we then make the worde of Christ voyde? I answere there was a weighty cause why the keyes should be giuen, as both I haue euen nowe already declared, and shall more plainely shew againe when I come to entreat of Excommunication. But what

#I do with one twerde cutt of the holde of all that they require, that is with saying, that sacrificing prieſtes are not ỹ vicars nor ſucceſſors of the Apoſtles? But this ſhall alſo be to be entreated of in an other place: but nowe they raiſe vp an engine whereby they wolde moſt of all defende themſelues, and thereby may all their buildinges be ouerthrowen. For Christ did not geue his Apoſtles ỹ power to binde and looſe, before that he gaue them the holy Ghoſt. Therfore I ſay, that none haue the power of the keyes that haue not firſt receiued the holy Ghoſt. I denie that any man can vſe the keyes, but hauing the holy Ghoſt going before, and teaching him and informing him what is to be done. They trifling ſay, that they haue the holy Ghoſt. but in dede they denie it, vnleſſe paraduenture they faine (as they do faine in dede) the holy Ghoſt to be a vaine thing and a thing of nothing, but therin they ſhall not be beleued. And by this engine they are vtterly ouerthrowen, that of what ſoeuer dore they boaſt that they haue the keye, a man may alway aſke them whether they haue the holy Ghoſt which is the iudge and gouerner of the keyes. If they anſwer that they haue, then they may be aſked againe, whether the holy Ghoſt may erre. This they will not be glad to ſpeake expreſſly, although they crokedly vtter the ſame by their doctrine. It is therefore to be gathered, that no prieſtes haue power of the keyes which do commonly without conſideration looſe thoſe thinges that the Lorde wolde haue to be bounde, and binde thoſe thinges that the Lorde commaunded to be looſed.

21 Wheras they ſee themſelues conuinced by moſt clere experimentes, that they do without choiſe looſe and binde the worthy and vnworthy, they vſurpe a power without knowledge. And although they dare not denie that knowledge is requiſit for a good vſe, yet they write that the very power is geuen to euel diſpoſers of it. But this is the power, whatſoeuer thou bindeſt or looſeſt in earthe, ſhalbe bounde or looſed in heauen. Either the promiſe of Christ muſt lie, or they that haue this power do well binde and looſe. Neither may they dalue and ſay, that the ſaying of Christ is limited according to the deſeruings of him that is bound or looſed. And we alſo confeſſe, that none can be bound or looſed, but they that are worthy to be bound or looſed. But the meſſengers of the Goſpell and the Church haue the worde, by which they meaſure this worthineſſe, in this worde the meſſengers of the Goſpell, may promiſe to all men forgeuenеſſe of ſinnes in Christ by faith, they may proclaime damnation into all and vpon all that embrace not Christ. In this word the Church pronounceth that fornicatours, adulterers, theues, manſleyers, couetous men, 1 Cor. 6. 9.

vniuſt men, haue no parte in the kingdom of God, and bindeth ſuch with moſt ſure bondes. With the ſame worde the Church looſeth them whome it comforteth being repentant. But what power ſhall this be, not to know what is to be bounde or looſed, & not to be able to binde or looſe without knowledge? Why then do they ſay that they looſe by authoritie geuen vnto them, when the looſing is vncertain? What haue we to do with this imaginatiue power, if there be no vſe of it? But I haue it already proued that either there is no vſe of it, or ſo vncertaine an vſe as may be accompted for none at all. For wheras they confeſſe that there is a great parte of prieſtes that do not rightly vſe the keyes, and that the power without laweſull vſe is of no effect. Who ſhall aſſure me that he of whome I am looſed is a good vſer of the keyes? if he be an euell vſer of it, what hath he els but ſuch a voide diſpoſing of them, as to ſay, what is to be found or looſed in thee I knowe not, for aſmuch as I lack the right vſe of the keyes, but if thou deſerue I looſe thee. But ſo much might do, I will not ſay a lay man (for they could not beare that with patient eares) but a Turke, or a Deuell. For it is aſmuch as to ſay, I haue not the worde of God the ſure rule of looſing, but there is power geuen me to looſe thee, if thy deſeruinges be ſo. We ſee therefore what they meant, when they defined the keyes to be the authoritie of diſcerning, and power of executing: and that knowledge is adioined for a counſeller, and like a counſeller ſerueth for a good vſe: vndoubtedly euen they deſired to reigne at their owne will, licentiouſly, without God and his worde.

22 If any man take exception and ſay, that the lawfull miniſters of Chriſt ſhall be no leſſe doubtefull in their office, bycauſe the abſolution that hangeth vpon faith ſhall alway remaine doubtefull: and then that ſinners ſhall haue either none or a could comforte, bycauſe the miniſter himſelfe which is no competent iudge of their faith, can not be aſſured of their abſolution: we haue aunſwer thereunto in redineſſe. For they ſay that no ſinnes are forgeuen by the prieſt, but ſuch whereof himſelfe hath bene the hearer: ſo by their opinion, the forgeuenes hangeth vpon the iudgement of the prieſt, and if he do not wiſely diſcerne who be worthy of pardon, the whole doing is voide and of no effect. Finally the power whereof they ſpeake, is a iuriſdiction adioined to examination, whereunto pardon and abſolution is reſtrained. In this point is found no ſure ground, but rather it is a bottomleſſe depth. For where the confeſſion is not found, the hope of pardon is alſo lame, and then the prieſt himſelf muſt needes ſticke in ſuſpenſe while he can not tell, whether the ſinner do faithfully

reckon vp all his euell deedes. Finally (such is the ignoraunce and nakednesse of priestes) the most parte are no fitter to do this office, than a shomaker is to plowe the ground, and the rest in a manner all ought worthily to suspect themselues. Herevpon therefore riseth the perplexitie and doubtfulnesse of the Popes absolution, bycause they will haue it grounded vpon the person of the priest, and not onely that, but also vpon knowledge, that he may iudge onely of thinges informed, examined and proued. Now if a man should aske of these good doctors, whether a sinner be reconciled to God, when some sinnes are forgeuen: I see not what they haue to aunswer, but that they shalbe compelled to confesse that all is vnprofitable, that the priest pronounceth of the forgeuenesse of those sinnes that he hath heard rehearsed, so long as the other sinnes are not deliuered from condemnatiō. On the behalf of him ỳ confesseth how hurtfull carelesnesse holdeth his conscience bound, appereth hereby, that when he resteth vpon the priests discretion, as they call it, he can determine nothing certainly by ỳ word of God. The doctrine that we teach is free and cleare from all these absurdities. For the absolution is conditionall, that the sinner should trust that God is mercifull vnto him, so that he sincerely seeke the cleansing of his sinnes in the sacrifice of Christ, and obeye the grace offred him. So he can not erre, which according to the office of a preacher, proclaimeth that which is geuen him in instructions by the word of God. And the sinner may embrace a sure and cleare absolution, when that simple condition is annexed of the embracing the grace of Christ, according to that generall doctrine of the maister himselfe, Be it done to thee according to thy faith. Which hath bene wickedly despised in the Papacie. Matt. 9. 29.

23 How foolishly they confound those things that the Scripture teacheth of the power of keyes, I haue promised that I will speake in an other place, and there shalbe a more conuenient place for it, when I come to entreate of the gouernement of the Church. But let the readers remēber that those things are wrongfully wrested to Auricular and secret confession, which are spoken by Christ partly of the preaching of the Gospell, and partly of excōmunication. Wherefore when they obiect that the power of loosing is geuen to the Apostles, which priests may vse in forgeuing sinnes acknowledged vnto them, it is plaine that they take a false and fonde principle: becausse the absolution that serueth faith, is nothing els but a witnesse of pardō take out of the free promise of the Gospell. As for the other confession, that hangeth vpō the discipline of the Church, it pertaineth nothing to secret sinnes, but rather to example, that common offence of the Church may be taken away. But wheras they ſcrape together here and there teſtimonies, to proue that it ſuffiseth not to confeſſe ſinnes either to God onely or to lay men, vnleſſe a prieſt be the hearer of them, their trauaile therin is but lewd, and ſuch as they may be aſhamed of. For when the auncient fathers counſell ſinners to vnburden themſelues to their owne paſtour, it can not be expounded of particular rehearſall which then was not in vſe. Then, Lumbard and ſuch like (ſuch was their ſiniſter dealing) ſeme of ſet purpoſe to haue geuen themſelues to fained bokes, by pretenſe whereof they might deceiue the ſimple. They do in deede truely confeſſe, that becauſe abſolution alway accompanieth repentance, therefore there properly remaineth no bond when a man is touched with repentance, although he haue not yet confeſſed, and therefore that then the prieſt doth not ſo much forgeue ſinnes as pronounce and declare them forgeuen. Albeit in the word of declaring they ſlily bring in a groſſe errour, thruſting a ceremonie in ſtede of doctrine. But wheras they patche vnto it, that he is abſolued in the face of the Church that had alredy obteined pardon before God: they do inconueniently drawe to ỹ peculiar vſe of euery particular man, that which we haue already ſaid to be appointed for common diſcipline, where the offenſe of a hainous and notorious fault is to be taken away. But by and by after, they depraue and corrupt moderation, adding an other manner of forgeuing, with an enioyning of penaltie and ſatisfaction, wherin they preſumptuouſly claime to their owne ſacrifices a power to part that in halfes, which God hath in all places promiſed vs whole together. For when he ſimply requireth repentance and faith, this partition or exceptiō is a very robberie of God. For it is in effect aſmuch as if the prieſt taking vpon the perſone of a Tribune, ſhould become interceſſour to God, and would not ſuffer God of his mere liberalitie to receiue him into fauour, that hath lien proſtrate before the Tribunes ſeates, and there hath bene puniſhed.

24 The whole ſumme commeth to this point, that if they will make God the authour of this counterfait cōfeſſion, therein is their fallſhod condemned, as I haue proued them falſe forgers in the fewe places that they allege. But ſith it is euident that it is a law made by men, I ſay that it is both tirānicall and made iniuriouſly againſt God, who binding mens conſciences to his word, will haue them free from the bondage of men. Now when for the obteining of pardon, there is a neceſſitie preſcribed of that thing which the Lorde wolde to be free; I ſay that this is a ſacrilege not to be ſuffred, bycauſe there is nothing more properly belonging to God, than to forgeue ſinnes, wherein consisteth saluation for vs, Moreouer I haue shewed that this tyrannie was first brought in, when the world was oppressed with ignorance and barbarousnesse. I haue also taught that it is a pestilent law, that either throweth downe hedlong into desperation the poore soules in whom so euer abideth a feare of God: or where there reigneth carelesnes, deliteth thē with vayne flatteries, & so maketh thē duller. Last of all I haue declared, that what so euer mitigations they bring, tend to no other ende, but to entangle, darken and depraue pure doctrine, and hide vngodlinesse with deceitfull colors.

25 The third place in Repentance they assigne to satisfaction, wherof all that euer they babble may be ouerthrowen with one worde. They say that it is not enough for him that repenteth, to obteine from his former euels, and chaunge his behauior into better, vnlesse he make satisfaction to God for those thinges that he hath done: And that there be many helpes by which we may redeme sinnes, as wepinges, fastinges, oblations and the workes of charitie. With these we must winne the Lord to be fauorable, with these he must pay our dettes to the righteousnesse of God, with these we must make amendes for our defaultes, with these we must deserue pardon. For although by the largenes of his mercy he hath forgeuen our faultes, yet by the discipline of his iustice he reteineth the peine, and that this is the peine that must be redemed with satisfactions. But in effect all that they say commeth to this point, that we do in deede obteine pardon of our sinnes at the mercifulnesse of God, but by meanes of the deseruing of our workes, by which the offense of our sinnes may be recompensed, that due satisfaction may be fully made to Gods righteousnesse. Against such lies. I set the free forgeuenesse of sinnes, than which there is nothing more euidētly spoken of in the Scripture. First, what is forgeuenesse, but a gift of mere liberalitie? For the creditour is not said to forgeue, that acknowledgeth by acquitance that the mony is payed, but he that without any payment willingly of his owne liberalitie cancelleth the detters bonde. Secondly, why is this word, Freely, added, but to take away all opinion of satisfaction? With what confidence therefore do they yet set vp their satisfactions, that are stricken downe with so mighty a thunderbolt? But what? when ỹ Lord crieth out by Esay, It is I, it is I, that do put away iniquities for mine owne sake, and will not be mindefull of thy sinnes: doth he not openly declare, that he fetcheth the cause and fundation of forgeuenesse only from his owne goodnes? Moreouer whereas the whole Scripture beareth this witnesse of Christ, that forgeuenesse of sinnes is to be receiued by his name, doth it not thereby exclude all other names? How then do they teache that it is receiued by the name of ſatisfactions? Neither can they denie that they giue this to ſatisfactions, although they ſay that the ſame be vſed as helpes by way of meanes. For whereas the Scripture ſaith By the name of Chriſt, it meaneth that we bring nothing, we allege nothing of our owne, but reſte vpon the onely commendation of Chriſt. As 2.Cor.5 19. Paule, where he affirmeth that God is reconciling the world to himſelfe in Chriſt, for his ſake not imputing to men their ſinnes, he immediatly ſheweth the meane and manner how: bycauſe he that was without ſinne, was made ſinne for vs.

Libr. 3. Sentēt. diſt 9. 26 But (ſuch is their peruerſneſſe) they ſay that both forgeueneſſe of ſinnes and reconciliation are performed both at one time, when we are in Baptiſme receiued into the fauour of God by Chriſt: that after baptiſme we muſt riſe againe by ſatisfactions: and that the bloud of Chriſt profiteth nothing, but ſo far as it is diſtributed by the keyes of the Church. Neither do I ſpeake of a doubtefull matter, for aſmuch as they haue in moſt euident writinges bewrayed their owne filthineſſe, and not one or two of them, but all the Scholemen vniuerſally. For their Maiſter, after that he had confeſſed that Chriſt had payed the penaltie of ſinnes vpon the tree, according to the doctri-

1.Ioh.2 2.& 12. But Iohn ſaith far otherwiſe, if any ſinne, we haue an aduocate with the Father, euen Ieſus Chriſt, which is the propitiation for our ſinnes. I write vnto you children, bycauſe your ſinnes are forgeuen you for his names ſake. Truely he ſpeaketh to the faithfull, to whom when he ſetteth forth Chriſt to be the propitiation of ſinnes, he ſheweth that there is no other ſatisfaction by which God, being diſpleaſed, may be made fauorable and appeaſed. He doth not ſay: God was ones reconciled vnto you by Chriſt, now ſeeke you other meanes. but he maketh him a perpetuall aduocate, alway to reſtore vs by his interceſſion into the fauour of his father: a perpetuall propitiation, by which our ſinnes may be cleanſed away. For this is euer true that the Iohn.1. 36. other Iohn ſaid: Beholde, the Lambe of God, beholde him that taketh away the ſinnes of the world. He taketh them away (ſaith he) himſelfe and none other, that is to ſay: for aſmuch as he alone is the Lambe of God, he alone alſo is the oblation for ſinnes, he alone the propitiation ſacrifice, he alone the ſatisfaction. For wheras the right and power to forgeue belōgeth proprely to the father, in the reſpect that he is distinguished from the sonne, as we haue alredy sene. Christ is here set in an other degree, that taking vpon him selfe the paine due vnto vs, he hath taken away our giltinesse before the iudgement of God. Wherevpon foloweth, the we shall no otherwise be partakers of the satisfaction made by Christ, vnlesse the same honour remaine whole with him, which they do wrongfully take to themselues that go about to appease God with their owne recompensinges.

27 And here it is good to consider two thinges: that Christ may haue his due honour kept vnto him whole and vnminished: and that the consciences being assured of the forgeuenesse of sinne, may haue peace with God. Esaye saith, that the father hath layed the iniquities of vs all vpon his sonne, that we shoulde be healed by his stripes. Which thing Peter rehearsing in other wordes saith: that Christ did in his body beare our sinnes vpon the tree. Paule writeth that sinne was condemned in his flesh, when he was made sinne for vs. That is to say, that the force and curse of sinne was slaine in his flesh, when he was geuen to be a sacrifice, vpon which the whole heape of our sinnes, with all their maledictiō and curse, with the dredfull indgement of God, and condemnation of death should be cast. Here those thinges are in no case to be heard, that after the first purging, euery one of vs dogh none otherwise fele the effectualnesse of the passion of Christ, than after the measure of satisfactorie repentance: but so often as we fall, we be called backe to the onely satisfaction of Christ. Now set before thee their pestilent follies, as for example: That the grace of God worketh alone in the first forgeuenesse of sinnes; that if we afterwarde fall, to the obteining of a seconde forgeuenesse our workes do worke with it. If these thinges may haue place, do these thinges that are here before assigned to Christ remaine safe vnto him? Is his a meruellous greate difference, betwene this that our iniquities are layed vpon Christ, that they shoulde be cleansed in him, & this that they are cleansed by our owne workes: betwene this that Christ is the procuringe of mercie, and this that God must be made mercifull by workes. But if we speake of pacifieng the conscience: what pacification shall this be for a mans conscience, to heare that his sinnes are redemed by satisfactions? When shall he certainely knowe the measure of his satisfactiō? Therfore he shall alway doubte whether he haue God mercifull or no, he shall alway be vexed, and alway quake for feare. For they that rest vpon light pety satisfactions, do no contemptuously esteme the iudgement of God, and do litle consider how great is the greuousnesse of sinne, as we shall declare in an other place. But although we graūt them to redeme some sinnes with full satisfaction: yet what will they do when they are oppressed with so many sinnes, for satisfactiō wherof a hundred liues although they were wholy applied therunto can not suffice? Beside that, all the places wherin the forgeueneſſe of sinnes is affirmed, do not belong to yonglinges, but to the already regenerate childrē of God, and them that haue bene long nouriſhed in the boſome of the Church. That embaſſage which Paule ſo honorably extolleth, I beſech you in the name of God, be ye reconciled vnto God, is not directed to ſtrangers, but to them that had bene already regenerate. But he, biddinge ſatisfactions farewell, ſendeth them to the croſſe of Chriſt. So when he writeth to the Coloſſians, that Chriſt by the bloud of the croſſe hath pacified all thinges in heauen or in earth, he reſtraineth not this to the onely moment wherein we are receiued into the Church, but extendeth it to our whole courſe. Which eaſily appereth by the proceſſe of the text, where he ſaith, that the faithfull haue a redemption by the blond of Chriſt, that is forgeueneſſe of ſinnes. Albeit it is ſuperfluous to heape together mo places, that redily offer themſelues to be founde.

2 Cor. 5.20.

Coloſſ. 1.20.

28 Here they flee to the ſanctuarie of the fooliſh diſtinction, that ſome ſinnes are veniall, and ſome deadly: that for deadly ſinnes is great ſatisfaction due, that veniall ſinnes are purged with more eaſy remedies, as with ſaying of the Lords prayer, with ſprinkling of holy water, with abſolution at the maſſe. So they mocke and triſle with God. But whereas they alway haue in their mouth veniall and deadly ſinne, yet they coulde neuer diſcerne the one from the other, ſauing that they make vngodlines and vncleanneſſe of heart, a veniall ſinne. But we (as the Scripture the rule of right and wrong teacheth vs) do pronounce, that the rewarde of ſinne is death, and that the ſoule that ſinneth is worthy of death. But that the ſinnes of the faithful are veniall, not for that they do not deſerue death, but bycauſe by the mercie of God there is no condemnation to them that are in Chriſt Ieſus, becauſe they are not imputed: bycauſe they are taken away by pardō. I know how vniuſtly they ſclaunder this our doctrine. For they ſay, that it is the Stoikes ſtraunge concluſion, concerning the equalitie of ſinnes. But they ſhall eaſily be conuinced by their owne mouth. For I demaunde of them, whether among the very ſame ſinnes that they cōfeſſe to be deadly, they do not acknowledge one to be greater than an other. It doth not therefore immediatly followe, that ſinnes are egall, becauſe they are all together deadly. When the Scripture definitiuely ſaith, that the reward of ſinne is death, that the obedience of the lawe is the way of life, and that the tranſgreſſion of the lawe is death, he would not loke vpon them: if he would not loke vpon them, then he would not marke them: if he would not marke thē, then he would but that he did puniſh them? But let vs heare alſo out of an other sacrifice? And what sacrifice is there, but that which is offred for vs in the death of Christ? But that which is appointed in the lawe of Moses for cleansing the offenses of sinnes, ministreth vs a strong battell tamme. For the Lord doth not there apoint this or that manner of satisfieng, but requireth the whole recompense in sacrifices. Whereas yet in other thinges, he doth most diligently and in most exact order set out all the ceremonies of expiation. Howe commeth it to passe, that he commaundeth to recompense faultes committed, with no workes at all, but requireth onely sacrifices for satisfaction: but because his will is so to declare, that there is onely one kinde of satisfaction, whereby his iudgement is appeased? For the sacrifices that the Israelites did then offer, were not weyed by the worke of men, but were estemed by their truth, that is to say, by the onely sacrifice of Christ. But what manner of recompense the Lord receiueth of vs, Osee hath very well expressed in fewe wordes. Thou shalt (saith he) take away iniquitie, O God. Loe, here is forgeueness of sinnes. And we shall pay thee calues of our lippes: Loe, here is satisfaction. I knowe that they yet do suttelly slippe away, when they make distinction betwene euerlasting peine, and temporall peines. But when they teach that temporall peine is any kinde of punishment that God taketh as well of the body as of the soule, except onely euerlasting death, this restraining of it doth litle helpe them. For the places that we haue aboue recited, do expresly meane this, that God receiueth vs into fauour with this condition, that in pardoning the fault, he pardoneth all the peine what so euer we had thereby deserued. And so oft as Dauid or the other Prophets do craue pardō of sinnes, they do also there withall pray to be released of the peine. Yea, the very feling of Gods iudgement doth driue them therunto. Againe, when they promise mercie at the Lordes hand, they do in manner alway of purpose preach of the peines and the forgeueness therof. Truely when the Lorde in Ezechiell pronounceth that he will make an ende of the exile in Babylon, and that for his owne sake, not for the Iewes sake, he doth sufficiently shewe that both are of free gift. Finally, if we be deliuered by Christ from giltiness of fault, the peines that come thereof, must needes cesse.

Osee. 14.3.

Eze. 36. 22. and 32.

31 But for asmuch as they do also arme themselues with testimonies of Scripture, let vs see what manner of argumentes those bee that they allege. Dauid (say they) being rebuked by Nathan the Prophet of adulterie and māslaughter, receiued pardon of his sinne, and yet he was afterward punished by the death of his sonne that he had gotten by that adulterie. We are taught to redeme with satis-

2. Sam. 12.13.

factions ſuch paines as were to be extended after forgeuenes of the fault. For Daniel aduiſed Nebuchadnezer to redeme his ſinnes with almes. And Salomon writeth that for equitie and godlineſſe, iniquities are forgeuen. And in an other place, that with charitie the multitude of ſinnes is couered. Which ſentence Peter alſo confirmeth. Againe, in Luke the Lord ſaith of the woman that was a ſinner, that many ſinnes are forgeuen her, becauſe ſhe hath loued much. Howe peruerſly and wrongfully they euer weye the doinges of God. But if they had marked (as they ſhould not haue ouerpaſſed it) that there are two kindes of Gods iudgement, they would haue ſeen in this rebuking of Dauid, a far other manner of puniſhment, than ſuch as might be thought to tend to reuengement. But bycauſe it not a litle behoueth vs all to vnderſtand wherunto the chaſtiſementes haue reſpect, wherwith God correcteth vs for our ſinnes, and how much they differ from thoſe examples wherewith he purſueth the wicked and reprobate with indignation: therefore I thinke it ſhall be not beſide the purpoſe to comprehend it ſhortly in a ſumme. For the order of plaine teaching, let vs call the one kinde of iudgement, the iudegement of Reuenge, the other of Chaſtiſemēt. It is to be vnderſtanded, that God ſo puniſheth his enemies with the iudgement of reuenge, that he vſeth his wrath againſt them, confoundeth them, deſtroyeth them, and bringeth them to nought. Therefore let vs take that to be properly the vengeance of God, when his puniſhing is ioined with his indignation: with the iudgement of Chaſtiſemēt he dealeth not ſo cruelly: as to be angry: nor puniſheth to deſtroy, nor ſendeth downe his lightening to kill. Therefore it is not properly puniſhment or vengeance, but correction and admoniſhment. The one is the doing of a iudge, the other of a father. For the iudge when he puniſheth an euell doer, he hath regard to the offenſe, & puniſheth the very fault: when the father ſomwhat rigorouſly correcteth his childe, he doth it not to be reuenged on him, or to puniſh him, but rather to teach him & make him warer in time to come. Chryſoſtome in a certaine place vſeth a ſimilitude ſomwhat differing from this, but yet it commeth to the ſame point. The ſonne (ſaith he) is beaten, and the ſeruant alſo is beaten: but the one is puniſhed as a bondeſeruant, bycauſe he hath offended, and the other is chaſtiſed as a freeman and as a ſonne, neding correction. To the one his correction ſerueth for profe and amendement, to the other for a ſcourge and puniſhment.

Luc. 7. 47.

32 But that we may haue the whole matter ſhortly and in a redy ſumme, let this be the firſt of two diſtinctions. Whereſoeuer puniſhment is to reuenge, there ſheweth it ſelf the curſe and wrath of God, which which he alway withholdeth from the faithfull. Contrarywiſe Chaſtiſement both is a bleſſing of God, and beareth a teſtimonie of his loue, as the Scripture teacheth. This difference is commonly euery where ſufficiently expreſſed in the worde of God. For what ſo euer afflictions the wicked ſuffer in this preſent life, therein is painted out vnto vs as it were a certaine entrie of hell, frō whenſe they do alredy ſee a far of their eternall damnation: and they are ſo far from being amended or taking any profit thereby, that rather by ſuch beginings they are prepared to the moſt cruell hell that at length abideth for them. But the Lorde chaſtiſing chaſtiſeth his ſeruantes, but he doth not put them to death. Therefore they confeſſe that to be beaten with his rodde, was good for them vnto true inſtruction. But as we read euery where that the holy ones ſuffer ſuch puniſhmentes with quiet minde, ſo they haue alway prayed to eſcape the firſt kinde of ſcourges. Chaſtſe me Lorde (ſaith Ieremie) but in thy iudgement, not in thy wrath, leaſt thou deſtroy me. Poure out thy wrath vpon the nations that haue not knowen thee, and vpon the kingdomes that haue not called vpon thy name. And Dauid ſaith: Lorde rebuke me not in thy wrath, nor correct me in thine anger. And it maketh nothing to the contrarie, that oftentimes it is ſaid, that the Lord is angry with them that be his, when he puniſheth their ſinnes. As in Eſaye: I will confeſſe to thee O Lorde, becauſe thou haſt bene angry with me: thy wrath is turned, & thou haſt comforted me. Againe Abacuc. Thou that haſt bene angry ſhall remember mercie. And Michee: I will beare the wrath of the Lord, becauſe I haue ſinned againſt him. Where he putteth vs in minde that not onely they that are iuſtly puniſhed, nothing preuaile with murmuring againſt him, but alſo that the faithfull haue aſwagement of their ſorrow, in conſidering the purpoſe of God. For after the ſame manner it is ſaid that he doth defile his owne inheritance, which yet (as we knowe) he will neuer defile. But that is ſpoken not in reſpect of the purpoſe or meaning of God that puniſheth, but of the vehement feling of ſorrow, which they fele that ſuffer any of his ſeueritie what ſo euer it be. But he not only pricketh his faithfull with no ſmal rigour, but ſometimes ſo woūdeth them, that they thinke themſelues not far from the damnatiō of hell. So he teſtifieth that they haue deſerued his wrath, and ſo it behoueth that they ſhould loth themſelues in their euels, and be touched with the greater care to appeaſe God, and carefully make haſt to craue pardon. But euen in the very ſame doing he ſheweth a more euident teſtimonie of his fauorable kindeneſſe than of his wrath. For ỹ couenant cōtinueth that was made with vs in our true Salomon: the truth deration and lenitie, he therewithall ſecretly declareth, that they can not but bee confounded with extreme and deadly horrour, that fele the hand of God to be againſt them. Howe great regard he hath of Eſa. 48. this lenitie in chaſtiſing his Iſraell, he ſheweth in the Prophet: I haue 10. purged thee (ſaith he) in fire: But not as Siluer, for then thou ſhouldeſt haue bene all conſumed. Albeit he teacheth that chaſtiſementes ſerue him for to cleanſe him, but he further ſaith that he vſeth the ſame ſo temperately, that he bee not to much conſumed by them.

And that is needefull. For the more that euery man reuerently feareth God, and geueth himſelfe to follow godlineſſe, ſo much the ten-drer he is to beare his wrath. For the reprobate, although they grone vnder his ſcourges, yet for that they wey not the cauſe, but rather turne their backe both to their owne ſinnes and to the iudgement of God; by that ſlouthfulneſſe they gather a hardneſſe: or bycauſe they murmure and kicke againſt him, and do make an vprore againſt their iudge, that furious ſudden rage aſtonieth them with madneſſe and furor. But the faithfull being admoniſhed by his correction, by and by deſcend to conſider their ſinnes, & being ſtriken with dread and horrour, they flee in humble wiſe to pray to him for pardon, vnleſſe the Lorde did aſwage theſe ſorrowes wherewith the poore ſou-les torment themſelues, they would fainte a hundred times euen in ſmal tokens of his wrath.

33 Then let this be the ſecond diſtinction, that when the reprobate are ſtryken with the ſcourges of God, they do alredy attera certaine manner beginne to ſuffer peines by his iudgemēt, and though they ſhall not eſcape vnpuniſhed, for that they haue not taken hede to ſuch tokēs of the wrath of God, yet they are not puniſhed to this ende, to make them come to a better minde: but onely that, to their great hurt, they ſhould proue God to be a iudge and reuenger. But children are beaten with roddes, not that they ſhoulde thereby be puniſhed of God for their ſinnes, but that they ſhould therby profit to amendement. Therefore we take it that they rather haue reſpect to the time to come, than to the time paſt. This I had rather expreſſe m

in Chrysostomes wordes than mine owne. For this (saith he) God doth lay peine vpon vs, not punishing our sinnes past, but correcting vs against time to come. And so saith Augustine: That which thou suffrest, that for which thou lamentest, is a medicine to thee and no peine, a chastisement and no damnation. Put not away the scourge, if thou wilt not be put away from the inheritance, &c. Know ye brethren that all this miserie of mankinde when the world groneth is a medicinall sorrow, and not a pennall sentence, &c. These sentences I haue therefore thought good to alleage, that the manner of speche that I haue aboue written, shoulde not seme to any man newe and vsed. And hereunto serue all the complaintes full of indignation wherein the Lorde oftentimes doth expostulate of the vnkindenesse of the people, for that they stiffly despised all punishments. In Esaye he saith: To what purpose should I strike you any more: from the sole of the foote to the crowne of the hed, there is no whole place. But because the Prophets are full of such sayinges, it shalbe sufficient to haue briefly shewed that God doth punish his Church for none other intent, but that it shoulde be tamed and amend. Therefore when he did cast Saul out of the kingdome, he punished him to reuengement: When he toke from Dauid his yonge sonne, he corrected him to amendement. According to this meaning is that to be taken which Paule saith, when we are iudged of the Lorde, we are corrected, that we should not be damned with this worlde. That is, when we that be the children of God are afflicted with the hande of our heauenly father, this is no peine wherewith we should be confounded, but only a chastisement wherewith we should be instructed. In which pointe Augustine is plainely on our side. For he teacheth that the peines wherewith men are a like chastised by God, ar diuersly to be considered: bycause to the holy ones they are battels and exercises after the forgeuenesse of their sinnes, to the reprobate they are without forgeuenesse peines of wickednesse. In which place he rehearseth how peines were layed vpon Dauid and other godly men, and saith that the same tended to this ende, that their godlinesse shoulde by such humbling of them, be exercised and proued. And where Esaye saith, that the Iewish people had their iniquitie forgeuen them, bycause they had receiued full chastisement at the Lordes hande: this proueth not that the pardon of sinnes hangeth vpon the full paiment of the peine: but it is in effect asmuch as if he had said: Bycause ye haue alredy suffred peines enough, and by the greuousnesse and multitude therof haue bene now pined away with longe mourning and sorrowe, therefore it is nowe time that receiuing the tidinges of full mercie, your heartes ſhoulde reioyce and fele me to be your father. For there God did take vpon him the perſon of a father, which repenteth him euen of his iuſte ſeueritie, when he was compelled ſharply to correct his ſonne.

34 With theſe thoughtes it is neceſſarie that the faithfull be furniſhed in bitterneſſe of afflictions. It is time that the iudgement beganne at the houſe of the Lorde, in which his name is called vpon. What ſhould the children of God do, if they did beleue the ſeueritie of God that they fele to be his vengeance? For he that being ſtriken with the hand of God, imagineth God a puniſhing iudge, can not conceiue him but angry and enemie vnto him, and deteſt the very ſcourge of God as a curſe and damnation. Finally he can neuer be perſwaded that God loueth him, that ſhall thinke him ſo minded toward him, that he is ſtill minded to puniſh him. But he only profiteth vnder the rod of God, that thinketh him to be angry with his ſinnes, but merciefull & louinge to himſelfe. For otherwiſe that muſt needes happen, which the Prophet complaineth that he felt, where he ſaith. Thy wraths, O God haue paſſed ouer me: thy terrors haue oppreſſed me. Alſo that which Moſes writeth, bycauſe we haue fainted in thy wrath: and we haue bene troubled in thy indignation, thou haſt ſet our iniquities in thy ſight, and our ſecretes in the light of thy countenance: becauſe all our dayes are gone away in thy wrath: our yeres are conſumed as the word that is paſſed out of a mouth. On the other ſide Dauid ſaith thus of his fatherly chaſtiſementes, to teach that the faithfull are rather holpen than oppreſſed thereby: Bleſſed is the man whom thou haſt corrected O Lorde, and haſt inſtructed in thy lawe, to geue him quiet from euell dayes, while a pit is digged for the ſinner. Truely it is a harde tentation, when God ſparing the vnbeleuers and winking at their faultes, ſemeth more rigorous againſt them that be his. Therefore he gaue them a cauſe of comfort, the admoniſhment of the lawe, whereby they ſhoulde learne, that it is done to prouide for their ſaluation when they are called againe into the way, and the wicked are caried hedlong into their errours, whoſe ende is the pit. And it is no difference whether the peine be euerlaſting or during for a time. For as well warre, famine, peſtilence, and ſickeneſſe as the iudgement of eternall death are the curſes of God, when they are layed vpon menne to this ende, to be inſtrumentes of the Lordes wrath and vengeance againſt the reprobate.

against which he had shewed so great an indignation in his beloued and faithfull seruant: that Dauid should be taught to be no more so bold to do ỹ like deede: & not to be a paine whereby he should make a certaine recompense to God. And so is to be iudged of the other kinde of correction, wherby the Lord punished his people with a sore pestilence, for Dauids disobedience wherinto he was fallen in numbring ỹ people. For he did in deede freely forgiue to Dauid the giltinesse of his sinne: but becausse it pertained both to the publike example of all ages, and also to the humbling of Dauid, that such a hainous offense shoulde not remayne vnpunished: therefore he most sharply chastised him with his rod. Which marke also we ought to haue before our eyes in the vniuersall curse of mankinde. For wheras after pardon obtained, we do all yet suffer the miseries that were laid vpon our first parent for paine of sinne: we perceiue our selues by such exercises to be admonished, how grieuously God is displeased with the transgression of his law: that being throwen downe & humbled with knoweledge in conscience of our owne miserable estate, we may the more feruentely aspire to true blessednes. But he shalbe most foolish that shall thinke, that the calamities of this present life are layed vpon vs for the giltines of sinne. And that I thinke was the meaning of Chrysostome when he wrote thus. If God do therefore lay paines vpon vs, that he should call vs, perseuering in euils to repentáce, then when repentance is once shewed, the paine shalbe superfluous. Therfore, as he knoweth it to be expedient for euery mans nature, so he handeleth one man more roughly, and an other with more louinge tenderneſſe. Therfore where he mindeth to teach that he is not vnmeasurable in taking punishmẽts, he reprocheth to the hard hearted and obstinate people that being striken yet they make not an end of sinning. In this meaninge he cõplaineth, that Ephraim was as a cake scorched on the one side, and raw on the other, becausse the corrections did not pearce into their mindes, that the people hauing their vices boyled out, might be made meete to receiue pardon. Truely he that so speaketh, sheweth, that so soone as a man hath repented, he will byandby become appeasable: and that by our stifnes he is enforced to that rigour in chastising of faultes, which should haue bin preuented with willing amendement. Yet forasmuch as we all are of such hardnes and rudeneſſe, as vniuersally needeth chastisemẽt: it seemed good to him being a most wise father, to exercise all without exceptiõ with a cõmon scourge all their life long. But it is maruelous why they so cast their eyes vpon the only example of Dauid, & are not moued with so many examples, in which they might haue beholdẽ free for-

Dan. 4. 24. 36 Daniel in his exhortation wherin he counſelleth Nabuchadnezer to redeeme his ſinnes with righteouſneſſe, and his iniquities with pityinge of the poore: his meaning was not to ſay, that righteouſneſſe and mercy are ſatisfactory appeaſementes of God, and redẽption of paines (for God forbid that there were euer any redẽptiõ ſauing only the bloud of Chriſt) but to referre this word Redeeming rather to men than to God, as if he had ſayd: O king, thou haſt vſed an vnrighteous and violent goruernment, thou haſt oppreſſed the humble, thou haſt ſpoyled the poore, thou haſt hardly and vniuſtly handled thy people: for thy vniuſt exactions, for thy violence and oppreſſion, now render to them mercy and righteouſneſſe. Likewiſe Salomon ſayth, that with charity the multitude of ſinnes is couered: not before God, but amonge men themſelues. For thus is the whole verſe: Hatred raiſeth vp contentions: but charity couereth all iniquities. In which verſe, as his maner is, he doth by way of compariſon of contraries, compare the euils that grow of hatreds, with the frutes of charity: in this meaninge, they that hate together, do one bite, barke at, reproch and rayle at an other, and turne all things to the worſt: but they that loue together, do diſſemble many thinges amonge themſelues, do winke at many thinges, and pardon many thinges one to the other: not that the one alloweth the others faultes, but beareth with them, and helpeth them with admoniſhinge, rather than galleth them with reproching them. And it is not to be douted that Peter alleageth this place in the ſame ſenſe, vnleſſe we will accuſe him of depraying and wrongfully wreſting the Scripture. But whereas he teacheth that ſinne is purged with mercifulneſſe and liberality, he doth not meane that recompenſe is therewith made for ſinne before the face of the Lorde, ſo that God beinge appeaſed by ſuch ſatisfaction doth releaſe the paine that otherwiſe he would haue layd vpon thẽ, but after the accuſtomed manner of the Scripture he declareth that they ſhall finde him mercifull vnto them that leauinge their former vices and iniquities, do turne to him by godlines & trueth: as if he should say, that the wrath of God doth cesse and his iudgement rest, when we cesse frō our euill doinges. Neither doth he there describe the cause of pardō, but rather the maner of true conuersion. As many times the Prophets do declare that Hypocrites do in vaine pester God with forged ceremonious vsages in stede of repentance, whereas it is vprightnes of life with the duties of charity that deliteth him As also the author of the Epistle to the Hebrues commendinge liberality and gentleneſſe, teacheth that such sacrifices please God. And when Christ, taunting the Pharises that giuinge heede only to cleansinge of dishes, they neglected the cleanneſſe of the heart, commaunded them to giue almes that all might be cleane: he did not thereby exhorte them to make satisfaction: but only teacheth what maner of cleanneſſe pleaseth God. Of which kinde of speach we haue entreated in an other place. Heb.13 16. Mat.23. 25. Luc.11. 39.

37 As touching the place of Luke, no man that hath with sounde iudgement read the parable that the Lord did there recite, will make vs any controuersie thereupon. The Phariſee thought with himselfe, that the Lord did not know the woman, which he had so easily receiued into his presence. For he thought that Christ would not haue receiued her, if he had knowen her such a sinner as she was. And therby he gathered, that Christ was not a Prophet that might in such sort be deceiued. The Lord, to shewe that she was no sinner to whom her sinnes were already forgiuen, did put out this parable. There were two detters to one creditour vpō vsurie: the one ought fifty, the other ought fiue hundred, both had their dettes forgiuen them. Whether oweth more thanke? the Phariſee answered: he to whom most is forgiuen. The Lord replied: learne hereby that this womans sinnes are forgiuē her, because she hath loued much. In which words (as you se) he maketh not her loue the cause, but the proofe of the forgiueneſſe of her sinnes. For they are deriued vpon a similitude of that dettour, to whome fiue hundred was forgiuen, to whome he did not say that therefore it was forgiuen, because he had loued much: but therefore loued much, because it was forgiuen. And hereunto must that similitude be applied in this sorte: Thou thinkest this woman to be a sinner: but thou oughtest to know that she is none such, forasmuch as her sinnes be forgiuen her. And that her sinnes be forgiuē her, her loue ought to proue vnto thee, whereby she rendereth thanke for this benefit. It is an argument gathered of the following effect, wherby any thing is proued by signes ensuinge. By what meane she obtayned forgiuenes of sinnes, the Lord openly testifieth: Thy faith, saith he, hath saued thee. Therefore we obtayne forgiueneſſe by fayth: Luc.7. 36.

By charity we giue thankes, and teſtifie the bountifulneſſe of the Lord.

38 As for thoſe things that are commonly founde in the bookes of olde wryters concerninge ſatisfaction, they litle moue me. I ſee in deede that many of them, (I will ſpeake plainly) in a maner all whoſe books remaine, haue either erred in this point, or ſpokē to crabbedly and hardly: but I will not graunt that they were ſo rude and vnskilfull as to haue wrytten thoſe thinges in that ſenſe that the new Satisfactionars do readē thē. Chryſoſtome in one place writeth thus: where mercy is required, examination ceſſeth: where mercy is asked, iudgement is not rigorous: where mercy is craued, there is no place for paine: where is mercy, there is no inquiſition. Where is mercy, the anſwere is pardoned. Which wordes howſoeuer they be wreſted, yet they can neuer be made to agree with the Schoolemens doctrines. In the booke of Eccleſiaſticall doctrines, which is fathered vpon Auguſtine, is red thus: Satisfaction of repentance is, to cut of the cauſes of ſinnes, and not to graunt an entrie to their ſuggeſtions. Whereby appeareth that the doctrine of ſatisfaction that was ſayd to be giuen in recompenſe for ſinnes committed, was euen in thoſe times laughed to ſcorne: foraſmuch as they referre all ſatisfaction to a heedefulneſſe in abſtaining frō ſinnes in time to come. I will not alleage that which the ſame Chryſoſtome ſayth, that he requireth of vs no more, but that we ſhoulde confeſſe our ſinnes vnto him with teares: ſith ſuch ſentences are many times found in his wrytings & others. Auguſtine in deede in ſome places calleth the workes of mercy, remedies to obtaine forgiueneſſe of ſinnes: but becauſe no man ſhoulde ſtumble at that litle word, he himſelfe preuenteth it in an other place. The fleſh of Chriſt (ſayth he) the true and onely ſacrifice for ſinnes, not onely theſe ſinnes that are wholly put away in baptiſme, but alſo theſe that afterward creepe in by weakenes: for which the whole church crieth out at this day, Forgiue vs our treſpaſſes. And they are forgiuen by that ſingular ſacrifice.

39 They haue for the moſt parte called ſatisfaction, not a recompenſe to be rendred to God, but an open declaration whereby they that had bin excommunicate when they woulde be receiued againe to the communion, did aſſertaine the church of their repentāce. For there were enioyned vnto them when they did repent certaine faſtinges and other thinges, whereby they might perſwade men that they were truely and hartily weary of their former life, or rather blotte out the remembrance of their former doinges: and ſo they were ſayd to make ſatisfaction not to God, but to the Church. Which is also expressed of Augustine in these wordes in his Enchiridion to Laurence: Out of that auncient custome the confessions and satisfactions that are at this day vsed, tooke their beginning. Truely very viperous birthes, by which is brought to passe, that there remaineth not so much as a shadowe of that better forme. I know that the olde wryters do sometime speake somewhat hardly, and as I sayd euen now, I do not deny that paraduenture they erred herein. But those thinges that were besprinkled with a few spots, when they are once handeled with these mens vnwashed handes, are altogether defiled. And if we must contende with the authority of olde wryters: good God, what olde wryters do they thrust vnto vs? A good parte of those wherewith Peter Lombard their champion hath botched vp his patched Sentences, is gathered out of the vnsauory dotages of certaine monkes that are caried about vnder the name of Ambrose, Hierome, Augustine, and Chrysostome. As about this presente question he taketh in a maner all out of Augustines boke of repentance, which is foolishely botched of good and bad by some scraper together. It beareth in deede the name of Augustine, but such a booke as no man beinge but meanely learned, would voutchsaue to acknowledge for his. But whereas I do not so narowly examine their follies, lette the readers pardon me whom I would ease of that tediousnesse. For to me it should not be very laboursome, and yet very pausible to bewray to their great shame those thinges that they haue heretofore boasted vpon as misteries, but because my purpose is to teach frutefully, therfore I passe them ouer.

Cap. 65 & is rehearsed in the Decretes cap. in actionibus. de pœnit. distic. 1.

The v. Chapter.

Of the supplyings which they adde to satisfactions, as pardons and purgatory.

OVt of this doctrine of satisfactions do flowe indulgences or pardons. For they say that that which our power wanteth to make satisfaction, is supplied by these pardons. And they runne so farre foorth into madnesse, that they define them to be the distribution of the merites of Christ & of the martyrs, which the Pope dealeth abroade by his bulles. But although they haue more neede of Helleborus to purge their frentike braine, than argumentes to answere them, so that it is not much worthy the trauaile to stand vpon confutinge such triflinge errours, which are already shaken with many battelrammes, and of themselues grow into decaied age, and bende toward fallinge: yet because a shorte confutation of them shalbe profitable for some that be ignoraunt, I will not altogether omit it. As for this that pardons haue ſo longe ſtande ſafe, and haue ſo longe bin vnpuniſhed, hauinge bin vſed with ſo outragious and fu-nous licentiouſneſſe: this may ſerue to teach vs in how darke a night of errours, men in certaine ages paſt haue bin drowned. They ſawe themſelues to be openly and vncolouredly ſcorned of the Pope & his Bulbearers, gainefull markets to be made of the ſaluation of their ſoules, the price of ſaluation to be valued at a few pence, and nothing ſet out to be frely giuen: that by this colour they be wiped of offrings to be filthily ſpent vpon brothels, bawdes and banketinges: that the greateſt blowers abroade of pardons are the greateſt deſpiſers of thē: that this monſter doth daily more & more with greater licentiouſneſſe ouerrunne the worlde, and grow into outrage, and that there is no ende, newe lead dayly brought, and newe mony gotten. Yet with hye reuerence they receiued, they worſhipped and bought pardons, and ſuch as among the reſt ſaw ſomewhat farther, yet thought them to be godly deceites, wherby men might be beguiled with ſome profit. At the length, ſince the world ſuffered it ſelfe to be ſomewhat wiſer, pardons waxe colde, and by litle and litle become froſen, till they vtterly vaniſh away.

2 But foraſmuch as many that ſee the filthy gaminges, the deceites, theftes, and robberies, wherewith the pardoners haue heretofore mocked and begiled vs, yet ſee not the very fountayne of vngodlineſſe from whence they ſpringe: it is good to ſhew not onely of what ſort pardons be, but alſo what they be, when they are wiped frō all ſpottes. They call the treaſure of the church, the merites of Chriſt and of the holy Apoſtles and Martyrs. The principall cuſtody of this barne (as I haue already touched) they faine to be deliuered to the biſhop of Rome, that he ſhould haue the diſtributiō of ſo great gifts, that hē might both giue them by himſelfe, and alſo graunt iuriſdiction to other to giue them. Hereupon procede from the Pope ſomtime plenary pardons, ſomtime pardons for certaine yeres: from the Cardinals, pardons for a hundred dayes: from Biſhoppes, pardons for forty dayes. But they be (as I may naturally deſcribe thē) the profaninge of the bloud of Chriſt, Sathans mockery, to leade away the chriſtian people from the grace of God, from the life that is in Chriſt, and to turne them from the true way of ſaluation. For how could the bloude of Chriſt be more filthily prophaned, than when it is denied to ſuffice the remiſſion of ſinnes, to reconciliation and ſatisfaction, vnleſſe the want thereof as being withered and waſted, ſhoulde be otherwiſe ſupplied and profited? The law and all the Prophetes (ſaith Peter) beare witneſſe of Chriſt, that by him forgiueneſſe of ſinne is to be receiued: Pardons giue remission of sinnes by Peter, Paul and the Martyrs. The bloud of Christ (saith Iohn) cleanseth vs frō sinne: Pardons do make the bloud of Martyrs the washing away of sinnes. Christ (saith Paul) which knew not sinne, was made sinne for vs, ỳ is, the satisfaction of sinne, that we might be made the righteousnesse of God in him: Pardons do sette the satisfaction of sinnes in the bloude of Martyrs. Paule cried out and testified to the Corinthians, that only Christ was crucified and died for them: the pardons pronounce that Paule and other died for vs. In an other place he sayth that Christ purchased the church with his bloud: the pardōs appoint an other price of purchace in ỳ bloud of Martyrs. The Apostle saith, that Christ with one oblation made perfect for euer them that were sanctified: the pardons crie out to the contrary and say, that sanctification is made perfect by the Martyrs, which otherwise were not sufficient. Iohn sayth that all the saintes washed their gowns in the bloud of the lambe: the pardons teach men to wash their gownes in bloud of saintes.

1. Ioh. 1. 7. 2. Cor. 5. 21. 1. Cor. 1. 13. Act 20. 28. Heb. 10. 14. Reue. 7. 14.

3 Leo Bishop of Rome, writeth notably wel to ỳ Palestines against these sacrileges. Although (saith he) the death of many saintes hath bin precious in the sight of the Lord, yet the killing of no innocent hath bin the propitiation of the world. The righteous receiued, but gaue not crownes: and out of the valiantnesse of the faithful are grauen examples of pacience, not gifts of righteousnes. For their deathes were euery one singular to themselues, & none of thē did by his end pay the det of an other, forasmuch there is one Lord Christ, in whom all are crucified, all are dead, buried, and raised vp againe. Which sentence (as it was worthy to be remēbred) he repeated in an other place There can nothinge be required more plaine to destroy this wicked doctrine. Yet Augustine speaketh no lesse fitly to ỳ same effect Though (saith he) we die brethren for brethren, yet the bloud of no Martyrs is shed for ỳ forgiuenes of sinnes. Which thing Christ hath done for vs, neither hath he therin done that for vs, that we should folow him, but hath giuē vs a thing to reioice vpon. Againe in an other place, As only the sonne of God was made the sonne of mā, to make vs ẅ him the sonnes of God: so he alone for vs hath takē vpon him punishmēt without euil deseruinges, that we by him might without good deseruinges obtaine grace not due vnto vs. Truely where as all their doctrine is patched together of horrible sacrileges and blasphemies, yet this is a more monstruous blasphemy than all the other. Let them remember thēselues, whether these be not their decrees: that the Martyrs haue by their death done more to God, and deserued more, than was nedefull for themselues: and that they had remaining so great plenty of deseruings, as did also ouerflow vnto other: and that therfore, least so great goodnesse shoulde be superfluous, their bloud is mingled with the bloud of Christ, and of both these bloudes is made the treasure of the church, for the remissiō and satisfaction of sinnes.

Colo. 1. 24. And that so is the sayinge of Paule to be taken: I supply in my body those things that want of the suffrings of Christ for his body, which is the church. What is this elsse but to leaue Christ only his name, otherwise to make him but a common pety saint, that may scarcely among the multitude be knowen from the rest? He only, only shoulde haue bin preached, he onely set foorth, he only named, he only bin looked vnto, when the obtaining of forgiuenesse of sinne, satisfactiō, and sanctification are entreated of. But let vs heare their curtalled argumentes. Least the bloude of the Martyrs shoulde be shed in vaine, therefore let it be employed to the common benefit of the Church. Is it so? was it no profit to glorifie God by their death? to subscribe to his trueth with their bloud? by despisinge this present life, to testifie that they sought for a better life? by their stedfastnesse to strengthen the faith of the church, and ouercome the stubbornesse of the enemies? But this is the matter in deede: they acknowledge no profit of the Martyrs death, if Christ only be the propitiator, if he onely died for our sinnes, if he onely was offered vp for our redemption. So (say they) Peter and Paul might neuertheless haue obtayned the crown of victory, if they had died in their beddes. And whereas they haue fought euen to the shedinge of their bloude, it woulde not agree with ỹ iustice of God to leaue the same barren & fruteles. As though God could not tel how to encrease in his seruants their glory, according to the measure of his gifts. But the church receiueth in commune together profite enough, when it is by their triumphes encouraged to a zealous desire to fight.

4 But how maliciously do they wrest that place of Paule where he Colo 1. 24. saith, that he supplieth in his body those thinges that wanted of the sufferings of Christ? For he referreth not the default or supplying, to the worke of redemption, satisfaction, & expiation: but to those afflictions wherwith all the members of Christ, that is to say, all the faithfull must be exercised, so longe as they shall be in this flesh. He sayth therfore, that this remaineth of the sufferings of Christ, that he dayly suffereth in his members the same that he once suffered in himselfe. Christ vouchsaueth to do vs so great honor, to recken and accompt our afflictions his owne. Where as Paule added these wordes, For the church, he meaneth not for the redemption, for the reconciliation, for the ſatisfaction of the church, but for the edifyinge and profit of the church. As in an other place he ſayth, that he ſuffereth all things for the electes ſakes, that they may obtaine the ſaluation which is in Chriſt Ieſu. And he wrote to the Corinthians, that he ſuffered all the troubles that he ſuffred, for their comfort and ſaluation. And immediatly in the ſame place he expoundeth himſelfe, when he ſayth further, that he was made a miniſter of the church, not for redemption, but accordinge to the diſpenſation that was committed vnto him, to preach the Goſpel of Chriſt. If they yet require an other expoſitour, let them heare Auguſtine. The ſufferinges of Chriſt (ſayth he) are in Chriſt only as in the head: and both in Chriſt & the church, as in the whole body. Whereby Paule being one member ſaith, I ſupply in my body that which wanteth in the ſuffrings of Chriſt. Therfore if thou what ſoeuer thou be ý heareſt this, art one of the members of Chriſt, whatſoeuer thou ſuſtereſt of thē that are not the members of Chriſt, that ſame wanted in the ſuffrings of Chriſt. But wherunto the ſuffrings of the Apoſtles taken for the church of Chriſt do tend, he expoundeth in an other place where he ſayth: Chriſt is to me the gate vnto you: becauſe ye are the ſhepe of Chriſt bought with his bloud: acknowledging your price, which is not giuē of me, but preached by me. Then he addeth As he hath giuen his ſoule, ſo ought we to giue our ſoules for our brethren, to edifie peace, & to cōfirme faith. Theſe are Auguſtines words. But God forbid, that Paul ſhould haue thought that any thing wanted in the ſuffrings of Chriſt, as concerning all fulnes of righteouſnes, ſaluation and life: or that he meant to adde any thing thereunto, which ſo plainly and honorably preacheth, that the abundance of grace was ſo largely poured out by Chriſt, that it farre ſurmounted all the force of ſinne. By it only all the ſaintes haue bin ſaued, & not by ý merit of their owne life or death, as Peter expreſly teſtified: ſo that he ſhould be ſclanderous againſt God & Chriſt, that ſhould repoſe the worthines of any ſaint any where elſe than in the only mercy of God. But why do I tary hereupon any longer, as vpon a matter yet doutfull, ſith the very bewrayinge of ſuch monſtruous errours is a ſufficient confutation of them?

2. Tim. 2 10. 1. Cor. 1 6. In Pſal. 16. Tract. in Ioh. 47. Rom. 5. 15. Act. 15. 11.

5 Now (to paſſe ouer ſuch abhominations) who taught the Pope to encloſe in lead and parchement the grace of Ieſus Chriſt, which the Lord willed to be diſtributed by the word of the Goſpel? Truely either the Goſpell of God muſt be falſe, or their pardons falſe. For, that Chriſt is offred vs in the Goſpel, with all abundance of heauenly benefites, with all his merites, with all his righteouſnes, wiſdom and grace, without any exception, Paul witneſſeth where he ſaith, that the 2. Cor. 1 word of reconciliation was deliuered to the ministers, whereby they might vse this forme of message, as it were Christ giuing exhortation by them: we beseech you, be ye so reconciled to God? He hath made him ỹ knew no sinne, to be made sinne for vs, that we might be made the righteousnes of God in him. And the faithful know of what va-

1. Cor. 1 17. lue is that common partakinge of Christ, which (as the same Apostle witnesseth) is offred vs to be enioyed in the Gospel. Contrariwise the 3 pardõs do bring out of the storehouse of the Pope, a certaine pitance of grace, & fasten it to lead, parchement, yea and to a certaine place, & seuere it from the word of God. If a man should aske whence this abuse tooke beginning: it seemeth to haue proceded herof, that when in time past penitentes were charged with more rigorous satisfactiõs than all could beare, they which felt themselues aboue measure oppressed with penãce enioyned them, required of the church a release. The mitigation that was graunted to such, was called an indulgence or pardon. But when they turned Satisfactions from the Church to God, & sayd that they were recompenses wherby men may redeeme themselues frõ the iudgement of God, then they therwithall did also draw these indulgences or pardons to be propitiatory remedies, to deliuer vs from deserued punishments. As for these blasphemers that we haue recited, they forged thẽ so shameleslely, that they can haue no colour at all.

6 Now let thẽ no more trouble vs with their purgation, because it is with this axe already broken, hewed downe, & ouerthrowen from the very fundations. For I do not agree to some mẽ, that thinke best to dissemble in this point, and make no mention at all of Purgatory, whereupon (as they say) great contentions do arise, but small edification is gotten Truely I my selfe woulde also thinke such trifles worthy to be negligently passed ouer, if they did not accompt thẽ earnest matters. But forasmuch as purgatory is builded of many blasphemes, and is dayly vpholden with newe blasphemes, and raiseth vp many and grieuous offences, truely it is not to be winked at. This paraduenture might after a sort haue bin dissembled for a time, that it was inuented by curious and bolde rashnesse without the worde of God: that men beleued of it by, I wot not what reuelations, fained by the craft of Sathan: that for the confirmation of it, certaine places of Scripture were fondly wrested. Albeit the Lord giueth not leaue to mans presumptuousnes so to breake into ỹ secret places of his iudge-Deu. 18. 21. ments, & hath seuerely forbidden men to enquire for trueth at dead mẽ, neglecting his word, & permitteth not his word to be so vnreuerẽtly defiled. But let vs graunt, that all those things might for a while haue haue bin borne with, as thinges of no great importaunce. But when the cleansinge of sinnes is sought else where then in the bloude of Christ, when satisfaction is giuen away to any other thinge, then it is most perillous not to speake of it. Therefore we must crie out not onely with vehement stretching of our voice, but also of our throte and sides: that Purgatory is the damnable deuise of Sathan, that it maketh voide the Crosse of Christ, that it layeth an intolerable slander vpon the mercy of God, that it feebleth and ouerthroweth our faith. For what else is Purgatory amonge them, but the satisfaction that the soules of men departed do pay after their death? So that ouerthrowing the opinion of satisfaction, Purgatory is immediatly ouerthrowen by the very rootes. But if in our former discourse it is more than euident that the bloude of Christ is the onely satisfaction, propitiatory sacrifice and cleansing for the sinnes of the faithfull: what remaineth but that purgatory is a mere and horrible blasphemie against Christ? I passe ouer the robberies of God wherewith it is daily defended, the offenses that it bredeth in religion, and other thinges innumerable, which we see to haue come out of the same spring of vngodlinesse.

7 But it is good to wringe out of their handes such places as they haue falsly & wrongfully take out of the Scripture. When (say they) the Lord affirmeth that ỹ sinne against the holy Ghost should not be forgiuen in this world, nor in the world to come, thereby he sheweth that there is a forgiuenesse of some sinnes in the worlde to come. But who seeth not that the Lord there speaketh of the fault of sinne? Now if it be so, what is that to their Purgatory, forasmuch as by their opinion the paine is there suffred of those sinnes, wherof they deny not the fault to be forgiuē in this present life? But that they may no more carp against vs, they shal haue yet a plainer solution. When the Lord meant to cut of all hope of Pardon from so haynous wickednesse, he thought it not enough to say that it should neuer be forgiuē: but the more to amplify it, he vsed a diuision, wherin he comprehended both the iudgement that euery mans conscience feeleth in this life, & the last iudgement that shalbe openly pronounced at the resurrection: as thogh he should haue said: Beware ye of malicious rebellio, as of most present damnatio. For he that of set purpose shal endeuour to quench the light of the holy Ghost, shall not obtaine pardon, neither in this life which is giuen to sinners for their conuersion, nor in the last day when the lambes shalbe seuered by the angels of God frō the goats, and the kingdome of heauen shalbe cleansed from all offenses. Then they bringe foorth that parable out of Matthew: Agree with thine aduersary, least he deliuer thee to the Iudge, & the iudge to the Sargeant, and the Sargeant to the prison, from whence thou shalt not get out, vntil thou hast payed the vttermost farthing. If in this place the Iudge do signifie God, and the aduersary plentifie the Deuil, the Sargeant the Angell, and the prison purgatory, I wil gladly yeelde vnto them. But if it be euident to all men, that Christ meant there to show into how many daungers and mischieues they cast themselues, that had rather obstinatly pursue the extremity of the law, thā deale cording to equity and good right, to the ende to exhort his disciples the more earnestly to agreement with equity: where thē I pray you shall Purgatory be found?

Mat. 12. 32. Mar. 3. 28. Luc. 12. 10. Mat. 5. 25.

8 They fetch an argument out of ỹ saying of Paul, where he affir-Phil. 2. 10. meth that the knees of thinges in heauen, earth & hels, shall bow to Christ. For they take it as cōfessed, that hels can not there be meant of those that are adiudged to eternall damnation. Therfore it remaineth that it must be the soules lying in paine in Purgatory. They did not reason very euil, if the Apostle did by kneelinge meane the true godly worshipping. But sith he teacheth only, that there is a dominiō giuen to Christ whereby all creatures are to be subdued, what proofe is there to the contrary, but that we may by hels vnderstand the Deuils, that shalbe brought before ỹ iudgement of God, to acknowledge Rom. 13 10. him their iudge with feare and trembling? Like as Paul himselfe expoundeth the same prophecy in an other place. All (sayth he) shalbe brought before the iudgemēt seate of Christ. For it is written: So truly as I liue, euery knee shall bow to me. &c. But we may not so expound Reue. 5. 13. that which is in the Reuelation: I haue heard all creatures, both these things that are in heauen, & those that are vpon the earth, and these that are vnder the earth, & those that are in the seae, & all those that are in thē, I haue heard thē all say to him that sitteth on the Throne & to the Lambe, Blessing & honor, and glory, and power, for euer & euer. That I do in deede easily graunt, but what creatures do they thinke to be here rehearsed? For it is most certaine, that there are contained creatures both without reason and without sense. Wherby is affirmed nothing else, but that all the partes of the world, from the hiest toppe of the heauens, to the very midle point of the earth, do in their maner declare the glory of their creator. As for that which they 2 Mach 12. 43. alleage out of the history of the Machabees, I will not vouchsaue to answere it, least I should seeme to recken that worke in the number of the holy books. But Augustine receiued it for Canonicall. But first, of what sure credit did he receiue it? The Iewes (sayth he) esteeme not the wryting of the Machabees as they do the law, the Prophetes

and the Psalmes, of which the Lord himselfe hath witnessed as of his witnesses, saying: It was necessary, that all thinges should be fulfilled that are wrytten in the law, and the Psalmes, and Prophetes, concerning me. But it hath bin receiued of the Church not vnprofitably, if it be soberly read or heard. And Hierom teacheth without any douting that the authority thereof is of no force to prouing of doctrines. And it euidently appeareth by that old booke, which is entituled vnder the name of Cyprian, concerninge the exposition of the Crede, that it had no place at all in the olde Church. But why do I here striue without cause? As though the author himselfe doth not sufficiently shew, how much he is to be credited, whē in the end he craueth pardon, if he haue spoken any thing not well. Truely he that confesseth his wrytings to nede pardon, sayth plainly that they are not the oracles of the holy Ghost. Beside that, ỹ godlines of Iudas is praised for none other cause, but for that he had an assured hope of the last resurrection, when he sent an offring for the dead to Hierusalem. Neither doth the wryter of that history referre that which Iudas did to be a price of redemption, but that they might be partakers of the eternall life with the other faithful, that had died for their contry & religion. This doing was in deede not without superstition and prepostorous zeale, but they are more thā fooles, that draw a sacrifice of the law so farre as vnto vs: forasmuch as we know that things do cesse by the comming of Christ, that then were in vse.

Contra gaudēt. epist. 2. cap. 23. Luk. 23. 2. Mach 15 36.

9 But they haue an inuincible bulwarke in Paul, which can not so easily be battered. If any man (sayth he) build vpon this foundation, gold, siluer, precious stones, timber, heye, stubble, the Lord shall shew euery mans worke what it is: becausе it shal be reuealed in fier, & the fier shall trie euery mans worke what it is. If any mās worke do burne, it shall suffer losse, but he shalbe safe, but as through the fier. What fier (say they) can that be, but the fier of Purgatory? by which the filthinesses of sinne are clensed away, that we may enter pure in to the kingdom of God? But the most part of the old wryters thought it to be an other fier, that is to say, Trouble or the crosse, by which the Lord trieth them that be his, that they should not rest in the filthines of the flesh: & that is much more probable, than in faining purgatory. Albeit I do neither agree with these men, becausе I thinke I haue attained a certaine and much plainer vnderstanding of that place. But before that I vtter it, I woulde haue thē answere me, whether the Apostles & all ỹ saincts must haue gone through this fier of Purgatory? I know they wil say, nay. For it were to much inconueniēt that they must haue neded to be purged, whose merites they dreame to ouer-

Chrysost. August. & others.

flow aboue measure to all the members of the church. But the Apostle affirmeth it. For he doth not say that the worke of some shalbe proued, but the worke of all. Neither is this my argumēt, but Augustines, which so confuteth that expositiō. And (which is more absurdity) he doth not say, ỹ they shal passe through the fire for all works: but if they haue faithfully builded the church, they shall receiue reward when their worke is examined with fier. First we see that the Apostle vsed a Metaphore, when he called the doctrines inuēted by mans braines, wood, hey, & stubble. And the Metaphore hath an apparant rescue: that as wood so soone as it is put in the fier, consumeth & wasteth, so can not those doctrines continue when they come to be examined. Now no man is ignorant that such triall commeth of the holy Ghost. Therefore to folow the true cause of his metaphore, & match the partes together with iust relation, he called the triall of the holy Ghost, fier. For euen as the nerer that gold & siluer are put to the fier, so much the surer proufe they haue of their goodnes and finenes: so the Lords trueth, ỹ more exactly it is weyed with spiritual examination, so much the greater cōfirmation of credit it receiueth. As hey, wood, & stubble put to the fier, are brought to sudden consuming, so the inuentions of men not stablished by the word of God, can not beare the triall of the holy Ghost, but they byandby fal away and perish. Finally, if forged doctrines be compared to wood, hey, and stubble, because like wood, hey, & stubble, they are burned with fire & destroied: but they are not destroied or driuen away but by the spirit of the Lord: it followeth that the holy Ghost is the fier wherwith they shalbe proued, whose prouf Paul, according to the common vse of the Scripture, calleth The day of the Lord. For it is called ỹ day of the Lord, whensoeuer he doth any way shew his presence to mē. But thē his face principally shineth, when his trueth shineth vpō vs. Now haue we proued, that Paul meaneth no other fier, but the triall of the holy Ghost. But how are they saued by ỹ fier, that suffer losse of their worke? That shall not be hard to vnderstande, if we consider of what kinde of men he speaketh. For he toucheth those builders of the church, that keping the true fundation, do build disagreeing matter vpon it, that is to say, they that not swaruing frō the chiefe & necessary articles of faith, do erre in pointes that be smaler & lesse perilous mingling their owne deuises with the word of God. Such I say, must suffer losse of their worke, hauinge their deuises destroied. But themselues are saued, but as by the fier: that is to say, not that their ignorance and errour is allowable before the Lord, but because they are cleansed from it by the grace and power of the holy Ghost. Therfore

whosoeuer haue defiled the golden fineneſſe of Gods word with this dong of purgatory, they muſt nedes ſuffer loſſe of their worke.

10 But they wil ſay, it hath bin an auncient vſage of the church. Paule anſwered this obiection when he comprehendeth his owne time in that ſentence, where he ſayth, that all they muſt ſuffer loſſe of their worke, that in the building of the church, do lay any thing vpō the fundation that agreeth not with it, Therefore when the aduerſaries obiect againſt me, that it hath bin vſed aboue a thouſande and three hundreth yeares, to haue prayers made for the dead: I aske thē againe, by what word of God, by what Reuelation, by what example it was done. For here they do not only want teſtimonies of Scripture but alſo all the examples of holy men that there are red, do ſhew no ſuch thing. Of the mourning and order of funeralles there are ſomtimes found many & long tales: but of prayers you can not ſee one title. But of the greater weight that the matter is, the more it ought to haue bin expreſſely ſpoken. But the very old fathers themſelues that prayed for the dead, did ſee that herein they wanted both commaundement of God, and lawfull example. Why then durſt they ſo do? In this I ſay, they did ſuffer ſomwhat as men: & therfore I affirme that, that which they did, ought not to be drawē into example. For where as the faithfull ought to enterpriſe the doinge of nothing, but vpon aſſured conſcience, as Paule teacheth: this aſſuredneſſe is principally required in prayer. But it is likely that they were led by ſome reaſon vnto it: they ſought ſome comfort to relieue their ſorrow: and it ſeemed vnnatural not to ſhew before God ſome teſtimony of their loue toward the dead. Howe mans wit is enclined to this affection, all men know by experience. Alſo the receiued cuſtome was like a burninge brand to ſet many mens mindes on fier. We knowe that with all nations & in all ages there were funerals done for ỹ dead, & their ſoules yearely purged. For though Sathan beguiled fooliſh men with theſe deceites: yet he tooke occaſion ſo to begile by a true principle: that death is not a deſtructiō, but a paſſage out of this life into an other. And it is no dout, but that euē very ſuperſtitiō condēneth the Gentils before the iudgement ſeat of God, for neglecting the care of the life to come, which they profeſſed themſelues to beleue. Nowe Chriſtians, becauſe they would not be worſe than Heathē men, were aſhamed to do nothing for the dead, as though they were vtterly deſtroied. Herupon came that il aduiſed diligence: becauſe if they were ſlow in looking to ỹ funerals, in bankettinges & offrings, they thought that they had put themſelues in daunger of a great reproche. And that which firſt proceeded from a wrongful following of the Heathens example, was ſo multiplied by often new encreaſes, that now it is the principal holyneſſe of Papiſtry, to help the dead in diſtreſſe. But the Scripture Reu.14. 13. miniſtreth an other much better and perfecter comfort, when it teſtifieth, that the dead are bleſſed that die in the Lorde. And it addeth a reaſon: becauſe from thence forth they reſt frō their labours. And we ought not ſo much tenderly to follow our owne affection of loue, to ſet vp a wrōgful maner of praying in the church. Truely he that hath but meane wiſdom, doth ſoone perceiue that all that is red hereof in the olde wryters, was done to beare with the common vſage, and the ignorance of the people. They themſelues alſo, I graunt, were caried away into errour euen as vnaduiſed lightnes of beliefe is wont to rob mens wits of iudgement. But in the meane time the very readinge of them doth ſhew, how doutingly they commend prayers for the dead. Auguſtine in his booke of confeſſions, reporteth that Monica his mother did earneſtly deſire, that ſhe might be remembred in celebrating the miniſteries at the Altar. An old wiues requeſt, which ẏ ſonne neuer examined by the rule of the Scripture, but according to his affectiō of nature, would haue it allowed of other. As for the booke that he made of care for the deade, containeth ſo many doutinges, that of right it ought with the coldnes thereof to quench the heate of a fooliſh zeale: if any man deſire to be a proctor for dead men, truely with cold likelihodes it wil bring them out of care that were before careful. For this is one piller of it, that this doing is not to be deſpiſed, becauſe it is a cuſtome growē in vſe, that the dead ſhould be prayed for. But though I graūt to the old writers of the church, that it is a charitable vſe to help the dead: yet we muſt ſtil hold one rule which cā not deceiue: that it is not lawfull for vs in our prayers to vſe any thing of our own, but our requeſtes muſt be made ſubiect to the word of God: becauſe it is in his wil to appoint what he wil haue to be asked. Now where as the whole lawe and the Goſpell do not ſo much as in one ſillable giue liberty to pray for the dead, it is a prophane abuſe of the inuocation of God to atttempt more than he commaundeth vs. But that our aduerſaries may not boaſt that they haue the auncīēt church cōpanion of their errour: I ſay there is great difference betwene thē & it. They vſed a memorial of ẏ dead, leaſt they ſhould ſeeme to haue caſt away all care of them: but they did therewithall confeſſe that they douted of their ſtate. As for purgatory, they ſo affirmed nothing that they helde it for a thinge vncertaine. Theſe men require to haue that which they haue dreamed of purgatory, to be holdē wout queſtiō for an article of faith. They ſclenderly & only to paſſe it lghtly ouer, did in the cōmunion of the holy ſupper cōmend their dead to God:

Theſe

These do continually call vpon the care of the dead, and with importunate praising it, do make it to be preferred aboue all dutieful works of charitie. Yea and it were not harde for vs to bringe forth some testimonies of the olde writers, that do manifestly ouerthrowe all those prayers for the dead, which then weare vsed. As this of Augustine, when he teacheth that all men loke for the resurrection of the flesh and the eternall glorie, and that euery man then receiueth the rest that followeth after death, if he be worthy when he dieth. And therefore he testifieth, that all the Godly do immediatly after death enioy the blessed rest as well as the Prophets, Apostles and martyrs. If their estate be such, what I beseche you, shall our prayers auaile them? I passe ouer the grosser superstitions, wherewith they haue bewitched the mindes of the simple: which yet are so innumerable and the most part so mōstruous, that they can haue no honest collour to excuse them. Also I let passe those most filthy byings and sellings that they haue vsed, while the worlde was in such grosse senslesse ignorance. For both I shoulde neuer make an ende, and also the readers shall without any rehearsall of them, haue here sufficient, whervpon they may stablish their consciences.

Hom. in Ioan. 456.

Of the life of a Christian man: And first by vvhat argumentes the Scripture exhorteth vs thereunto.

WE haue already said, that the marke whereunto regeneration tendeth, is that in the life of the faithfull there should appeare an agrement and consent betwene the righteousnesse of God and their obedience: and that so they should confirme the adoption, whereby they are receiued to be children. But although his lawe conteine in it selfe that newnesse, whereby the image of God is restored in vs, yet because our dulnesse hath neede both of many prickinges forwarde and helpes, therefore it shalbe profitable to gather out of diuerse places of the Scripture an order of framing of life, that they that haue a desirous minde of amendement, may not wander out of the way in their endeuour. Now when I take vpon me the framing of a Christian mans life, I am not ignorant that I entre into a manifold and plentuous argument, and such as may with the greatnesse thereof fill a long volume, if I wold absolutely entreate of it in all pointes. For we se into what great length are stretched the exhortatorie orations of olde writers, made onely euery one of one seuerall vertue. And that is not done with too much idle babbling. For what so euer vertue a mā purpose to set out in oration, the ſtile runneth of it ſelfe into ſuch largenes with plentie of matter, that a man can not ſeme to haue diſcourſed well of it, vnleſſe he haue ſpoken much. But my mind is not to ſtretche ſo far the inſtitution of life, which I promiſe to teache, as peculiarly to go through euery ſpeciall vertue, and wander abrode into exhortations. Let ſuch thinges be fetched out of other mens writinges, and ſpecially out of the Homelies of the olde fathers. It ſhalbe enough for me to ſhewe an orderly trade, wherby a godly man may be guided to a right marke of framing his life, and ſhortly to apoint out a certain vniuerſall rule, by which he may well trie what be his duties. There ſhall paraduenture at ſome other ſeaſon be a fit time to make declamations, or I will leaue that to other, which I my ſelfe am not mete to do. I do naturally loue ſhortneſſe, and paraduenture if I would ſpeake more at large, it woulde not frame well with me. And if a lõger manner of teaching were neuer ſo much pleaſing, yet I would ſcarce haue minde to put it in profe. But the courſe of this preſent worke requireth to knit vp a ſimple doctrine with as great ſhortneſſe as I may. As the Phyloſophers haue their certaine endes of right and honeſtie, from which they deriue particular duties and all the companie of vertues: ſo the Scripture is not without her order in this matter: but holdeth a moſt goodly well ordred diſpoſition, and much more certaine than all the Phyloſophers orders. This only is the difference, that they (as they were vaineglorious men) haue diligently endeuoured to atteine an exquiſite plainneſſe of order, to ſhewe fourth the ready aptneſſe of their witte. But the Spirit of God, becauſe he taught without curious affectation, hath not ſo exactely nor continually kept an orderly trade: which yet when he ſometime vſeth, he doth ſufficiently declare, that it is not to be neglected of vs.

2 This inſtruction that the Scripture teacheth, whereof we now ſpeake, ſtãdeth chiefely vpon two partes. The firſt, that there be poured and brought into our mindes a loue of righteouſneſſe, to which otherwiſe we are of nature nothing inclined. The ſeconde, that there be a rule ſet out vnto vs, that may not ſuffer vs to go out of the way in following righteouſnes. In commendation of righteouſnes it hath both very many and very good reaſons: of which we haue herebefore in diuerſe places ſpoken of ſome, and other ſome we ſhall in this place briefely touch. At what foundation may it better beginne, than when it putteth vs in minde that we muſt be holy, becauſe our God is holy? For when we were ſcattered abrode like ſtraying ſheepe, and diſperſed abrode in the maze of the world, he gathered vs together againe, to ioine vs in one flocke with him ſelfe. When we heare mention made of our ioining with God, let vs remember that holineſſe muſt be the bonde thereof. Not that by the merite of holineſſe we come into common with him: (where as rather we muſt firſt cleaue vnto him, that beying endued with his holineſſe, we may followe whether he calleth) but becauſe it greatly perteineth to his glorie, that he haue no fellowſhip with wickedneſſe and vncleanneſſe. Therfore alſo it teacheth, that this is the ende of our calling, which we ought alway to haue reſpect vnto, if we will anſwere God that calleth vs. For to what purpoſe was it, that we ſhould be drawen out of the wickedneſſe and filtheneſſe of the world, if we geue our ſelues leaue all our life long to wallowe in them ſtill? Moreouer it alſo admoniſheth vs, that to the ende we may be reckened among the people of God, we muſt dwell in the holy citie Hieruſalem. Which as he hath halowed to him ſelfe, ſo is it vnlawefull that it be vnholily profaned by the vncleanneſſe of the inhabitantes. From hence came theſe ſayinges, that they ſhall haue a place in the tabernacle of God that walke without ſpot, and ſtudie to followe righteouſneſſe. &c. Becauſe it is not meete that the Sanctuarie whereon he dwelleth, ſhoulde be like a ſtable full of filthineſſe. Pſa. 35. 8. Pſa. 15. 2. & 23.

3 And the better to awake vs, it ſheweth that God the father, as he hath ioined vs to him ſelfe in his Chriſt, ſo hath printed an image for vs in him, after which he would haue vs to be faſhioned. Now let them finde me a better order among the Phyloſophers, that thinke that the phyloſophie concerning manners, is in them onely orderly framed. They when they will excellently well exhorte vs to vertue, bring nothing els but that we ſhould liue agreably to nature. But the Scripture bringeth here exhortation from the true welſpringe, when it not onely teacheth vs to referre our life to God, the authour of it, to whom it is bonde: but alſo when ſhe hath taught that we are ſwarued out of kinde from the true originall & ſtate of our creation, ſhe immediatly addeth, that Chriſt by whom we come againe into fauour with God, is ſet before vs for an example, that we ſhould expreſſe the forme thereof in our life. What may a man require more effectuall then this one thing? Ye what may a manne require more than this onely thing? For if the Lorde hath by adoption made vs children with this condition, that our life ſhoulde reſemble Chriſt the bond of our adoption: if we do not geue and auowe our ſelues to righteouſneſſe, we do not onely with moſt wicked breach of allegiaunce depart from our creatour, but alſo we forſweare him to be our ſauiour. Then the Scripture taketh matter of exhortation out of all the benefites of God, which ſhe reherſeth vnto vs, & all the partes

Mala. 1. 6. of our ſaluation. And ſheweth that ſith God hath ſhewed himſelfe a father vnto vs, we are worthy to be cõdemned of extreme vnthankefulneſſe, if we do not likewiſe in our behalfe ſhewe our ſelues children vnto him. Sith Chriſt hath cleanſed vs with the waſhing of his blood, and hath made vs partakers of this cleanſing by baptiſme, it is not ſemely that we ſhoulde be ſpotted with newe filthineſſe. Sith he hath graffed vs into his body, we muſt carefully take hede that we ſprincle not any ſpot or blot vpon vs that are his members. Sith he him ſelfe that is our head, is aſcended into heauen, it behoueth vs that laying away earthly affection, we do with all our heart aſpire to heauenward: Sith the holy Ghoſt hath dedicated vs temples to God, we muſt endeuour that Gods glorie may be honorably ſet out by vs, and muſt not do any thing wherby we may be prophaned with filthineſſe of ſinne: Sith both our ſoule and our body are ordeined to heauenly incorruption and an vnperiſhing crowne, we muſt diligently trauaill, that the ſame may be kept pure and vncorrupted vnto the day of the Lorde. Theſe (I ſay) be the beſt layed foundations to bilde a mans life, and ſuch as the like are not to be found among the Phyloſophers, which in commendation of vertue do neuer climbe aboue the naturall dignitie of man.

Ephes. 5.1. 1. Iohn. 3.1. Ephes. 15. Heb. 10 1. Cor. 6. 1. Cor. 6. 1. Pet. 1. 15 Ioh. 15. 3. Ephe 5. Colo. 3. 1. Cor. 3 2. Cor. 6. 1. Thes. 5. 15.

4 And here is a fit place to ſpeake vnto them, that hauinge nothing but the title and badge of Chriſt, yet would be named Chriſtiãs. But with what face do they boſt of his holy name: ſith none haue any fellowſhip with Chriſt but they that haue receiued a true knowledge of him out of the worde of the Goſpell? But the Apoſtle ſaith, that all they haue not rightly learned Chriſt, that are not taught that they muſt caſt away the old man which is corrupted according to the deſire of errour, and haue not put on Chriſt. Therefore it is proued that they falſly, yea and wrongfully pretẽde the knowledge of Chriſt, although they can eloquently and roundely talke of the Goſpell. For it is not a doctrine of tong, but of life: and is not conceiued as other learnings be, with onely vnderſtanding and memorie, but is then onely receiued when it poſſeſſeth the whole ſoule, and findeth a ſeate and place to hold it in the moſt inward affection of the heart. Therefore either let then ceſſe, to the ſclaunder of God, to boſt of that which they are not, or let them ſhew themſelues not vnworthy ſcholars for Chriſt their maiſter. We haue geuen the firſt place to the doctrine wherin our religion is conteined, becauſe our ſaluation beginneth at it: but the ſame muſt be poured into our hearte, and paſſe into our maners, yea and transforme vs into it, that it be not vnfruteFull vnto vs. If the Philoſophers do iuſtly chafe againſt them, and do with shamefull reproche driue them from their companie, that professing an art that ought to be the scholemaistres of life, do turne it into a Sophisticall babbling: with how much better reason shall we detest these trifling Sophisters, that are contented to role the Gospell vpon the top of their tonges, the effectuall working whereof ought to pearce into the innermost affections of the heart, to rest in the soule, & to alter the whole man a hundred times more, than the colde exhortations of Philosophers?

5 Yet do I not require, that the maners of a Christian man sauour of nothing but the absolute Gospel: which neuertheless both were to be wished, and we must endeuour vs toward it. But I do not so seuerely require a Gospellike perfection, that I would not acknowledge him for a Christian that hath not yet atteined vnto it. For so should all men be excluded from the Church, sith there is no man found that is not by a great space distant from it, and many haue hetherto but a litle way proceded toward it, who yet should be vniustly cast away. What thē? let that be set for the marke before our eyes, to which alone all our endeuour may be directed. Let that be apointed the gole for vs to runne and trauaile vnto. For it is not lawefull for thee so to make partition with God, to take vpon thee part of these thinges that are commaunded thee in his word, and to leaue part at thine owne choise. For first of all he euery where commendeth integritie as the chiefe part of worshipping him: by which word he meaneth a pure simplicitie of mind that is without all deceitful colour & faining: against which a double heart is set as cōtrarie: as if it should be said, that the beginning of liuing vprightly is spirituall, when the inward affection of the mind is without faining dedicate to God to obserue holinesse & righteousnes. But because no man in this earthly prison of the body hath so great strength to hast with such freshnesse of runninge, as he perfectly ought to do, and the greater number are so feble, that with staggering and haltinge, yea and creping vpon the ground, they auaunce but slowly forward: let vs euery one go according to the measure of his litle power, and procede on our iourney begon. No man shall go so vntowardly, but he shall euery day get some ground, though it be but litle. Therfore let vs not cesse to trauail so, that we may continually procede somwhat in the way of the Lord. And let vs not despeire vpon the slenderne sse of our going forward, for howsoeuer the successe aunswere not our desire, yet we haue not lost our laboure when this day passeth yesterday: so that with pure simplicitie we loke vnto our marke, and long toward the ende of our course, not soothingly flattering our selues, nor tenderly bearing with our owne euils, but with continuall endeuour trauailing to this, that we may ſtill become better than our ſelues, till we atteine to goodneſſe it ſelfe: which in deede we ſeke for and followe all our life long: but we ſhall then only atteine it, when being vnclothed of the weakenes of the fleſh, we ſhalbe receiued into the full fellowſhip thereof.

The ſumme of a Chriſtian life: vvhere is entreated of the forſaking of our ſelues.

ALbeit that the lawe of the Lorde haue a moſt aptly well diſpoſed order to frame a mans life, yet it ſemed good to the heauēly ſcholemaiſter to inſtruct men yet with a more exact trade to the ſame rule that he had ſet fourth in his law. And the beginning of that trade, is this: that it is the dutie of the faithfull to yelde their bodies to God a liuing, holy and acceptable ſacrifice vnto him: and that therein ſtandeth the true worſhipping of him. Herevpon is gathered occaſion to exhorte men, that they do not applie them ſelues to the faſhion of this world, but be transformed in renewinge of their minde, that they may proue what the will of God is. Nowe this is a great thing, that we be conſecrate and dedicate to God: that we ſhould from thencefourth thinke, ſpeake, imagine, or do nothing but to his glorie. For the thing that is conſecrate, can not be applied to vnholy vſes, without great wronge done vnto him. If we be not our own, but the Lordes, it appeareth what errour is to be auoided, and whereunto all the doinges of our life are to be directed. We are not our owne: therefore let neither our owne reaſon nor our owne will beare rule in our counſelles and doinges. We are not our owne: therefore let vs not make this the ende for vs to tend vnto, to ſeke that which may be expediēt for vs according to the fleſh. We are not our owne: therefore ſo much as we may, let vs forget our ſelues and all things that are our owne. On the other ſide, we are Gods: therefore let vs liue and dye to him. We are Gods: therefore let his wiſdome and will gouerne all our doinges. We are Gods: therefore let all the partes of our life tend towarde him as their onely lawful end. Oh how much hath he profited, that hauing learned that himſelfe is not his owne, hath taken frō him ſelfe the rule & gouernment of himſelfe to geue it to God. For as this is ỹ moſt ſtrong working peſtilence to deſtroy men, that they obey thēſelues: ſo it is the onely hauen of ſafetie, neither to knowe nor will any thing by him ſelfe, but onely to follow God going before him. Let this therefore be the firſt ſteppe, that man departe from himſelfe, that he may apply all

Rom. 12.1.

Po.14. 8.

all the force of his wit to the obeying of the Lorde. Obeying I call not onely that which ſtandeth in obedience of the worde, but that whereby the minde of man, voide from his owne ſenſualitie of fleſh, bendeth it ſelfe wholly to the will of Gods ſpirit. Of this transformation (which Paule calleth renewing of the minde) where as it is the first entrie into life, all the Phyloſophers were ignoraunt. For they make onely Reaſon the gouerneſſe of man: they thinke ſhe onely ought to be heard: finally to her onely they geue and aſſigne the rule of manners. But the Chriſtian Phyloſophie biddeth her to geue place, and to yeld and be ſubiect to the holy Ghoſt: ſo that man now may not liue himſelfe, but beare Chriſt liuing and reigning in him. Ephe. 4. 23. Gala. 2. 20.

2 Herevpon followeth alſo this other point, that we ſeeke not the thinges that be our owne, but thoſe thinges that be according to the will of the Lord, and that make to the aduauncemẽt of his glory. This is alſo a profe of great profiting, that in a manner forgetting our ſelues, and altogether leauing the regarde of our ſelues, we trauail to employ our ſtudy to God and his commaundements. For when the Scripture biddeth vs to leaue priuate regard of our ſelues, it doth not onely race out of our mindes the couetouſneſſe of hauing, the gredy ſeking for power and fauour of men: but alſo rooteth out ambition and all deſire of worldly glorie, and other more ſecrete peſtilences. Truly a Chriſtian man muſt be ſo faſhioned and diſpoſed, to thinke throughout all his life, that he hath to do with God. In this ſort, as he ſhall examine all his doings by Gods will and iudgement: ſo he ſhall reuerently direct vnto him all ỹ earneſtly bent diligence of his minde. For he that hath learned to loke vpon God in all things that he hath to do, is therewithall turned a way from all vaine thoughtes. This is that forſaking of our ſelues, which Chriſt euen from their firſt beginning of inſtruction ſo earneſtly gaue in charge to his Diſciples: which when it ones hath gotten poſſeſſion in the heart leaueth no place at all, firſt neither for pride, nor diſdainfulnes, nor vain glorious boſting, then neither for couetiſe, nor filthy luſt, nor riotouſneſſe, nor deintineſſe, nor for other euils that are engẽdred of the loue of our ſelues. Contrariwiſe wherſoeuer it reigneth not, there either moſt filthy vices do range without ſhame, or if there be any ſpice of vertue, it is corrupted with peruerſe deſire of glory. For ſhew me a man, if thou canſt, that vnles he haue forſaken him ſelfe according to ỹ cõmaundement of the Lord, will of his owne free will vſe goodneſſe among men. For all they that haue not ben poſſeſſed with this feling, if they haue followed vertue, they haue done it at ỹ leaſt for praiſes ſake. And all ỹ Phyloſophers that euer moſt of all affirmed that vertue was to be desired for it selfes sake, were puffed vp with so great pride, that it appeared that they desired vertue for no other thinge, but that they might haue matter to be proude vpon. But God is so nothing at all delited, neither with those gapers for the peoples breath, nor with these swelling brastes, that he pronounceth that they haue already receiued their rewarde in the world, and maketh harlottes and Publicanes nerer to the kingdome of heauen, than them. And yet we haue not throughly declared with how many and how great stoppes man is hindred from that which is right, so long as he hath not forsaken him selfe. For it was truely said in time past, that there is a world of vices hidden in the soule of man. And thou canst finde no other remedies, but denying thy selfe, and leauing regarde of thy selfe, to bende thy minde to seeke those thinges that the Lorde requireth of thee, and to seke them therefore onely because they please him.

Tit. 2. 12. 3 In an other place the same Paule doth more plainly, although shortly, go through all the partes of a well ordred life, saying: The grace of God that bringeth saluation vnto all men, hath appeared and teacheth vs, that we should denie all vngodlinesse, and worldly lustes, and that we should liue sobre minded, righteously and Godly in this present worlde, loking for the blessed hope and glorious appearing of the mighty God, and of our saviour Iesus Christ, which gaue him selfe for vs to redeme vs from all vnrighteousnesse, and to purge vs a peculiar people vnto him selfe feruently geuen vnto good works. For after that he hath set forth the grace of God to encorage them, to make redy the way for vs to worshippe God, he taketh away two stoppes that do most hinder vs, that is to say, Vngodlinesse, whertunto we are naturally to much enclined, and Worldly desires, which extende further. And vnder the name of vngodlinesse, he not onely meaneth superstitions, but also comprehendeth all that disagreeth with the earnest feare of God. And worldly lustes are in effect as much as the affections of the flesh. Therfore he commaundeth vs in respect of both the tables of the lawe, to put of our owne wit, and to forsake all that our owne reason and will informeth vs. And all the doinges of our life he bringeth into three partes, sobrietie, righteousnesse, and godlinesse: of the which sobrietie without doubt signifieth as well chastitie and temperaunce, as a pure and measurably sparing vse of temporall things, and a pacient sufferance of pouertie. Righteousnesse conteineth all the duties of equitie, to geue euery man his owne. The thirde is Godlinesse, that seuereth vs from the defilinges of the world, & with true holinesse ioineth vs to God These things, when they be knit together with an vnseparable knot, make a full

godlines. But for as much as nothing is more hard, than forsaking the reason of the flesh, yea subdoinge and renouncing her desires, to geue our selues to God and our brethren, and to studie for an angelicall life in the filthy state of this earth: therefore Paule, to loose our minde from all snares, calleth vs back to the hope of blessed immortalitie, admonishing vs not to striue in vaine: because as Christ hath once appeared the redemer, so at his last comming, he shall shew the fruit of the saluation that he hath purchased. And thus he driueth away the enticementes that blinde vs, and make vs not to aspire as we ought to the heauenly glorie: yea and he teacheth that we shall trauell as men being from home in this worlde, that the heauenly inheritaunce be not lost or fall away from vs.

Nowe in these wordes we perceiue, that the forsaking of our Rom. 12 10. Phil. 2. 3. selues hath partly respect to men, and partly, yea chiefly to God. For vnto as the scripture biddeth vs so to behaue our selues with men, that we preferre them before vs in honour, that we faithfully employ our selues wholly to procure their commodities: therefore it greeueth such commaundements as our minde is not able to receiue, but first being made voide of naturall sense. For (with such blindenesse we runne all into loue of our selues) euery man thinketh him selfe to haue a iust cause to aduaunce him selfe, and to despise all other in comparison of him selfe. If God haue geuen vs any good gift, by and by leaning our selues bold therof we lift vp our courage, & not only swel, but in a maner burst with pride. The vices wherewith we abound, we do both diligently hide from other, and to our selues we flatteringly fame them light and slender, and sometime embrace them for vertues. And if the same good giftes, which we praise in our selues, or better do appeare in other, least we shoulde be compelled to geue place to them, we do with our enuiousnesse deface them and finde fault with them. If there be any faultes in them, we are not contented severely and sharpely to marke it, but we also odiously amplifie it. Hereupon groweth that insolence, that euery one of vs, as though he were priuileged from the common estate, would be hier than the rest, and carelessly and proudly set light by euery man, or despise them as inferiours. The poore yeld to the rich, base people to gentlemen, seruantes to their maisters, vnlearned to the learned: but there is no man that doth not nourishe within himselfe some opinion of excellencie. So euery man in flattering himselfe, beareth a certaine kingdome in his breast. For presumptuously taking vpon them somwhat whereby to please themselues, they iudge vpon the wittes and maners of other menne. But if they come to contention, there bur-ſteth out their poiſon. For many do make a ſhewe of great mekenes, ſo longe as they finde all things gentle and louely: but howe many a one is there that kepeth that continuall courſe of modeſtie, when he is pricked and ſtirred to anger? And there is no remedie hereof, but that the moſt hurtfull peſtilence of loue, of ſoueraingtie and ſelfe loue be rooted out of the bottome of their heartes, as it is rooted out by the doctrine of the Scripture. For there we are ſo taught, that we muſt remember that the good giftes that God hath geuen vs, are not our owne good things, but the free giftes of God, whereof if any be proude, they bewraye their owne vnthankefulneſſe. Who maketh

1. Cor. 4. 7. thee to excell? Paule ſaith, if thou haſt receiued all things, why doſt thou boſt as if they were not geuen thee? Then, that we muſt with continuall reknowledging of our faultes, call our ſelues back to humilitie. So ſhall there remaine in vs nothing to be proude vpon, but there ſhalbe much matter to abace our ſelues. Againe, we are commaunded, whatſoeuer giftes of God we ſee in other men, ſo to reuerence and eſteme thoſe gifts, that we alſo honour thoſe menne in whom they be. For it were a great lewdnes for vs, to take from them that honour, the God hath vouchesaued to geue them. As for their faults, we are taught to winke at them, not to cheriſh them with flattering, but that we ſhould not by reaſon of thoſe faultes triumphe againſt them, to whome we ought to beare good will and honour. So ſhall it come to paſſe, that with what man ſo euer we haue to do, we ſhall behaue our ſelues not onely temperatly and modeſtly, but alſo gently and frendly. As a man ſhall neuer come any other way to true mekeneſſe, but if he haue a heart endued with abacing of himſelfe, and reuerencing of other.

5 Nowe howe hard is it, for thee to do thy dutie in ſeking the profit of thy neighbour? Thou ſhalt herin labour in vaine, vnleſſe thou depart from regard of thy ſelfe, and in a manner put of thy ſelfe. For howe canſt thou performe theſe things that Paule teacheth to be the workes of charitie, vnleſſe thou forſake thy ſelfe, to geue thy
1. Cor. 13. 4. ſelfe wholy to other? Charitie (ſaith he) is patient and gentle, not proude, not diſdainefull, enuieth not, ſwelleth not, ſeeketh not her owne, is not angry, &c. If this one thing be required, that we ſeke not the things that are our owne, we ſhall do no ſmall violence to nature, which ſo bendeth vs to the onely loue of our ſelues, that it doth not eaſily ſuffer vs negligētly to paſſe ouer our ſelues & our owne things, to watch for other mens commodities, yea to depart with our owne right to reſigne it to an other. But the Scripture, to leade vs thether as it were by the hand, warneth vs that what ſo euer gracious giftes

we

we obteine of the Lorde, they are committed vnto vs vpon this condition, that they should be bestowed to the common benefit of the Church: and that therefore the true vse of all Gods graces is a liberall and bountifull communicating of them to other. There can be no certaine rule, nor more forceable exhortatiō could be deuised for the kepinge of the same, than when we be taught that all the good giftes that we haue, are things of God deliuered, committed to our trust vpon this condition, that they shoulde be disposed to the benefit of our neighbours. But the Scripture goeth yet further, when it compareth them to the powers wherewith the members of mans body are endued. No meber hath his power for himself, nor applieth it to his priuate vse: but poureth it abrode into the other membres of the same body, and taketh no profit therof, but such as procedeth from the common commoditie of the whole body. So whatsoeuer a godly man is able to do, he ought to be able to do it for his brethren, prouidinge none otherwise priuately for himselfe, but so that his minde be bent to the common edification of the Church. Let this therfore be our order for kindnesse and doing good: that whatsoeuer God hath bestowed vpon vs, whereby we may helpe our neighbour, we are the Bailies thereof, and bound to render accompt of the disposing of it. And that the onely right disposing is that which is tried by the rule of loue. So shall it come to passe, that we shall alway not only ioine the trauaill for other mens commoditie with the care of our owne profit, but also set it before the care of our owne. And that we should not happen to be ignorant that this is the true lawe of disposing all the giftes that we receiue of God, he hath in the olde time set the same lawe euen in the smalest giftes of his liberalitie. For he cō- Exo. 22. maunded the first frutes of corne to be offred vnto him, by which 29 and the people might testifie that it was vnlawfull for them to take any 23. 19. frute of the goods that were not first consecrate to him. If the giftes of God be so onely then sanctified vnto vs, when we haue with our owne hande dedicate them to the authour thereof, it is euident that it is an enorme abuse thereof that doth not sauour of such dedicatiō. But it shalbe vaine for thee to go about to enriche the Lorde with communicating to him of thy things. Therefore sith thy liberalitie can not extende vnto him, as the Prophet saith, thou must vse it Psa. 16. toward his saintes that are in earth. Therefore almes are compared 3. to holy oblations, that they may nowe be correspondent to these of Heb. 13. the lawe. 16.

6 But, ỹ we should not be wery w̄ doing good (which otherwise must needes come quickly to passe) that other thing must be adioined

1 Cor. 13.4. which the Apoſtle ſpeaketh of, that charitie is patient and not moued to anger. The Lorde commaundeth to do good to all vniuerſally, of whom a great part are moſt vnworthy, if they be conſidered by their owne deſeruing. But here ỹ Scripture helpeth with a very good meane, when it teacheth that we muſt not haue reſpect what men deſerue of themſelues, but that the image of God is to be conſidered in all men, to which we owe all honour and loue. But the ſame is moſt diligently to be marked in them of the houſeholde of faith, in ſo much as it is in them renewed and reſtored by the Spirite of Chriſt. Therefore whatſoeuer man thou light vpon, that needeth thy helpe, thou haſt no cauſe to withdraw thy ſelfe from doing him good. If thou ſay that he is a ſtranger: but the Lorde hath geuen him a marke, that ought to be familiar vnto thee, by the reaſō that he forbiddeth thee to deſpiſe thine owne fleſh. If thou ſay that he is baſe and nought worth: but the Lord ſheweth him to be ſuch a one, to whom he hath vouchſaued to geue the beautie of his image. If thou ſay that thou oweſt him nothing for any thing that he hath done for thee: but God hath ſet him as it were in his place, in reſpect of whom, thou knoweſt ſo many and ſo great benefites wherewith he hath bound thee vnto him. If thou ſay that he is vnworthy that thou ſhouldeſt labour any thing at all for his ſake: but the image of God whereby he is commended to thee, is worthy that thou ſhouldeſt geue thy ſelf & al that thou haſt vnto it. But if he haue not only deſerued no good at thy hande, but alſo prouoked thee with wrongs and euell doings: euen this is no iuſte cauſe why thou ſhouldeſt ceaſe both to loue him and to do for him the dutifull workes of loue. Thou wilt ſay, he hath far otherwiſe deſerued of me. But what hath the Lorde deſerued? Which when he commaundeth thee to forgeue all wherein he hath offended thee, truely he willeth the ſame to be imputed to himſelfe. Truely, this is that only way to come to that which is vtterly againſt the nature of man, much more is it hard for man. I meane, to loue them that hate vs, to recompenſe euell with doinge good, to render bleſſinges for reproches: if we remember that we muſt not conſider the malice of men, but loke vpon the image of God in them, which defacing and blotting out their faultes, doeth with the beautie and dignitie of it ſelfe allure vs to embrace it.

Mat. 6. 24 and 18. 35.

Matt. 5. 44.

7 Therefore this Mortification ſhall then onely take place in vs, when we performe the dueties of charitie. But it is not he that performeth them, that onely doeth all the dutifull workes of charitie, although he leaue none of them vndone, but he that doth them of a ſincere affection of loue. For it may happen, that a man may fully performe lome to all menne all that he oweth, so much as concerneth outward duties: and yet he may be far from the true performing of it. For you may see some that would seeme very liberall, which yet do geue nothing but either with pride of loke, or with churlishnesse of wordes they vpbraide it. And we be come to such wretchednesse in this vnhappy worlde, that almost no almes are geuen of any menne, or at least of the most parte of men, without reproching. Which perverseness should not haue bene tolerable among the very heathen. For of Christians is somwhat more required than to shew a cherefulnesse in countenance, and make their doinges louely with gentlenesse of wordes. First they must take vpon them the personage of him whom they see to neede their helpe, and then so pitie their case, as if themselues did fele and suffer it: so that they may bee caried with feling of mercie and gentlenesse euen as they would be to helpe themselues. He that shall come so minded to helpe his brethren, will not onely not defile his doinges with any arrogance or vpbraydinge, but also neither will despise his brother to whom he doth good as one needing his helpe, nor treade him vnder foote as one bounde vnto him: no more than we vse to reproch a sicke member, for easing whereof the whole body laboreth, or to thinke it specially bounde to the other members, bycause it hath drawen more helpe vnto it than it hath recompensed. For it is thought that the common enterparting of duties betwene members of one body, hath no free kinde of gifte, but rather that it is a payement of that which being due by the laive of nature it were monstruous to denie. And by this reason it shall followe, that he may not thinke himselfe discharged that hath performed one kinde of duetie, as it is commonly vsed, that when a riche manne hath geuen any thinge of his owne, he leaueth other charges to other men, as not belonging to him. But rather euery manne shall thinke thus with himselfe, that he is altogether detter to his neighbours, & that he must determine none other ende of vsing his liberalitie, but when abilitie faileth, which how large so euer it be, must be measured by the rule of charitie.

8 Now let vs more fully declare the principall parte of forsaking our selues, which we said to haue respect to God. We haue said much of it already, which it were superfluous to rehearse againe: it shalbe sufficient to entreate of it so far as it frameth vs to quietnesse of minde and sufferance. First therefore in seking the commoditie or quietnesse of this present life, the Scripture calleth vs hereunto, that resigning vs and our thinges to the Lords will, we should yeld vnto him the affections of our heart to be tamed and subdued. To couet wealth and honors, to compaſſe authoritie, to heape vp riches, to gather together all ſuch follies as ſerue for royaltie and pompe, our luſt is outragious, and our gredineſſe infinite. On the other ſide of pouerty, ignobilitie, and baſe eſtate, we haue a maruellous feare and maruellous hatred, that moue vs to trauaile by all meanes to eſchue them. Hereby a man may ſee, how vnquiet a minde they haue, how many ſhiftes they attempt, with what ſtudies they wery their life, that frame their life after their owne deuiſe: to atteine thoſe thinges that their affection of ambition or couetouſneſſe requireth, and on the other ſide to eſcape pouertie and baſeneſſe. Therefore the godly muſt kepe this way, that they be not entangled with ſuch ſnares. Firſt let them not either deſire, or hope for, or thinke vpon any other meane of proſpering, than by the bleſſing of the Lorde: and therefore let them ſafely and boldely reſt themſelues vpon it. For how ſo euer the fleſh thinke it ſelfe ſufficient of her ſelfe, when ſhe either trauaileth by her owne diligence, or endeuoreth with her owne ſtudie, or is holpen by the fauour of men, to the atteining of honour and wealth: yet it is certaine, that all theſe thinges are nothing, and that we ſhall nothing preuaile with wit or trauaile, but in ſo much as the Lorde ſhall proſper both. But on the other ſide his onely bleſſing findeth a way through all ſtoppes, to make all things procede with vs to a ioyfull and lucky ende. Then how ſoeuer we may moſt of all obteine any glorie or wealth without it (as we daily ſee the wicked to get heapes of great honours and richeſſe) yet for as much as they vpon whom reſteth the curſe, do fele no parcell of felicitie, we can obteine nothing without his bleſſing that ſhall not turne vs to euell. And it is not at all to be coueted, that maketh men more miſerable.

9 Therefore if we beleue that all the meane of proſperous ſucceſſe and ſuch as is to be wiſhed, conſiſteth in the onely bleſſing of God, which being abſent, all kindes of miſerie and calamitie muſt happen vnto vs: this remaineth alſo, that we do not gredyly endeuour to wealth and honours ſtanding vpon our owne fineſſe of wit or diligence, nor leaning to the fauour of men, nor truſting vpon a vaine imagination of fortune, but that we alway looke vnto the Lorde, to be led by his guiding to what ſo euer lot he hath prouided. So firſt it ſhall come to paſſe, that we ſhall not violently ruſh to the catching of richeſſe and inuading of honours, by wronge, by guile and euell crafty meanes, or extortion with doing iniury to our neighbours, but ſhall onely followe thoſe fortunes that may not leade vs from innocence. For who may hope for the helpe of Gods bleſſing among fraudes, extortions, and other ſuttle meanes of wickednesse?

For

For as Gods blessing followeth no man but him that thinketh purely, and doth rightly, so it calleth back all them of whom it is desired, from crooked thoughtes, and corrupt doinges. Then we shalbe bridled that we burne not with inmeasurable desire of growing rich, nor ambitiously gape for honours. For with what face may a man trust to be holpen of God, to obteine those thinges that he desireth against his worde? For God forbidde that God shoulde geue the helpe of his blessing to that which he curseth with his owne mouth. Last of all, if it succede not according to our wish and hope, yet we shalbe restrained from impatience, and from cursing our estate what soeuer it be: bycause we know that that is to murmure against God, in whose will richesse and pouertie, baseneſse and honours are disposed. Briefely, he that resteth himselfe in such sorte as is a foresaid vpon the blessing of God, neither will by euell sutteltyes hunt for those things that menne are wont outragiously to couet, by which crafty meanes he thinketh that he shall nothing preuaile: nor if any thing happen prosperously will impute it to himself, and to his owne diligence endeuour or to fortune, but will assigne it to God the authour. But if while other mens estates do florish, he go but slenderly forward, yea or slide backeward, yet he will beare his ill fortune with greater quietneſse and moderatiō of minde, than a prophane manne will beare a meanely good successe, which is not altogether so good as he desired: bycause he hath a comfort wherein he may more quietly rest, than vpon the hiest toppe of wealth and authoritie: bycause he accompteth that his thinges are ordered by God as is auailable for his saluation. So we see that Dauid was minded, and yeldeth himselfe to be ruled by God, he declareth himselfe to be like to a weined childe, and that he walketh not in high things or maruellous aboue himselfe. Psa. 131.

10 And the godly mindes ought to haue that quietneſse and sufferance not onely consisting in this behalf: but also it must extend to all chaunces whereunto our presem life is subiect. Therefore no man hath rightly forsaken himselfe, but he hath so resigned himselfe vp wholly to the Lorde, that he suffreth all the partes of his life to be gouerned by his will. He that is so framed in minde, what so euer happen, will neither thinke himselfe miserable, nor will with enuiousnes against God complaine of his fortune. Howe necessary this affection is, shall herby appeare, if you consider to howe many chaunces we be subiect. Diuerse kindes of diseases do trouble vs, sometime the pestilence cruelly reigneth, sometime we are sharply vexed with calamities of warre, sometime frost or haile deuouring the hope of the yere bringeth barenneſſe, that driueth vs to dearth: ſomtime our wife, parentes, children or kinsfolkes are taken away by death, our houſe is conſumed with fier: theſe be the thinges at chauncing whereof men curſe their life, deteſt the day of their birth, haue heauen and light in execration, murmure againſt God, and (as they be eloquent in blaſphemies) accuſe him of vniuſtice and crueltie. But a faithfull manne muſt euen in theſe chaunces beholde the mercyfull kindeneſſe and fatherly tenderneſſe of God. Therefore whether he ſee his houſe deſtroyed, his kinſefolke ſlaine, yet he will not therefore ceſſe to praiſe God, but rather will turne himſelfe to this thought: Yet the Grace of the Lorde that dwelleth in my houſe, will not leaue it deſolate. Or if when his corne is blaſted or bitten, or conſumed with froſtes, or beaten downe with haile, he ſee famine at hand, yet he will not deſpeir, nor ſpeake hatefully of God, but will remaine in this con-Pſa. 79. 13. fidence, We are yet in the Lordes protection, and ſhepe brought vp in his paſtures: he therefore will finde vs foode euen in extremeſt barreneſſe. Or if he bee troubled with ſickneſſe, euen then he will not be diſcouraged with bitterneſſe of ſorrow, to burſt out into impatience and quarell thus with God: but conſidering the righteouſneſſe and leniitie in Gods correction, he will call himſelfe back to patience. Finally, what ſo euer ſhall happen, becauſe he knoweth it ordeined by the hand of God, he will take it with a well pleaſed and thankefull minde, leaſt he ſhould ſtubbornly reſiſt his authoritie, into whoſe power he hath yelded himſelfe and all his. Therefore let that fooliſh and moſt miſerable comfort of the Heathen be far from a Chriſtian mans heart, which to ſtrengthen their mindes againſt aduerſities, did impute the ſame to fortune, with whom they compted it fooliſh to be angry, becauſe ſhe was blinde and vnaduiſed, that blindely wounded both the deſeruing and vndeſeruing For contrariwiſe this is the rule of godlineſſe, that the onely hand of God is the iudge and gouerner of both fortunes, and that it runneth not forward with vnaduiſed, ſodeine rage, but with moſt orderly iuſtice dealeth among vs both good thinges and euell.

The viij. Chapter.

Of the bearinge of the croſſe, which is a part of the forſaking of our ſelues.

Mat. 16. 24. BVt a Godly minde muſt yet climbe vp hier, euen to that whereunto Chriſt calleth his diſciples, that euery one take vp his croſſe. For all whom the Lorde hath choſen and vouchſaued to receiue into his companie, muſt prepare themſelues to a hard, hard, trauailesome and vnquiete life, and full of many and diuerse kindes of incommodities. So it is the will of the heauenly father, to exercise them in such sorte, that he may haue a true proofe of them that be his. Beginning at Christ, his first begotten sonne, he proceedeth with this order toward all his children. For whereas Christ was the best beloued sonne aboue the rest, & in whom the fathers minde was fully pleased, yet we see howe he was not tenderly and deintily handeled: so that it may be truely sayd, that he was not only exercised with a perpetuall crosse so long as he dwelled in earth, but that al his life was nothing else but a kinde of continuall crosse. The Apostle sheweth the cause thereof to be, that it behoued that he shoulde learne obedience by those things that he suffred. Why then should we priuilege our selues from that estate, whereunto it behoued Christ our head to be subiect, specially sith he became subiect thereunto for our cause, to shew vs an example of patiẽce in himselfe? Therfore the Apostle saith that this is the appointed end of al ỹ childrẽ of God, to be fashioned like vnto him. Whereupon also in hard & sharp chances, which are reckened aduersities and euils, ariseth a great comfort to vs, that we communicate with the suffrings of Christ: that as he entred out of a maze of all troubles into the heauenly glory, so we may be diuerse tribulations be brought into the same glory. For so saith Paul himselfe, that when we learne the communicatinge of his affections, we do also conceiue the power of his resurrection: & whẽ we are fashioned like vnto his death, we are so prepared to the felowship of his glorious risinge againe. Howe much may this auaile to asswage all the painefulnesse of the crosse, that the more we are afflicted with aduersities, so much the more sure is our felowshippe with Christ confirmed? by communicating whereof, our suffrings are not only made blessed vnto vs, but also do much help vs to the furtheráce of our saluation.

Matt. 3. 17. & 17. 5.

Rom. 8. 2.

Act. 14. 22.

Philip. 3. 10.

Beside that, our Lorde had no neede to take vpon him to beare the crosse, but to testifie & proue his obedience to his father: but we for diuerse causes, haue neede to lead our life vnder a cõtinual crosse. First (as we be naturally bent to attribute all thinges to our flesh) vnlesse our weakenes be shewed vs as it were before our eyes, we do easily esteeme our owne strength aboue due measure, & dout not that whatsoeuer happen, it will continue vnbroken and vnouercome against all harde assaultes. Whereby we are caried into a foolishe and vaine confidence of flesh, and then trusting thereupon, we stubbornly waxe proud against God himselfe, as though our own powers without his grace did suffice vs. This arrogancy he can no way better beate downe, than when he proueth vnto vs by experience, not only how feeble, but also how fraile we be. Therfore he afflicteth vs either with shame, or pouerty, or losse of children, or sickneſſe, or other calamities, which we beinge vnable to beare in respect of our selues, do byandby sinke downe vnder them. Beinge so humbled we learne to call vpon his strength, which only maketh vs to stande vpright vnder the heauy burden of afflictions. Yea the most holy, howe wel soeuer they know that they stand by the grace of God & not by their owne force, yet are too much assured of their owne strength & constancy, vnles by the triall of the crosse, he bring them into a more inward knowledge of themselues. The slouthfulneſſe crept into Dauid: I sayd in my rest, I shall neuer be moued, Lorde, thou hadst stablished in thy good pleasure a strength to my hil, thou hiddest away thy face, I was striken. For he confesseth that with sluggishneſſe in prosperity his senses were dulled, that not regardinge the grace of God, vpon which he should haue hanged, he leaned vnto himselfe, to promise himselfe perpetuall continuance. If this chaunced to great a Prophet: which of vs ought not to be fearefull, that we may be heedefull? Therefore whereas in prosperity they flatter themselues with opinion of a greater constancy and patience, when they are once humbled with aduersity, they learne that their former opinion was but hypocrisie. The faithfull (I say) beinge admonished by such examples of their diseases, do thereby profit to humility, that beinge vnclothed of the wrongfull confidence of the flesh, they may resorte to ỹ grace of God. And where they are once come to his grace, they feele the presence of Gods strength, wherin is aboundantly sufficient succour for them.

Psal. 30 8.

3 And this is it that Paul teacheth, that by troubles is engendred patience, by patience proofe. For wheras God hath promised ỹ faithful that he will be present with thē in troubles, they feele the same to be true, when they stand patiently, being vpholdē by his hand, which by their owne strength they were not able to do. Patience therefore bringeth a proufe by experience to ỹ holy ones, that God when nede requireth, wil in dede performe the help that he hath promised. And thereby also their hope is confirmed: forasmuch as it were too much vnthankefulneſſe not to looke for in time to come, the same trueth of God that they had already by experience proued to be constant and sure. We see nowe howe many good thinges do come vnto vs in one knot by the crosse. For, ouerthrowing the opinion that we falsly presume of our owne strength, & discloſinge our hypocrisie that deceiueth vs, it shaketh away the hurtfull confidence of the flesh, and teacheth

vs being so humbled, to rest vpō God only, by which it commeth to passe, that we neither be oppressed nor fall downe. And after victory followeth hope, insomuch as the Lord in performing that which he hath promised, stablisheth the credit of his trueth for time to come. Truely, although there were no moe reasons but these, it appeareth how much the exercise of ỹ crosse is necessary for vs. For it is a matter of no small importāce, to haue the blinde loue of thy selfe wiped away, that thou maist well know thine owne weakenes. To fele thine owne weakenesse, that thou maiest learne to distrust thy selfe: to distrust thy selfe, that thou maist remoue thy confidence from thy selfe vnto God: to rest with confidence of heart vpon God, that being vpholden by his help, thou maist cōtinue vnquercomme to the last end: to stande fast by his grace, that thou maist vnderstand that he is true in his promises: to know by proofe the truth of his promises, that thy hope may be strengthened therby.

4 The Lord hath also an other ende of afflictinge his, to trie their patience, and instruct vs to obedience. Not that they can vse any obedience toward him, other than the same that he giueth them: but so it pleaseth him by open examples to make approued by witnesses, & to set forth the graces that he hath bestowed vpō his holy ones, that they should not lie idly hidde within them. And therfore in bringing forth into open shew the strength of suffrance and constancy, wherewith he hath furnished his seruauntes, it is sayd that he trieth their pacience. And from hense came these sayinges: that God tempted Abraham, & had proofe of his godlinesse, by this that he refused not to offer vp in sacrifice his owne & only sonne. Therfore Peter teacheth, that our faith is so proued in troubles, as golde is tried in a fornace: And who can say that it is not expedient, that the most noble gift of pacience, which a faithfull man hath receiued of his God, should be brought foorth into vse, that it may be made certainely knowen and manifest? For otherwise men will not esteeme it as it is worthy. Now if God himselfe doth rightfully whē he ministreth matter to stirre vp the vertues that he hath giuen to his faithfull, that they shoulde not lie hidden, yea lie vnprofitable and perish: then is there good reason of the afflictions of the holy ones, without which their pacience should be nothing. I say also that by the crosse they are instructed to obedience, because they are so taught to liue not after their owne wish, but after the will of God. Truely if all thinges shoulde flowe vnto them after their owne minde, they would not know what it were to follow God. And Seneca rehearseth that this was an olde Prouerbe, when they exhorted any man to suffer aduersities, Followe God. By which they declared, that then only men truely entred vnder the yoke of God, when he yelded his hand and backe to Gods correction. Now if it be moſt righteous, that we ſhould ſhew our ſelues in all thinges obedient to the heauēly father, then we ought not to refuſe, that he ſhould by all meanes accuſtome vs to yeld obedience vnto him.

De vita beata cap. 15.

5 But yet we perceiue not how neceſſary this obedience is for vs, vnleſſe we do alſo conſider, howe wanton our fleſh is to ſhake of the yoke of God, ſo ſoone as it hath bin but a litle while deintily and tenderly handeled. The ſame happeneth vnto it, that chaunceth to ſtubborne horſes, which if they be a fewe dayes pampred idlely, they can not afterward for fearceneſſe be tamed, neither do know their rider, to whoſe gouernment they ſomewhat before obeied. And this is continual in vs that God cōplaineth to haue bin in the people of Iſrael, that beinge well fed and couered with fatneſſe, we kicke againſt him that fed and nouriſhed vs. The liberality of God ſhould in dede haue allured vs to conſider and loue his goodneſſe, but foraſmuch as our euill nature is ſuch, that we are alway corrupted with his tender vſage, it is more than neceſſary for vs, to be reſtrayned by ſome diſcipline, that we runne not outragiouſly into ſuch a ſtubborne wantonneſſe. So that we ſhould not grow fierce with vnmeaſurable abundance of richeſſe, that we ſhould not waxe proud being lifted vp with honors, that we ſhould not become inſolent, being puffed vp with other good gifts, either of the ſoule, body or fortune, the lord himſelf, as he foreſeeth it to be expedient, preuenteth it, and with the remedy of the croſſe ſubdueth & bridleth the fearceneſſe of our fleſh, & that diuerſe wayes, ſo much as is healthfull for euery man. For all are not a like ſicke of all one diſeaſes, or do a like neeede of hard healing. And thereupon is to be ſeene howe ſome are exerciſed with one kinde of croſſe, and ſome with an other. But whereas the heauenly Phiſician handeleth ſome more gently, & purgeth ſome with ſharper remedies, when he meaneth to prouide for the health of all: Yet he leaueth none free or vntouched, becauſe he knoweth all without exception to be diſeaſed.

Deu. 33 15.

6 Moreouer, the moſt mercifull father needeth not only to preuēt our weakeneſſe, but many times to correct our paſſed offences. Therefore ſo oft as we be afflicted, the remembrance of our forepaſſed life ought byandby to entre into our minde: ſo without dout we ſhall finde that we haue done ſomewhat worthy of chaſtiſement. Yet we ought not chiefely to grounde our exhortation to patience vpon the acknowledging of ſinne. For the Scripture miniſtreth vs a farre better conſideration, when it ſayth, that the Lord correcteth vs with aduerſities,

1. Cor. 11. 8.

mistiet, that we should not be damned with this world. Therfore we ought euen in the very sharpenes of tribulatiõs to acknowledge the kindenes & goodnes of our father toward vs, forasmuch as euen then he ceaseth not to further our saluation. For he doth afflict, not to destroy or kill vs, but rather to deliuer vs from the damnation of the world. That thought shall leade vs to that, which the Scripture teacheth in an other place: My sonne, refuse not ỹ Lords correctiõ, nor be weary when thou shalt be rebuked of him. For whom the Lord loueth, he correcteth, and embraceth him as a father doth his childe. Prou. 3. 11.

When we know his rod to be the rod of a father, is it not our duety rather to shewe our selues obedient children and willinge to learne, than with obstinacy to do like desperate men, that are hardned with euill doinges? The Lord leseth vs, vnlesse he call vs backe by correction when we are fallen away from him: so that the author of the Epistle to the Hebrues rightly sayth that we are bastards, and not children if we be out of correction. Therfore we are most froward, if we can not suffer him when he declareth his good will and the care that he hath for our saluation. This the Scripture teacheth to be the difference betwene the vnbeleuers and the faithfull, that the vnbeleuers as the bondslaues of a rooted and hardned wickednes, are made the worse & more obstinate with whipping: the faithful, like children hauing an honest freedome of nature, do thereby profit to repentance. Now must thou choose of whether number thou wilt be. But because I haue spoken of this matter in an other place, I am content to touch it briefely, and so will make an end. Heb. 12. 8.

7 Moreouer it is a singular comfort, whē we suffer persecution for righteousnes. For then we ought to thinke, how great an honor God vouchesaueth to graunt vs, that he so garnisheth vs with the peculiar marke of his souldiours. I meane that they suffer persecution for righteousnes, not only that suffer for defense of the Gospell, but also that are troubled for any defense of righteousnes. Whether therfore in maintaininge the trueth of God against the lies of Sathan, or in taking in hande the defense of good men and innocentes against the wrongs of the wicked, we be driuen to runne into the displeasure & hatred of the worlde, whereby our life or goods, or estimation may come in daunger: let it not be grieuous or lothsome vnto vs to employ our selues for God, or let vs not thinke our selues miserable in those things in which he hath with his owne mouth pronounced vs blessed. Pouerty in dede, if it be considered in it selfe, is miserable: Matt. 5. 10. likewise banishment, contemptious estate, prisonment, shame. Finally, death is the vttermost of all calamities. But when the fauour of our God breatheth vpon vs, there is none of all these thinges, but it turneth to our felicity. Therefore let vs rather be content with the testimony of Christ, than with the false estimation of the flesh. So shall it come to passe, that we shall reioise as the Apostles did, whē God shal accompt vs worthy to suffer reproch for his name. For why? If we being innocent, & knowinge our selues cleare in our conscience, are by the naughty dealinge of wicked men spoiled of our goods: we are in dede brought to pouerty therby among mē, but so richesse do truely grow vnto vs in heauen before God. If we be thrust out of our houses, we are the more inwardly receiued into the houshold of God. If we be vexed & despised, we take so much the deper rootes in Christ. If we be noted with reproches & shame, we are insomuch the more honorable place in the kingdom of God. If we be slaine, so is the entry made open for vs vnto blessed life. Let vs be ashamed to esteeme lesse these things, vpon which the Lord hath set so greate a price, thē shadowish and fickle enticing pleasures of present life.

8 Sith therefore the Scripture doth with these & like admonitiōs giue sufficient comfort for the shames or calamities, that we suffer for defense of righteousnes, we are too much vnthankefull if we do not gladly and cherefully receiue them at the Loods hande: specially sith this is the kinde of crosse, most properly belonginge to the faithfull, whereby Christ will be glorified in vs. As also Peter teacheth. But it is more grieuous to gentle natures to suffer shame than a hundred deathes: therefore Paul expresly admonisheth that we shall not only suffer persecutions, but also reproches, because we trust in the liuinge God. As in an other place he teacheth vs after his example to walke through sclaunder and good reporte. Yet there is not required of vs such a cherefulnes as may take away all feeling of bitternes and sorrow, or else the patience of the holy ones in the crosse were no pacięce, vnles they should be both tormēted with sorrow & vexed with griefe. If there were no hardines in powerty, no paine in sickenes, no griefe in shame, no horrour in death, what valiantnes or temperance were it to beare thē indifferently? But when euery one of these doth with the naturall bitternes therof bite the hearts of vs all, herin doth the valiantnes of a faithful man shew it selfe, if being assayed with the feeling of such bitternes, how grieuously soeuer he be troubled with it, yet with valantly resisting he ouercommeth it, his patience vttereth it selfe herein, if being sharply prouoked, he is yet so bridled with the feare of God, that he bursteth not out into any distemper. His cherefulnesse appeareth herin, if being wounded with sadnes and sorrow, he resteth vpon the spiritual comfort of God.

1.Pe.4.12. 2.Tim 4.10. 2.Cor.6.8.

9 This conflict, which the faithfull do sustaine against the natural feeling of sorrow, while they study for patience & temperance, Paul hath very well described in these words. We are put to distresse in all things, but we are not made sorrowfull: we labour, but we are not left destitute: we suffer persecution, but we are not forsaken in it: we are throwen downe, but we perish not. You see how to beare the crosse patiently, is not to be altogether astonished and without all feeling of sorrowe. As the Stoikes in olde time did foolishly describe a valiant harted man, to be such a one as putting of al nature of man, was a like moued in prosperity and in aduersity, in sorrowfull and ioyfull state, yea such a one as like a stone was moued with nothinge. And what haue they profited with this hie wisdom? Forsooth they haue painted out such an image of wisdom as neuer was found, & neuer can hereafter be amonge men: But rather while they coueted to haue to exact and precise a patience, they haue taken away all the vse of patience out of mans life. And at this day also amõg Christians there are new Stoikes, that recken it a fault not only to grone and wepe, but also to be sad and carefull. But these strange conclusions do commonly procede from idle men, which busying themselues rather in speculation than doing, can do nothing but brede vs such new founde doctrines. But we haue nothinge to do with that stony Philosophie, which our maister and Lord hath condemned not only by his word but also by his example. For he mourned and wept both at his owne and other mens aduersities. The worlde (sayth he) shall reioyse, but you shal mourne and wepe. And because no man should finde fault therwith, by his open proclamation, he hath pronounced them blessed that mourne. And no maruell. For if all weping be blamed, what shall we iudge of ỹ Lord himselfe, out of whose body dropped bloudy teares? If euery feare be noted of infidelity, what shall we iudge of that quaking feare, wherwith we read that he was not sclenderly striken. If all sadnes be misliked, how shall we like this, that he confesseth his soule to be sad euen to the death? 2. Cor. 4 8. Ioh. 17. 20. Mat. 5. 4. Luc. 22. 44.

10 This I thought good to speake to this end, to call godly mindes from despeire: that they should not therefore altogether forsake the study of patience, because they can not put of the natural affection of sorrow: which must needes happen to them, that make of patience a senseless dulnes, and of a valiant and constant man, a stocke. For the Scripeure giueth to the holy ones the praise of patience, when they are so troubled with hardnes of aduersities, that yet they be not ouercome nor throwen downe with it: when they be so pricked with bitternesse, that they be also delited with spirituall ioy: when they bee distressed with griefe, that yet they receiue courage againe being cheared with the comfort of God. Yet in the meane time that repugnancy abideth still in their heartes, that naturall sense eschueth and dredeth those thinges that it knoweth to be against it: but the affection of godlines trauaileth euen through all those difficulties to the obeying of Gods wil. This repugnancy the Lord expressed when he sayd thus to Peter: When thou wast yong thou didst gird thy selfe & didst walke whether thou wouldest: But when thou art old, an other shall girde thee and leade thee whether thou shalt not be willinge. Neither is it likely that Peter, when the time came that he must glorifie God by his death, was drawen vnwillingly and resistinge vnto it. Else his martyrdome should haue but small praise. But howsoeuer he did with great cherefulnesse of heart obey the ordinance of God, yet because he had not put of the nature of mā, he was doubly stirred with two sortes of wils. For when he did by himselfe consider the bloudy death that he shoulde suffer, beinge stricken with horrour thereof, he would gladly haue escaped it. On the other side, when it came in his minde, that he was called vnto it by the commaundement of God, then conqueringe and treadinge downe feare, he gladly, yea and cherefully tooke it vpon him. This therefore we must endeuour if we will be the Disciples of Christ, that our mindes be inwardly filled with so great a reuerence & obedience to God, as may tame and subdue to his ordinaunce all contrary affections. So shall it come to passe, that with whatsoeuer kinde of crosse we be vexed, euē in the greatest anguishes of minde, we shall constantly kepe patience. For aduersities shall haue their sharpnes, wherwith we shalbe bitten: so when we are afflicted with sickenes, we shal both grone and be disquieted and desire health: so beinge prefsed with pouerty, we shalbe pricked with the stings of carefulnes and sorrow: so shall we be stricken with griefe of shame, contempt and iniury: so shall we yelde due teares to nature at the buriall of our friendes: but this alway shalbe the cōclusion, But the Lorde willed so. Therefore let vs follow his will. Yea euen in the middest of the prickings of sorow, in the middest of mourning and teares, this thought must needes come betwene, to encline our heart to take cherefully the very same things, by reason whereof it is so moued.

Iob. 21. 30.

11 But forasmuch as we haue taken the chiefe cause of bearinge the crosse, out of the consideration of the will of God, we must in few wordes define what difference is betwene Philosophicall & Christian patience. Truely very few of the Philosophers climbed to so hie a reason, to vnderstand that the hande of God doth exercise vs by afflictions ctions,& to thinke that God is in this behalfe to be obeied.But they bring no other reaſon,but becauſe we muſt ſo do of neceſſity.What is this elſe,but to ſay that thou muſt yeelde vnto God, becauſe thou shalt trauail in vaine to wraſtle againſt him? For if we obey God,only becauſe we ſo muſt of neceſſity:thē if we might eſcape,we would ceſſe to obey.But the Scripture biddeth vs to conſider a farre other thing in the will of God,that is to ſay,firſt iuſtice and equity, then the care of our ſaluation. Theſe therefore be the Chriſtian exhortations to patience,whether pouerty,or baniſhment, or priſonment, or ſhame, or ſickeneſſe,or loſſe of parentes,or children,or any other like thing do grieue vs,we muſt thinke that none of theſe things doth happen, but by the will and prouidence of God,and that he doth nothing but by moſt iuſt order:For why? do not our innumerable and daily offenſes deſerue to be chaſtiſed more ſharply, & with more grieuous correction,than ſuch as the mercifull kindneſſe of God layeth vpon vs? Is it not moſt great equity,that our fleſh be tamed,& as it were made acquainted with the yoke,that ſhe do not wantonly growe wilde accordinge to her nature? Is not the righteouſneſſe and trueth of God worthy, that we ſhould take paine for it? But if there appeare an vndouted righteouſnes in our afflictions,we can not without vnrighteouſnes either murmure or wraſtle againſt it.We heare not now that tolde ſonge:We muſt giue place,becauſe we ſo muſt of neceſſity,but we heare a liuely leſſō & full of effectualnes:We muſt obey,becauſe it is vnlawfull to reſiſt:we muſt ſuffer patiently, becauſe impatience is a ſtobborneſſe againſt the righteouſneſſe of God. But now, becauſe that thinge only is worthy to be loued of vs,which we know to be to our ſafety and benefit,the good father doth this way alſo comfort vs, when he affirmeth that euen in this that he afflicteth vs with the croſſe, he prouideth for our ſafety. But if it be certaine that troubles are healthfull for vs,why ſhould we not receiue them with a thankfull and well pleaſed minde? Therefore in patiently ſuffering them, we do not forceably yeelde to neceſſitie, but quietely agre to our owne benefite. Theſe thoughtes (I ſay)do make that how much our mindes are grieued in the croſſe with naturall feelinge of bitterneſſe, ſo much they be cheared with ſpirituall gladneſſe. Whereupon alſo followeth thankeſgiuinge, which can not be without ioy. But if the praiſe of the Lord and thankeſgiuing proceedeth of nothing but of a cherefull and ioyfull heart, and there is nothing that ought to interrupte the ſame praiſing of God and thankeſgiuing in vs:hereby appeareth howe neceſſary it is that the bitternſſe of the croſſe be tempered with ſpirituall ioy.

BVt with whatſoeuer kinde of trouble we be diſtreſſed, we muſt alway looke to this ende, to vſe our ſelues to the contempt of this preſent life, and thereby be ſtirred to the meditation of the life to come. For, becauſe God knoweth well howe much we be by nature enclined to the beaſtly loue of this worlde, he vſeth a moſt fitte meane to drawe vs backe, and to ſhake of our ſluggiſhneſſe, that we ſhoulde not ſticke too faſt in that loue. There is none of vs that deſireth not to ſeeme to aſpire & endeuour all their life long to heauenly immortality. For we are aſhamed to excel brute beaſtes in nothinge: whoſe ſtate ſhoulde be nothinge inferiour to ours, vnleſſe there remayne to vs a hope of eternity after death. But if you examine the deuiſes, ſtudies and doinges of euery manne, you ſhall finde nothing therein but earth. Hereupon groweth that ſenſeleſneſſe, that our minde beinge daſeled with vaine gliſteringe of richeſſe, power and honors, is ſo dulled that it can not ſee farre. Our heart alſo beinge poſſeſſed with couetouſneſſe, ambition and luſt, is ſo weyed downe, that it can not riſe vp higher. Finally all our ſoule entangled with enticementes of the fleſh, ſeeketh her felicity in earth. The Lord, to remedy this euill, doth with continuall examples of miſeries teach this of the vanity of this preſent life. Therfore that they ſhoulde not promiſe themſelues in this life a ſounde and quiet peace, he ſuffereth them to be many times diſquieted and troubled either with warres, or vprores, or robberies, or other iniuries. That they ſhoulde not with too much greedineſſe, gape for fraile and tranſitory richeſſe, or reſt in the richeſſe that they already poſſeſſe, ſometime with baniſhment, ſomtime with barrenneſſe of the earth, ſomtime with fire, ſometime by other meanes he bringeth them to pouerty, or at leaſt holdeth them in meaſure. That they ſhould not with too much eaſe take pleaſure in the benefites of mariage, he either maketh them to be vexed with the frowardnes of their wiues, or plucketh them downe with ill children, or puniſheth them with want of iſſue. But if in all theſe thinges he tenderly beareth with them, yet leaſt they ſhould either ſwell with fooliſh glory, or inmeaſurably reioyſe with vaine confidence, he doth by diſeaſes & dangers ſet before their eyes, howe vnſtable, and vaniſhinge be all the goods that are ſubiect to mortality. Then onely therefore we rightly profit in the diſcipline of the croſſe when we learne that this life, when it is conſidered in it ſelfe, is vnquiet, troubleſome and innumerable wayes miſerable, and in no point fully blessed: & that all those that are reckened the good things therof are vncertaine, fickle, vaine, and corrupted with many euils mixed with them. And hereupon we do determine, that here is nothing to be sought or hoped for but strife: & that when we thinke of our crowne, then we must lft vp our eyes to heauen. For thus we must beleue. That our minde is neuer truely raised to the desire and meditation of the life to come, vnlesse it haue first conceiued a contempt of this present life.

2 For betwene these two there is no meane, the earth must either become vile in our sight, or holde vs bounde with intemperate loue of it. Therefore if we haue any care of eternity, we must diligently endeuour to louse our selues from these fetters. Now because this present life hath many flatteringe pleasures wherewith to allure vs, a great shewe of pleasauntnesse, grace, and sweetenesse, wherewith to delite vs: it is much behoueful for vs to be now and then called away, that we be not bewitched with such allurementes. For what, I pray you, woulde be done if we did here enioy a continuall concourse of good things and felicity, sith we can not with continual spurres of euils be sufficiently awaked to consider the misery therof? Not onely the learned do know, but also the common people haue no Prouerbe more common than this, that mans life is like a smoke or shadow: and because they sawe it to be a thinge very profitable to be knowen, they haue set it out with many notable sentences. But there is no thinge that we do either more negligently consider, or lesse remember. For we go about all thinges, as though we would frame to our selues an immortality in earth. If there be a corps caried to buriall, or if we walke amonge graues, then, because there is an image of death before our eyes, I graunt we do maruelously well discourse like Philosophers vpon the vanity of this life. Albeit we do not that continually, for many times all these things do nothing moue vs. But when it happeneth, our Philosophie lasteth but a while, which so soone as we turne our backes, vanisheth away, and leaueth no steppe at all of remembrance behind it: finally it passeth away as a clapping of hands vpon a stage at any pleasaunt sight. And we forgettinge not onely death, but also that we be subiect to death, as though we had neuer heard any reporte thereof, fall to a careless assuredness of earthly immortality. If any man in the meane time tel vs of the Prouerb, that man is a creature of a dayes continuance, we graunt it in deede: but so heedelesly, that still the thought of euerlastinge continuance resteth in our minde. Who therefore can deny, that it is a great profit to vs all, not only to be admonished in wordes, but by all the examples of experience that may be to be conuinced of the miserable estate of earthly life: forasmuch as euen whē we are conuinced, we scarcely cesse to stand amased with peruerse and foolish admiration of it, as though it contained the vttermost end of good thinges. But if it be necessary that God instruct vs, it is our duety likewise on our behalues to harken to him when he calleth & awaketh our dulnesse, that despising the worlde we may with all our heartes endeuour to the meditation of the life to come.

3 But let the faithful accustome themselues to such a despising of present life, as may neither engendre a hatred thereof, nor any vnthankefulnes toward God. For this life, howsoeuer it is ful of infinite miseries, is yet worthily reckened among the not sclender blessinges of God. Therefore if we acknowledge no benefite of God in it, we are guilty of no small vnthankefulnesse toward God himselfe. But specially it ought to be to the faithfull a testimonie of Gods good will, forasmuch as it is wholly directed to the furtherance of their saluation. For before that he openly deliuer vnto vs the inheritance of eternall glory, his will is to shew himselfe a Father vnto vs by smaller examples: and these be the benefites that are daily bestowed vpon vs. Sith therefore this life serueth vs to vnderstande the goodnesse of God, shall we disdaine it as though it had not a crumme of goodnesse in it? We must therefore put on this feelinge and affection, to recken it amonge the gifres of goodnesse that are not to be refused. For though there wanted testimonies of Scripture, of which there are both many and most euident, very nature it selfe doth exhorte vs to giue thankes to the Lorde, for that he hath brought vs into the light of it, that he graunteth vs the vse of it, that he giueth vs all necessary succours for the preseruation of it. And this is a much greater reason, if we consider that we are in it after a certaine maner prepared to the glory of the heauenly kingdome. For so the Lorde hath ordained that they which in time to come shalbe crowned in heauen, must fight certaine battels in earth, that they shoulde not triumphe, till they had ouercome the hard aduentures of the battell, and obtained the victory. Then an other reason is, that we do by diuerse benefites beginne therein to taste the sweetenesse of Gods liberality, that our hope and desire should be whetted to long for the reueling thereof. Whē this is determined, that it is a gift of Gods clemency that we liue this earthly life, for which as we be bound vnto him, so we ought to be mindefull and thankeful: then we shall in fit order come to consider the most miserable estate therof, to this end that we may be deliuered from too much greedinesse of it, whereunto as I haue before sayd, we are of our selues naturally enclined.

4 Nowe whatsoeuer is taken from the wrongefull desire of this life, ought to be added to the desire of a better life. I graunt in dede that they thought truely, that thought it best not to be borne; & the next, to die quickly. For what could they being destitute of the light of God and true religion, see therein but vnhappy & miserable? And they did not without reason, that mourned and wept at the birthes of their friendes, & solemnely reioysed at their burials, but they did it without profit, because beinge without the right doctrine of faith, they did not see howe that may turne to good to the godly, which is of it selfe neither blessed nor to be desired: and so they ended their iudgement with desperation. Let this therefore be the marke of the faithful in iudging of mortall life, that when they vnderstand it to be of it selfe nothing but misery, they may resort wholly the more freshly and readily to the eternal life to come. When we come to this cõparison, then this present life may not onely be safely neglected, but also vtterly despised and lothed in comparison of the other. For if heauen be our contrey, what is the earth else but a place of banishment? If the departing out of the world be an entring into life, what is the world but a graue? to abide in it, what is it else but to be drowned in death? If to be deliuered from the body is to be set in perfect liberty, what is the body else but a prison? If to enioy the presence of God is the hiest summe of felicity, is it not miserable to lacke it? But til we be escaped out of the world, we wander abroade frõ the Lord. Therfore if the earthly life be compared with the heauenly life, doutlesse it ought to be despised & troden vnder foote. But it is neuer to be hated, but in respect that it holdeth vs in subiection to sinne, & yet that hatred is not properly ro be layd vpon our life. But howsoeuer it be, yet we must be so moued either with wearinesse or hatred of it, that desiring the end of it, we may be also ready at the will of the Lord to abide in it: so that our wearines may be farre from al grudging & impatience. For it is like a place in battel array, wherein the Lorde hath placed vs, which we ought to kepe till he call vs away. Paule in deede lamenteth his state that he is holden bond in the bondes of the body longer thã he wished, & sigheth with feruent desire of his redẽption: neuertheles to obey the commaundement of the Lord, he professed himself ready to both, because he acknowledgeth himself to owe this vnto God, to glorifie his name, either by death or life: and that it is in God to determine what is most expediẽt for his glory. Therfore if we must liue & die to the Lord, let vs leaue to his will the time of our life & death: but so that we be still feruent in desire of death, and be continually occupied in meditation therof,& despise this life in comparison of the immortality to come, and wish to forsake it when it shall please the Lord because of the bondage of sinne.

5 But this is mōstruous,that in stede of that desire of death,many that bost themselues to be Christians,are so afraid of it,that they trēble at euery mention of it, as of a thing betokening vnluckely & vnhappy. Truely it is no maruell; if naturall sense in vs do quake for feare when we heare of the dissoluing of vs.But this is in no wise tolerable, that there be not in a Christian mans brest the light of godlines,that shoulde with greater comfort ouercome and suppresse that feare, how great soeuer it be.For if we consider that this vnstedfast, faulty, corruptible, fraile withering,& rottē tabernacle of our body, is therfore dissolued,ẏ it may afterward be restored again into a stedfast,perfect,vncorruptible & heauenly glory: shall not faith compell vs feruently to desire that which nature feareth? If we consider that by death we are called home out of banishment,to inhabite our contrey,yea a heauenly contrey,shal we obtaine no comfort therby?But there is nothing that desireth not to abide continually. I graunt,and therefore I affirme, that we ought to looke vnto the immortality to come,where we may attaine a stedfast state that no where appeareth in earth. For Paul doth very well teach,that the faithfull ought to go cherefully to death:not because they would be vnclothed,but because they desire to be newly clothed.Shal brute beastes,yea & lifeles creatures,euen stocks & stones,knowing their present vanity,be earnestly bent to looking for the last day of the resurrectiō,that they may with the children of God be deliuered from vanity,& shal we that are endued with the light of wit,& aboue wit enlightened with the spirit of God,when it standeth vpon our being,not lift vp our mindes beyond this rottennes of earth? But it pertaineth not to my present purpose, nor to this place,to speake against this peruersnes. And in the beginning I haue already professed, that I woulde not here take vpon me the large handling of common places. I would counsel such feareful mindes to read Cyprians booke of Mortality,vnlesse they were mete to be sent to the Philosophers,that they may beginne to be ashamed when thry see the contempt of death that those do shew. But this let vs hold for certainely determined, that no man hath well profited in Christes schoole,but he that doth ioyfully looke for the day both of death & of the last resurrection.For both Paul describeth all ẏ faithfull by this marke,& also it is common in the Scripture,to call vs thither as oft as it wil set forth a groūd of perfect gladnes Reioise(saith the Lord)& lift vp your heads, for your redemption commeth nere at hand. Is it reasonable, I pray you, that the thing which he willed to be of so great force to raise vp ioy & chertefullnes in vs, should brede nothing but sorrow & discouragemēt? If it be so, why do we stil boste of him as our Schoolemaister? Let vs therfore get a sounder mind, & howsoeuer the blinde & senseleſſe desire of the flesh do striue against it, let vs not dout to wish for the comming of the Lord, not only with wishing, but also with groning & sighing, as a thing most happy of all other. For he shall come a redemer to vs, to draw vs out of this infinit gulfe of euils & miseries, and to leade vs into that blessed inheritance of his life and glory.

6 This is certainely true: all the nation of the faithfull, so longe as they dwel in earth, must be as shepe appointed to slaughter, that they may be fashioned like Christ their head. Therefore they were in most lamentable case, vnlesse they had their minde raised vp into heauē, & surmounted all that is in the world, and passed ouer the present face of things. Contrariwise whē they haue once lifted their heades aboue all earthly thinges, although they see the wealth and honors of the wicked florishing, if they see thē enioyinge quiet peace, if they see thē proude in gorgiousnes and sumptuousnesse of all thinges, if they see thē to flow in plentiful store of all delites, beside that if they be spoiled by their wickednesse, if they sustaine reprochful dealings at their pride, if they be robbed by their couetousnes, if they be vexed by any other outrage of theirs: they will easily vphold themselues in such aduersities. For that day shalbe before their eies, when the Lorde shall receiue his faithfull into the quiet of his kingdom, when he shal wipe all teares from their eies, when he shall clothe them with the robe of glory & gladnes, when he shall feede thē with ỹ vnspeakeable swetenesse of his deinties, when he shall aduance them to the fellowshippe of his hie estate: finally when he shall vouchsaue to enterparten his felicity with them. But these wicked once that haue florished in the earth, he shall throw into extreme shame, he shall change their delites into tormentes, their laughing and mirth into weping and gnashing of teeth, he shall disquiet their peace with terrible torment of conscience, he shall punish their deintinesse with vnquenchable fier, & shall put their heades in subiectiō to those godly mē, whose patience they haue abused. For this is righteousnesse (as Paule testifieth) to giue release to the miserable & to them that are vniustly afflicted, & to render affliction to the wicked that do afflict the godly, when the Lorde Iesus shal be reuealed from heauen. This truely is our onely comfort, which if it be taken away, we must of necissity either despeir, or flatteringely delite our selues with the vayne comfortes of the worlde to

For euen the prophet confeſſeth that his feete ſtagged, when he taried too long vpon conſideringe the preſent proſperity of the wicked: and that he could not otherwiſe ſtande ſtedfaſt, but when he entred into the ſanctuary of God, and bended his eies to the laſt end of the godly & the wicked. To conclude in one word, then only the croſſe of Chriſt triumpheth in the hearts of the faithfull vpon the Deuill, fleſh, ſinne & the wicked, when our eyes are turned to the power of the reſurrection.

Howe we ought to vſe this preſent life, and the helps thereof.

BY ſuch introductions the Scripture doth alſo well informe vs what is the right vſe of earthly benefites: which is a thinge not to be neglected in framing an order of life. For if we muſt liue, we muſt alſo vſe the neceſſary helpes of life: neither can we eſchue euen thoſe things that ſeeme rather to ſerue for delite than for neceſſity. Therefore we muſt keepe a meaſure, that we may vſe them with a pure conſcience, either for neceſſity or for delight. That meaſure the Lorde appointeth by his worde, when he teacheth that this life is to them that be his, a certaine iorney through a ſtraunge countrey, by which they trauaile towarde the kingdome of heauen. If we muſt but paſſe through the earth, doutleſſe we ought ſo farre to vſe the good thinges of the earth, as they may rather further than hinder our iourney. Therfore Paul doth not vnprofitably counſell vs ſo to vſe this worlde, as though we vſed it not: and to bye poſſeſſions with ſuch a minde as they vſe to be ſolde. But becauſe this place is ſlippery, and ſo ſlope on both ſides, that it quickely maketh vs to fall, let vs labour to faſten our foote there, where we may ſtande ſafely. For there haue bin ſome, that otherwiſe were good and holy menne, which when they ſawe intemperance and ryot continually to range with vnbridled luſt, vnleſſe it be ſharply reſtrained, & were deſirous to correct ſo great a miſchief, they could find none other way, but ſuffred mā to vſe the benefites of the earth, ſo far as neceſſity required. This was in dede a Godly counſell, but they were to ſeuere. For (which is a very perillous thinge) they did put ſtreighter bondes vpon conſciences, than thoſe wherewith they were bound by the word of God. And they expounde neceſſity, to abſtaine from all thinges which a man may be without. And ſo by their opinio, a mā might ſcarcely take any more foode than bread & water. And ſome be yet more ſeuere: as it is red of Crates the Thebane, that did throwe his goods into the ſea,

because if they were not destroyed, he thought that he shoulde be destroyed by them. Many at this day, while they seeke a pretence, whereby the intemperance of the flesh in vse of outwarde thinges may be excused, and while they go about to prepare a way for the flesh raging in wantonnes, do take that as a thing confessed, which I do not graunte them, that this libertie is not to be restrained with any limitation of measure, but that it is to be left to euery mans conscience to vse as much as he seeth to be lawfull for him. Truly I confesse, that consciences neither ought nor can in this point be bounde by certaine and precise formes of lawes. But for as much as the Scripture teacheth generall rules of lawfull vse, we must surely measure the vse according to these rules.

2 Let this be a principle: that the vse of Gods gifres swarueth not out of the way, when it is referred to that ende, whereunto the authour him selfe hath created and apointed them for vs, for as much as he hath created them for our good and not for our hurt. Therefore no man can kepe a righter way, than he that shall diligently loke vnto this ende. Nowe if we consider to what ende he hath created meates, we shall finde that he meant to make prouision not onely for necessitie but also for delite and pleasure. So in apparell, beside necessitie he apointed an other ende, which is comlinesse and honestie. In herbes, trees, and frutes, beside diuerse profitable vses, there is also a pleasantnesse of sight, and sweetenesse of smell. For if this were not true, the Prophet would not recken among the benefites of God that wine maketh glad the heart of man, and that oyle maketh his face to shine: the Scripture would not echewhere, to set fourth his liberalitie, rehearse that he hath geuen all such things to men. And the very naturall qualities of things do sufficiently shew, to what ende and how far we may vse them. Shall the Lord haue set in floures so great a beutie, as presenteth it selfe to our eyes: shall he haue geuen so great a swetenes of sauour as naturally floweth into our smelling: and shall it be vnlawfull either for our eyes to take the vse of that beautie, or for our smelling to feele that sweteneſſe of sauour? what? Hath he not so made difference of colours, that he hath made some more acceptable than other? what? Hath he not geuen to gold and siluer, to iuorie and marble, a speciall grace whereby they might be made more precious than other metalles or stones? Finally hath he not made many things commendable vnto vs without necessary vse? Ps. 104. 15.

3 Therefore away with that vnnaturall Philosophie, which in graunting vs of the creatures no vse but for necessitie, not onely doth niggardly bereue vs of the lawfull vse of Gods liberalitie, but also can not take place, vnleſſe it firſt haue ſpoiled man of all his ſenſes and made him a blocke. But on the other ſide we muſt with no leſſe diligence prouide a ſtay for ẏ luſt of the fleſh, which if it be not brought into order, ouerfloweth without meaſure: and it hath (as I haue ſaid) defenders of it, which ynder pretenſe of allowed libertie do graunt vnto it all thinges. Firſt there is one bridle put in the mouth of it, if this be determined, that all things are created for vs to this ende, that we ſhould know the authour of them, and geue him thankes for his tender kindneſſe toward vs. Where is thy thankes geuing, if thou ſo gluttonouſly fill thy ſelfe with deinty meates or with wine, that thou either be made ſenſleſſe, or vnfit to do the duties of godlineſſe and of thy calling? Where is the reknowledging of God, if thy fleſh by to great abundance boiling in filthy luſt, doth with her vncleanneſſe infecte thy minde, that thou canſt not ſee any thinge that is right or honeſt? In apparell, where is thankefulneſſe to God, if with coſtly gorgiouſneſſe thereof we both fall in admiration of our ſelues and diſdaine other? If with the trimneſſe and cleanlineſſe of it, we prepare our ſelues to vnchaſtitie? Where is the reknowledging of God, if our minde be fixed vpon the gainſſe of our apparell? For many ſo geue all their ſenſes to bodely delites, that the minde lieth ouerwhelmed. Many are ſo delited with marble, gold, and paintings, that they become as it were menne made of marble, that they bee as it were turned into metalles, and bee like vnto painted Images. The ſmelle of the kitchen, or ſweteneſſe of ſauour ſo dulleth ſome, that they can ſmell nothing that is ſpirituall. And the ſame is alſo to be ſeen in the reſt. Therfore it is certaine that hereby the licenciouſneſſe of abuſing Rom.13 is ſomewhat reſtrained, and that rule of Paule confirmed, that we be

14. not to carefull of the fleſh, for the luſtes therof, to which if we graunt to much, they boile out aboue meaſure and temper.

4 But there is no ſurer nor redier way than that which is made vs by the contempt of this preſent life, and the meditation of heauenly immortalitie. For thervpon follow two rules: the one, that they which vſe this world, ſhould be ſo minded as though they vſed it not, they that mary wiues as though they did not mary: they ẏ bye as though 1.Cor. they did not bye, as Paule teacheth. The other, that they ſhould 7.3. learne as well to beare pouertie, quietly and patiently, as abundance moderatly. He that biddeth thee to vſe this world as though thou didſt not vſe it, doth cut away not onely the intemperance of gluttonie in meat and drinke, and to much deintineſſe, ſumptuoſneſſe, pride, hautineſſe, and niceneſſe, in fare, bilding, and apparell, but alſo all care and affection that may either withdrawe thee or hinder thee

from thinking of the heauenly life, or from study to garnish thy soule. But this was long ago truely said of Cato: that there is great carefulnesse of trimming our body, and great carelessnesse of vertue. And it is an olde prouerbe that they which are much busied in care of their body are commōly careless of their soule. Therefore, although the libertie of the faithfull in outward things is not to be restrained to certain forme, yet truly it must be subiect to this law, to beare very litle with their owne affections, but contrariwise still call vpon themselues with continually bent minde, to cut of all shew of superfluous plentie, much more to restraine ryotous excesse, and to take diligent hede, that they do not of helpes make to themselues hinderaunces.

5 The other rule shalbe, that they that haue but small and slender richesse, may learne to lacke patiently, that they be not carefully moued with immeasurable desire of them: which pacience they that kepe, haue not a litle profited in the Lords schole: as he that hath not at least somewhat profited in this behalf, can scarcely haue any thing whereby to proue him selfe the scholar of Christ. For beside this that the most part of other vices do accompanie the desire of earthly thinges, he that beareth pouertie impatiently, doth for the most part bewray the contrarie disease in abundance. I meane hereby that he which wilbe ashamed of a poore cote, wilbe proude of a costly cote: he that will not be content with a hungry supper, will be disquieted with desire of a deintier, and would also intemperately abuse those deinties if he had them: he that hardly and vnquietly beareth a priuate and base estate, will not absteine from pride if he climbe to honors. Therefore let all them that haue an vnfained zele of Godlinesse, endeuour to learne by the Apostles example, to be ful and hungry, to haue store & suffer want. The Scripture hath also a third rule, whereby it tempereth the vse of earthly things, of which we haue spoken somewhat when we entreated of the preceptes of charitie. For the Scripture decreeth that all earthly things are so geuen vs by the bountifulnesse of God, and appointed for our commoditie, that they may be as things deliuered vs to kepe, wherof we must one day yeelde an accompt. We must therfore so dispose thē, that this saying may cōtinually sound in our eares, yeld an accompt of thy bailiwike. Therewithall let this also come in our minde. Who it is that asketh such an accompt, euen he that hath so much commended abstinēce, sobrietie, honest sparing, and modestie, and abhorreth riotous sumptuousnesse, pride, ostētation and vanitie, which alloweth no other disposing of goodes, but such as is ioined with charitie: which hath already with his owne mouth condemned all those delitefull things Phil. 4. 12.

6 Laſt of all, this is to be noted, that the Lord biddeth euery one of vs in all the doinges of his life, to haue an eye to his calling. For he knoweth with how great vnquietneſſe mans wit boileth, with how ſkipping lightneſſe it is caried hether and thether, howe gredy his ambition is to holde diuerſe things at ones. Therfore that all things ſhould not be confounded with our follie and raſheneſſe, he hath apointed to euerie man his duties in ſeuerall kindes of life. And that no man raſhly runne beyond his bondes, he hath named all ſuch kindes of lyfe, vocations. Therefore euery mans ſeuerall kinde of life is vnto him as it were his ſtanding apointed him by God, that they ſhould not all their life vncertainly wander about. And this diuiſion is ſo neceſſary, that all our doings are meaſured thereby in his ſight, and oftentimes contrary to the iudgement of mans reaſon and Philoſophie. There is no deede accompted more noble, euen among the Philoſophers, than for a man to deliuer his contrie from tyrannie: but by the voice of Gods iudgement the priuate man is openly condemned that layeth hand vpon a tyrant. But I will not tarry vpon reherſing of examples, It is ſufficient if we knowe that the calling of the Lorde is in euery thing the beginning and fundation of well doing: to which he that doth not direct himſelfe, ſhall neuer kepe a right way in his doinges. He may paraduenture ſometime do ſomewhat ſeming worthy of praiſe: but whatſoeuer that be in the ſight of men, before the throne of God it ſhalbe reiected: moreouer there ſhalbe no conuenient agrement in the partes of his life. Therefore our life ſhall then be beſt framed, when it ſhalbe directed to this marke: For then, no man caried with his owne raſhneſſe will attempt more than his calling may beare, becauſe he knoweth that it is not lawefull to paſſe beyond his bondes. He that ſhalbe a man of baſe eſtate, ſhall contentedly liue a priuate life, leaſt he ſhoulde forſake the degree wherein God hath placed him. Againe this ſhalbe no ſmall releſe to cares, labors, greues, and other burdens, when a man ſhall know that in all theſe things, God is his guide. The more willingly the magiſtrate will execute his office: the houſholder will bind him ſelfe to his dutie: euery man in his kinde of life will beare and paſſe through the diſcommodities, cares, tediouſneſſe, and anguiſhes thereof: when they are perſwaded that euery mans bur dē is laid vpon him by God. Herevpon alſo ſhall growe ſingular comfort, for as much as there ſhalbe no worke ſo filthy and vile, (if it be ſuch a one as thou obey thy calling in it) but it ſhineth & is moſt precious in the ſight of God.

The

Of the iustification of Faith, and first of the definition of the name and of the thing.

I Thinke I haue already sufficiently declared before, howe there remaineth for men being accursed by the lawe one onely helpe to recouer saluation: againe, what Faith is, and what benefites of God it bestoweth vpon man, and what fruites it bringeth fourth in him. The summe of all was this, that Christ is geuē vs by the goodnesse of God, and conceiued and possessed of vs by faith, by partaking of whome we receiue principally twoo graces: the first, that being reconciled to God by his innocencie, we may nowe in stede of a iudge haue a mercifull father in heauen: the second, that being sanctified by his Spirit, we may geue our selues to innocencie and pureneſſe of life. As for regeneration, which is the second grace, we haue already spoken of it as much as semed to be sufficient. The manner of iustification was therefore lesse touched, because it serued well for our purpose, first to vnderstande both how the Faith by which alone we receiue frely geuen righteousnesse by the mercie of God, is not idle from good workes: & also what be the good workes of the holy ones, wherevpon part of this question entreateth. Therefore they are first to be throughly discussed, and so discussed that we must remembre that this is the chiefe stay of vpholding religiō, that we may be the more carefull and hedefull about it. For vnlesse thou first knowe, in what state thou art with God, and what his iudgement is of thee: as thou hast no ground to stablishe thy saluation, so hast thou also none to raise thy reuerēt feare toward God. But the necessitie of this knowledge shall better appere by knowledge it selfe.

2 But that we stumble not at the first entrie, (which we should do if we should entre disputation of a thing vnknowen) let vs first declare what is meant by these speches, Man to be iustified before God, To be iustified by faith or by workes. He is said to be iustified afore God, that is pronounced by the iudgement of God both iust and accepted for his owne righteousnesse sake. For as wickednesse is abhominable before God, so a sinner can not finde fauour in his eyes, in respect that he is a sinner, or so long as he is accompted such a one. Therfore whersoeuer sinne is, there also appereth the wrath and vengeance of God. He is iustified that is not accompted in place of a sinner but of a iust man, and by reason thereof he standeth fast before the iudgement seate of God when all sinners fall. As if an innocēt be brought to be arained before the seate of a righteous iudge.

when iudgement is geuen accordinge to his innocencie, he is saide to be iustified before the iudge: so he is iustified before God that being exempt out of the number of sinners hath God a witnesse and affirmer of his righteousnesse. Therfore after the same manner a man shalbe said to be iustified by workes, in whose life there is founde such cleanneſse and holyneſse, as may deserue the testimonie of righteousnesse before ỹ throne of God: or he that with the vprightnes of his workes is able to aunswere and satisfie Gods iudgement. Cõtrariwise he shalbe said to be iustified by faith that being excluded from the righteousnesse of workes, doth by faith take holde of the righteousnes of Christ: wherewith when he is clothed, he appeareth in the sight God, not as a sinner, but as righteous. So we simply expound iustification to be an acceptation, whereby God receiuing vs into fauour taketh vs for righteous. And we say that the same consisteth in forgeueneſse of sinnes, and imputation of the righteousneſse of Christ.

3 For confirmation hereof there are many and euident testimonies of Scripture. First it can not be denied, that this is the proper and most vsed significatiõ of the word. But because it is too long to gather all the places and compare them together, it shalbe enough to put the readers in minde of them, for they may of themselues easely marke them. But I will bring fourth some, where this iustification that we speake of is expresselye entreated of by name. First where Luke sayeth that the people when they had heard Christ did iustifie God. And where Christ pronounceth that wisdome is iustified by her children: he doth not meane there, that they do geue righteousnesse, which alway remaineth perfect with God, although all the world go about to take it away from him: nor in this place also to make the doctrine of saluation righteous, which hath euer that of it selfe. But both these speches are as much in effect, as to geue to God and his doctrine the praise that they deserue. Againe whẽ Christ reprocheth the Pharisees, that they iustifie themselues, he doth not meane that they obteine righteousnesse by well doing, but do vainegloriously seke for the same of righteousneſse, whereof in deede they be voide. They that are skilfull of the Hebrue tongue do better vnderstande the sense of this phrase: in which tongue they are not onely called wicked doers, that are gilty in their conscience of any wicked doing, but also they that come in daunger of iudgement of condemnation. For when Bersabe sayeth that she and Solomon shalbe wicked doers, she doth not therein acknowledge any offense, but complaineth that she and her son shalbe put to shame, to be numbred among the reprobate probate and condemned. But by the processe of the text it easely appeareth, that the same worde in Latine also, can not otherwise be taken but by way of relation, and not to signifie any qualitie. But as concerning the matter that we are nowe in hande with: where Paule saith that the Scripture did forsee, that God iustifieth the Gentiles by faith, what may a man vnderstande thereby, but that God doth impute righteousnesse by faith? Againe, when he saith that God iustifieth the wicked man that is of the faith of Christ, what meaning can be thereof, but by the benefit of faith to deliuer them from the damnation which their wickednesse deserued? And yet he speaketh more plainly in the conclusion, when he cried out thus, Who shall accuse Gods elect? It is God that iustifieth, who shall condemne? It is Christ that died, yea that rose againe, and nowe maketh intercession for vs. It is as much in effect as if he should say, Who shall accuse them whome God acquiteth? who shall condemne them whose patrone Christ is and defendeth them? To iustifie therefore is nothing els, than to acquite him that was accused, from giltinesse as allowinge his innocencie. Sith therefore God doth iustifie vs by the intercession of Christ, he doth acquite vs, not by allowance of our owne innocency, but by imputation of righteousnesse, that we may be compted for righteous in Christ, which are not righteous in our selues. So in the 13. Chapter of the Actes, in Paules sermon: by him is forgeuenes of sinnes preached vnto you, and euery one that beleueth in him is iustified from all those things, from which you could not be iustified in the lawe of Moses. You see that after forgeueneesse of sinnes, iustification is added in place of an exposition. You see plainely that it is taken for absolution, you se that it is taken away from the workes of the lawe, you see that it is the mere beneficiall gift of Christ, you see that it is receiued by faith. Finally you see that there is a satisfaction spoken of where he sayeth that we are iustified from sinnes by Christ. So when it is said that the Publicane came iustified out of the Temple, we can not say that he obteined righteousnesse by any deseruing of workes. This therefore is saide that after pardon of his sinnes obteined, he was compted for righteous before God. He was therefore righteous, not by approuinge of workes, but by Gods free absolution. Wherefore Ambrose sayeth very well, that calleth the confession of sinnes a lawefull iustification.

4 But to leaue striuing about the word: If we loke vpon the thing it selfe as it is described vnto vs, there shall remaine no more doubte. For truely Paule doth expresse iustification by the name of acceptation, when he saith (Ephes. 1. a. 5.) we are apointed vnto adoption by Christ, according to ỹ good pleasure of God, vnto the praise of his glorious fauour, whereby he hath accompted vs acceptable or in fauour. For the same is meant by it that is saide in an other place, that God doth frely iustifie. In the 4. Chapter to the Romaines, he first calleth it an imputation of righteousnesse, and sticketh not to say that it consisteth in forgeuenesse of sinnes. That man (said he) is called of Dauid a blessed man, to whom God accõpteth or imputeth righteousnesse without workes, as it is written: Blessed are they whose iniquities are forgeuen. &c. Truely he there doth entreate not of one part of iustification, but of all iustification wholly. And he testifieth that Dauid in that place maketh a definition of iustification, when he pronounceth that they are blessed to whom is geuen free forgeuenesse of sinnes. Whereby appereth that this righteousnesse whereof he speaketh, is in comparison simply set as contrary to giltinesse. But for this purpose, that is ỹ best place where he teacheth, that this is the summe of the message of the Gospell, that we should be reconciled to God: because it is his will to receiue vs into fauour through Christ, in not imputing sinnes vnto vs. Let the reders diligently wey all the whole processe of the text. For by & by after, where he addeth by way of exposition, that Christ which was without sinne was made sinne for vs, to expresse the manner of reconciliation, doubtlesse he meaneth nothing els by the word recõciling but iustifying. And that which he saith in an other place, that we are made righteous by the obedience of Christ, could not stand together, vnlesse we be accompted righteous before God, in him, and without our selues.

Rom. 3. 24.
Rom. 4. 6.
2. Cor 5 18.
Rom. 5. 19.

¶ But where as Osiander hath brought in, I wote not what monster of essentiall righteousnes, whereby, although his will was not to destroy free righteousnes, yet he hath wrapped it within such a mist, as darkeneth godly mindes, & bereueth them of the earnest feling of the grace of Christ: therefore ere I passe further to other thinges, it is worthy labour to cõfute this doting errour. First this speculatiõ is but of mere & hungry curiositie. He doth in deede heape together many testimonies of Scripture, to proue that Christ is one with vs, and we one with him, which nedeth no profe: but because he kepeth not this bonde of vnitie, he snareth him selfe. But we which holde that we are made all one with Christ by the power of his Spirit, may easily vndo all his knottes. He had conceiued a certaine thing very neare to the opinion of Manicheers, to desire to conuey the substance of God into men. Herevpon riseth an other inuention of his that Adam was fashioned after the Image of God, because euen before the fall Christ was ordained the paterne of the nature of man. But by cause I would would be shorte, I will tarry vpon the matter that I haue presently in hande. He saith that we are one with Christ. We graunt. But we denie that the substance of Christ is mingled with oures. Moreouer we say that this principle that Christ is righteousnesse to vs, because he is an eternall God, the fountaine of righteousnesse & the very selfe righteousnesse of God, is wrongfully drawen to defende his deceites. The readers shall pardon me, if I do nowe but touche these thinges that the ordre of teaching requireth to be differred into an other place. But although he excuse himselfe from meaning nothing els by the name of essentiall righteousnesse, but to resist this opinion that we are accompted righteous for Christes sake: yet he plainly expresseth that he is not contented with that righteousnes that is purchased for vs by the obedience and sacrifice of Christ, but faineth that we are substantially righteous in God, as well by substãce as by quality poured into vs. For this is the reason why he so earnestly affirmeth, that not only Christ, but also ỹ father & the holy Ghost do dwell in vs. Which although I graunt to be true, yet I say that he wrongfully wresteth it. For he should haue considered the manner of dwelling, that is, that the father and the holy Ghost are in Christ, and as the fulnesse of the Godhead dwelleth in him, so do we possesse whole God in him. Therfore all that he saith seuerally of the father & the holy Ghost, tideth to no other ende but to draw ỹ simple from Christ. And then he thrusteth in a mixture of substances, whereby God pouring himselfe into vs, doth make vs as it were a part of himselfe. For he reckeneth it almõst a matter of nothing, that it is wrought by the power of the holy Ghost, that we grow into one with Christ, & that he is our heade & we his membres, vnlesse his very substãce be mingled with vs. But in the father & the holy Ghost (as I haue said) he doth more openly bewray what he thinketh, euen this, that we be iustified not by the only grace of the Mediator, and that righteousnesse is not simply or perfectly offered vs in his persone, but that we are made partakers of the righteousnes of God, whẽ God is essentially made one with vs.

6 If he did say no more, but that Christ in iustifying vs, is by essentiall coniouning made oures: and that not onely he is our heade, in that he is manne, but also that the substance of the diuine nature is powred into vs. He should with lesse hurte seede himselfe deintily, and paraduenture so great a contention should not haue bene raised for this doubtinge errour. But sith this beginning is like a cuttle that withcasting out of blacke and thicke bloode hideth her many tailes, we must needes earnestly resiste vnlesse we will wittingly & willingely suffer that righteousnesse to be taken from vs, which only bringeth vs confidence to glory of ſaluation. For in all this diſcourſe, the name of righteouſneſſe, and this worde iuſtifying, extende to two partes: that to be iuſtified is not onely to be reconciled to God with free pardon, but alſo to be made righteous, that righteouſnes is not a free impitation but a holineſſe and vprightneſſe, which the ſubſtance of God remaining in vs doth breath into vs. Then he ſtoutly denieth, that Chriſt is our righteouſneſſe in reſpect that being a prieſt he did with ſatisfactorily purging ſinnes appeaſe his father towarde vs, but in reſpect that he is eternall God and life. To proue that firſt point, that God doth iuſtifie not onely by forgeuing but alſo by regenerating, he aſketh whether God doth leaue them whom he doth iuſtifie ſuch as they were by nature, chaunging nothing of their vices. The aunſwere hereof is very eaſy: that as Chriſt can not be torne in partes ſo theſe two things which we together and iointly receiue in him, that is to ſay righteouſneſſe and ſanctification, are inſeparable. Therfore, whomſoeuer God receiueth into fauour, he doth alſo therwithall geue them the ſpirit of adoption, by the power whereof he newly faſhioneth them after his image. But if the brightneſſe of the ſunne can not be ſeuered from the heate thereof, ſhall we therefore ſay that the earth is warmed with the light, and enlightened with the heate? There is nothing more fit for this purpoſe, than this ſimilitude The ſunne with his heate geueth life and frutefulneſſe to the earth, with his beames he geueth light and brightneſſe. Here is a mutuall and vnſeparable conioining: yet reaſon forbiddeth to conuey to the one that which is peculiar to the other. Like abſurditie is in this confuſion of two ſortes of graces, that Oſiander thruſteth in. For becauſe God doth in deede renew them to the obſeruing of righteouſneſſe whom he freely accompteth for righteous, therefore Oſiander confoundeth that gift of regeneration with this free acceptation, and affirmeth that they be al one and the ſelfeſame thing. But the Scripture ioining them both together, yet doth diſtinctly recken them, that the manifold grace of God may ỹ better appere vnto vs. For that ſaying 1. Cor. 1. 30. of Paule is not ſuperfluous, that Chriſt was geuen vs vnto righteouſneſſe and ſanctification. And whenſoeuer he reaſoneth to proue by the ſaluation purchaced fot vs by the fatherly loue of God, and by the grace of Chriſt, that we are called to holineſſe and cleanneſſe, he plainely declareth that it is one thing to be iuſtified and an other to be made newe creatures. But when Oſiander cometh to the Scripture, he corrupteth as many places as he allegeth. Where Paule ſaith that faith is accompted for righteouſneſſe to him that worketh not, but beleueth in him that iuſtifieth the wicked man, he expoundeth it to make righteous. With like rashnesse, he depraueth all the fourth Chapter to the Romains, and sticketh not with like false colour to corrupt that place which I euen now alleged, Who shall accuse the elects of God? it is God that iustifieth: where it is plaine that he speaketh simply of giltinesse and acquiting, & the meaning of the Apostle hangeth vpon a comparing of cõtraries. Therfore Osiander is found too fond a babbler, as well in that reason as in alleging the testimonies of Scripture. And no more rightly doth he speake of the name of righteousnesse, in saying that faith was accompted to Abraham for righteousnesse, after that embracing Christ (which is the righteousnesse of God and God him selfe) he excelled in singular vertues, whereby appereth that of two whole places he hath wrongfully made one corrupt place. For the righteousnes that is there mentioned, perteineth not to the whole course of his calling: but rather the holy Ghost testifieth, that although the vertues of Abraham were singularly excellent, and that with long continuance he at length had encreased them: yet he did no other way please God, but by this, that he receiued by faith the grace offered in the promise. Wherevpon followeth, that in iustification there is no place for workes, as Paule very well affirmeth. Rom. 4. 5.

7 As for this that Osiander obiecteth, that the power of iustifying is not in faith of it selfe, but in respect that it receiueth Christ, I willingly graũt it. For if faith did iustifie of it selfe, or by inward force, as they call it and as it is alway feble and vnperfect, could not worke iustification but in part, so should the iustification be maimed, that should geue vs but a pece of saluation. As for vs, we imagine no such thing, but in proper speaking do say, that God onely iustifieth: and then we geue the same to Christ, because he was geuẽ vs vnto righteousnesse: and faith we compare as it were to a vessell. For except we came emptie with open mouth of our soule to craue the grace of Christ, we can not be able to receiue Christ. Wherevpon we gather that we do not take from Christ the power of iustifying, when we teache that he is first receiued by faith, before that his righteousnesse be receiued. But yet I do not admit the crooked figures of this Sophister, when he saith that faith is Christ: as if an earthen pot were a treasure, because gold is hiddẽ in it. For the reason is not vnlike, but that faith although it be by it selfe of no worthines or price, may iustifie vs in bringing Christ, as a pot full of money maketh a man riche. Therefore I say that faith, which is onely the instrument to receiue righteousnesse, is vnfitly mingled with Christ, which is the materiall cause and both author and minister of so great a benefit. Nowe is this doubt also dissolued. Howe this worde Faith ought to be vnderstanded when we entreate of iustification.

8 In the receiuing of Christ he goth further: for he sayeth, that the inward worde is receiued by the ministration of the outwarde worde, thereby to drawe vs from the priesthode of Christ and the persone of the Mediatour to his outwarde Godhed. As for vs, we deuide not Christ, but we say that he is the same eternall worde of God, which reconciling vs to God in his flesh, gaue vs righteousnesse: and we confesse that otherwise he could not haue fulfilled the office of Mediatour, and purchaced vs righteousnesse, vnlesse he had bene eternall God. But this is Osianders doctrine, where as Christ is both God and man, that he was made righteousnesse to vs, in respect of his nature of Godhed, and not of manhode. But if this properly belong to the Godhed, then it shall not be peculiar to Christ, but common with the father and the holy Ghost, for as much as there is not one righteousnesse of the one, & an other of the other. Moreouer that which was naturally from eternitie, could not be conueniently said to be made to vs. But although we graunt this, that God was made righteousnesse for vs: howe shall it agree that that which is set betwene, is made of God? Truely that properly belongeth to the persone of the Mediatour: which though he conteine in himselfe the nature of Godhede, yet here he is specially signified by his proper title, by which he is seuerally discerned from the father and the Iere. 15. holy Ghost. But he foolishly triumpheth in that one worde of Hieremie, where he promiseth that the Lord Iehoua shalbe our righteousnesse, but out of that he shall gather nothing, but that Christ which is righteousnes, is God openly shewed in the flesh. In an other place Act. 20. 28. we haue rehearsed out of Paules sermõ, that God purchaced to himselfe the Church with his bloud, if any man gather thereupon, that the bloud wherewith sinnes were purged was diuine, and of the nature of Godhed, who can abide so fowle an errour? But Osiander thinketh that with this so childishe a cauillation he hath gotten all things, he swelleth, he leapeth for ioy, and stuffeth many leaues full with his bigge wordes: when yet there is a plaine and redy solution for it in saying that the worde Iehoua in deede when he is made the

Let vs note that the father speaketh: that he geueth to the sonne the office of iustifying: he addeth a cause, for that he is iust, and setteth the manner or meane as they call it in the doctrine wherby Christ is knowen. For it is a more cõmodious expo-

sion to take this worde Daah knowledge passiuely. Herevpon I gather first that Christ was made righteousnesse when he did put on the fourme of a seruaunt: secondely that he did iustifie vs in respect that he shewed him selfe obedient to his father: and that therefore he doth not this for vs according to his nature of Godhed, but according to the office of dispensation committed vnto him. For although God alone is the fountaine of righteousnesse, & we be made righteous by no other meane but by the partaking of him: yet because we are by vnhappy disagrement estranged from his righteousnesse, we must needes come downe to this lower remedy, that Christ may iustifie vs with the force of his death and resurrection.

9 If he obiect that this is a worke of such excellency, that it is aboue the nature of man, and therfore can not be ascribed but to the nature of God, the first I graunt: but in the second I say that he is vnwisely deceiued. For although Christ could neither clense our soules with his bloud, nor appease his father with his sacrifice, nor acquite vs frō giltinesse, nor do the office of priest, vnlesse he had bene true God, because the strength of the flesh had bene to weake for so great a burden: yet it is certain that he performed all these things according to his nature of manhod. For if it be demaunded how we be iustified, Paule answereth, by the obedience of Christ. But did he any otherwise obey than by taking vpon him the shape of a seruāt? wherupon we gather that righteousnesse was geuē vs in his flesh. Likewise in the other wordes (which I maruell that Osiander is not ashamed to allege so often) he apointeth the fountaine of righteousnesse no where els but in the flesh of Christ. Him that knew no sinne he made sinne for vs, that we might be ȳ righteousnesse of God in him. Osiander with full mouth aduaunceth the righteousnes of God, and triumpheth as though he had proued that it is his imaginatiue Ghost of essentiall righteousnesse: when the wordes sound far otherwise, that we be righteous by the cleansing made by Christ. Very yong beginners should not haue bene ignorant that the righteousnesse of God is taken for the righteousnesse that God alloweth, as in Iohn, where the glorie of God is compared with the glorie of men. I knowe that sometime it is called the righteousnesse of God, whereof God is the authour and which God geueth vs: but though I say nothing, the readers that haue their sound wit do perceiue that nothing els is meant in this place but that we stande vpright before the iudgement seate of God, being vpholden by the cleansing sacrifice of Christes death. And there is not so great importance in the word, so that Osiander do agree with vs in this point that we are iustified in Christ, in this respect that he was made a propiciatorie sacrifice for vs, which can not agree with his nature of Godhed. After which sort, when Christ meaneth to seale the righteousnesse & saluation that he hath brought vs, he setteth before vs an assured pledge thereof in his flesh. He doth in deede call him selfe the lyuely bred, but expressing the manner here, he addeth that his flesh is verily meate, and his bloud is verily drinke. Which manner of teaching is sene in the Sacramentes, which although they direct our faith to whole Christ, and not to halfe Christ, yet they do there withall teache that the matter of righteousnesse and saluation remaineth in his flesh: Not that in that that he is onely man, he either iustifieth or quickeneth of him selfe, but because it pleased God to shewe openly in the mediatour that which was hidden and incomprehensible in him selfe, whereupon I am wont to say, that Christ is as it were a fountaine set opē for vs, out of which we may drawe that which otherwise should without fruite ly hidden in that close and depe spring that riseth vp vnto vs in the persone of the Mediatour. In this manner & meaning, I do not deny that Christ as he is God and man doth iustifie vs, and that this is also the worke of the father & the holy Ghost as well as his. Finally, that the righteousnesse whereof Christ maketh vs partakers, is the eternall righteousnesse of the eternall God, so that he yelde to the sure and plaine reasons that I haue alleged.

10 Nowe that he shoulde not with his cauillations deceiue the vnskilfull, I graunt that we want this incomparable benefit, till Christ be made ours. Therefore we set that conioyning of the head and the membres, the dwelling of Christ in our heartes, and that mysticall vnion, in the hiest degree: that Christ being made ours, may make vs partakers of the giftes wherewith he is endued. Therefore we do not beholde him a far of out of our selues, that righteousnesse may be imputed vnto vs, but because we haue put on him, and are grafted into his body: finally because he hath vouchsaued to make vs one with him, therefore we glorie that we haue a fellowship of righteousnesse with him. So is Osianders sclaunderous cauillation confuted, where he saith that we compt faith righteousnesse, as though we spoiled Christ of his right, when we say that we come by faith empty to him, to geue roume to his grace, that he onely may fil vs. But Osiander refusing this spirituall conioining, enforceth a grosse mingling with the faithfull, and therefore he odiously calleth all them Zuinglians that subscribe not to his fantasticall errour, cōcerning essentiall righteousnesse: because they do nor thinke that Christ is substācially eaten in the Lordes supper. As for me, I compt it a great glorie to be so reproched proched of a proude man & geuen to his owne erros. Albeit he toucheth not me onely, but also other writers well knowen to the world, whom he ought to haue modestly reuerenced. It moueth me nothing, which meddle not with mine owne priuate cause: and so much the more sincerely I handle this cause, being free from all corrupt affection. Where as therefore he so importunately requireth essentiall righteousnesse, and the essentiall dwelling of Christ in vs, it tendeth to this ende: First that God should with a grosse mixture poure him self into vs, as he faineth a fleshly eating of Christ in ỹ supper: secondly that God shoulde breath his righteousnesse into vs, whereby we may be really righteous with him: for by his opinion, this righteousnesse is as well God him selfe, as the goodnesse or holinesse, or pureness of God. I will not spende much labour in wiping away the testimonies that he bringeth, which he wrongfully wresteth from the heauenly life to this present state. Through Christ (sayth Peter) are geuē vs the precious & most great promises, that we should be made partakers of the nature of God: As though we weare nowe such as the Gospell promised that we shalbe at the last comming of Christ: yea Iohn telleth vs, that we shall then see God as he is, because we shalbe like vnto him. Onely I thought good to geue a small tast to the readers, that I do of purpose passe ouer these trifles: not for that it is harde to confute them, but because I will not be tedious in a superfluous worke. 1. Pet. 1. 4. 1. Iohn. 3. 2.

11 But in the secōde point lurketh more poison, where he teacheth that we are righteous together with God. I thinke I haue already sufficiently proued, that although this doctrine were not so pestilent, yet because it is colde and fruteless, & of it selfe so vaine that it melteth away, it ought worthely to be vnsauorie to sound and godly Readers. But this is an intolerable wickednesse, vnder pretese of double righteousnesse, to enfeble the earnest assuraunce of saluation, and to cary vs aboue the cloudes, that we should not embrace by faith the grace of propiciation, & call vpon God with quiet mindes. Osiander scorneth thē, that teach that this word Iustifying is a law terme: because, we must be righteous in deede. And he abhorreth nothinge more than so say, that we be iustified by free imputation. But, if God do not iustifie vs by acquiting and pardoning, what meaneth that saying of Paule, God was in Christ reconciling the world to him selfe, not imputing to men their sinnes. For, him that had done no sinne, he made sinne for vs, that we might be the righteousnes of God in him. First I winne thus much, that they be iudged righteous that be reconciled to God. The manner howe is declared, for that God iustifieth 1. Cor. 5. 21.

by forgeuing: as in an other place iuſtification is ſet as contrary to accuſation, which comparing of them as contraries, doth clerely ſhewe that it is a phraſe borrowed from the vſe of the lawe. And there is no man being but meanly practiſed in the Hebrew tongue, if he haue a ſober braine, that is ignoraunt that this phraſe came from thence, and whereunto it tendeth, and what it meaneth. Nowe where Paule ſayeth that Dauid deſcribed ỹ righteouſneſſe without workes, in theſe wordes, Bleſſed are they whoſe ſinnes are forgeuen: Let Oſiander aunſwere me whether this be a full definition or but halfe a one. Truely Paule bringeth not in the Prophet for a witneſſe, as though he taught that forgeueneſſe of ſinnes is but a part of righteouſnes, or a thing that ioineth with other to the iuſtifying of man: But he includeth whole righteouſnes in free forgeueneſſe, pronouncing the man bleſſed, whoſe ſinnes are couered, to whom God hath forgeuen iniquities, and to whom he imputeth no tranſgreſſions He doth meaſure and iudge ſuch a mans felicitie thereby, becauſe he is not this way righteous in deede, but by imputation. Oſiander taketh exception and ſayeth, that this ſhould be ſclaunderous to God, and contrary to his nature, if he ſhould iuſtifie them that in deede remaine ſtill wicked. But we muſt remember, as I haue already ſaide, that the grace of iuſtifying is not ſeuered from regeneration, although they be ſeuerall things. But becauſe it is more than ſufficiently knowen by experience, that there abide alwaies in the righteous ſome remnantes of ſinne, it muſt needes be that they be farre otherwiſe iuſtified than they be reformed into newneſſe of life. For this later point of reformation, God ſo beginneth in his elect, & throughout the whole courſe of their life, by litle & litle, & ſomtime ſlowly procedeth in it, that they be alway before his ſeat in danger of ỹ iudgement of death, But he iuſtifieth them, not by partmeale, but ſo that they may freely, as clothed with the purenes of Chriſt, appere in heauen For no portion of righteouſneſſe could appeaſe our conſciences, till they be ſatisfied that God is fully pleaſed with vs, becauſe we be righteous in his ſight with out exception. Wherupon followeth, that the doctrine of iuſtification is miſturned, yea ouerturned from the very foundatiõ, when doutinge is caſt into mens mindes, when the affiance of ſaluation is ſhaken, when the free and dredleſſe inuocation is hindered, yea when quiet and tranquillitie with ſpirituall ioy is not ſtabliſhed. Wherevpon Paule gathereth an argument by contraries, to proue, that the inheritance is not by the lawe. For by this meane faith ſhould be made voide, which if it haue reſpect to workes, is ouerthrowen, becauſe none of the moſt holy ſhall therin finde wherevpon to truſt.

Rom. 4. 7. Pſ. 32. 1.

Gala. 3. 18.

This

This difference of iustifyinge and regeneratinge (which two thinges. Osiander confounding together, calleth two sortes of righteousnes) is very well expressed by Paule: For speaking of his reall righteousnes in deede, or of the vprightnes wherewith he was endued (which Osiander nameth essentiall righteousnesse) he lamentably crieth out: Wretch that I am: who shall deliuer me from the body of this death? Rom. 7. 24. But fleeinge to the righteousnes which is grounded vpon the onely mercy of God, he gloriously triumpheth ouer both life, death, reproches, hunger, sword, and all aduersities. Who shall accuse the electes of God whome he iustifieth? For I am surely perswaded, that nothing Rom. 8. 33. shall seuere vs frō his loue in Christ. He plainly publisheth, ỳ he hath the righteousnes which alone fully sufficeth to saluatiō before God, so that the wretched bondage which he knowing to be in himselfe, did alitle before bewaile his estate, may not monish nor any way hinder his boldnes to glory. This diuersity is sufficiently knowen, and so familiar to all the holy ones, that grone vnder the burden of iniquites, & yet with victorious confidence, do mount vp aboue all feares. As for this that Osiander obiecteth, that it disagreeth with the nature of God, it falleth vpon himselfe. For although he clotheth the holy ones with a double righteousnes as it were with a furred garment, yet he is compelled to confesse that without forgiueneesse of sinnes they neuer pleased God. If that be true, then at least let him graunt, that they which are not righteous in deede, are accompted righteous accordinge to the appointed proportion of imputation, as they call it. But how farre shall a sinner extende this free acceptation that is put in place of righteousnes? shall he measure it by the pound or by the ounce? Truely he shall hang doutfull and wauering to this side & that side, because he may not take vnto him so much righteousnesse as shalbe necessary to stablishe confidence. It is happy that he that would binde God to a law, is not iudge of this cause. But this shall stande stedfast, that thou mayst be iustified in thy sayinges and ouercome when thou art iudged. But howe great presumption is it Ps. 51.6 to condemne the chiefe iudge when he freely acquiteth, that this answere may not be in force, I will haue mercy vpon whome I will haue mercy. And yet the intercession of Moses which God did put to Exo. 32. 19. silence with this saying, tended not to this ende that he should spare none, but that he should acquite altogether, taking away their condemnation although they were gilty of offense. And we do say that they which were loste haue their sinnes buried and so are iustified before God: because, as God hateth sinne, so he cā loue none but thē whom he iustifieth. But this is a maruellous manner of iustifyinge.

that they being couered with the righteouſneſſe of Chriſt ſtand not in feare of the iudgement which they haue deſerued, and when they worthily condemne themſelues are accompted righteous without themſelues.

12 But the readers are to be warned, that they take good heede to the miſtery which he braggeth that he will not hide from them. For after that he hath longe and largely trauailed to proue that we do not obtaine fauour with God by the only imputatiō of the righteouſneſſe of Chriſt, becauſe this ſhould be impoſſible for him to compt them for righteous that are not righteous, (I vſe his owne wordes) at length he concludeth that Chriſt was giuen vs vnto righteouſnes, not in reſpect of his nature of manhoode but of his nature of Godhead: and that although this righteouſneſſe can not be found but in the perſon of the Mediatour, yet it is the righteouſneſſe not of mā but of God. he doth now binde vp his rope made of two righteouſneſſes, but he plainely taketh away the office of iuſtifyinge from Chriſtes nature of manhode. But it is good to ſee how he diſagreeth. It is ſayd in the ſame place, that Chriſt was made vnto wiſdom, which belongeth to none but to the eternal word. Therefore Chriſt in that he is man is not wiſdom. I anſwere that the onely begotten ſonne of
Col. 2. 3 God was in deede his eternall wiſedome, but in Paules wrytinges that name is giuen him in diuerſe wiſe, becauſe all the treaſures of wiſdom and knowledge are layd vp in him. That therefore which he had with his father, he diſcloſed vnto vs: and ſo that which Paul ſaith is not referred vnto the eſſence of the ſonne of God, but to our vſe, and is rightly applied to Chriſtes nature of manhoode: becauſe although he ſhined a light in darkenes, before that he did put on fleſh, Iohn. 8. 12. yet it was a hidden light till the ſame Chriſt came foorth in the nature of man, the ſhininge ſunne of righteouſneſſe, which therefore calleth himſelfe the light of the world. Alſo it is fooliſhly obiected of him, that the power of iuſtifying is farre aboue both Angels and men foraſmuch as this hangeth not vpon the worthineſſe of any creature, but vpon the ordinance of God. If Angels will take vpon them to ſatisfie God, they can nothinge preuaile, becauſe they are not appom-Ga. 3 13 ted therunto. But this ſingularly belonged to Chriſt being man, which was made ſubiect to the law, to redeme vs from the curſe of the law. Alſo he doth ſclaunderouſly cauill, that they which deny that Chriſt is our righteouſneſſe accordinge to his nature of Godhead, do leaue but one part of Chriſt, & (which is worſe) do make two gods, becauſe although they confeſſe, that God dwelleth in vs, yet they ſay againe that we are not righteous by the righteouſnes of God. For although we call Christ the author of life, in respect that he suffered death to destroy him that had the power of death, we do not byandby take away that honor from whole Christ as he was openly shewed God in the flesh, but we only make a distinction how the righteousnes of God is conueied vnto vs, ý we may enioy it. In which point Osiander hath too fowly erred. Neither do we deny that that which is openly giuen vs in Christ, proceedeth frō the secret grace & power of God: & we striue not against this, that the righteousnesse which Christ giueth vs is the righteousnesse of God that proceedeth from God: but we hold this stedfastly, that we haue righteousnes & life in the death & resurrection of Christ. I ouerpasse that heaping together of places wherof he may wel be ashamed, wherwith he hath tediously cōbred the readers without choise & without common reason, to proue that wheresoeuer is made mention of righteousnes, there ought to be vnderstanded this essentiall righteousnes. As where Dauid calleth vpon the righteousnesse of God to help him: whereas he doth the same aboue a hundred times, Osiander sticketh not to corrupt so many sentences. And nothing strōger is the other obiection, that that is properly and rightly called righteousnesse, whereby we be moued to do rightly, but that God only worketh in vs both to will & to performe. For we do also not deny, but that God reformeth vs with his Spirite vnto holinesse of life and righteousnes: but we must first see whether he do this by himselfe and immediatly, or by the hand of his Sonne, with whom he hath left all the fullnesse of his holy Spirit, that with his abundant store he should supply the nede of his members. Moreouer although righteousnesse come vnto vs out of the secret fountaine of the godhead, yet it followeth not that Christ which sanctified himselfe in the flesh for our sakes, was righteousnes vnto vs according to his nature of godhead. No lesse fonde is that which he sayth, that Christ himselfe was righteous by the righteousnes of God. Because vnlesse ý wil of his father had moued him, he could not himselfe haue satisfied ý office cōmitted vnto him. For though we haue in an other place sayd, that all the deseruings of Christ himselfe do procede from the mere good will of God, yet ý maketh nothing to that fantasticall thing, wherwith Osiander bewitcheth both his owne & simple mens eyes. For who woulde suffer a man to gather this conclusion, that because God is the fountaine & beginning of our righteousnesse, therfore we be essentially righteous, & the essence of Gods righteousnes dwelleth in vs? In redeminge the church (sayth Esay) God did put on his righteousnesse as a harnesse: but did he so to spoile Christ of his armure which he hadde giuen him, to make him to be no perfect redeemer? But the Prophet meant nothing elſe but that God borowed nothing out of himſelfe, nor was holpen by any aide to redeme vs. Which thing Paul briefely expreſſed in other wordes, ſaying that he gaue vs ſaluation to the ſhewinge of his righteouſneſſe. But this doth not ouerthrowe that which he teacheth in an other place, that we are righteous by the obedience of one man. Finally whoſoeuer wrappeth vp a double righteouſneſſe, that poore ſoules may not reſt in the mere only mercy of God, he doth in a mockery crowne Chriſt with thornes.

Rom. 3. 25.

Rom. 5. 19.

13 But forasmuch as a great parte of men, imagineth righteouſnes to be made of faith and works, let vs firſt ſhew this alſo, that the righteouſneſſe of faith and workes do ſo differ, that when the one is ſtabliſhed, the other muſt needes be ouerthrowen. The Apoſtle ſayeth that he eſteemed all things as dong, that he might winne Chriſt and finde in him the righteouſneſſe that is of God by fayth, comptinge not his righteouſneſſe that which is by the law, but that which is by the faith of Ieſu Chriſt. You ſee that here is alſo a cõpariſon of cõtraries & that here is declared that he which wil obtaine the righteouſneſſe of Chriſt, muſt forſake his owne righteouſneſſe. Therefore in an other place he ſayeth, that this was the cauſe of fall to the Iewes that going about to ſtabliſh their owne righteouſnes, they were not ſubiect to the righteouſneſſe of God. If in ſtabliſhing our owne righteouſneſſe we ſhake away the righteouſneſſe of God, therefore to obtaine Gods righteouſnes our owne muſt be vtterly aboliſhed. And he ſheweth the ſame thinge, when he ſayth, that our gloryinge is not excluded by the law, but by faith. Wherupon followeth that ſo long as there remaineth any righteouſneſſe of workes, howe litle ſoeuer it be, there ſtill remaineth to vs ſome matter to glory vpõ. Now if faith exclude all glorying, then the righteouſneſſe of workes can no wiſe be coupled with the righteouſnes of faith. To this effect he ſpeaketh ſo plainely in the 4. chapter to Romaines, that he leaueth no roume for cauillations or ſhiftes: If (ſayth he) Abraham was iuſtified by workes, he hath glory. And immediatly he addeth: but he hath no glory in the ſight of God It followeth therfore that he was not iuſtified by workes. Then he bringeth an other argument by contraries, when reward is rendered to workes, that is done of det and not of grace. But righteouſneſſe is giuen to faith according to grace: Therfore it is not of the deſeruinges of workes. Wherefore farewell their dreame, that imagine a righteouſnes made of faith & workes mingled together.

14 The Sophiſters thinke that they haue a ſutle ſhift, that make

to themselues sport and pastime with wresting of Scripture and with vaine cauillations. For they expound works in that place to be those which mē not yet regenerate do only literally & by the endeuour of free will without the grace of Christ: & do say that it belongeth not to spirituall workes. So by their opinion a man is iustified both by faith & by workes, so that the workes be not his owne, but the gifts of Christ and frutes of regeneration. For they say that Paule spake so for none other cause, but to conuince ỹ Iewes, trusting vpon their owne workes, that they did foolishly presume to claime righteousnesse to themselues, sith the only Spirit of Christ doth giue it vs, and not any endeuour by our owne motion of nature. But they do not marke that in the comparison of the righteousnesse of the lawe and the righteousnes of the Gospell, which Paul bringeth in in an other place, all workes are excluded with what title soeuer they be adorned. For he teacheth that this is the righteousnesse of the lawe, that he should obtaine saluation that hath performed that which the law commaundeth: & that this is ỹ righteousnes of faith, if we beleue that Christ died and is risen againe. Moreouer we shall hereafter shew in place fit for it, that sanctification & righteousnes are seuerall benefites of Christ. Wherupon followeth that the very spirituall workes come not into the accompt, when the power of iustifyinge is ascribed to faith. And where Paul denieth (as I euen now alleaged) that Abraham had any thinge whereupon to glory before God, because he was not made righteous by workes: this ought not to be restrained to the literall and outward kinde of vertues, or to the endeuour of free will. But although the life of the patriarch Abraham were spirituall & in maner Angelike, yet he had not sufficient deseruinges of workes to purchace him righteousnesse before God. Ga.3.11

15 The Scholemē teach a litle more grosly that mingle their preparations: but these do lesse infect the simple and vnskilful with corrupt doctrine, vnder pretense of Spirit and grace hiding the mercy of God which onely is able to appease tremblinge consciences. But we confesse with Paul that the doers of the law are iustified before God: but because we are all farre from the keeping of the law, hereupon we gather, that the workes which should most of all haue auailed to righteousnes, do nothing help vs because we lacke thē. As for the cōmon Papistes or Schoolemen, they are in this point doubly deceiued: both because they call faith an assuredneſse of conscience in lookinge for reward at the hande of God for deseruinges, and also because they expounde the grace of God not to be a free imputation of righteousnesse, but the holy Ghost helping to the endeuour of holinesse. They

Heb.11. 6. read in the Apoſtle that he which commeth to God, muſt firſt beleue that there is a God, and then that he is a rendrer of reward to them that ſeeke him. But they marke not, what is the maner of ſeking. And that they are deceiued in the name of grace, is plainely proued by their owne wrytings. For Lombard expoundeth, that iuſtification by Christ is giuen vs two wayes. Firſt (ſayth he) the death of Chriſt doth iuſtifie vs, when by it charity is ſtirred vp in our heartes, by which we are made righteous. Secondly that by the ſame death ſinne is deſtroyed, whereby Sathan held vs captiue, ſo that nowe he hath not whereby to condemne vs. You ſee how he conſidereth the grace of God principally in iuſtificatiō, to be ſo far as we are directed to good works by the grace of the holy Ghoſt. He woulde forſoth haue followed the opinion of Auguſtine: but he foloweth him a far of, & goeth far out of the way from rightly followinge him: becauſe if Auguſtine haue ſpoken any thing plainly he darkeneth it, if there be any thinge in Auguſtine not very vnpure, he corrupteth it. The Scholemē haue ſtil ſtraied from worſe to worſe, till with headlong fall at length they be rolled downe into a Pelagian errour. And the very ſentence of Auguſtine, or at leaſt his manner of ſpeakinge is not altogether to be receiued. For though he ſingularly well taketh from man all praiſe of righteouſneſſe and aſſigneth it wholly to the grace of God, yet he referreth grace to ſanctification, wherby we are renued into newneſſe of life by the holy Ghoſt.

16 But the Scripture, when it ſpeaketh of ỹ righteouſnes of faith, leadeth vs to a far other ende, that is to ſay, that turning away frō the loking vpō our owne workes, we ſhould only loke vnto the mercy of God & perfectiō of Chriſt. For it teacheth this order of iuſtification, that firſt God vouchſaueth to embrace man beinge a ſinner with his mere & free goodnes conſidering nothing in him but miſery wherby he may be moued to mercy, foraſmuch as he ſeeth him altogether naked & voide of good workes, fetching frō himſelfe the cauſe to do him good: then, that he moueth the ſinner himſelfe with feeling of his goodnes, which deſpeiring vpon his owne workes caſteth al ỹ ſumme of his ſaluation vpon Gods mercy. This is the feelinge of faith, by which feling the ſinner cōmeth into poſſeſſion of his ſaluation, when he acknowledgeth by the doctrine of the Goſpel that he is recōciled to God: that obtaininge forgiuenes of ſinnes by meanes of the righteouſnes of Chriſt, he is iuſtified: & although he be regenerate by the Spirite of God, he thinketh vpon continuall righteouſneſſe layed vp for him not in the good workes to which he applieth himſelf, but in ỹ only righteouſnes of Chriſt. Whē theſe things ſhalbe euery one particular ticularly weied, they shall giue a perfect declaration of our sentence. Albeit they might be better disposed in an other order thā they are set forth, But it maketh litle matter, so ỳ they hang together in such sort that we may haue the whole matter truely declared & surely proued.

17 Here it is good to remember the relation that we haue before said to be betwene faith and the Gospell: becaus it is sayd for this cause that faith iustifieth, for that it receiueth & embraceth the righteousnesse offered in the gospel. And whereas it is sayd to be offered by the gospel, thereby all consideration of works is excluded. Which thing Paul declareth many times else where, but most plainly in two places For, to the Romaines, cōparing the law & the gospel together he sayth: the righteousnes that is by the law is thus, the mā that doth these thinges shall liue in them. But the righteousnesse that is of faith offereth saluation, if thou beleue in thy heart and confesse with thy mouth the Lord Iesus, & that the father hath raised him vp from the dead. See you not how he maketh this the difference of the law and the gospel, that the law giueth righteousnesse to workes, and the gospell giueth free righteousnesse without helpe of workes? it is a notable place, and that may deliuer vs out of many hard doutes, if we vnderstande that the same righteousnesse that is giuen vs by the gospel is free from all conditions of the law. This is the reason, why he doth more than once with great seeminge of contrariety set the promise by way of opposition against the lawe, as if the inheritance be of the law, then is it not of the promise: and all the rest in the same chapter to the same effect. Truely the law it self hath also her promises. Therfore there must needes be in the promises of the gospell, somethinge different & diuerse from the promises of the law, vnlesse we will confesse that the comparison is very fonde. But what diuersity shall this be, vnlesse it be that they are freely giuen, and vpholden by the only mercy of God, whereas the promises of the law hang vpon the condition of workes. Neither lette any manne here carp against me, and say, that in this place the righteousnesse is reiected which menne of their owne force and freewill would compell God to receiue: forasmuch as Paul without exception teacheth that the law in commaundinge profiteth nothinge: becaus there is none not only of the common multitude, but also of the perfectest, that fulfilleth it. Loue vndoutedly is the chiefe point of the law: when the Spirite of God frameth vs vnto it, why is it not to vs a cause of righteousnesse, but for that euen in the holy ones it is vnperfect, and therefore of it selfe deserueth no reward.

Rom.10 5.

Ga.3.18

Ro.8.2.

18 The second place is this. It is manifest that no man is iustified by the law before God: Becauſe the righteous man ſhall liue by faith, Ga. 3.12 But the law is not of faith: but the man that doth theſe thinges ſhall liue in them. How coulde this argument otherwiſe ſtande together, vnleſſe we agree vpon this point, that workes come not into the accompt of faith, but are vtterly to be ſeuered from it? The lawe (ſayth he) differeth from faith. Why ſo? becauſe workes are required to the righteouſneſſe thereof. Therefore it followeth that workes are not required to the righteouſneſſe of faith. By this relation it appeareth, that they which are iuſtified by faith are iuſtified beſide the deſeruing of workes, yea without the deſeruing of workes, becauſe faith receiueth that righteouſnes which the Goſpel giueth. And the Goſpel differeth from the law in this point, that it bindeth not righteouſnes to workes, but ſetteth it in the only mercy of God. Like hereunto is that

Rom. 4. 2. which he affirmeth to the Romaines, that Abraham had nothinge to glory vpon, becauſe faith was imputed to him vnto righteouſneſſe, & he addeth a confirmation, becauſe then there is place for the righteouſneſſe of faith, whē there are no workes to which a reward is due. Where be workes (ſayth he) due reward is rendered vnto them: that which is giuen to faith is freely giuen. For the very meaninge of the words that he vſeth in that place ſerue to proue the ſame. Wheras he adioyneth within a litle after, that therfore we obtaine the inheritace by faith as according to grace, hereupon he gathereth that the inheritance is of free gift, becauſe it is receiued by fayth: and howe commeth ỳ, but becauſe faith without any help of workes leaneth wholly vpon the mercy of God? And in the ſame meaning, without dout he
Rom. 3. 21. teacheth in an other place, that the righteouſnes of God was openly ſhewed without the law, although it haue witneſſe borne of it by the law & the Prophets: becauſe excluding the law, he ſayth that it is not holpen by workes, and that we obtaine it not by working, but come empty that we may receiue it.

19 By this time the reader perceiueth with what equity the Sophiſters do at this day cauill at our doctrine, when we ſay that man is iuſtified by faith only. They dare not deny that man is iuſtified by faith becauſe it is ſo often found in Scripture: but becauſe this word, Only, is neuer expreſſed, they can not abide to haue ſuch an addition made. Is it ſo? But what will they anſwere to theſe wordes of Paule, where
Ro. 4 2. he affirmeth that righteouſneſſe is not of faith except it be freely giuen? Howe can free gift agree with workes? And with what cauillations will they mocke out, that which he ſayth in an other place, that Rom. 1. 17. the righteouſneſſe of God is manifeſtly ſhewed in the Goſpell? If righteouſneſſe be manifeſtly ſhewed in the Goſpell, ſurely therin is con-

contained not a torne or halfe righteousnesse but full and perfect. Therefore the law hath no place therein. And they stand vpon not onely a false but also a foolish shift about this exclusiue word, Only. Doth not he perfectly enough giue all thinges to onely fayth, that taketh all thinges from workes? What, I pray you meane these sayinges: that righteousnesse was manifestly shewed without the lawe: that man is iustified freely and without the workes of the lawe? Here they haue a witty shift to escape withall, which although they deuised it not themselues but borrowed it of Origen & certaine of the old writers, yet is very foolish. They prate that the ceremoniall workes of the law, not the morall, are excluded. They profit so with continuall brawlinge, that they knowe not the very first rules of Logike. Do they thinke that the Apostle doted when he alleaged these places to proue his sayinge? The man that shall do these thinges shall liue in them: and, Cursed is euery one that fulfilleth not all thinges that are written in the volume of the lawe. Vnlesse they be madde, they will not say that life was promised to the kepers of Ceremonies, or curse thretened onely to the breakers of them. If these places be to be vnderstanded of the moral law, it is no dout that the morall workes also are excluded from the power of iustifying. To the same purpose serue these argumentes that he vseth: because the knowledge of sinne was by the lawe, therefore righteousnesse is not by the lawe. Because the lawe worketh wrath, therefore it worketh not righteousnesse. Because the lawe can not make conscience assured, therefore also it can not giue righteousnesse. Because faith is imputed vnto righteousnesse, therefore righteousnesse is not a reward of worke, but is geuen beinge not due. Because we are iustified by faith, therefore glorynge is cutte of. If there had bin a law giuen that might giue life, then righteousnesse were truely by the law: but God hath shutte vp all vnder sinne that the promise might be giuen to the beleuers. Let them nowe fondly say if they dare, that these thinges are spoken of ceremonies and not of manners: but very children would hisse out so great shamelesnesse. Therefore let vs holde this for certaine, that the whole lawe is spoken of, when the power of iustifyinge is taken away from the law.

Rom. 3. 21. & 24

Ga. 3. 10

Rom. 3. 20. & 4. 15

Ga. 3. 21

20 But if any man marueil why the Apostle vsed such an addition, not beinge content with onely naming of workes: the reason is ready to be shewed for it. For, although workes be so hiely esteemed, yet they haue that value by the allowance of God, rather than by their owne worthinesse. For who can boast vnto God of any righteousnesse of workes, but that which he hath allowed? Who dare claime any reward as due vnto thē, but such as he hath promised? They have therfore this of the bountifulnes of God, ỹ they are cōpted worthy both of the name & reward of righteousnesse: & they be of value only for this cause, whē the purpose of him that doth them is by thē to shew Ga. 3. 7 his obediēce to God. Wherfore ỹ Apostle in an other place, to prove that Abraham could not be iustified by workes, alleageth that ỹ law was giuen, almost foure hundred & thirty yeares after the couenant made. Vnlearned mē would laugh at such an argumēt, because there might be righteous workes before the publishing of the law. But because he knew ỹ there was no such value in works but by the testimony & vouchsauing of God, therfore he taketh it as a thing cōfessed ỹ before the law they had no power to iustifie. We vnderstand why he namely expresseth ỹ worke of the law, whē he meaneth to take away iustification from any workes because controuersy may be moued of those & none other. Albeit somtime he excepteth all workes without any addition, as when he sayth that by the testimony of Dauid blesRo. 4. 6. sednes is assigned to that man, to whom the Lord imputeth righteousnes without workes. Therfore they can with no cauillations bring to passe, but that we shal get this general exclusiue, only. And they do in vaine seeke that trifling suttelty, that we are iustified by that only faith which worketh by loue, so that righteousnes must stande vpon Ga. 5. 6. loue. We graunt in deede with Paul, that no other faith iustifieth, but that which is effectually workinge with charity: but that faith taketh not her power of iustifying from that effectualnes of charity. Yea it doth by no other meane iustifie, but because it bringeth vs into the communicating of the righteousnes of Christ. Or else all that which the Apostle so earnestly presseth, shoulde fall to nought. To him that

Rom. 4. 4. worketh (sayth he) the reward is not reckened accordinge to grace, but accordinge to det. But to him that worketh not, but beleueth in him that iustifieth the vnrighteous, his faith is imputed vnto righteousnes, Could he speake more euidently than in so saying? that there is no righteousnes of faith but where there are no works to which any reward is due: & that onely then faith is imputed vnto righteousnes, when righteousnes is giuen by grace that is not due.

21 Now let vs examine how true that is, which is sayd in the definition, that the righteousnes of faith is the reconciliation with God, which consisteth vpon the only forgiuenes of sinnes. We must alway returne to this principle, that the wrath of God resteth vpon all mē, so long as they continue to be sinners. That hath Esay excellētly wel Esa: 59. 7. set out in these wordes: The hand of the Lord is not shortned, that he is not able to saue: nor his care dulled that he cā not heare: but your iniqui-iniquities haue made disagreemēt betwene you & your God,& your sines haue hidden his face from you that he heareth you not. We heare that sinne is the diuision betwene man & God, & the turninge away of Gods face from the sinner. Neither can it otherwise be. For it is disagreeing frō his righteousnes to haue any fellowship with sinne. Wherfore the Apostle teacheth that man is enemy to God till he be restored into fauour by Christ. Whom therfore the Lord receiueth into joyninge with him, him he is sayd to iustifie: because he can neither receiue him into fauour nor joyne him with himselfe, but he must of a sinner make him righteous. And we further say, that this is done by the forgiuenesse of sinnes. For if they whom the Lord hath reconciled to himselfe be iudged by their workes, they shalbe found all sinners in deede, who yet must be free & cleane from sinne. It is certaine therfore that they whom God embraceth, are no otherwise made righteous, but because they are cleansed by hauing the spottes of their sinnes wiped away by forgiuenes, that such a righteousnesse may in one word be called the forgiuenes of sinnes. Rom. 5. 8.

11 Both these are most clerely to be seene by these words of Paul, which I haue already alleaged: God was in Christ reconcilinge the world to himselfe, not imputing their sinnes to man, & he hath left with vs the word of reconciliatiō. And then he addeth the summe of his message, that him which knew no sinne he made sinne for vs, that we might be made the righteousnes of God in him. Here he nameth righteousnesse and reconciliation without difference, that we may perceiue that the one is mutually contained vnder the other. And he teacheth the manner to attaine this righteousnesse to be when our sinnes are not imputed vnto vs. Wherfore dout thou not hereafter how God doth iustifie vs, when thou heareſt that he doth reconcile vs to himselfe by not imputing sinnes. So to ỹ Romaines he proueth by the testimony of Dauid, that righteousnes is imputed to man without workes, because Dauid pronounceth the man blessed whose iniquities are forgiuen, whose sinnes are couered, to whom the Lord hath not imputed his offenses. Without dout by blessednes he there meaneth righteousnesse. As sith he affirmeth the same to stande in the forgiuenesse of sinnes, there is no cause why we should otherwise define it. Therefore Zacharie the father of Iohn the Baptist singeth that the knowledge of saluatiō consisteth in the forgiuenes of sinnes. Which rule Paule followinge in his Sermon which he made to the Antiochians concerninge the summe of saluation, as Luke reporteth it, concluded in this maner: by him forgiuenes of sinnes is preached vnto you, & euery one that beleueth in him is iustified from all these 2. things, frō ẅ ye could not be iuſtified in the law of Moſes. The Apoſtle ſo knitteth the forgiuenes of ſinnes with righteouſnes, ẏ he ſheweth ẏ they be both all one. Wherupō he rightfully reaſoneth ẏ the righteouſnes is freely giuen vnto vs, which we obtaine by the louing kindnes of God. Neither ought it to ſeme a ſtrāge vnuſed ſpeach, that the faithful are righteous before God, not by workes, but by free acceptatiō: ſith both it is ſo oft found in ẏ Scripture, & the old authors alſo do ſomtime ſo ſpeake. For Auguſtin ſaith thus in one place: The righteouſnes of the ſaintes in this world ſtādeth rather in forgiuenes of ſinnes, thā in perfection of vertues. Wherwith agreeth the notable ſentēces of Bernard: Not to ſinne is the righteouſnes of God: but ẏ righteouſnes of man, is the merciful kindenes of God. He had before affirmed that Chriſt is to vs righteouſnes in abſolution, and therfore that they only are righteous that haue obtained pardon by mercy.

Ser. 22.

23 Herupō alſo followeth this, that by the only meane of Chriſts righteouſnes, we obtain to be iuſtified before God. Which is aſmuch in effect as if it were ſaid, ẏ mā is not righteous in himſelf, but becauſe the righteouſnes of Chriſt is by imputatiō enterpartened with him, which thing is worthy to be heedefully marked. For ẏ triflinge errour vaniſheth away, to ſay ẏ mā is therfore iuſtified by faith, becauſe faith taketh part of the Spirit of God by which he is made righteous, which is ſo cōtrary to the doctrine aboue taught, ẏ they can neuer be made to agree together. For it is no dout ẏ he is void of his own righteouſnes, ẏ is taught to ſeke righteouſnes without himſelfe. This the Apoſtle affirmeth moſt plainly when he writeth ẏ he which knew no ſinne was made for vs a propitiatory ſacrifice to cleanſe away ſinne, that we might be made the righteouſnes of God in him. You ſee ẏ our righteouſnes is not in vs but in Chriſt, & ẏ it belongeth to vs only by this title, becauſe we be partakers of Chriſt, becauſe we poſſeſſe all his riches with him. And it maketh nothing to the contrary ẏ in an other place he teacheth, ẏ ſinne was condēned of ſinne in the fleſh of Chriſt, that the righteouſneſſe of the law might be fulfilled in vs: where he meaneth no other fulfillinge, but ẏ which we obtaine by imputation. For the Lorde Chriſt doth in ſuch ſort cōmunicate his righteouſnes with vs, that after a certaine maruellous maner, he poureth the force therof into vs, ſo much as pertaineth to the iudgement of God. It appeareth that he did no otherwiſe meane, by ẏ other ſentēce which he had ſpoken a litle before: As by the diſobediēce of one man we were made ſinners, ſo by the obedience of one mā we are iuſtified What is it elſe to ſet our righteouſnes in ẏ obedience of Chriſt, but to affirme that hereby only we are accōpted righteous, becauſe the obediēce of Chriſt

Christ is imputed vnto vs as if it were our owne? Therfore me thinkes that Ambrose hath excellētly well shewed how there is an example of this righteousnes in the blessing of Iacob. For as Iacob hauing not of himselfe deserued the preeminency of the first begotten sonne, hid himselfe in the apparel of his brother, & being clothed with his brothers cote ỳ sauored of a most swete smell, he crept into ỳ fauour of his father, & receiued the blessing to his owne commodity vnder the person of an other: so we do lie hiddē vnder the precious pureness of Christ our elder brother, that we may get a testimony of righteousnes in ỳ sight of God. The words of Ambrose are these: Wheras Isaac smelt the sauour of the garmentes, paraduenture this is meant therby, that we are not iustified by workes but by faith: because fleshly weakenes hindreth workes, but the brightnes of faith which meriteth forgiuenes of sinnes, ouershadoweth the errour of deedes. And truely so it is. For, that we may appeare before the face of God vnto saluation, it is necessary for vs, to smell sweetely with his odour, and to haue our faultes couered and barred with his perfection. Li. 2 de Iac. & vita beata.

That, to the end vve may be fully persvvaded of the free iustification, vve must lift vp our mindes to the iudgement seate of God.

ALthough it appeareth by most euident testimonies, that all these thinges are true, yet we shall not clearly perceiue how necessary they be, vntill we haue set before our eyes those things ỳ ought to be the grounds of all this disputation. First therefore let vs remember this, that we purpose not to speake of the righteousnesse of a worldly iudicial court, but of the heauenly iudgement seate: that we should not measure by our owne small portiō, by what vprightnes of workes Gods iudgement may be satisfied. But it is maruelous to see with what rashnes & boldnes it is commonly debated. Yea & it is to be seene how none do more boldly or with fuller mouthes (as the saying is) prate of the righteousnes of workes, than they ỳ are either monstruously sicke of open outward diseases, or be ready to burst with inward vices. That cōmeth to passe because they thinke not vpon the righteousnes of God, whereof if they had neuer so litle feelinge, they would neuer make so great a mockery of it. And truely it is out of measure lightly regarded, when it is not acknowledged to be such & so perfect that nothing be imputed vnto it but euery way whole & absolute, & defiled with no vncleanesse: such as neuer was & neuer shall be able to be founde in man. It is in deede easie and ready for euery man in Schooles to talke vainely vpon the worthines of workes to iustifie men. But when they come into the sight of God, ſuch dalliances muſt auoide, becauſe there is earneſt doing vſed, and no trifling ſtrife about words. To this, to this I ſay, we muſt apply our minde, if we wil profitably enquire of true righteouſnes, how we may anſwere the heauenly iudge when he calleth vs to accompt. Lette vs thinke him to be a iudge, not ſuch a one as our owne vnderſtandings do of themſelues imagine: but ſuch a one as he is painted out in the Scripture, with whoſe brightnes the ſtarres ſhalbe darkened, by whoſe ſtrength the hils do melt away, by whoſe wrath the earth is ſhaken, by whoſe wiſdom the wiſe are taken in their ſuttelty, by whoſe pureneſſe all things are proued vnpure, whoſe righteouſneſſe the Angels are not able to beare, which maketh the innocent not innocēt, whoſe vengeance when it is once kindled pearceth to the bottome of hel. If he (I ſay) ſit to examine mens doinges, who ſhall appeare aſſured before his throne? who ſhall dwell with a deuouringe fier? ſayth the Prophet. Who ſhall abide with continuall burninges? he that walketh in righteouſneſſes & ſpeaketh truth, &c. But let ſuch a one come forth, whatſoeuer he be. But that aunſwere maketh, that none commeth forth. For this terrible ſaying ſoundeth to the contrary: Lord if thou make iniquities, Lorde, who ſhal abide it? truely all muſt needes immediatly periſh, as it is wrytten in an other place: Shall man be iuſtified if he be compared with God, or ſhall he be purer thā his maker? Beholde they that ſerue him are not faithful, and he hath found peruerſnes in his Angels. How much more ſhal they that dwel in houſes of clay, & that haue an earthly fundation, be conſumed with mothes? they ſhalbe cut downe from the morninge to the euening Beholde amonge his Saintes there is none faithfull, and the heauens are not cleane in his ſight: how much more is man abhominable and vnprofitable, which drinketh iniquity as water? I graunt in dede that in the booke of Iob, is mention made of a righteouſneſſe that is hier than the keeping of the law. And it is good to vnderſtand this diſtinction: becauſe although a man did ſatiſfie the law, yet he could not ſo ſtand to the triall of that righteouſneſſe that paſſeth all ſenſes. Therefore although Iob be cleare in his owne conſcience, yet he is amaſed, and not able to ſpeake becauſe he ſeeth that very angelike holineſſe can not appeaſe God, if he exactly weye their workes. But I therefore will at this time ouerpaſſe that righteouſneſſe which I haue ſpoken of, becauſe it is incomprehenſible: but only this I ſay, that if our life be examined by the rule of the wrytten law, we are more than ſenſeles if ſo many curſes wherwith the Lord hath willed vs to be awaked do not torment vs with horrible feare & amonge other this generall curſe, Curſed is euery one that doth not abide in all the thinges that are wrytten in the booke. Finally all this discourse shalbe but vnsauory and cold, vnlesse euery man yelde himselfe guilty before the heauenly iudge, and willingly throw downe and abace himselfe, beinge carefull how he may be acquited.

Iob. 15. 15.

2 To this, to this I say, we should haue lifted vp our eies, to learne rather to tremble for feare, than vainly to reioise. It is in deede easie, so long as ỹ cõparison extendeth no further than men, for euery man to thinke himself to haue somwhat which other ought not to despise. But when we rise vp to haue respect vnto God than suddenly ỹ confidẽce falleth to the ground & commeth to nought. And in the same case altogether is our soule in respect of God, as mans body is in respect of the heauen. For the sight of the eie, so long as it cõtinueth in vewing things that lie nere vnto it, doth shew of what pearcing force it is, but if it be once directed vp to the sunne, then being daseled and dulled with the too great brightnes therof, it feleth no lesse feblenes of it selfe in beholding of the sunne, thã it perceiued strength in beholding inferiour things. Therfore let vs not deceiue our selues with vaine confidence, although we compt our selues either egall or superiour to other men: but that is nothing to God, by whose will this knowledge is to be tried. But if our wildenes can not be tamed with these admonitions, he will answere to vs as he sayd to the Pharisees: you be they that iustifie your selues before mẽ: but that which is hie to men is abhominable to God. Now go thy way and proudly boast of thy righteousnes among men, while God from heauen abhorreth it. But what say the seruauntes of God that are truely instructed with his Spirit? Enter not into iudgement with thy seruant, because euery liuing man shal not be iustified in thy sight. An other sayth, although in somewhat diuerse meaning. Man can not be righteous with God: if he will contende with him, he shall not be able to answere one for a thousand. Here we now plainely heare what is the righteousnesse of God, euen such as can be satisfied with no workes of men, to whom when it examineth vs of a thousande offẽnses, we can not purge our selues of one. Such a righteousnes had that same chosen instrument of God Paule conceiued, when he professed that he knew himselfe guilty in nothing, but that he was not thereby iustified.

3 And not only such exãples are in the holy Scriptures, but also all godly wryters do shewe that they were alway of this minde. So Augustine sayth. What sayth he? If this be their only hope, where is the confidence of workes? For when he calleth it only, he leaueth none other. And Bernard ſayth. And in deede where is ſafe & ſtedfaſt reſt & aſſurednes for the weake, but in the woũdes of the Sauiour? & ſo much the ſurer I dwell therin as he is mightier to ſaue. The world rageth, the body burdeneth, the deuil lieth in waite. I fall not, becauſe I am builded vpon the ſure rocke. I haue ſinned a grieuous ſinne, my conſcience is troubled, but it ſhal not be ouertroubled, becauſe I ſhall remember the woundes of the Lord. And hereupon afterward he concludeth: Therefore my merite is the Lords takinge of mercy, I am not vtterly without merite, ſo long as he is not without mercies. But if the mercies of the Lord be many, then I alſo haue as many merites. Shal I ſing mine owne righteouſneſſes? Lord I will remẽber only thy righteouſnes. For that is alſo my righteouſnes, for he is made vnto me righteouſnes of God. Againe in an other place. This is ỹ whole merite of man, if he put his whole hope in him that ſaueth whole mã. Likewiſe where retaining peace to himſelfe he leaueth the glory to God. To thee (ſayth he) let glory remaine vnminiſhed: it ſhalbe well with me, if I haue peace. I forſwere glory altogether, leaſt if I wrongfully take vpõ me that which is not mine owne, I looſe alſo ỹ which is offred me. And more plainly in an other place he ſayth: Why ſhould the church be careful of merites, which hath a ſurer & ſafer way to glory vpon the purpoſe of God? So there is no cauſe why thou ſhouldeſt aske, by what merites we hope for good things, ſpecially when thou heareſt in the Prophet, I wil do it, not for your ſakes, but for mine own ſake, ſayth the Lord. It ſufficeth for merite, to know that merites ſuffice not. But as it ſufficeth for merit not to preſume of merites, ſo to be without merites ſufficeth to iudgement. Wheras he freely vſeth this word Merites for good workes, we muſt therein beare with the cuſtome. But in the end his purpoſe was to make hipocrites afrayd, that wildly range with licentiouſneſſe of ſinning againſt the grace of God. As afterward he expounded himſelfe, ſaying: Happy is the Church that neither wãteth merites without preſumption, nor preſumption without merites. It hath whereupon to preſume, but not merites. It hath merites, but to deſerue not to preſume. Is not the very not preſuming a deſeruing? Therefore it preſumeth ſo much the more boldly, becauſe it preſumeth not, hauing large matter to glory vpon, euen the many mercies of the Lord.

4 This is the trueth. The exerciſed conſciences perceiue this to be the onely ſanctuary of ſafety, wherein they may ſafely reſt themſelues when they haue to do with the iudgement of God. for if the Starres that ſeemed moſt bright in the night ſeaſon, do looſe their brightneſſe with light of ỹ ſunne, what thinke we ſhall become euen of the rareſt innocencie of man, when it ſhalbe compared with the pureneſſe of God? For that ſhalbe a moſt ſeuere examination, that ſhall pearce into the moſt hidden thoughtes of the heart, and (as Paule ſaith) ſhall reuele the ſecretes of darkneſſes, and diſcloſe the hidden thinges of the heart, which ſhall compell the lurking and vnwilling conſcience to vtter all thinges that now are fallen out of remembrance. The Deuell our accuſer will preſſe vs, which is priuie to all the wicked deedes that he hath moued vs to do. There the outward pompous ſhewes of good workes which now onely are eſteemed, ſhall nothing profit vs. Onely the pureneſſe of will ſhalbe required. Wherefore the Hypocriſie, not onely whereby euery man knowing himſelfe gilty before God deſireth to boſt himſelfe before men, but alſo wherewith euery man deceiueth himſelfe before God (as we be all inclined to ſtroke and flatter our ſelues) ſhall fall downe confounded, howſoeuer it now be proude with more than dronken boldneſſe. They that bend not their wit to ſuch a ſight, may in deede for a ſhort time ſwetely & pleaſantly frame a righteouſnes to themſelues, but it is ſuch a righteouſneſſe as ſhalbe by and by ſhaken away from them at the iudgement of God: like as great richeſſe heaped vp in a dreame do vaniſh away from men when they awake. But they that ſhall earneſtly as it were in the ſight of God, enquire of the true rule of righteouſneſſe, ſhall certainly finde that all the workes of mẽ, if they be iudged by their owne worthines, are nothing but defilings and filthineſſe: that that which among the common people is accompted righteouſneſſe, is before God mere wickedneſſe: that that which is iudged puritie, is vnclenneſſe: that that which is reckened glorie, is but ſhame. 1 Cor. 4.5.

¶ From this beholding of the perfection of God, let it not greue vs to deſcend to loke vpon our ſelues without flatterie or blinde affectiõ of loue. For it is no maruell if we be all ſo blinde in this behalf, for aſmuch as none of vs doth beware of the peſtilent tenderneſſe toward himſelf, which (as the Scripture crieth out) naturally ſticketh faſt in vs all. To euery man (ſaith Salomon) his owne way is right in his owne eyes. Againe. All the wayes of man ſeme cleane in his owne eyes. But what? Is he acquited by this blindneſſe? No. But (as he further ſaith in the ſame place) the Lord weyeth the heartes, that is to ſay, while man flattereth himſelfe by reaſon of the outwarde viſor of righteouſneſſe that he beareth in reſemblance, in the meane time the Lorde with his balance examineth the hidden vnclennes of the heart. Therefore ſith we ſo nothing profit with ſuch flatteries, let vs Pro. 21. 2. & 16. 2.

not wilfully mocke our ſelues to our owne deſtruction. But that we may trie our ſelues rightly, we muſt neceſſarily call back our cõſcience to the iudgement ſeate of God. For we do altogether neede his light to diſcloſe the ſecret foldinges of our peruerſneſſe, which otherwiſe lie too depely hidden. For then, and neuer till then, we ſhall clerely perceiue what is meant hereby: that man being rottenneſſe and a worme, abhominable and vaine, which drinketh wickednes as water

Eſa. 53 6. Prophet in old time complained of Iſrael, that all went aſtray like ſhepe, that euery one turned aſide to his owne way. For he there cõprehẽdeth all them, to whom the grace of redemption ſhould come. And the rigorouſneſſe of this examination ought to procede ſo far, till it ſubdue vs, ſo that we be fully throwen downe withall, and by that meane prepare vs to receiue the grace of Chriſt. For he is deceiued that thinketh himſelfe able to receiue the enioying of this grace, vntill he haue firſt thrown downe all hawtines of minde. This
1. Pet. 5. 5. is a knowen ſaying: that God confoundeth the proude, and geueth grace to the humble.

6 But what way is there to humble our ſelues, but that we being altogether needy and empty, ſhould geue place to the mercy of God? For I do not call it humbleneſſe, if we thinke that we haue any thing remaining with vs. And hetherto they haue taught a very hurtefull hypocriſie, that haue ioined theſe two things together, that we muſt thinke humbly of our ſelues before God, & that we muſt make ſome accompt of our owne righteouſneſſe. For if we confeſſe to God contrarie to our owne thinking, we do wickedly lie vnto him: but we cannot thinke as we ought, but that by and by all that ſemeth glorious in vs muſt be troden vnder foote. Therfore when thou heareſt Pſa. 18. 28. in the Prophet, that there is prepared ſaluation for the humble people, and abacement for the eyes of the wicked: Firſt thinke, that there is no entrie open to ſaluation, vntill thou haue layed away all pride and taken to thee perfect humbleneſſe; then, that the ſame humbleneſſe is not a certaine modeſty whereby thou geueſt ouer to the Lord a heare bredth of thine owne right, as they are called humble before men that do neither preſumptuouſly aduaunce themſelues, nor reprochfully triumph ouer other, although they ſtand vpon ſome eſtimation mation of their owne excellence: but an vnfained submission of a minde throwen downe with feling of his owne miserie and nedinesse. For it is so echewhere described in the worde of God. When the Lorde saith thus in Zephanias: I will take away out of thee him that outragiously reioiseth, and I will leaue in the middes of thee the afflicted man, and the proore man, and they shall trust in the Lorde: doth he not there plainely shewe who be humble? euen they that lie afflicted with knowledge of their owne pouertie. On the other side he calleth the proude, outragious reioisers, because men ioying in prosperitie are wont to reioise without measure. But to the humble whom he purposeth to saue, he leaueth nothing but to trust in the Lorde. And likewise it is said in Esaye: Whom shall I looke vnto, but to the poore and contrite in spirit, and him that feareth my wordes? Againe: The hie and excellent, that inhabiteth eternitie, his name is holy, that dwelleth on hie, and in the holy place, and with the contrite and humble spirit, to quicken the spirit of the humble and the heart of the contrite. When thou so oft heareste the name of contrition, vnderstand thereby the wound of the heart, that suffreth not a man throwen downe on the ground to rise againe. With such contrition ought thy heart to be wounded, if thou wilt according to the saying of God be aduaunced with the humble. If that be not done, thou shalt be brought lowe with the mighty hande of God to thy shame and disgracement.

7 And our best Schoolemaister thinking it not enough to shewe it out in wordes, hath also set out vnto vs in a parable the image of true humilitie as in a painted table. For he bringeth forth a Publicane that standing a far of, not daring to lifte vp his eyes to heauen, with much knocking his brest prayeth in this wise: Lorde be mercifull to me a sinner. Let vs not thinke these to be tokens of fained modestie, that he dare not loke vp to heauen, nor to come nerer, that with knocking his brest he confesseth himselfe a sinner: but let vs know that they bee testimonies of inward affection. On the other side he setteth the Pharisee, which thanketh God that he is not of the common sorte of men, either an oppresser, or an vnrighteous man, or an adulterer, bycause he fasted twise on the Sabbat, and gaue tithes of all that he possessed. He doth with open cõfession acknowledge that the righteousnesse which he hath is the gift of God: but bycause he standeth in confidence that he is righteous, he departeth from God vnfauored & in hatred. The Publicane by acknowledging of his own wickednesse is iustified. Hereby we may se, howe great is the estimation of our humbling vs before God: so that the heart can not be open to receiue his mercie, vnleſſe it be firſt voide of all opinion of his owne worthineſſe. When this opinion hath poſſeſſed the place, it ſhutteth vp the way for Gods mercie to entre. And that no man ſhould doubte hereof, Chriſt was ſent of his father into the earth with this commiſſion, to bring glad tidings to the poore, to heale the contrite in heart, to preach libertie to the captiue, and deliuerance to them that were ſhut vp in priſon, & to cõfort them that mourne: to geue them glorie for aſhes, oyle for mourninge, the robe of praiſe for the ſpirit of ſorrowe. According to this commiſſion, he calleth none but them that labour and are loden to take part of his liberalitie. And in an other place he ſaith: I came not to call the righteous, but ſinners.

Mat. 11. 28.

Matt. 9 ¶ 3.

8 Therefore if we will geue place to the calling of Chriſt, let all arrogancy & careleſneſſe depart far away from vs. Arrogãcy groweth of a fooliſh perſuaſion of our owne righteouſneſſe, when a man thinketh himſelfe to haue ſomwhat, by the deſeruing whereof he may be commended before God, careleſneſſe may be euen without any perſuaſiõ of workes. For many ſinners, becauſe being dronke with ſweteneſſe of vices they thinke not vpon the iudgement of God, lie as it were ſenſleſly amaſed with a diſeaſe of drouſineſſe, that they aſpire not to the mercie offred them. But we muſt no leſſe ſhake of ſuch dull ſluggiſhneſſe, than we muſt caſt away all vaine confidence of our ſelues, that we may without encombrance haſten to Chriſt, that we being empty and hungry may be filled with his good things. For we ſhall neuer ſufficiently haue truſt in him, vnleſſe we vtterly diſtruſt of our ſelues, we ſhall neuer ſufficiently raiſe vp our courages in him, vnleſſe they be firſt throwen downe in our ſelues. We ſhall neuer ſufficiently haue conſolation in him, vnleſſe we be firſt deſolate in our ſelues. Therefore we be then mete to take hold of and obtaine the fauour of God, caſting away all truſt of our ſelues, but truſting vpon the onely aſſuredneſſe of his goodneſſe, when (as Auguſtine ſaith) forgetting our owne deſeruings, we embrace the giftes of Chriſt. Becauſe if he ſought deſeruings in vs, we ſhould not come to his giftes. Wherewith Bernard very well accordeth, comparing proude men to vnfaithfull ſeruantes, that arrogantly claime any thing be it neuer ſo litle to their owne deſeruings: becauſe they do wrongfully keepe to themſelues the praiſe of grace paſſing by them, as if a wall would ſay that it bringeth forth the ſunbeame which it receiueth through a window. But, not to tary longer herevpon, let vs take a ſhort but a generall and ſure rule, that he is prepared to take parte of the frutes of Gods mercie, that hath vtterly emptied himſelfe, I will not ſay of righteousnesse, which is none at all, but of the vaine and windie image of righteousnes. Because euery man so much hindereth his receiuing of the liberalitie of God as he resteth in himselfe.

The xiij. Chapter.

That there are twoo things to be marked in free iustification.

AND here are alway two things to be principally loked vnto: that is to say, that there may remaine to the Lorde his glorie vnminished, and as it were wholly and perfectly mainteined, and to our consciences an vntroubled quietnesse and calme tranquilitie before his iudgement. We see how oft and how earnestly the Scripture exhorteth vs, to geue onely to God a confession of praise, when we entreate of righteousnes. And the Apostle testifieth, Rom. 3. 15. that this was the Lordes principall purpose of geuing vs righteousnesse in Christ, that he might shewe his owne righteousnesse. And what a shewing that should be, he declareth immediatly after: that is, if he alone be knowen to be righteous, and that iustified him that is of the faith of Iesus Christ. Thou seest that the righteousnesse of God is not sufficiētly set out, vnlesse he alone be accompted righteous, and do communicate the grace of righteousnesse to them that deserue it not. By this meane he will haue euery mouth to be stopped, and the whole World to be made subiect to him. For while man hath any thing to speake in his owne defence, so longe there is somewhat taken away from the glory of God. So in Ezechiel he teacheth Eze. 20. howe much we glorifie his name by reknoweledging of our owne wickednesse. You shall remember (sayeth he) the wayes and all the wicked doinges wherewith ye haue bene defiled. And ye shall be displeased with your selues in your owne sight, in all the euels that ye haue committed. And ye shall knowe that I am the Lorde, when I shall do good to you for mine owne names sake, and not according to your most wicked offences. If these thinges be conteined in the true knowledge of God, that we being brooſed with knowledge of our owne iniquitie, should consider that he doth good to vs where as we be vnworthy therof; why then do we to our great hurt attempt to steale away from the Lorde any parcell be it neuer so small of the praise of his free goodnesse? Like wise Ieremie when he crieth out, Iere. 9. Let not the wise man glorie in his wisdome, or the riche man in his 23. richesse, or the strong man in his strength, but let him that glorieth, glorie in the Lorde: doth he not there declare that somewhat is diminished from Gods glorie, if man glorie in him selfe? To this pur-

1.Cor. 2.30. poſe truely doth Paule apply thoſe wordes, when he teacheth that all the partes of our ſaluation are repoſed in Chriſt, that we ſhoulde not glory but in the Lord. For his meaning is that he riſeth vp againſt God and darkeneth his glorie, whoſoeuer thinketh that he hath any thing be it neuer ſo litle of his owne.

2 This is the truth, we neuer truely glorie in him, vnleſſe we be vtterly put from our own glory. On the other ſide, this is to be holde for a catholike principle, that all they glorie againſt God that glorie in them ſelues, For Paule iudgeth that onely by this meane the world is made ſubiect to God, when all matter to glorie vpon is vtterly taken from men. Therefore Eſaye, when he declareth that Iſrael ſhall haue their iuſtificatiō in God, ſaith alſo that they ſhal there alſo haue their prayſe: as though he ſhould ſay, that the Lorde to this ende iuſtifieth the elect that they ſhould glorie in him and in nothing els. But howe we ought to be praiſed in the Lorde, he had taught in the verſe next before: that is, that we ſhould ſweare that our righteouſneſſes and ſtrength are in the Lorde. Not that there is not required a bare confeſſion, but confirmed with an othe, that a man ſhould not thinke that he ſhall be diſcharged with I wote not what fained humilitie. And let no man here allege for excuſe, that he doth not glorie when without arrogance he reknowledgeth his owne righteouſneſſe: for there can be no ſuch eſtimation but it engendreth confidence, nor confidence but it bredeth glorie. Therfore let vs remember that in all the diſputation of righteouſneſſe we muſt haue regard to this ende, that the praiſe thereof remaine with the Lord whole and perfect. For as much as for declaration of his righteouſneſſe (as the Apoſtle teſtifieth) he hath poured out his grace vpon vs, that he might be iuſt and iuſtifying him that is of the faith of Chriſt. Wherefore in an other place, when he had taught that the Lorde gaue vs ſaluation, to ſet out the glorie of his name, afterward as it were repeting the ſame thing he addeth: ye are ſaued by grace and by the gift of God, not by workes, that none ſhould glorie. And when Peter telleth that we are called vnto hope of ſaluation that we ſhoulde declare the powers of him that hath called vs out of darkeneſſe into his marueilous light, without doubt his meaning is ſo to make the onely praiſes of God to ſound in the eares of the faithfull, that they ſhould with depe ſilence oppreſſe all arrogancie of the fleſh. In a ſumme, man can not without robbery of God chalenge to him ſelfe any one crum of righteouſneſſe: becauſe euen ſo much is plucked and taken away from the glorie of Gods righteouſneſſe.

Rom. 2. 19. Eſa. 45. 25. Rom. 3. 26. Eph. 1 2 Eph. 1. 8 3 Now if we aſke by what meane the conſcience may be quited before before God, we shall finde no other meane but if free righteousnesse be geuen vs by the gift of God: Let vs alway think vpon this saying of Salomon, Who shall say: I haue cleansed my heart, I am made cleane from my sinne? Truely there is no man that shall not be ouerwhelmed with infinite filthinesse. Therefore let euen the perfectest man descende into his owne conscience, and call his doinges to accompt: what ende shall he haue? Shall he swetely rest as though all thinges were in good order betwene him and God? and shall he not rather be vexed with terrible torments, when he shall sele matter of damnation abiding in him selfe if he be iudged according to his workes? The conscience, if it loke vpon God, must of necessitie either haue assured peace with his iudgement, or be beseged with the terrours of helle Therfore we profit nothing in disputing of righteousnesse vnlesse we stablish such a righteousnesse, with the stedfastnesse wherof our soule may be stayed in the iudgement of God. When our soule shall haue whereby it may both without feare appeare before the face of God, and receiue his iudgement, vnshaken, then and not till then let vs knowe that we haue found an vnfained righteousnesse Therfore not without cause the Apostle standeth so much vpon this point, with whose wordes I had rather expresse it than with mine own. If (saith he) the promise of inheritance be of the law, faith is made voide, the promise is made abolished. He first inferreth that faith is disanulled & made voide if the promisse of righteousnesse haue respect to the deseruings of our works, or do hang vpon the keping of the law. For so could neuer any man assuredly rest in it: because it could neuer come to passe that any man might assuredly determine with him self that he had satisfied the law, as in deede neuer any man doth by works fully satisfie it. Whereof, that we should not neede to seke far for testimonies to proue it, euery man may be a witnesse to him selfe that will with a right eye behold himselfe. And herby appeareth, in how depe and darke corners hypocrisie buried the mindes of men, while they so carelesly beare with themselues, that they stick not to set their own flatteries against the iudgement of God, as though they would binde to a stay of his iudiciall proceding, but the faithfull that do sincerely examine them selues, are greued and tormented with a far other maner of carefulnesse. Therfore there should so entre into all mindes a doubting, and at length a very despeire where eche man for him selfe should make accompt, with how great a burden of det he is still oppressed, and how far he is from the cõdition wherwith he is charged. Loe, how faith is by this meane already expressed and extinguished. For to wauer, to varie, to be carried vp and downe, to sticke fast in Pro. 20. 9.

Rom. 4. 14.

doubting, to be holden in ſuſpēce, to ſtagger, and at length to deſpeire, is not to truſt: but to ſtrengthen thy minde with cōſtant certaintie and perfect aſſurednes, & to haue whereupon to reſt and faſten thy foote.

4 He adioineth alſo an other thing, that is, that the promiſe ſhall thereby be made of no effect and voide. For if the fulfilling thereof do hang vpon our deſeruing, when ſhall we come thus farre as to deſerue the bountifulnes of God? Alſo this ſecond point hangeth vpon the former: For the promiſe ſhall not be fulfilled but to them that beleue it. Therefore if faith be fallen, there ſhal remaine no force of the promiſe, Therefore the inheritance is of faith, that it may be according to grace, to ſtabliſh the promiſe. For it is aboundantly well ſtabliſhed when it reſteth vpon the onely mercy of God: becauſe his mercy & truth are with a perpetuall knot ioined together, that is to ſay, whatſoeuer God mercifully promiſeth, he alſo faithfully perfor-Pſa.119 76. meth. So Dauid, before that he required ſaluation by the worde of God, firſt determineth the cauſe thereof to be in his mercy. Let thy mercies (ſaith he) come vnto me, thy ſaluatiō according to thy word. And rightfully: bycauſe God is by no other meane perſwaded to make the promiſe, but of his owne mere mercie. Therefore we muſt herein ſtay, and deepely faſten all our hope and not to looke to our own works, to ſeke any helpe of them. And that you ſhould not think
In Pſal. 88. tra ctatu priore. that I herein ſpeake any new thing: Auguſtine doth alſo teache that we ought ſo to do. Chriſt (ſaith he) ſhall reigne for euer in his ſeruantes, God hath promiſed it, God hath ſaid it, and if that be not enough, God hath ſworne it. Therefore foraſmuch as the promiſe is ſtabliſhed, not according to our deſeruinges, but according to his mercie, no mā ought to ſpeake fearefully of that of which he can not In de dicat. templi ſer. 5. doubte. Bernard alſo ſaith: The diſciples of Chriſt ſay, Who canne be ſaued? But he aunſwered: this is impoſſible with menne, but it is not impoſſible with God. This is all our confidence, this is our onely comforte, this is the whole grounde of our hope, but being aſſured of the poſſibilitie, what ſay we of his will? Who knoweth whether Eccleſ. 9.1. 1.Cor. 2.16. he be worthy of loue or hatred? Who hath knowen the Lords meaning? Or who hath bene his counſeller? Here now faith muſt of neceſſitie helpe vs, here muſt his truth ſuccour vs, that that which is hidden from vs in the heart of the father, may be reueled by the Spirit, and his Spirit teſtifying it may perſwade our heartes that we are the ſonnes of God. And it may perſwade vs by calling and iuſtifying vs freely by faith, in which things there is as it were a certaine meane paſſage from the eternal predeſtination to the glorie that is to come. Briefely let vs thus conclude. The Scripture declareth that the

promises of God are not stablished, vnlesse they be taken hold of with assured affiance of conscience: and whersoeuer there is any doubting or vncertaintie it pronounceth that they be voide. Againe it pronounceth that they do nothing but stagger and wauer if they rest vpon our owne workes. Therefore we must needes either lose righteousnesse, or we must not consider our owne workes, but onely faith must take place, whose nature is this, to lift vp her eares and shut her eyes, that is to say, to be hedefully bent to the promise only, and to turne away her thought from all mans worthinesse or deserving. So is that notable prophecie of Zacharie fulfilled, that when the wickednes of the land shalbe done away, a man shall call his frend vnder his vine and vnder his figge tree, where the Prophet declareth that ỹ faithfull do no otherwise enioy true peace but after obteining of the forgeuenesse of sinnes. For this cauelation is to be remembred in the Prophetes, that when they speake of the kingdome of Christ, they set out the outward blessinges of God as figures of the spirituall things. Whereupon Christ is called both the king of peace and our peace, because he appeaseth all the troublesom motions of cõscience. If we seke by what meane he doth it, we must needes come to the sacrifice by which God is appeased. For he shall neuer cesse to tremble for feare that shall not determine that God is appeased by the onely satisfactorie cleansing wherin Christ hath sustained his wrath. Finally peace is no where els to be sought for but in the terrors of Christ our redemer. Zach. 3. 9. Esa. 9 6 Ephe. 2. 14.

5 But why do I vse so darke a testimonie? Paule euery where declareth, that there is peace or quiet ioy left to consciences, vnlesse it be determined that we be iustified by faith. And he therewithall declareth whense that assurednes cometh, namely when the loue of God is poured into our hearres by the holy Ghost: as if he had said, that our consciences can not otherwise be quieted, vnlesse we be certenly perswaded that we please God. Whereupon also in an other place he crieth out in the person of all the godly, Who shall seuer vs from the loue of God, which is in Christ? because we shall tremble euen at euery litle breath, till we be arriued into the hauen: but we shalbe without care euen in the darkenes of death, so long as the Lord shall shew him selfe a pastor to vs. Therefore whosoeuer prate that we are iustified by faith, because being regenerate we are iust by liuing spiritually: they neuer tasted the swetenesse of grace, to consider that God wil be merciful vnto them. Wherupon also followeth, that they do no more know the manner of praying rightly, than Turkes and whatsoeuer other profane Nations. For (as Paule witnesseth) it is no Rom. 5 1. Rom. 9 Psa. 32. 4

Gala. 4. 6. name of Father, yea vnleſſe it open our mouth freely to crie out Abba father. Which in an other place he more plainely expreſſeth, where he ſaith that in Chriſt we haue boldneſſe and entrie in confidence by the faith of him. Truly this cometh not to paſſe by the gift of regeneration: which as it is alway vnperfect in the fleſh, ſo it conteineth in it ſelf manifold matter of douting. Wherfore we muſt of neceſſity come to this remedy, that the faithfull ſhould determine that they may by no other right, hope for the inheritaunce of the heauenly kingdome, but becauſe being graffed into the body of Chriſt they are frely accompted righteous. For as touching iuſtification, faith is a thing merely paſſiue, bringing nothing of our own to the recouering of the fauour of God, but receiuing of Chriſt that which we want.

VVhat is the beginning of iuſtification, and the continuall proceedinges therof.

THat the matter may be made more plaine, let vs ſearch, what may be the righteouſneſſe of man in the whole courſe of his life: and let vs make fower degrees thereof. For men either being endued with no knowledge of God, are drowned in idolatrie: or being entred into profeſſion by ſacramentes, denying God with vncleanneſſe of life, whom they confeſſe with mouth, they are Chriſts no further thā in name or they be hypocrits, which couer the wickednes of their harts, with vayn deceitful colors: or being regenerate by ỹ ſpirit of God, they endeuour themſelues to true holneſſe. Specially when they are to be iudged by their naturall giftes, from the crowne of their head to the ſole of their foote, there ſhall not be found one ſparcle of goodnes, vnles paraduenture we will ac-

This forſoth is the worthines, with confidence whereof they muſt be proued. But if any among then excell with ſuch honeſty of manners as may haue ſome

shewe of holines among men: yet because we know that God regardeth not the outward glistering, we must search the very foutaine of workes if we will haue them to auaile any thing to righteousnesse. We must (I say) throughly loke into them, from what affection of heart these works procede. But although here lieth open a most large felde to discourse in, yet because the matter may be declared in very fewe wordes, I will follow asmuch as I may a brefenes in teaching.

2 First I deny not that whatsoeuer excellent gifts appeare in the vnbeleuers, they are the gifts of God. Neither do I so differ from common iudgement, that I would affirme that there is no difference betwene the iustice, temperance and equitie of Titus and Traianus, and the rage, intemperance, and crueltie of Caligula, or Nero, or Domitian: betwene the filthy lustes of Tiberius, and in this behalfe the continence of Vespasian: and (that we may not tarry vpon some speciall vertues or vices) betwene the obseruing and the despising of right and lawes. For there is so great difference of right and wronge, that it appeareth euen in the dead image therof. For what thing shall there remain well ordered in the world, if we cõfound these together? Therefore such a difference betwene honest and vnhonest doinges, the Lorde hath not onely engrauen in the mindes of all men, but also doth oft confirme it with the dispensation of his prouidence For we see how he extendeth many blessings of this present life to them that among men do follow vertue. Not bycause that outward image of vertue deserueth so much as the least benefite of his: but so it pleaseth him to declare by proofe how much true righteousnes pleaseth him, when he suffereth euen outward and fained righteousnesse not to be without rewarde, Whereupon followeth that which we euen nowe confessed, that these vertues, such as they be, or rather images of vertues, are the giftes of God, forasmuch as there is nothing in any wise praise worthy, which procedeth not from him.

3 But neuertheles it is true which Augustine writeth, that all they that are straungers from the true religiõ of the one God, howsoeuer they be accompted worthy of admiration for opinion of vertue, are not onely worthy of no rewarde, but rather are worthy of punishmẽt, because they do with defiling of their heart, bespot the pure good things of God. For though they be the instruments of God, to preserue ỹ felowship of men with iustice, cõtinence, tẽperance of minde, valiantnes, and wisedom: yet they do very euelly execute these good workes of God: because they are restrained from euill doing, not by sincere loue of goodnes, but either by onely ambition, or by loue of themselues, or by some other croked affection. Wheras therfore they Libr 4. contra Iulianũ are corrupt by the very vncleannes of hart as by their beginning, they are no more to be reckened among vertues, than thoſe vices, which are wont to deceiue by reaſon of nerenes and likeneſſe of vertue. Finally when we remembre, that the ende of that which is right, euer is that God be ſerued: whatſoeuer tendeth to any other ende, forthwith worthily loſeth the name of right. Bycauſe therefore they haue not reſpect to the marke which the wiſedome of God appointeth: although ỹ thing that they do, ſeeme good in doing, yet by a wrongful ende it is ſin. He cõcludeth therfore that all the Fabricij, Scipiots, and Catoes, in all thoſe excellent actes of theirs: yet ſinned in this behalfe, that whereas they lacked the light of faith, they did not apply them to the ende to which they ought to haue applied them: & that for that cauſe, true righteouſnes was not in them: foraſmuch as duties are not weyed by the doings, but by the endes.

1. Ioh. 5 12. 4 Moreouer if it be true which Iohn ſaith, that there is no life without ỹ ſonne of God: who ſo haue no part in Chriſt, what maner of men ſo euer they be, what ſoeuer they do or go about, yet they runne forward with their whole courſe into deſtruction & the iudgement of eternall death. After this reaſon, is that ſaid of Auguſtine. Our religion diſcerneth the righteous from the vnrighteous, not by lawe of workes: but by the very lawe of faith, without which, thoſe that ſeeme good workes are turned into ſins. Wherfore the ſame Auguſtine ſaith very well in an other place, when he compareth the endeuor of ſuch men to running out of the way. For howe much faſter a man runneth out of the way, ſo much further he is from the marke, and therefore is made ſo much more miſerable. Wherefore he affirmeth that it is better to halt in the way, than to runne out of the way. Finally it is certaine that they are euell trees, foraſmuch as without the cõmunicating of Chriſt there is no ſanctification. They may therefore beare faire fruites and beautifull to the eye, yea & ſweete in taſt, but in no wiſe good fruites. Hereby we eaſily perceiue that whatſoeuer man thinketh, purpoſeth, or doth, before that he be reconciled to God by faith, is accurſed, and not onely of no value to righteouſneſſe, but of certaine deſerning to damnation. And why diſpute we hereof as of a doutfull thing, ſith it is already proued by the witneſſe of the Apoſtle, that it is impoſſible that any man may pleaſe God without faith?

Liber. ad Bonifa in ca. 5. Pref in Pſalm.

Heb. 11. 6.

5 But there ſhall yet appeare a plainer proſe, if the grace of God be in compariſon, directly ſet againſt the naturall ſtate of man. For the Scripture crieth out euery where, that God findeth nothing in man whereby he may be prouoked to do good to him, but with his owne free

free goodneſſe preuenteth him. For what can a deade man do to attaine life? But when he lightneth vs with the knowledge of himſelfe, he is ſaid to raiſe vs from death, and to make vs a newe creature. For we ſee that oftentimes, ſpecially of the Apoſtle, the goodnes of God is ſet forth vnto vs by this title, God (ſaith he) which is rich in mercy, for the great loue wherewith he loued vs, euen when we were dead by ſinnes, hath made vs aliue together in Chriſt &c. In an other place, where vnder the figure of Abraham he entreateth of the generall calling of the faithful, he ſaith: it is God that geueth life to the dead, and calleth thoſe thinges that are not, as though they were. If we be nothing, what (I beſeech you) can we do? Wherefore ỹ Lorde ſtrongly beateth downe this arrogancy, in the hiſtory of Iob, in theſe wordes: who preuenteth me, and I ſhall rendre it him? for all things are mine. Which ſentence Paule expounding applieth it to this, that we ſhould not thinke that we bring any thing to the Lorde but mere ſhame of needines and emptines. Wherefore in ỹ place aboue cited, to proue that we are come into the hope of ſaluation by his grace alone, not by works, he allegeth that we are his creatures becauſe we are new begotten in Chriſt Ieſus, to the good workes which he hath prepared that we ſhould walke in thẽ: As if he had ſaid: which of vs may boaſte that he hath with his righteouſneſſe prouoked God, ſith our firſt power to do good procedeth out of regeneration? For as we are made by nature, oyle ſhall ſoner be wronge out of a ſtone, than a good worke out of vs. Truly it is wonderfull if man being cõdemned of ſo great a ſhame, dare yet ſay that there remaineth any thing with him. Therefore let vs confeſſe with this noble inſtrument of God, that we are called of God with a holy calling, not according to our workes, but according to his purpoſe and grace: and that the kindnes & loue of God our ſauiour toward vs hath appeared, becauſe he hath ſaued vs, not by the works of righteouſneſſe which we haue don, but according to his owne mercy: ỹ being iuſtified by his grace, we might be made the heires of eternall life. By this cõfeſſion we diſpoill man of all righteouſneſſe euen to the leaſt litle peece thereof, till he be by only mercy regenerate into hope of eternall life: foraſmuch as if the righteouſneſſe of workes do bring any thing toward the iuſtifying of vs, it is falſly ſaid that we are iuſtified by grace. Truly the Apoſtle had not forgotten himſelfe, when he affirmed iuſtificatiõ to be of free gift, which in an other place reſoneth ỹ grace is nowe not grace, if works do any thing auaill. And what other thing doth the Lord mean, whẽ he ſaith that he came not to call righteous men but ſinners? If onely ſinners are receiued, why ſeeke we an entry by fained righteouſnes?

But bycauſe our enuiouſnes is ſuch, as vnleſſe it be moſt ſtraightly thruſt out of place, it neuer yeldeth to God ỹ which is his, I am cõpelled to tary ſomwhat the longer vpon it. And he ſawe, that there is no man: and he marualled that there is none that offereth himſelfe: and he hath ſet ſaluation in his owne arme, & hath ſtrengthened himſelfe with his owne righteouſneſſe. Where are our righteouſneſſes if it be true which the Prophet ſaith: that there is no man that helpeth the Lorde in recouering his

I wil ſay to her ỹ hath not obteined mercy, thou haſt obtained mercy. If ſuch cõuenant, which it is certaine to be the firſt conioining that we haue with God, ſtandeth vpon the mercie of God, there is left no foundation of our owne righteouſneſſe. And I would fain learne of thoſe men which faine ỹ man meteth God with ſome righteouſneſſe of works, whether they thinke that there is any righteouſneſſe at all, but that which is acceptable to God, If it be madnes to thinke ſo, what acceptable thing to God can procede from his enemies, whom he wholly abhorreth with all their doings? Oſe. 14. 15. ſame thing the Lorde had long before taught by his Prophet: I wil loue thẽ, ſaith he, with a free loue, becauſe mine anger is turned. Certainly his loue is not prouoked by workes if it hath of his owne accorde inclined it ſelfe vnto vs. But the rude common ſorte of men thinke it to be nothing els, but that no man hath deſerued that Chriſt ſhould performe our redẽption: yet that to the entring into the poſſeſſion of redemption, we be holpen by our owne workes. Yea but howſoeuer we be redemmed of Chriſt, yet till we be by the calling of the Father graffed into the communiõ of him, we are both heires of darke-darkeneſſe and death, and the enemies of God. For Paule teacheth that we are not cleanſed and waſſhed from our vncleanneſſes by the blood of Chriſt, vntill the holy Ghoſt worketh that cleanſing in vs. Which ſame thing Peter minding to teach, declareth that the ſanctifying of the Spirit auaileth vnto obedience & the ſprinkling of the bloode of Chriſt. If we be by the Spirit ſprinkled with the bloode of Chriſt vnto cleanſing, let vs not thinke that before ſuch watering we be any other than a ſinner is without Chriſt. Let this therefore remaine certaine, ỳ the beginning of our ſaluatiõ is as it were a certaine reſurrection frõ death to life: becauſe when for Chriſts ſake it is geuen to vs to beleue in him, thẽ we firſt begin to paſſe from death into life. 1. Cor. 6.11. 1. Pet. 1. 2.

7 Vnder this ſort are comprehended they which haue in the diuiſion aboue ſet bene noted for the ſecond and third ſort of men. For the vncleanneſſe of conſcience proueth that both of them are not yet regenerate by the Spirit of God. And againe, whereas there is no regeneration in them, this proueth the want of faith. Whereby appeareth that they are not yet reconciled to God, nor yet iuſtified in his ſight: foraſmuch as theſe good things are not atteined to, but by faith. What can ſinners being eſtrãged from God bring forth, but that which is accurſed in his iudgement? With this fooliſh boldnes in deede, both all wicked men are puffed vp, & ſpecially hypocrites, becauſe howeſoeuer they knowe that their whole heart ſwarmeth full of filthineſſe, yet if they do any works ỳ haue a ſhew of goodnes, they thinke them worthy that God ſhould not deſpiſe thẽ. Herof groweth that pernicious errour, ỳ being proued gilty of a wicked and miſchieuous minde, yet they can not be driuen to cõfeſſe themſelues void of righteouſnes: but euen when they acknowledge thẽſelues vnrighteous, becauſe they can not deny it, yet they arrogantly claime ſome righteouſnes vnto thẽ. This vanitie the Lord excellẽtly well confuteth by the prophet: Aſke (ſaith he) the prieſts, ſaying: if a man carrie ſanctified fleſh in the hemme of his garmẽt, & putteth to it bread or other meate, ſhall it be ſanctified? The prieſts aunſwered: No. And Haggee ſaid. If a defiled man in ſoule touch any of ſuch theſe things, ſhall it be defiled? The prieſts anſwered: it ſhalbe defiled. Haggee ſaid. So is this people before my face, ſaith the Lord: & ſo all the works of their hands, & all things ỳ they offer to me ſhalbe defiled. I wold to god that this ſaying might either get full credit with vs, or well be ſettled in our remẽbrãce. For there is no man, though he be otherwiſe in his whole life neuer ſo hainous a wicked doer, ỳ can abide to be perſwaded, that which ỳ Lord here plainely pronoũceth. The naughtieſt man, ſo ſone as he hath performed one or two doubtfull deedes of ỳ law, doubteth Hag. 2. 12.

not that it ſhalbe accõpted to him for righteouſnes. But ỹ Lord crieth to the contrarie, that there is no ſanctification gotten thereby, vnleſſe the heart be firſt well cleanſed. And not contented therewith, he affirmeth that all the workes whatſoeuer they be that procede from ſinners, are defiled with vncleannes of the heart. Therefore let the name of righteouſneſſe depart from theſe workes which are by the Lordes owne mouth condemned of filthines. And with howe fit a ſimilitude doth he ſhew the ſame? For it might haue bene obiected, that whatſoeuer the Lorde had commaunded, was inuiolably holy. But he on the cõtrarie ſide ſetteth againſt them, that it is no maruell, if thoſe things that are hallowed by the lawe of the Lorde, are defiled with the filthineſſe of naughty men: whereas an vncleane hand prophaneth a holy thing with touching it.

Eſa. 1. 13. 8 The ſame matter he excellently well handleth in Eſaye, Offer not (ſaith he) ſacrifice in vaine: incenſe is abhomination to me: my ſoule hateth your Calendes & ſolemnities. They are become tedious to me, & I haue bene werie with bearing them: when you ſhall hold vp your handes I will tourne away mine eyes from you: when you ſhall multiply prayer I will not heare: for your hãdes are full of bloud. Be waſhed, be cleane, take away ỹ euell of your thoughts. What meaneth this that the Lord ſo lotheth the obeyinge of his owne lawe? Yea but he here refuſeth nothing that is of the naturall obſeruing of the lawe, ỹ beginning whereof he euery where teacheth to be the vnfained feare of his name. When that is taken away, what ſo euer things are offered him are not onely trifles, but ſtinking and abhominable filthineſſe. Nowe let the hypocrites go, & keping peruerſnes wrapped vp in their heart, endeuour to deſerue the fauour of God with works.

Pro. 15. 8. But by this meane, they ſhall more & more prouoke hĩ to wrath. For to him the ſacrifices of wicked are abhominable, and the only prayer of vpright men pleaſeth him. Therefore we hold ỹ out of dout, which ought to be moſt cõmonly knowen to him, that is euen but meanely exerciſed in the Scriptures, that euen thoſe workes that gliſter moſt gloriouſly in men not yet truly ſanctified, are ſo farre from righteouſneſſe in the ſight of the Lord, that they be iudged ſins. And therfore they haue ſaid moſt truely that haue taught that fauour with God is not procured to any perſon by workes: but contrarywiſe that workes do then pleaſe, & neuer till then, when ỹ perſon hath firſt found grace in the ſight of God. And this ordre is religiouſly to be kept, to which the ſcripture leadeth vs by ỹ hand. Moſes wryteth that the Lord had reſpect to Abell & to his workes. See you not how he declareth that God is fauorable to the menne, before that he hath reſpect to their

workes? Wherfore the cleansing of the heart must go before, that the workes which come from vs, may be louingly receiued of God: because this saying of Ieremy is alway in force, that the workes of God haue respect vnto trueth. And that it is only faith by which the hearts of men are clensed, the holy Ghost hath affirmed by the mouth of Peter: whereby it is certaine, that the first fundation is in true and liuely faith. Act 15. 6. Ier. 5. 3

9 Now let vs looke what righteousnes they haue, whom we haue set in the fourth degree. We graunt that when God by the meane of the righteousnes of Christ, reconcileth vs to himselfe, & giuing vs free forgiuenesse of sinnes accompteth vs for righteous, with such mercy is also conioyned this his beneficial doinge, that by his holy spirit he dwelleth in vs, by the power whereof the lustes of our flesh are daily more & more mortified, but we are sanctified: that is to say, hallowed to the Lord vnto true purenes of life, when our heartes are framed to the obedience of the law: that this may be our chiefe wil, to serue his will, and by all meanes to aduaunce only his glory. But euen while by the guidinge of the holy Ghost we walke in the wayes of the Lord, least yet we forgettinge our selues should waxe proude, there are left certaine remnants of imperfection, which may minister vs matter of humility. There is none righteous, (saith the Scripture) that doth good and sinneth not. What maner of righteousnes therfore will they yet get by their workes? First I say, that the best worke that can be brought foorth of them, is yet alway sprinkeled and corrupted with some vncleanesse of the flesh, and hath as it were some dregges mingeled with it. I say, let a holy seruant of God choose out of all his life the most excellēt thing that he shall thinke that he hath done in the whole course therof, & let him wel consider all the partes of it, without dout he shall finde somewhere somewhat sauoringe of the rottennesse of the flesh, forasmuch as to doing well our cherefull quickenesse is neuer such as it ought to be, but in slacking our course our weakenesse is much. Although we see that there are euident foule blots wherwith the workes of the holy are bespred, yet graunt that they be nothing but most litle spottes: shall they nothing offend the eies of God, before whom euen the starres are not cleane? Thus haue we shewed that there commeth not so much as one good worke out of holy men, which if it be iudged in it selfe, deserueth not iust reward of shame. 1 Reg. 8. 6.

10 Secondly I say, that if it were possible that we should haue som throughly pure and perfect workes, yet one sinne is enough to blotte out and quench all the remembrance of the former righteousnesse, Eze.18.24. Iac.2.10. as the Prophet ſayth. With whom alſo Iames agreeth: He that offendeth (ſaith he) in one, is made gilty of all. Nowe ſith this mortall life is neuer pure or void from ſinne, whatſoeuer righteouſnes we ſhould purchace, being from time to time with ſinnes following corrupted, oppreſſed and loſt, it ſhoulde not come into the ſight of God, nor be accompted to vs for righteouſneſſe. Finally when the righteouſneſſe of workes is entreated of, we muſt not haue reſpect to the worke of the lawe, but to the commaundement. Therefore if we ſeeke righteouſneſſe by the law, we ſhall in vaine bring forth one or two workes: but a perpetuall obediẽce of ẏ law is there neceſſary. Wherfore the lord doth not but once (as many fooliſhly thinke) impute to vs righteouſneſſe that ſame forgiueneſſe of ſinnes wherof we haue ſpoken, that hauinge once obtained pardon of our life paſt, we ſhould afterward ſeeke righteouſnes in the law: becauſe he ſhould ſo do nothing elſe but bring vs into a falſe hope, and mocke and laugh vs to ſcorne. For ſith no perfection coulde come to vs ſo longe as we are clothed with this fleſh, & ſith the law threatneth death & iudgemẽt to all thẽ ẏ performe not ful righteouſnes in worke: it ſhal alway haue wherof it may accuſe and condemne vs, vnleſſe the mercy of God on the other ſide did withſtand it, to acquite vs from time to time with continuall forgiueneſſe of ſinnes. Wherefore this ſtandeth alway certaine which we ſayd at the beginninge, that if we be weied by our owne worthineſſe, whatſoeuer we purpoſe or go about, yet we with all our trauailes and endeuours are worthy of death and deſtruction.

11 Vpon theſe two pointes we muſt ſtrongly ſtand faſt: that there was neuer any worke of a godly mã, which if it were examined by the ſeuere iudgement of God, was not damnable. Againe, if there be any ſuch ſhewed, (which is not poſſible for man) yet being corrupted and defiled with the ſinnes, wherewith it is certaine that the doer of it is loden, it looſeth the grace. And this is the chiefe point of our diſputation. For about the beginninge of iuſtification there is no ſtrife betwene vs and the ſounder ſorte of Scholemen, but that a ſinnner being freely deliuered from damnation obtaineth righteouſneſſe, and that by the forgiueneſſe of ſinnes: ſauing that they vnder the word of Iuſtification comprehend the renuing wherewith we are newly formed by the Spirit of God vnto the obedience of the law & they thus deſcribe the righteouſnes of a man regenerate, that man being once reconciled to God by the faith of Chriſt, is by good workes indeed righteous before God, and by their deſeruinge is accepted. But the Rom.4.13. Lorde contrariwiſe pronounceth that he imputed to Abraham faith for righteouſneſſe, not at the time when he yet ſerued Idols, but when when he had already many yeares excelled in holineſſe of life. Therfore Abraham had long worſhipped God from a pure heart, and had performed the obedience of the lawe which may be performed of a mortall man, yet he hath righteouſneſſe repoſed in fayth. Whereupon we gather, according to the argument of Paule, that it was not of workes. Likewiſe when it is ſayd in the Prophet. The righteous man ſhall liue by faith, it is not ſpoken of wicked & prophane men, whom the Lord iuſtifieth by conuerting them to the faith, but the ſpeach is directed to the faithfull, and to them is promiſed life by faith. Paule alſo taketh away all dout, when for confirminge of that ſentence, he taketh this verſe of Dauid. Bleſſed are they whoſe inquities are forgiuen. But it is certaine, that Dauid ſpeaketh not of the wicked, but of the faithfull, ſuch as himſelfe was: becauſe he ſpake out of the feeling of his owne conſcience. Therefore this bleſſedneſſe we muſt not haue once in our life, but hold it throghout all our life. Laſt of all he teſtifieth that the embaſſage concerning the free reconciliation with God is not publiſhed for one or two dayes, but is perpetuall in the church. Therefore the faithfull haue euen to the end of their life no other righteouſneſſe than that which is there ſet forth. For Chriſt euerlaſtingly remaineth the Mediator to reconcile the father to vs, & the effectualneſſe of his death is euerlaſting: namely waſhing, ſatisfaction, expiation, finally perfect obedience, wherwith all our iniquities are couered. Neither doth Paul to the Epheſians ſay, that we haue the beginning of ſaluation out of grace, but that we are ſaued by grace, not of workes, that no man ſhould glory.

Hab. 2. 4. Ro. 4. 7. Pſa. 33. 2. Cor. 5 18.

12 The ſtartinge holes which the Scholemen do here ſeeke to eſcape by, do not deliuer them. They ſay that good workes are not by inward worthines in themſelues of ſo great value, that they be ſufficient to purchaſe righteouſnes: but this, that they be of ſo great value, is of grace accepting them. Then, becauſe they be driuen to confeſſe that the righteouſneſſe of workes is in this life alway vnperfect, they graunt that we, ſo longe as we liue, do neede forgiueneſſe of ſinnes, whereby the want of workes may be ſupplied: but, that the defaultes which are committed, are recompenced with workes of ſupererogation. For I anſwere, that the acceptinge grace as they call it, is none other than his free goodneſſe wherewith the father embraceth vs in Chriſt, when he clotheth vs with the innocency of Chriſt, & accompteth the ſame ours, that by the beneficial meane therof he may take vs for holy, pure, and innocent. For, the righteouſnes of Chriſt (which as it only is perfect, ſo only can abide the ſight of God) muſt be ſet in our ſteade, and be preſented at the barre as a ſurety. Herewith we being furniſhed, do obtaine continuall forgiueneſſe of ſinnes in faith. With the pureneſſe hereof our filthineſſes and vncleanneſſes of imperfections being couered are not imputed: but are hidden, as if they were buried, ỳ they may not come into the iudgement of God, vntil the houre come, when the old mā being ſlaine & vtterly deſtroied in vs, the goodneſſe of God ſhall receiue vs into bleſſed peace with the new Adā, where let vs looke for the day of the Lord, in which in receiuing vncorrupt bodies, we ſhall be remoued into the glory of the heauenly kingdom.

13 If theſe thinges be true, verily no workes of ours can of themſelues make vs acceptable & pleaſing to God: neither can the workes themſelues pleaſe, but in reſpect that man beinge couered with the righteouſneſſe of Chriſt, pleaſeth God, & obtaineth forgiueneſſe of his ſinnes. For God hath not promiſed the reward of eternall life to ſome certaine workes, but onely pronounceth that he which doth theſe things, ſhal liue: ſettinge the notable curſe againſt all them that continue not in all thinges. Whereby the deuiſe of righteouſneſſe in parte is largely confuted, ſith no other righteouſnes is admitted into heauē, but a whole obſeruing of the law. And no whit ſounder is that which they are wont to babble of ſupplying of recompence by works of Supererogation. For why? Do they not ſtill returne to the ſame Leu.18. 5. place from whence they are already ſhut out: that he which kepeth the law in parte, is by workes ſo farre righteous? That which no man of ſound iudgemēt will graunt them, they do too ſhameleſly take for cōfeſſed. So oft the Lord teſtifieth that he acknowledgeth no righteouſneſſe of workes, but in the perfect obſeruing of his law. What obſtinacy is it, that we when we are deſtitute of that obſeruing, leaſt we ſhoulde ſeeme ſpoiled of all glory, that is, to haue altogether giuen place to God, do boaſt our ſelues of I wot not what ſmall peeces of a few workes, and go about by ſatisfactions to redeme that which wanteth. Satisfactions haue already before bin ſufficiently ouerthrowen, that we ought not now ſo much as to dreame of thē. Only this I ſay, that they which ſo play the fooles, do not wey how deteſtable a thing ſinne is before God: for truely they ſhould vnderſtand that the whole righteouſneſſe of men beinge layd vpon a heape, is not ſufficient to Gene.3. 17. make recompence for one ſinne. For we ſee that man was by one offence ſo caſt away and abandoned of God, that he therewithall loſt all meane to recouer ſaluation. Therfore the power of Satisfaction is taken away, wherewith they flatter themſelues, but ſurely ſhall neuer ſatisfie God, to whom nothing is pleaſant or acceptable that proceedeth frō his enemies. And his enemies are all they to whom he purpoſeth poseth to impute sinnes. Therefore our sinnes must be couered and forgiuen, before that the Lorde haue respect to any worke of ours. Whereupon followeth that the forgiuenes of sinnes is of free grace which they do wickedly blaspheme that trust in any satisfactions. Let vs therfore, after the example of the Apostle, forgetting those things that are behinde vs, and hasting forward to those thinges that are before vs, runne in our race, endeuoringe to the price of the hie callinge. Phil.3. 13.

14 But how doth the boasting of the workes of supererogation agree with that rule which is taught vs, that when we haue done all thinges that are commaunded vs, we should say that we are vnprofitable seruantes, and that we haue done no more than we ought? To say before God, is not to faine or to lie, but to determine with thy selfe, that which thou art assured of. The Lord therefore commaundeth vs vnfainedly to thinke and consider with our selues, that we do not any free beneficial doings to him, but to render due seruice. And worthily. For we are seruauntes endetted in so many seruices, as we are not able to discharge, although all our thoughts & all our members, were turned into dutefull deedes of the law. And therefore that which he sayth. When ye haue done all thinges that are commaunded you, &c. is asmuch in effect, as if the righteousnes of one man were more thā all the righteousnes of men. How therfore may we (of whom there is none that is not most farre distant from this marke) be so bolde as to boast that we haue added a heape to the full measure? Neither is there any cause why any man may take exceptiō and say, that nothing withstandeth but that his endeuour may proceede beyonde necessary duties, which in some behalfe ceasseth those that be from necessary. For this we must altogether holde, that we can imagine nothinge that auaileth either to the worship or the loue of God, which is not cōprehended vnder the law of God. If it be a part of the law, let vs not boast of voluntary liberality, where we are bound to necessity. Luk 17. 10.

15 And for this purpose that glorying of Paule is out of season alleaged. That amōg the Corinthians he did of his owne wil yeld of his right, which otherwise he might haue vsed if he had would, and that he hath emploied vpon them not onely so much as he ought of duety, but also hath giuen them his free trauaill beyonde the boundes of dueties. But they should haue marked the reason there expressed, that he did this least he should be an offense to the weake. For false and deceitful workemen did boast themselues with this alluring shew of liberality, wherby they might both procure fauour to their poisonous doctrines, and raise vp hatred to the Gospell, so that Paule was driuen 1.Cor. 6.1.

of neceſſity either to bring the doctrine of Chriſt into danger, or to meete with ſuch craftes. Go to: if it be to a chriſtian man an indifferent thinge, to runne into offenſe, when he may refraine it, then I graunt that the Apoſtle did ſomthing of Supererogatiõ for the lord. But if this were by right required of a wiſe diſtributer of the Goſpel, then I ſay ỹ he did that which was his duety to do. Finally although there appeare no ſuch cauſe, yet this ſaying of Chryſoſtome is alway true, that all our thinges are in the ſame caſe wherein are the proper poſſeſſions of bondmen, which it is certaine by the law to be due to their Lord. And Chriſt hath vttered the ſame in the parable. For he asked what thanke we will giue to a bondeſeruant when hauing bin all the day trauailed with ſundry labours he returneth home to vs in the euening. But it is poſſible, that he hath labored with greater diligence than we durſt haue required. Be it ſo. yet he hath done no thing but that which by his eſtate of bondage he ought, for he with his whole ability is ours. I ſpeake not of what ſort their Supererogatiõs are which theſe men wil boaſt of to God: for they be trifles, ſuch as he neither hath at any time commaunded, nor doth approue them, nor will allow them whẽ accompt ſhalbe to be made before him. In this ſignification onely we will graunt that they are workes of Supererogation, namely of which it is ſpoken in the Prophet. who hath required theſe things at your hands? But let them remember what is in an other place alſo ſpoken of theſe things: Wherefore do ye weye your ſiluer & not in bread? Ye ſpend in labour & not in being ſatisfied. It is in deede not very hard for theſe idle Rabbines to diſpute vnder the ſhadow in a ſoft chaire: but when the ſoueraigne iudge ſhall ſit in his iudgement ſeate, ſuch windy decrees ſhall of neceſſity vaniſhe away. This, this was to be ſought what affiance of defenſe we may bring to his iudgemẽt ſeate, not what we may talke of in ſchooles & corners.

16 In this behalfe there are chiefely two peſtilences to be driuen out of our mindes: that we put no affiance in the righteouſneſſe of workes. And that we aſcribe no part of glory to them. The Scriptures do euery where thruſt vs from all maner of affiance, whẽ they teach that our righteouſneſſes do ſtinke in the ſight of God, vnleſſe they receiue a good ſauor from the innocence of Chriſt, & that they can do nothing but prouoke the vengeance of God, vnleſſe they be ſuſtained by the tendernes of his mercy. Moreouer they ſo leaue nothing to vs, but that we ſhoulde craue ỹ mercy of our iudge with that confeſſion of Dauid, that none ſhal be iuſtified before him, if he require accompt of his ſeruantes. But where Iob ſayth: If I haue done wickedly, wo to me: but if I do righteouſly, yet I wil not ſo lift vp my head: though he meane of that moſt hie righteouſnes of God, wherunto the very Angels anſwere not: yet he therewithall ſheweth that when they come to the iudgement of God, there remaineth nothing for all mortal men, but to hold their peace as dumme. For it tendeth not only to this purpoſe that he had rather willingly yeelde than dãgerouſly ſtriue with the rigorouſnes of God: but he meaneth that he felt no other righteouſnes in himſelfe, than ſuch as at ỹ firſt moment ſhould fall before the ſight of God. When affiance is driuen away, al glorying muſt alſo neceſſarily depart. For who can giue the praiſe of righteouſnes to theſe workes, the affiance whereof trembleth before the ſight of God? We muſt therefore come whether Eſay calleth vs, Eſa. 46. 10. that all the ſeede of Iſraell may be praiſed & glory in God: becauſe it is moſt true which he ſaith in an other place, that we are the planting of the glory of God. Our minde therefore ſhall then be rightly purged, when it ſhal neither in any behalfe reſt vpon the confidence of workes, nor reioyſe in the glory of them. But this errour encouraged fooliſh men to the puffinge vp of this falſe & lying affiance, that they alway ſet the cauſe of their ſaluation in workes. Eſa. 61. 3.

17 But if we looke to the foure kindes of cauſes, which the Philoſophers teach vs to conſider in the effect of thinges, we ſhall finde that none of them doth accord with workes in the ſtabliſhing of our ſaluation. For the Scripture doth euery where reporte that the cauſe of procuringe the eternall life to vs, is the mercy of the heauenly father and his free loue towarde vs: that the Materiall cauſe is Chriſt with his obedience, by which he purchaced righteouſneſſe for vs. What alſo ſhall we ſay to be the formall or inſtrumentall cauſe but faith? And theſe three cauſes Iohn comprehendeth together in one ſentence, when he ſaith, God ſo loued ỹ world, that he gaue his only begotten ſonne, that euery one which beleueth in him may not periſhe, but may haue euerlaſtinge life. Now the finall cauſe the Apoſtle teſtifieth to be both the ſhewinge of the righteouſneſſe of God and the praiſe of his goodneſſe: where he rehearſeth alſo the other three in expreſſe wordes. For he ſaith thus to the Romaines: all haue ſinned and do neede the glory of God: but they are iuſtified freely by his grace. Here thou haſt the head & firſt fountain, namely that God embraced vs with his free mercy. Then followeth: By the redemption which is in Chriſt Ieſu. Here thou haſt as it were the matter whereof righteouſneſſe is made for vs through fayth in his bloude. Here is ſhewed the inſtrumentall cauſe, whereby the righteouſneſſe of Chriſt is applied to vs. Laſt of all he ioyneth the ende, when he ſayth, vnto the ſhewing of his righteouſnes that he may be righteous Ioh. 3. 16. Rom. 3. 23.

& the righteouſmaker of him that is of the faith of Chriſt. And (to touch by the way that this righteouſnes ſtandeth of reconciliation) he ſetteth expreſſely by name, that Chriſt was giuen to vs for reconciliatiõ. So in the firſt chap. alſo to the Epheſians he teacheth that we are receiued of God into fauour by mere mercy: that the ſame is wrought, by the interceſſion of Chriſt: receiued, by fayth: all to this ende, that the glory of the goodneſſe of God may fully ſhine. When we ſee ỳ all the partes of our ſaluation are ſo without vs, what cauſe is there ỳ we ſhould now either haue affiãce or glory in works? Neither can euen the moſt ſworne enemies of the grace of God moue any controuerſie with vs about the efficient or finall cauſe, vnleſſe they will deny the whole Scripture. In the Materiall & Formall cauſe they caſt a falſe colour, as though our workes haue a halfe place with faith and the righteouſneſſe of Chriſt. But this alſo they teache, the Scripture crying out againſt them, which ſimply affirmeth both that Chriſt is to vs for righteouſneſſe and life, & that this benefit of righteouſnes is poſſeſſed by only faith.

18 But whereas the holy men do oftentimes ſtrengthen & comfort themſelues with remembrance of their owne innocency and vprightnes, & ſomtime alſo forbeare not to report of it with praiſe, that is done two waies: either that in cõparing their good cauſe with the euill cauſe of the wicked, they conceiue thereby aſſured truſt of victory, not ſo much for commending of their owne righteouſneſſe, as for the iuſt & deſerued condemning of their aduerſaries: or that euen without compariſon of other, while they recorde themſelues before God, the purenes of their owne conſciẽce bringeth to thẽ both ſome comfort & affiance. Of the firſt of theſe two wayes, we ſhal ſee hereafter: nowe let vs briefely declare of the latter, howe it agreeth with that which we haue aboue ſayd, that in the iudgement of God we muſt reſt vpon no affiance of workes, and glory vpon no opinion of them. This is the agreement that the holy ones, when it concerneth the founding and ſtabliſhing of their ſaluation, do without reſpect of workes bend their eies to the only goodneſſe of God. And they do not only bend themſelues to it afore all things as to the beginning of bleſſednes, but do reſt therein as in the fulfilling of it. A conſcience ſo founded, raiſed and ſtabliſhed, is alſo ſtabliſhed with conſideration of workes: namely ſo farre as they are the witneſſinges of God dwelling and reigning in vs. Sith therfore this affiance of workes hath no place, vnleſſe thou haue firſt caſt the whole affiance of thy minde vpon the mercy of God: it ought not to ſeeme contrary to that whereupon it hangeth. Wherfore when we exclude the affiance of workes, we meane onely this that a Christian minde may not bowe to the merit of workes as to the succour of saluation, but shoulde throughly rest in the free promise of righteousnesse. But we forbid it not to vnderprop and strengthen this faith with the signes of the good will of God toward it selfe. For if al the good giftes which God hath bestowed vpon vs, when they be recorded in remembrance, are to vs after a certaine maner as it were beames of the face of God, by which we are enlightened to beholde that soueraigne light of goodnesse: much more is the grace of good workes, which sheweth that the Spirit of adoption is giuen vs.

19 When therfore the holy ones do by innocency of conscience confirme their faith, & gather matter of reioysing, they do nothinge but call to minde by the frutes of their calling, that they are adopted of the Lord into the place of children. This therefore that is taught by Salomon, that in the feare of the Lord is stedfast assurednes: and this that sometime the holy ones vse this protestation, to the entent that they may be heard of the lord, that they haue walked before his face in vprightnes & simplicity: haue no place in laying the fundatiõ of stablishing of cõscience: but are thẽ only of value, if they be taken of the ensuing effect: because both that feare is no where which may stablish a full assurednes, & ỹ holy ones are prime in their cõscience of such an vprightnes, wherwith are yet mingled many remnantes of the flesh. But forasmuch as of the frutes of regeneration they gather an argument of the holy Ghost dwellinge in them, they do thereby not slenderly strengthen themselues to looke for ỹ help of God in all their necessities, when they by experiẽce finde him their father in so great a matter. And euen this also they can not do, vnlesse they haue first conceiued the goodnes of God, sealed with no other assurednesse, than of the promise. For if they beginne to weie it by good workes, nothing shalbe more vncertaine nor more weake: forasmuch as if workes be considered by themselues, they shall no lesse by their imperfection shew profe of the wrath of God, thã they do with howsoeuer vnperfect pureneſſe testify his good will. Finally they do so set out the benefites of God, that yet they turne not away from the free fauour of God, in which Paul testifieth that there is ỹ length, breadth, depth & heigth of them: as if he should say, Whethersoeuer the senses of the godly do turne themselues, how hie soeuer they clime, how farre & wide soeuer they extende them, yet they ought not to go out of the loue of Christ, but holde themselues wholly in the meditation thereof, because it comprehendeth all kindes of measures in it. And therefore he sayth that it excelleth & surmounteth aboue all knowledge: and that when we acknowledge how much Christ hath loued Rom. 8. 37. vs, we are fulfilled into all the fulnesse of God. As in an other place, when he glorieth that all the Godly are vanquishers in battell, he by and by addeth a reason, because of him that loued vs.

20 We see now that there is not in the holy ones that affiance, of works, which either giueth any thing to the merite of them (forasmuch as they regard thē none otherwise than as the gifts of God, wherby they reknowledge his goodnes none otherwise thā as signes of their callinge, whereby may thinke vpon their election) or which withdraweth not any thinge from the free righteousnesse which we obtaine in Christ, forasmuch as it hangeth vpon it, and standeth not without it. The same thinge doth Augustine in few wordes, but very wel set out where he writeth. I do not say to the Lord, despise not the workes of my handes, or I haue sought the Lord with my handes & haue not bin deceiued. But, I do not cōmend the works of my hands: for I feare, least when thou hast looked vpon them, thou shalt finde moe sinnes than merites. Only this I say, this I aske, this I desire, despise not the workes of thy hands, behold in me thy worke, not mine. For if thou beholdest mine, thou damnest me: if thou beholdest thine, thou crownest me. For also whatsoeuer good workes I haue, they are of thee. He setteth two causes, why he dare not boast of his workes to God, because if he haue any good workes, he seeth therein nothing his owne: secondly, because the same is also ouerwhelmed with multitude of sinnes. Whereupon commeth to passe that the conscience feeleth therby more feare & dismaying than assurednes. Therfore he would haue God no otherwise to looke on his well doings, than that reknowledging in them the grace of his calling, he may make an end of the worke which he hath begonne.

21 But furthermore wheras the Scripture sheweth that the good workes of the faithful, are causes why the Lord doth good to them, that is so to be vnderstāded, that that which we haue before set may stand vnshaken, that the Effect of our saluation consisteth in the loue of God the Father: the Matter, in the obediēce of the Sonne: the Instrument, in the enlightning of the holy Ghost, that is to say, in faith: that the ende is the glory of the so great kindenesse of God. These things withstand not, but that the Lord may embrace workes as inferiour causes. But whense commeth that? Namely whome the Lorde of his mercy hath appointed to the inheritance of eternall life, them with his ordinary dispensation he doth by good workes bringe into the possession thereof. That which goeth before in order of dispensation, he calleth the cause of that which followeth. After this manner ner he sometime deriueth eternal life from workes: not for that is to be ascribed to them: but because whom he hath chosen, thē he doth iustifie, that he may at length glorifie them, he maketh the grace that goeth before which is a step toward that which foloweth, after a certaine maner the cause of it. But so oft as he hath occasiō to assigne the true cause, he biddeth vs not to flee to workes, but holdeth vs in the onely thinkinge vpon the mercy of God. For what manner of thinge is this which he teacheth by the Apostle, The rewarde of sinne is death: the grace of the Lorde, is life euerlastinge? Why doth he not set righteousnesse in comparison against sinne, as he setteth life against death? Why doth he not make righteousnesse the cause of life, as he maketh sinne the cause of death? For so should the cōparison of contraries haue stande well together, which is much broken by this turninge. But the Apostle meant by this comparison to expresse that which was trueth, that death is due to the deseruinges of men: that life is reposed in the onely mercy of God. Finally in these manners of speaking is rather expressed the order than the cause: because God in heapinge graces vpon graces, taketh cause of the first to adde the seconde, that he may leaue nothinge vndone to the enriching of his seruantes: and he so cōtinually extendeth his liberality, that yet he would haue vs alway to looke vnto the free electiō which is fountaine and beginninge of it. For although he loueth the giftes which he daily giueth, insomuch as they spring out of that fountaine: yet it is our part to holde fast that free acceptation, which alone is able to vpholde our soules: as for such giftes of his Spirite as he afterward giueth vs, so to adioyne them to the first cause, that they minish nothing of it. Rom. 8 30. Rom. 6 23.

That those thinges that are commonly boasted concerning the merites of workes, do ouerthrowe as well the praise of God in giuing of righteousnesse, as also the assurednesse of salnation.

NOw we haue declared that which is the chiefe point in this matter: that because if righteousnes be vpholde with works, it must needes byandby fall downe before the sight of God, it is contained in the onely mercy of God, the onely communicating of Christ, and therefore in only faith. But, let vs diligently marke that this is the chiefe stay of the matter, lest we be entangled with that generall errour, not only of the common people, but also of learned men. For so soone as question is moued of the iustification of faith & works, they flee to those places which seeme to giue to works some merit in the sight of God: as though the iustification of workes were fully wonne, if it be once proued that they be of any value with God. But we haue aboue plainely shewed that the righteousnesse of workes consisteth only in the perfect & full keping of the law. Wherupon foloweth that no man is iustified by workes but he that hauing climbed vp to ỹ hiest top of perfection can not be proued guilty of any offense be it neuer so litle. Therfore it is an other & a seueral questiō: Howsoeuer workes suffice not to iustifie a man, whether yet do they not deserue fauour with God?

2 First of the name of merite I must needes say this afore hande, that whosoeuer first applied it to works of men cōpared to the iudgement of God, he did very ill prouide for the pureneſſe of faith. Truely I do by my good wil abstaine frō striues about wordes, but I would wish that this sobriety had alway bin vsed among Christian wryters, that they woulde not haue founde in their heartes to vse wordes strange from the Scriptures, which engendred much offense and no frute. For whereto, I besech you, was it needefull to haue the name of Merite brought in, when the price of good workes might be fitely expressed by an other name without offense? But howe much offense that worde containeth in it, is euident with the great hurt of the worlde. Surely as it is most proude it can do nothinge but darken the grace of God, and fill men with froward pride. The olde wryters of the Church, I graunt, haue commonly vsed it, and I would to God they had not with the abusinge of one litle word giuen to posteritie matter of errour. Howebeit they themselues also do in many places testifie, howe in no case they meant to giue any preiudice agaynst the trueth. For thus sayeth Augustine in one place, Let Merites of men here holde their peace, which haue perished by Adam: and lette the grace of God reigne, by Iesus Christ. Againe, The saintes giue nothing to their owne Merites: they will giue all to none but to thy mercy, O God. In an other place, When man seeth that whatsoeuer good he hath, he hath it not from himselfe, but from his God, he seeth that all that which is praised in him, is not of his owne Merites, but of the mercy of God. You see howe takinge from men the power of doinge well, he also throweth downe the dignity of Merite. And Chrysostome sayth, Our workes, if there be any, which folow the free calling of God, are repayment and det: but the giftes of God are grace and bountifulneſſe and the greatneſſe of liberall giuinge. But, leauinge the name, let vs rather looke vpon the thinge. I haue verily before alleaged a sentence out of Bernarde, As it sufficeth to Merite, not to presume of Merites: so to want Merites,

ſufficeth to iudgement. But by addinge forth with an expoſition, he ſufficiently mitigateth the hardneſſe of the worde, where he ſaith: Therefore care thou to haue Merites: when thou haſt them, knowe that they are giuen: hope for frute, the mercy of God: and ſo thou haſt eſcaped all danger, of pouerty, vnthankefulneſſe, and preſumption. Happy is the church which neither wanteth Merites without preſumption, nor preſumption without Merites. And a litle before he hadde largely ſhewed, howe Godly a meaninge he vſed. For of Merites (ſayth he) why ſhoulde the Church be carefull, which hath a ſtedfaſter and ſurer cauſe to glorie of the purpoſe of God? God can not deny himſelfe, he wil do that which he hath promiſed. If there be no cauſe why thou ſhouldeſt aske, by what merites may we hope for good thinges? ſpecially ſith thou heareſt it ſayd, Not for your ſakes, but for my ſake: it ſufficeth to Merit, to know that Merites ſuffice not. Exe. 36. 32.

3 What all our workes deſerue, the Scripture ſheweth when it ſayth that they can not abide the ſight of God, becauſe they are ful of vncleanneſſe: then, what the perfect obſeruing of the law (if any ſuch could be found) ſhal deſerue, when it teacheth that we ſhould thinke our ſelues vnprofitable ſeruantes when we haue done all things that are commaunded vs: becauſe we ſhal haue giuē nothing freely to the Lord, but only haue performed our due ſeruices, to which there is no thanke to be giuen. But thoſe good workes which he himſelfe hath giuen vs, the Lord both calleth ours and teſtifieth that they are not onely acceptable to him, but alſo that they ſhal haue reward. It is our duety againe for our parte, to be encouraged with ſo great a promiſe, and to gather vp our heartes, that we be not wearied with well doinge, and to yeelde true thankefulneſſe to ſo great bountifulneſſe of God. It is vndouted ẏ it is the grace of God whatſoeuer there is in workes that deſerueth praiſe: that there is not one droppe, which we ought properly to aſcribe to our ſelues. This if we do truely and earneſtly acknowledge, there vaniſheth away not onely all affiance but alſo opinion of Merite. We (I ſay) do not parte the praiſe of good workes (as the Sophiſters do) betwene God and man: but we reſerue it whole, perfect, and vnminiſhed to the Lorde. Onely this we aſſigne to man, that euen the ſelfe ſame workes that were good he by his vncleanneſſe corrupteth and defileth. For nothinge commeth out of man, howe perfect ſoeuer he be, that is not defiled with ſome ſpot. Therefore let the Lord call into iudgement euen theſe thinges that are beſt in the workes of menne: he ſhall verily eſpie in them his owne righteouſneſſe, but mans diſhoneſty and ſhame. Luk. 17 10. Good workes therefore do pleaſe God & are not vnprofitable to the doers of them, but rather they receiue for rewarde the moſt large benefites of God: not becauſe they ſo deſerue, but becauſe the goodneſſe of God hath of it ſelfe appointed this price vnto them. But what ſpitefulneſſe is this, that men not cõtented with that liberality of God, which giueth vndue rewardes to workes that deſerue no ſuch thing, do with ambition ful of ſacrilege endeuour further, that that which is wholly of the liberality of God, may ſeeme to be rendered to the merites of men. Here I appelle to the common iudgement of euery man. If any man that hath a taking of profit in a peece of ground by an others mãs liberall graunt, do alſo claime to himſelfe the title of propriety: doth he not by ſuch vnthankefulnes deſerue to looſe the very ſelfe poſſeſſion which he had? Likewiſe if a bondeſlaue beinge made free of his Lord, do hide the baſenes of the eſtate of a Libertine, & boaſt himſelf to be a freeman borne: is he not worthy to be brought backe into his former bondage? For this is the right vſe of enioying a benefite, if we neither claime to our ſelues more than is giuen, nor do defraude the author of the benefite of his praiſe: but rather do ſo behaue our ſelues, that that which he hath giuen from himſelfe to vs, may ſeeme after a certaine maner to remaine with him. If this moderation be to be kept toward men, let all men looke & conſider what maner of moderation is due to God.

Libertine, is he that is free by manumiſſiõ, not bybirth

4 I knowe that the Sophiſters do abuſe certaine places, to proue therby that the name of Merit toward God is found in the Scriptures. They alleage a ſentence out of Eccleſiaſticus, Mercy ſhall make place to euery man, according to the Merit of his workes. And out of the Epiſtle to the Hebrues, Forget not doing good and communicating, for with ſuch ſacrifices men merite of God. As for my right in reſiſting the authority of Eccleſiaſticus, I do now releaſe it. Yet I deny that they faithfully alleage that which Eccleſiaſticus, whatſoeuer writer he were, hath wrytten. For the Greeke copie is thus: τότε ἐλεημοσύνῃ ποιήσει τόπον, ἕκαστος γὰρ κατὰ τὰ ἔργα ἐυτοῦ εὑρήσει. He ſhal make place to euery mercy, & euery man ſhal finde according to his works. And that this is ỹ true text, which is corrupted in the Latine tranſlation, appeareth both by the framing of theſe words, & by a lõger ioyning together of the ſentence going before. In the Epiſtle to the Hebrues, there is no cauſe why they ſhould ſnare vs in one litle worde, when in the Greeke wordes of the Apoſtle is nothing elſe but that ſuch ſacrifices do pleaſe and are acceptable to God. This alone ought largely to ſuffice to ſubdue & beate downe the outragiouſnes of our pride, that we faine not any worthineſſe to workes beyonde the rule of Scripture. Now the doctrine of the Scripture is, that all our good workes are continually besprinkled with many filthy spottes, wherwith God may be worthily offended and be angry with vs: so far is it of, that they be able to winne him to vs, or to prouoke his liberality toward vs: Yet because he of his tender kindenesse doth not examine them by extremity of law, he taketh thē as if they were most pure, & therfore though without merit, he rewardeth them with infinite benefites both of this present life and of the life to come. For I do not allowe the distinction set by men otherwise learned and godly: that good workes deserue the graces that are giuen vs in this life, and that eternall life is the reward of faith alone. For the Lord doth commonly alway set in heauen the reward of labors and the crowne of battel. Againe to giue it so to the merit of workes, that it be taken away frō grace, that the Lord heapeth vs with graces vpon graces, is against the doctrine of the Scripture. For though Christ sayth that to him that hath, shalbe giuen, and that the faithfull and good seruant which hath shewed himselfe faithfull in fewe thinges, shalbe set ouer many: yet he also sheweth in an other place, that the encreases of the faithfull are the giftes of his free goodnesse. All ye that thirst (sayth he) come to the waters: and ye that haue not money, come and bye milke and honie without money and without any exchange. Whatsoeuer therefore is nowe giuen to the faithfull for help of saluation, yea and blessednesse it selfe, is the meere liberality of God: yet both in this and in those he testifieth that he hath consideration of workes: because, to testifie the greatnesse of his loue towarde vs, he vouchsaueth to graunt such honor not only to vs, but also to the giftes which he hath giuen vs. Mat. 25 21. & 29. Esa. 55. 1.

5 If these thinges had in the ages past bin handeled & disposed in such order as they ought to haue bin, there had neuer arisen so many troubles and dissensions. Paul sayth that in the buildinge of Christian doctrine, we must kepe still that fundation which he had layed among the Corinthians, beside which no other can be layed: and that the same fundation is Iesus Christ. What maner of fundation haue we in Christ? is it, that he was to vs the beginninge of saluation: that the fulfilling thereof should follow of our selues? and hath he but only opened the way, by which we should go forward of our owne strēgth? Not so: but, as he sayd a litle before, when we acknowledge him, he is giuen to vs for righteousnesse. No manne therefore is well founded in Christ, but he that hath full righteousnesse in him: forasmuch as the Apostle sayeth not that he was sent to helpe vs to obtaine righteousnes, but that he himselfe might be our righteousnesse. 1. Cor. 3 11. 1 Cor. 1 30.

Ephe.2. 4. Colo.2. 14. & 20. Namely, that we are chosen in him from eternitie before the making of the world, by no deseruing of oures, but according to the purpose of the good pleasure of God: that by his death we are redemed from the damnation of death, and deliuered from destruction: that in him we are adopted of the heauenly father into children and heires: that Ioh.10 28. by his bloud we are recõciled to the Father: that being geuen to him to be kept we are deliuered from perill of perishing and of being lost: that being so engraffed in him, we are already after a certaine manner partakers of eternall life, being entred into the kingdome of God by hope: and yet more: that hauinge obteined such partaking of him, howe so euer we be yet fooles in our selues, he is wisdom for vs before God: howsoeuer we be sinners, he is righteousnesse for vs: howsoeuer we be vncleane, he is cleannesse for vs: howsoeuer we be weake, howsoeuer vnarmed and lieng open in danger of Satan, yet oures is the power which is geuen him in heauen and earth, Mat.28 18. whereby he may treade downe Satan for vs, and breake the gates of helles: howsoeuer we still cary about with vs the body of death, yet he is life for vs: brefely that all his things are oures, and we in him haue all things, in our selues nothing: vpon this foundation. I say, it behoueth that we be builded, if we will encrease into a holy temple to the Lorde.

6 But the world hath a longe time bene otherwise taught. For there haue bene found out I wote not what morall good workes, by which men may be made acceptable to God before that they be graffed in Christ. As though the Scripture lieth, when it saith, that 1.Ioh.5 12. they are all in death which haue not possessed the Sonne. If they be Rom.14 23. in death, howe should they bring forth matter of life? As though it were of no more force, ỳ whatsoeuer is done without faith, is sinne: as though there may be good frutes of an euell tree. But what haue these most pestilent Sophisters left to Christ wherin he may shewe forth his power? They say that he hath deserued for vs the first grace, namely the occasion of deseruing: that it is nowe our part not to faile the occasion offred. O desperate shamelesnesse of vngodlinesse. Who would haue thought that men professing the name of Christ, durst so strippe him naked of his power, and in a manner treade him vnder foote? This testimonie is eche where spoken of him, that all they are iustified that beleue in him: these fellowes teache, that there commeth from him no other benefit, but this, that the way is opened 1.Ioh.5. 12. to euery man to iustifie himselfe. But I would to God they tasted Iohn.5. 24. what these sayings meane: that all they haue life that haue the Sonne of God: that whosoeuer beleueth, is already passed from death into life: that we are iustified by his grace, that we might be made heires of eternall life: that the faithfull haue Christ abidinge in them, by whome they cleaue fast to God: that they which are partakers of his life, do sit with him in heauenly places: that they are transplanted into the kingdome of God, and haue obteined saluatiō. and innumerable other such. For they do not declare, that there cōmeth by the faith of Christ nothing but ỹ power to obteine righteousnesse or saluation, but that they are both geuen to vs. Therefore so sone as thou art by faith engraffed into Christ, thou art already made the sonne of God, the heire of heauen, partaker of righteousnesse, possessor of life, and (that their lies may be better confuted) thou hast not obteined the fit abilitie to deserue, but euen all the deseruinges of Christ: for they are communicated to thee. Rom. 3. 24. 1. Ioh. 3 23. Eph. 2. 6. Colo. 1. 13.

7 So the Sorbonical scholes, the mothers of all errours, haue taken from vs the iustificatiō of faith which is the summe of all godlinesse. They graunt verily in worde, that man is iustified by formed faith: but this they afterward expound, because good workes haue of faith this that they auaile to righteousnesse: that they seme in a manner to nam; faith in mockage, sith without great enuiousnesse it could not be passed ouer in silence, seing it is so oft repeted of the Scripture. And not yet cōtented, they do in the praise of good works priuily steale from God somwhat to geue away to man. Because they see that good workes litle auaile to aduaunce man, and that they can not be properly called Merites, if they be accompted the frutes of the grace of God: they picke them out of the strength of free will, oyle forsooth out of a stone. And they denie not in deede that the principall cause of them is in grace: but they affirme that thereby is not excluded free will, by which is all merit. And this not onely the latter Sopisters do teach, but also their Pythagoras, Lombard: whome if you compare with these men, you may say to be found witted and sobre. It was truely a point of maruelous blindenesse, that when they had Augustine so oft in their mouth, they sawe not with howe great carefulnesse that man prouided that no peece of the glorie of good workes were it neuer so litle, should be conueyed to men. Here before where we entreated of free wil, we recited certain testimonies of his to this purpose, of which sort there are oftētimes found many like in his wryninges: as when he forbiddeth vs that we should no where bost of our merites, because euen they also are the gifies of God: And when he writeth, that all our merite is onely of grace, that it is not gotten by our sufficience, but is all made by grace, &c. It is no marueil that Lombard was blinde at the light of the Scripture, in Lib. 2. dist. 28. In Psal. 144. Epist. 105.

whiche it appereth that he was not ſo well practiſed. Yet nothing could be deſired more plaine againſt him and his diſciples, than this word of the Apoſtle, For when he forbiddeth Chriſtians all glorieng, he adioineth a reaſon why it is not lawefull to glorie: becauſe we are that handiworke of God, created to all good workes, that we ſhould walke in them. Sith therefore there cõmeth out of vs no good thing, but in ſo much as we be regenerate: and our regeneration is whole of God without exception: there is no right why we ſhould claime to our ſelues one ounce in good workes. Finally whereas they cõtinually call vpon good workes, in the meane time they ſo inſtruct conſciences, that they neuer dare haue affiance, that they haue God wel pleaſed and fauorable to their workes. But contrariwiſe we, without making any mention of Merite, do yet by our doctrine raiſe vp the courages of the faithfull with ſingular comfort, when we teach them that in their workes they pleaſe God, and are vndoutedly accepted vnto him. Yea and alſo here we require that no man attempt or go about any worke without faith, that is to ſay, vnleſſe he do firſt with aſſured confidence of minde determine that he ſhall pleaſe God.

Eph. 2. 10.

8 Wherefore let vs not ſuffer our ſelues to be led ſo much as one heare bredth away from this onely foundation: which being layed, wiſe builders do afterward well & orderly builde vpon it. For if there be neede of doctrine and exhortation, they put men in minde, that the Sonne of God hath appered to this ende, that he may deſtroy the workes of the deuell: that they ſhould not ſinne which are of God, that the time paſt is enough for the fulfilling of the deſires of the Gẽtiles: that the elect of God are veſſels of mercie choſen out vnto honour, which ought to be made cleane from all filthineſſe. But all is ſpoken at ones, when it is ſhewed that Chriſt wil haue ſuch diſciples, which forſaking, themſelues, and taking vp their croſſe, do followe him. He that hath forſaken himſelfe, hath cut of the roote of all euels, that he may no more ſeke thoſe thinges that are his owne. He that hath taken vp his croſſe, hath framed himſelfe to all patience and mildeneſſe. But the example of Chriſt conteineth both theſe and all other duties of godlineſſe & holineſſe. He ſhewed himſelfe obedient to his father, euen to the death: he was wholly occupied in doing the workes of God: he with his whole heart breathed out the glorie of his father: he gaue his ſoule for his brethren: he both did good and wiſhed good to his enemies. If there be neede of comfort, theſe will bring maruelous comfort, that we be in affliction, but we are not made carefull: that we labour, but we are not forſaken: we are brought lowe, but we are not confounded: we are throwen downe, but we do not not periſh: alway bearing about with vs in our body the mortifying of Ieſus Chriſt, that the life of Ieſus may be manifeſtly ſhewed in vs, that if we be dead with him, we ſhall alſo liue together with him: if we ſuffer with him, we ſhall alſo reigne together with him: that we be ſo faſhioned like to his ſuffringes, till we attaine to the likeneſſe of his reſurrection: For aſmuch as the Father hath predeſtinate theſe to be faſhioned like the image of his ſonne, whome, in him he hath choſen, that he may be the firſt begotten among all his brethren: and therefore that neither death, nor preſent things, nor things to come, ſhall ſeuer vs from the loue of God which is in Chriſt: but rather all things ſhall turne to vs to good and to ſaluation. Loe, we do not iuſtifie a man by workes before God: but we ſay that all they that are of God, are regenerate and made a newe creature, that they may paſſe out of the kingdome of ſinne into the kingdome of righteouſneſſe, and that by this teſtimonie they make their calling certaine, and are iudged as trees by the frutes.

A confutation of the ſclaunders, vvherevby the Papiſtes go about to bring this doctrine in hatred.

WIth this one word may the ſhameleſneſſe of certaine vngodly mē be confuted which ſclaunder vs with ſaying that we deſtroy good workes, and do drawe men away from the following of them, when we ſay that they are not iuſtified by workes, nor do deſerue ſaluation: and againe, that we make to eaſy a way to righteouſneſſe, when we teach that it lieth in the free forgeueneſſe of ſinnes, and that we do by this enticement allure men to ſinne, which are of their owne will too much enclined therto already. Theſe ſclaunders (I ſay) are with that one word ſufficiently confuted: yet I will brefely anſwer to them both. They allege that by the iuſtification of faith, good workes are deſtroyed. I leaue vnſpoken, what māner of men be theſe zelous louers of good workes which do ſo backbite vs. Let them haue licence as freely to rayle as they do licentiouſly infect the whole world with the filthineſſe of their life. They faine that they be greued, that when faith is ſo gloriouſly aduaunced, workes are driuen downe out of their place. What if they be more raiſed vp, and ſtabliſhed? For neither do we dreame of a faith voide of good workes, nor a iuſtification that is without them. This onely is the difference, that when we confeſſe that faith and good workes do neceſſarily hang together, yet we ſet iuſtification in faith, not in works. For what reaſon we do ſo, we haue in redineſſe eaſily to declare, if we do but turne to Chriſt vnto whome our faith is directed, and from whome it receiueth her whole ſtrength. Why therefore are we iuſtified by faith? bycauſe by faith we take holde of the righteouſneſſe of Chriſt, by which alone we are reconciled to God. But this thou canſt not take holde of, but that thou muſt alſo therewithall take hold of ſanctification. For he was geuen to vs, for righteouſneſſe, wiſdome, ſanctification, and redemption. Therefore Chriſt iuſtifieth none whom he doth not alſo ſanctifie. For theſe benefites are coupled together with a perpetuall and vnſeparable knot, that whome he enlighteneth with his wiſdome, them he redemeth: whome he redemeth, he iuſtifieth: whome he iuſtifieth, he ſanctifieth. But for aſmuch as our queſtion is onely of righteouſneſſe and ſanctifying, let vs ſtay vpon theſe. We may put difference betwene them, yet Chriſt conteineth them both vnſeparably in himſelfe. Wilt thou therefore obteine righteouſneſſe in Chriſt? Thou muſt firſt poſſeſſe Chriſt: and thou canſt not poſſeſſe him, but that thou muſt be made partaker of his ſanctification: becauſe he can not be torne in peeces. Sith therefore the Lorde doth graunt vs theſe benefites to be enioyed none otherwiſe than in geuing himſelfe, he geueth them both together, the one neuer without the other. So appereth how true it is, that we are iuſtified not without workes, and yet not by works: becauſe in the partaking of Chriſt, wherby we are iuſtified, is no leſſe conteined ſanctification than righteouſneſſe.

2 That alſo is moſt falſe, that the mindes of men are withdrawen from the affection of weldoing, when we take from them the opinion of meriting. Here by the way the readers muſt be warned, that they fooliſhly reaſon from reward to merit, as I ſhall afterward more plainely declare: namely becauſe they know not this principle, that God is no leſſe liberall when he aſſigneth reward to workes, than when he geueth power to do well. But this I had rather differre to the place fit for it. Now it ſhalbe enough to touch howe weake their obiection is: which ſhalbe done two wayes. For firſt whereas they ſay that there ſhalbe no care of well framing of life, but when hope of reward is ſet before them: they erre quite from the truth. For if this onely be entended when men ſerue God, that they loke to reward, or let out to hire or ſell their labors to him, they litle preuayle: for God will be freely worſhipped, freely loued: he (I ſay) alloweth that worſhipper, which when all hope of receiuing reward is cut of, yet ceſſeth not to worſhippe him. Moreouer if men be to be pricked forward, no man can put ſharper ſpurres vnto them, than thoſe that are taken of the ende of our redemption and calling: ſuch as the word of God spurreth men withall, when it teacheth, that it is to wicked vnthankefulnesse, not mutually to loue him againe which first loued vs: that by the blood of Christ our cõsciences are cleansed from dead workes, to serue the liuing God: that it is a hainous sacrilege, if being ones cleansed, we defile our selues with newe filthinesse, and prophane that holy blood: that we are deliuered from the handes of our enemies, that we may without feare serue him in holinesse and righteousnesse before him all the dayes of our life: that we are made free from sinne, that we may with a free Spirit followe righteousnes: that our olde man is crucified, that we may rise againe into newnesse of life: againe that if we be dead with Christ (as becommeth his members) we must seeke those things that are aboue, and must in the world be waifaring men from home, that we may long toward heauen where is our treasure: that the grace of God hath appered to this ende, that forsaking all vngodlinesse and worldly desires, we may liue soberly, holily, and godlily in this world, loking for the blessed hope and the appering of the glorie of the great God and sauiour: therefore that we are not apointed that we should stirre vp wrath to our selues, but that we may obteine saluation by Christ: that we are the temples of the Holy Ghost, which it is not lawfull to be defiled: that we are not darkenesse, but light in the Lord, which must walke as children of light: that we are not called to vncleannesse, but to holinesse: because this is the will of God, our sanctification, that we absteine from vnlawfull desires: that our calling is holy, that the same is not fulfilled but with pureness of life: that we are for this purpose deliuered from sinne, that we should obey to righteousnesse. Can we be pricked forward to charitie with any more liuely argument than that of Iohn, that we should mutually loue one an other as God hath loued vs? that herein his children do differ from the children of the Deuell, the children of light from the children of darkenesse, bycause they abide in loue? Againe with that argument of Paule, that we if we cleaue to Christ, are the members of one body, which it is mete to be holpen one of an other with mutuall duties? Can we be more strongly prouoked to holinesse, than when we heare againe of Iohn, that all they that haue this hope, do sanctifie themselues, bycause their God is holy? Againe of ỹ mouth of Paule: that hauing the promise of adoption, we should cleanse our selues from all the defiling of the flesh and spirite? than when we heare Christ setting forth himselfe for an example vnto vs that we should follow his steppes?

3 And these fewe things I haue set forth for a tast. For if I should entende to go through all, I ſhoulde be driuen to make a longe volume. The Apoſtles are all full of encouragementes, exhortations & rebukings, wherby they may inſtruct the man of God to euery good worke, and that without any mention of merite. But rather they fetch their chiefe exhortatiõs from this that our ſaluation ſtandeth vpon the onely mercie of God and vpon no merite of oers. As Paule, after that he hath in a whole Epiſtle diſcourſed that there is Ro. 12. 1. no hope of life for vs but in the righteouſneſſe of Chriſt, when he commeth downe to moral exhortations, he beſecheth them by that mercy of God which he hath vouchſaued to extend to vs. And truely this one cauſe ought to haue bin ſufficient, that God may be glori-

Matt. 5. 16. fied in vs. But if any be not ſo vehemently moued with the glory of God, yet the remembrance of his benefites ought to haue bin, moſt ſufficient, to ſtirre vp ſuch men to do well. But theſe men, which do paraduenture with thruſting in of merites beate out ſome ſeruile & conſtrained obediences of the law, do falſly ſay that we haue nothing whereby we may exhorte menne to good workes, becauſe we go not Chryſoſt. homil. in Gen. the ſame way to worke. As though God were much delited with ſuch obediences, which proteſteth that he loueth a cherefull giuer, & forbiddeth any thing to be giuen as it were of heauines or of ne-
2. Cor. 9. 7. ceſſity. Neither do I ſpeake this for that I do either refuſe or deſpiſe that kinde of exhortation, which the Scripture oftentimes vſeth, that it may leaue no meane vnattempted euery way to ſtirre vp our mindes. For it rehearſeth the reward which God will render to euery man accordinge to his workes. But I deny that that is the only thing, yea or the chiefe among many. And then I graunt not that we ought to take beginninge thereat. Moreouer I affirme that it maketh nothinge to the ſettinge vp of ſuch merites as theſe men boaſt of, as we ſhall hereafter ſee. Laſt of all I ſay that is to no profitable vſe, vnleſſe this doctrine haue firſt taken place, that we are iuſtified by the onely merite of Chriſt, which is conceiued by faith but by no merites of our workes, becauſe none can be fitte to the endeuour of holineſſe, vnleſſe they haue firſt digeſted this doctrine. Which thinge alſo the Pſa. 130 Prophet very well ſignifieth, when he thus ſpeaketh to God: With thee is mercy, that thou mayſt be feared. For he ſheweth that there is no worſhippinge of God, but when his mercy is acknowledged, vpon which alone it is both founded and ſtabliſhed. Which is very worthy to be noted, that we may knowe not onely that the beginninge of worſhippinge God aright is the affiance of his mercy, but alſo that the feare of God (which the Papiſtes will haue to be meritorious) can not haue the name of merite, becauſe it is grounded vpon the

pardon and forgeueneſſe of ſinnes.

4 But it is a moſt vayne ſclaunder, that men are allured to ſinne, when we affirme the free forgeueneſſe of ſinnes, in which we ſay that righteouſneſſe conſiſteth. For, we ſay that it is of ſo great value, that it can with no good of oures be recompenſed, and that therefore it ſhould neuer be obteined, vnleſſe it were freely geuē. Moreouer that it is to vs in deede freely geuen, but not ſo to Chriſt which bought it ſo derely, namely with his owne moſt holy bloud, biſide which there was no price of value enough that might be paied to the iudgement of God. When menne are taught theſe things, they are put in minde that it is no thanke to them that the ſame moſt holy bloud is not ſhed ſo oft as they ſinne. Furthermore we learne, that our filthineſſe is ſuch, as is neuer waſhed away but with the fountaine of this moſt pure bloud, Ought not they that heare theſe things, to conceiue a greater horrour of ſinne, than if it were ſaid that it is wiped away with the ſprinkling of good workes? And if they haue any thing of God, howe can they but dred being ones cleanſed, to wallowe themſelues againe in the mire, as much as in them lieth to troble & infect the pureneſſe of this fountaine? I haue waſhed my feete (ſaith the faithfull ſoule in Salomon) how ſhall I againe defile them? Now it is euidēt, whether ſort do both more abace the forgeueneſſe of ſinnes, and do more make vile the dignitie of righteouſneſſe. They babble that God is appeaſed with their owne trifling ſatisfactiōs, that is, their donge: We affirme that the giltineſſe of ſinne is more greuous than can be purged with ſo light triſtes: that the diſpleaſure of God is more heauie than can be releaſed with theſe ſatisfactions of no value, and that therefore this is the prerogatiue of the onely bloude of Chriſt. They ſay that righteouſnes (if it faile at any time) is reſtored and repaired by ſatisfactorie workes: we thinke it more precious than that it can be matched with any recompenſe of workes, and that therefore for the reſtoring thereof we muſt flee to the onely mercie of God. As for the reſt of thoſe thinges that perteine to the forgeueneſſe of ſinnes, let them be ſought out of the next chapter. Cant. 5. 3.

The xvij. Chapter.

The agreement of the promiſes of the lawe and the Goſpell.

NOw let vs alſo go through the other arguments wherewith Satan by the ſoldiars of his garde, goeth about either to ouerthrowe or batter the iuſtification of faith. Thus I thinke we haue already wrong from the ſclaunderers, that they can no more charge vs as enemies of good workes. For, iuſtification is taken away from good workes, not that no good workes ſhould be done, or that thoſe which be done ſhould be denied to be good, but that we ſhould not put affiáce in them, nor glorie in them, nor aſcribe ſaluation to them. For this is our affiance, this is our glorie, and the onely authour of our ſaluation, that Chriſt the ſonne of God is ours, and we likewiſe are in him ỹ ſonnes of God, and heyers of the heauenly kingdome, being called by the goodneſſe of God, not by our owne worthineſſe, into the hope of eternall bleſſednеſſe. But bycauſe they do biſide theſe aſſaile vs, as we haue ſaid, with other engines, go to, let vs go forward in beating away theſe alſo. Firſt they come backe to the promiſes of the lawe, which the Lorde did ſet forth to the kepers of his lawe: and they aſke whether we will haue them to be vtterly voide or effectuall. By cauſe it were an abſurditie and to be ſcorned to ſay that they are voide, they take it for cõfeſſed that they are of ſome effectualneſſe. Hereupon they reaſon that we are not iuſtified by only faith. For thus ſaith the Lorde: And it ſhalbe, if thou ſhalt heare theſe commaundementes and iudgementes, and ſhall kepe them and do them, the Lorde alſo ſhall kepe with thee his couenant and mercie which he hath ſworne to thy fathers, he ſhal loue thee and multiplie thee, and bleſſe thee, &c. Againe, If ye ſhall well direct your wayes and your endeuors, if ye walke not after ſtrange Gods, if ye do iudgement between man and man, and go not backe into malice, I will walke in the middeſt of you. I will not recite a thouſand peces of the ſame ſorte, which ſith they nothing differ in ſenſe, ſhalbe declared by the ſolution of theſe. In a ſumme, Moſes teſtifieth that in the lawe is ſet forth bleſſing and curſe, death & life. Thus therfore they reaſon, that either this bleſſing is made idle and fruteleſſe, or that iuſtificatiõ is not of faith alone. We haue already before ſhewed, howe if we ſticke faſt in the lawe, ouer vs being deſtitute of all bleſſing, hangeth onely curſe which is threatned to all tranſgreſſors. For the Lord promiſeth nothing but to the perfect kepers of his lawe, ſuch as there is none found. This therfore remaineth, that all mankinde is by the law accuſed, and ſubiect to curſe and the wrath of God: from which that they may be looſed, they muſt needes go out of the power of the law, & be as it were brought into libertie from the bondage thereof: not that carnall libertie which ſhould withdrawe vs from the keping of the lawe, ſhould allure vs to thinke all things lawfull and to ſuffer our luſt, as it were the ſtayes being broken & with looſe reines to run at riot: but the ſpirituall libertie, which may comfort and raiſe vp a diſmayed and ouerthrowen conſcience, ſhewing it to be free from the

the curse and damnation wherewith the lawe helde it downe bond and fast tied. This deliuerance from the subiection of the lawe, and Manumission (as I may call it) we obteine when by faith we take holde of the mercie of God in Christ, whereby we are certified and assured of the forgeuenesse of sinnes, with the feling whereof the lawe did pricke and bite vs.

By this reason euen the promises that were offred vs in the lawe, should be all vneffectuall and voide, vnlesse the goodnesse of God by the Gospell did helpe. For, this condition that we kepe the whole lawe, vpon which the promises hang, and whereby alone they are to be performed, shall neuer be fulfilled. And ỹ Lorde so helpeth, not by leauing part of righteousnesse in our workes, and supplying parte by his mercifull bearing with vs, but when he setteth onely Christ for the fulfilling of righteousnesse. For the Apostle, when he had before said that he and other Iewes beleued in Iesus Christ, knowing that man is not iustified by the workes of the lawe, addeth a reason: not that they should be holpen to fulnesse of righteousnesse by the faith of Christ, but by it should be iustified, not by the workes of the lawe. If the faithfull remoue from the lawe into faith, that they may in faith finde righteousnesse which they see to be absent from the lawe: truely they forsake the righteousnesse of the lawe. Therefore now let him that list, amplifie the rewardinges which are said to be prepared for the keper of the lawe, so that he therewithall consider that it commeth to passe by our peruersnesse, that we fele no fruite thereof till we haue obteined an other righteousnesse of faith. So Dauid, when he made mention of the rewarding which the Lord hath prepared for his seruantes, byandby descendeth to the reknowledging of sinnes, whereby that same rewarding is made voide. Also in the xix. Psalme, he gloriously setteth forth the benefites of the lawe, but he by and by crieth out: Whoe shall vnderstand his faultes? Lord cleanse me from my secret faultes. This place altogether agreeth with the place before, where when he had said that all the wayes of the Lorde are goodnesse and truth to them that feare him, he addeth: For thy names sake Lorde, thou shalt be mercifull to my peruersnesse, for it is much. So ought we also to reknowledge, that there is in deede the good will of God set forth vnto vs in the lawe, if we might deserue it by workes, but that the same neuer commeth to vs by the deserning of workes.

Gala. 2. 16.

Psa. 19. 13.

Psa. 25. 10.

How then? Are they geuen that they should vanish away without frute? I haue euen now already protested that the same is not my meaning. I say verily that they vtter not their effectualnesse toward vs, so long as they haue respect to the merit of works, and that therefore if they be considered in themselues, they be after a certaine manner abolished. If the Apostle teacheth that this noble promise I haue geuen you commaundements, which who so shall do shal liue in thē, is of no value if we stand still in it, and shall neuer a whit more profit than if it had not bene geuen at all: because it belongeth not euen to the most holy seruauntes of God, which are all far from the fulfilling of the lawe, but are compassed about with many transgressions. But when the promises of the Gospel are put in place of them, which do offer free forgeuenes of sinnes, they bring to passe that not onely we our selues be acceptable to God, but that our workes also haue their thanke: & not this onely that the Lorde accepteth them, but also extendeth to them the blessings which were by couenat due to the keping of the lawe. I graunt therfore, that those things which the Lorde hath promised in his lawe to the followers of righteousnesse and holinesse, are rendred to the workes of the faithfull: but in this rendring, the cause is alway to be considered that powreth grace to workes. Now causes we see that there be three. The first is, that God turning away his sight from the workes of his seruantes, which alway deserue rather reproche than praise, embraceth them in Christ, and by the onely meane of faith reconcileth them to himselfe without the meane of workes. The second, that of his fatherly kindnesse and tender mercifulnesse, he lifteth vp workes to so great honour, not weyeng the worthinesse of them, that he accompteth them of some value. The third, that he receiueth the very same workes with pardon, not imputing the imperfection, wherewith they all being defiled, should otherwise be rather reckened among sinnes than vertues. And hereby appereth how much the Sophisters haue bene deceiued, which thought that they had gaily escaped all absurdities when they said that workes do not of their owne inwarde goodnesse auaile to deserue saluation, but by the forme of the couenant, because the Lorde hath of his liberality so much esteemed them. But in the meane time they considered not, howe far those workes which they would haue to be meritorious, were from the condition of the promises, vnlesse there went before both iustification grounded vpon onely faith, and the forgeuenesse of sinnes, by which euen the good workes themselues haue neede to be wiped from spottes. Therefore of three causes of Gods liberalitie, by which it is brought to passe that the workes of the faithfull are acceptable, they noted but one, and suppressed two, yea and those the principall.

Leu 18. Eze. 20. 11. Rom. 10 5.

4 They allege the saying of Peter, which Luke rehearseth in the Actes:

Actes: I finde in truth that God is not an accepter of persones: but in euery nation he that doth righteousnesse is acceptable to him. And hereupon they gather that which semeth to be vndouted, that if man doth by right endeuors get himselfe the fauour of God, it is not the beneficiall gift of God alone that he obteineth saluation: yea that God doth of his mercy helpe a sinner, that he is by workes bowed to mercy. But you can in no wise make the Scriptures agree together, vnlesse you note a double accepting of man with God. For, such as man is by nature, God findeth nothing in him whereby he may be enclined to mercie, but onely miserie. If therefore it be certaine that man is naked and needy of all goodnesse, and on the other side full stuffed and loden with all kindes of euels, when God first receiueth them: for what qualitie, I pray you, shall we say that he is worthy of the heauenly calling? Away therefore with the vaine imagining of merites, where God so euidently setteth out his free mercifulnesse. For, that which in the same place is said by the voice of the Angell to Cornelius, that his prayers and almes had ascended into the sight of God, is by these men most lewdly wrested, that man by endeuor of good workes is prepared to receiue the grace of God. For it must needes be that Cornelius was already enlightened with the Spirit of wisedome, sith he was endued with true wisdome, namely with the feare of God: that he was sanctified with the same Spirit, sith he was a follower of righteousnesse, which the Apostle teacheth to be a most certaine fruite thereof. All those things therfore which are said to haue pleased God in him, he had of his grace, so far is it of that he did by his owne endeuor prepare himselfe to receiue it. Truely there can not one sillable of the Scripture be brought forth, that agreeth not with this doctrine, that there is none other cause for God to accept man vnto him, but because he seeth that man should be euery way lost, if he be left to himselfe: but because he will not haue him lost, he vseth his owne mercie in deliuering him. Now we see how this accepting hath not regard to the righteousnesse of man, but is a mere token of the goodnesse of God toward men being miserable and most vnworthy of so great a benefit.

Act. 10. 34.

Gal. 5. 5

5 But after that the Lorde hath brought man out of the bottomlesse depth of destruction, and seuered him to himselfe by grace, of adoption: because he hath newe begotten him & newly formed him into a newe life, he nowe embraceth him, as a newe creature with the giftes of his Spirit. This is that accepting whereof Peter maketh mention, by which the faithfull are after their vocation allowed of God euen in respecte also of workes: for the Lorde can not but loue and kisse those good things which he worketh in them by his Spirit. But this is alway to be remembred, that they are none otherwise acceptable to God in respect of workes, but in as much as for their cause and for their sakes, whatsoeuer good workes he hath geuen them in encreasing of his liberalitie, he also voucheſaueth to accept. For whense haue they good workes, but because the Lorde, as he hath chosen them for vessels vnto honor, so will garnish them with true godlinesse? Whereby also are they accompted good, as though there were nothing wanting in them, but because the kinde Father tenderly graunteth pardon to those deformities & spottes that cleaue to them? Summarily, he signifieth nothing els in this place, but that to God his children are acceptable and louely in whom he seeth the markes and features of his owne face. For we haue in an other place taught that regeneration is a repairinge of the image of God in vs. For asmuch as therfore whereſoeuer the Lorde beholdeth his owne face, he both worthily loueth it and hath it in honor: it is not without cause said, that the life of the faithfull being framed to holinesse and righteousnesse pleaseth him, but bycause the godly being clothed with mortall flesh, are yet sinners, and their good workes are but begonne and sauoring of the faultinesse of the flesh: he can not be fauorable neither to those nor to these, vnlesse he more embrace them in Christ than in themselues. After this manner are those places to be taken, which testifie that God is kinde and mercifull to the

where he so setteth out the goodnesse of his cause, that he abateth nothing from the free mercie which goeth before all giftes, whereof it is the beginning.

6 And here by the way it shalbe profitable to touch what these formes of speaking do differ from the promises of the lawe. I call promises of the lawe, not those which are eche where commonly writen in ỹ bookes of Moses: (for as much as in them also are fo\u0304d many promises of the Gospell) but those which properly belong to the ministerie of the lawe. Such promises, by what name so euer you list to call them, do declare that there is reward redy vpon condition, if thou do that which is commaunded thee. But when it is said, that the Lorde kepeth the couenant of mercie to them which loue him, therin is rather shewed what manner of men be his seruantes which haue faithfully receiued his couenant, than the cause is expressed why the Lorde should do good to them. Nowe this is the manner of shewing it. As the Lord vouchsaueth to graunt vs ỹ grace of eternall life, to this ende that he should be loued, feared, and honored of vs: so whatsoeuer promises there are of his mercy in the Scriptures, they are rightfully directed to this, and that we shoulde reuerence and worship the author of the benefites. So ofte therefore as we heare that he doth good to them that kepe his lawe, let vs remember that the children of God are there signified by the dutie which ought to be continuall in them: that we are for this cause adopted, that we should honor him for our Father. Therefore lest we should disherite our selues from the right of adoption, we must alway endeuor to this whereunto our calling tendeth. But let vs againe kepe this in minde, that the accomplishme\u0304t of the mercie of God hangeth not vpon the workes of the faithfull: but that he therefore fulfilleth the promise of saluation to them which aunswer to their calling in vprightnesse of life, because in them he acknoweth the naturall tokens of his children which are ruled with his Spirit vnto good. Hereunto let that be referred which is in the xv. Psalme spoken of the Citizens of the Church, Lorde whoe shall dwell in thy tabernacle, and whoe shall rest in thy holy hill? The innocét in handes and of a cleane heart, &c. Againe in Esaye, Who shall dwell with deuouring fire? He that doth Esa. 33. righteousnesse, he that speaketh right thinges, &c. For there is not 14. described the stay whereupon the faithfull may stand before the Lorde, but the manner wherewith the most mercifull father bringeth them into his fellowship, and therein defendeth and strengtheneth them. For, because he abhorreth sinne, he loueth righteousnes: whom he ioineth to himselfe, them he cleanseth with his spirit, that he may make them of like fashion to himselfe and his kingdome. Therefore if the question be of the first cause whereby the entrie is made open to the holy ones into the kingdome of God, from whense they haue that they may stand fast and abide in it, we haue this aunswer ready, because the Lorde by his mercie both hath ones adopted them, and perpetually defendeth them. But if the question be of the manner, then we must come downe to regeneration and the frutes thereof, which are rehersed in that Psalme.

7 But there seemeth to be much more hardnesse in these places, which do both garnish good workes with the title of righteousnesse, and affirme that man is iustified by them. Of the first sort there be very many places, where the obseruinges of the commaundements are called iustifications or righteousnesses. Of the other sort, that is an example which is in Moles, This shalbe our righteousnesse, if we kepe all these commaundementes. And if thou take exception and say that this is a promise of the lawe, which being knit to a condition impossible, proueth nothing. There be other of which you can not make the same answer, as this, And that shalbe to thee for righteousnesse before the Lord, to redeliuer to the poore man his pledge, &c. Againe, that which the Prophet saith, that the zele in reuenging the shame of Israell, was imputed to Phinees for righteousnesse. Therefore the Pharisees of our time thinke that here they haue a large matter to triumph vpon. For when we say, that when the righteousnesse of faith is set vp, the iustification of workes geueth place, by the same right they make this argument, If righteousnesse be of workes, then it is false that we are iustified by faith onely. Though I graunt that the commaundementes of the lawe are called righteousnesses: it is no maruell: for they are so in deede. Howebeit we must warne the readers that the Greekes haue not fitly translated the Hebrue word Hucmi, Dikaiomata, righteousnesses for commaundementes. But for the word, I willingly release my quarell. For neither dowe denie this to the lawe of God, that it contemeth perfect righteousnesse. For although, bycause we are detters of all the things that it commaundeth, therefore euen when we haue performed full obedience therof, we are vnprofitable seruantes: yet because the Lorde hath vouchsaued to graunt it the honor of righteousnesse, we take not away that which he hath geuen. Therefore we willingly confesse that the full obedience of the lawe is righteousnesse that the keping of euery commaundement, is a part of righteousnesse, if so be that the whole summe of righteousnesse were had in the other partes also. But we denie that there is any where any such forme of righteousnesse And

Psa. 106 30.

there-

therefore we take away the righteousnesse of the lawe, not for that it is maimed and vnperfect of it selfe, but for that by reason of the weakenesse of our flesh it is no where seene. But the Scripture not onely calleth simply the commaundements of the Lorde, righteousnesse: but it also geueth this name to the workes of the holy ones. As when it reporteth that Zacharie & his wife walked in the righteousnesses of the Lorde: truely when it so speaketh, it weyeth workes rather by the nature of the lawe, than by their owne propre estate. Howbeit here againe is that to be noted, which I euen now said, that of the negligence of the Greke translator is not a lawe to be made. But for asmuch as Luke would alter nothing in the receiued trãslatiõ, I will also not striue about it. For God hath cõmaunded these things that are in the lawe to men for righteousnesse: but this righteousnes we performe not but in keping the whole lawe: for by euery transgression it is broken. Wheras therefore the lawe doth nothing but prescribe righteousnesse: if we haue respecte to it, all the seuerall commaundementes thereof are righteousnesse: if we haue respect to men of whom they are done, they do not obteine the praise of righteousnesse by one worke, being trespassers in many, and by that same worke which is euer partly faulty by reason of imperfection. Luc. 1.

But nowe I come to the second kinde, in which is the chefe hardnes. Paule hath nothing more strong to proue the righteousnesse of faith, than that which is written of Abraham, that his faith was imputed to him for righteousnesse. Sith therefore it is said that the acte done by Phinees was imputed to him for righteousnesse: what Paul affirmeth of faith, the same may we also cõclude of works. Whereupon our aduersaries, as though they had wonne the victorie, determine that we are in deede not iustified without faith, but that we are also not iustified by it alone, and that workes accomplish our righteousnesse. Therefore here I beseech the godly, that if they knowe that the true rule of righteousnesse is to be taken out of the Scripture only, they will religiously and earnestly wey with me, howe the Scripture may without cauillations be rightly made to agree with it selfe. For asmuch as Paule knewe that the iustification of faith is the refuge for them that are destitute of their owne righteousnesse, he doth boldly conclude that all they that are iustified by faith, are excluded from the righteousnesse of workes. But sith it is certaine that the iustification of faith is common to all the faithfull, he doth therof with like boldenesse conclude ỹ no man is iustified by works, but rather contrariewise that men are iustified without any helpe of workes. But it is one thing to dispute of what value workes are by Gen. 4. 4. Psa. 106 31.

themselues, and an other thing what accompt is to be made of them after the stablishing of the righteousnesse of faith. If we shall set a price vpon workes according to their worthinesse, we say that they are vnworthy to come into the sight of God: and therefore that man hath no workes whereof he may glorie before God: then, that being spoiled of all helpe of workes he is iustified by onely faith. Nowe we define righteousnesse thus, that a sinner being receiued into the communion of Christ, is by his grace reconciled to God, when being cleansed with his bloode he obteineth forgeuenesse of sinnes, and being clothed with his righteousnesse as with his owne, he standeth assured before the heauenly iudgement seate. When the forgeuenesse of sinnes is set before, the good workes which followe haue nowe an other valuation than after their owne deseruing: bycause whatsoeuer is in them vnperfect, is couered with the perfection of Christ: whatsoeuer spottes or filthinesse there is, it is wiped away with his cleannesse, that it may not come into the examination of the iudgement of God. Therefore when the giltines of all trespasses is blotted out, whereby men are hindred that they can bring forth nothing acceptable to God, and when the faulte of imperfection is buried, which is wonte also to defile good workes: the good workes which the faithfull do, are compted righteous, or (which is all one) are imputed for righteousnesse.

9 Now if any man obiect this against me to assaile the righteousnesse of faith, first I will aske whether a man be compted righteous for one or two holy workes, being in the rest of the workes, of his life a trespasser of the lawe. This is more than an absurdnie. Then I will aske if he be compted righteous for many good workes, if he be in any parte founde gilty. This also he shall not be so bolde to affirme, when the penall ordinance of the lawe crieth out against it, and pro-
Deu. 27 claimeth all them accursed which haue not fulfilled all the commaundements of the lawe to the vttermost. Moreouer I will go further and aske, whether there be any worke that deserueth to be accused of no vncleannesse or imperfection. And howe could there be any such before those eyes, to whom euen ỹ very starres are not cleane enough, Iob. 4. 18. nor the Angels righteous enough? So shall he be compelled to graunt that there is no good worke which is not so defiled with transgressions adioined with it, and with the corruptnesse of it selfe, that it can not haue the honour of righteousnesse. Nowe if it be certaine that it procedeth from the righteousnesse of faith that workes which are otherwise vpure, vncleane, and but halfe workes, not worthy of the sight of God, much lesse of his loue, are imputed to righteousnesse,

why do they with boastinge of the righteousnesse of workes destroy the iustification of faith, whereas if this iustification were not, they should in vaine boast of that righteousnes? Will they make a vipers birth? For therto tende the sayings of the vngodly men. They can not deny that the iustification of faith is the beginning, foundation, cause, matter, and substance of the righteousnesse of works: yet they conclude that man is not iustified by faith, because good workes also are accompted for righteousnesse. Therefore let vs let passe these follies & confesse as the trueth is, that if the righteousnes of workes of what sorte soeuer it be accompted, hangeth vpon the iustification of faith it is by this not onely nothinge minished but also confirmed, namely whereby the strength therof appeareth more mighty. Neither yet let vs thinke that workes are so commended after free iustification, that they also afterward come into the place of iustifyinge a man, or do parte the office betwene them and faith. For vnlesse the iustification remaine alway whole, the vncleannes of workes shalbe vncouered. And it is no absurdity, that a man is so iustified by faith that not only he himselfe is righteous, but also his workes are esteemed righteous aboue their worthines.

10 After this maner we will graunt in workes not onely a righteousnesse in parges (as our aduersaries themselues would haue) but also that it is allowed of God as if it were a perfect & ful righteousnes. But if we remember vpon what fundation it is vpholden, all the difficulty shalbe dissolued. For then & not till then it beginneth to be an acceptable worke, when it is receiued with pardon. Now whense cõmeth pardon, but because God beholdeth both vs and all our things in Christ? Therfore as we, when we are grafted into Christ, do therfore appeare righteous before God, because our wickednesses are couered with his innocence, so our works are & be taken for righteous, because whatsoeuer faultinesse is otherwise in them, beinge buried in the cleannesse of Christ, it is not imputed. So we may rightfully say, that by only faith not only we but also our workes are iustified. Now if this righteousnes of workes of what sort soeuer it be, hangeth vpon faith and free iustification, and is made of it: it ought to be included vnder it, and to be sette vnder it as the effect vnder the cause therof, as I may so call it: so farre is it of that it ought to be raised vpon her to destroy or darken it. So Paule to driue men to confesse that our blessednesse consisteth of the mercy of God, not of workes, chiefely enforceth that saying of Dauid, Blessed are they whose iniquities are forgiuen, and whose sinnes are couered. Blessed is he to whom the Lorde hath not imputed sinne. If any man do thrust in to Ro 4. 7. Psa. 32.

Matt. 5. 3. neuer so in manne, that he is therefore allowed of God, it followeth that man is alway miserable, vnlesse he be deliuered from misery by forgiuenes of sinnes. Forasmuch as therefore all the kindes of blessednesse which are extolled in the Scriptures, do fall downe void, so that man receiueth frute of none of them, til he haue obtained blessednesse by forgiuenesse of sinnes, which may afterward make place for them: it followeth that this is not only the hiest & the chiefe but also the only blessednesse: vnlesse paraduenture you will haue that it be weakened of those which consist in it alone. Nowe there is much lesse reason why ỹ calling of men righteous should trouble vs, which is cõmonly giuen to the faithful. I graunt verily that they are called righteous of ỹ holines of life: but forasmuch as they rather endeuour to the following of righteousnes, than do fulfill righteousnes it selfe, it is meete that this righteousnes such as it is, giue place to the iustification of faith, from whence it hath that which it is.

11 But they say ỹ we haue yet more busines with Iames, namely which with open voice fighteth against vs. For he teacheth both that Iam. 2. 12. Abraham was iustified by workes, and also that all we are iustified by workes, not by faith onely. What then? will they draw Paule to fight with Iames? If they holde Iames for a minister of Christ, his saying must be so taken that it disagree not frõ Christ speaking by the mouth of Paule, The holy Ghost affirmeth by the mouth of Paule, that Abraham obtained righteousnesse by fayth, not by workes: and we also do teache that all are iustified by faith without the workes of the lawe. The same holy Ghost teacheth by Iames that both Abrahams righteousnes & ours consisteth of workes, not of only faith. It is certaine ỹ the holy Ghost fighteth not with himselfe. What agreement shall there be therfore of these two? It is enough for the aduersaries, if they plucke the righteousnesse of faith which we woulde haue to be fastened with most deepe rootes: but to render to consciences their quietenesse, they haue no great care. Whereby verily you may see that they gnawe the iustification of faith, but in the meane time do appoint no marke of righteousnesse where consciences may stay. Therefore let them triumphe as they list, so that they may boast of no other victory than that they have taken away all certainety of righteousnesse. And this wretched victory they shal obtaine, where the light of trueth being quenched, the Lord shall suffer them to ouerspred the darkenesse of lies. But whersoeuer the trueth of God shall stand, they shall nothing preuaile. I deny therefore that the saying of Iames which they still continually hold vp against vs as it were the shielde of Achilles doth any thinge at all make for them. That this may be made plaine, first we must looke at the marke that the Apostle shooteth at and then we must note where they be deceiued. Because there were then many (which mischiefe is wont to be continuall in the Church) which openly bewraied their infidelity, in neglecting and omitting all the proper workes of the faithfull, and yet ceassed not to boast of the false name of faith: Iames doth here mock the foolish boldnesse of such men. Therefore it is not his purpose in any point to diminish the force of true faith, but to shew how fondly those trifles did chalenge so much the vaine image of it, that beinge contented herewith they carelesly rainne dissolutely abroade into all licentiousnesse of vices. This ground being conceiued, it shalbe easie to perceiue where our aduersaries do misse. For they fall into two deceites in the word, ỹ one in the name of faith, the other in the word of iustifying. Whereas the Apostle nameth faith a vaine opinion farre distant from the trueth of faith, it is spoken by way of graunting, which is no derogation to the matter: which he sheweth at the beginning in these wordes. What profiteth it, my brethren, If any man say that he hath faith, and hath no workes? He doth not say, if any haue faith without workes, but, If any man boast. More plainely also he speaketh a litle after, where he in mockery maketh it worse than the deuills knowledge: last of all, when he calleth it dead. But by the definition you may sufficiently perceiue what he meaneth. Thou beleuest (sayth he) that there is a God. Truely if nothinge be contained in this faith but to beleue that there is a God, it is now no maruell if it do not iustifie. And when this is taken frō it, let vs not thinke that any thinge is abated from the Christian faith, the nature whereof is farre otherwise. For after what maner doth true faith iustifie vs, but when it conioyneth vs with Christ; that beinge made one with him we may enioy the partakinge of his righteousnesse. It doth not therefore iustifie vs by this that it conceiueth a knowledge of the being of God, but by this that it resteth vpon the assuredues of the mercy of God.

12 We haue not yet the worke, vnlesse we examine also the other deceite in the word, forasmuch as Iames setteth part of iustificatiō in

workes. If you will make Iames agreeinge both with the reſt of the Scriptures,& with himſelfe,you muſt of neceſſity take ỹ word of Iuſtifying in an other ſignificatiõ than it is taken in Paul. For Paul ſayth that we are iuſtified,when the remembrance of our vnrighteouſneſſe beinge blotted out,we are accompted righteous. If Iames had ment of that taking,he had wrongfully alleaged that out of Moſes,Abraham beleued God,&c. For he thus frameth it together: Abraham by workes obtained righteouſneſſe, becauſe he ſticked not at the commaundement of God,to offer vp his ſonne. And ſo the Scripture was fulfilled which ſaith,that he beleued God,and it was imputed to him for righteouſneſſe. If it be an abſurdity, that the effect is before his cauſe, either Moſes doth in that place falſely teſtifie, that faith was imputed to Abraham for righteouſnes:or he deſerued not righteouſneſſe by that obedience which he ſhewed in offering vp of Iſaac. Abraham was iuſtified by his faith, when Iſmaell was not yet conceiued, which was now growen paſt childehoode before that Iſaac was borne. How therefore ſhall we ſay,that he got to himſelfe righteouſneſſe by obedience which followed long afterward? Wherfore either Iames did wrongfully miſturne the order (which it is a wickednes to thinke)or he meant not to ſay that he was iuſtified, as though he deſerued to be accompted righteous. Howe then? Truely it appeareth that he ſpeaketh of the declaration of righteouſnes and not the imputation:as if he had ſaid. Who ſo are righteous by true faith,they do proue their righteouſneſſe with obedience & good workes, not with a bare and imagelike viſor of faith. In a ſumme, he diſputeth not by what meane we are iuſtified,but he requireth of the faithful a working righteouſneſſe. And as Paule affirmeth that men be iuſtified without the help of workes: ſo Iames doth here ſuffer them to be accompted righteous which want good workes. The conſideringe of this ende, ſhall deliuer vs out of all dout. For our aduerſaries are hereby chiefly deceiued,that they think that Iames defineth the maner of iuſtifying, wheras he trauaileth about nothing elſe but to ouerthrow their peruerſe careleſnes,which did vainly pretend faith to excuſe their deſpiſinge of good workes. Therefore into how many waies ſoeuer they wreſt the wordes of Iames; they ſhal wring out nothing but two ſentences:that a vaine bodileſſe ſhew of faith doth not iuſtifie,and that a faithfull man not contented with ſuch an imaginatiue ſhew, doth declare his righteouſnes by good workes.

13 As for that which they alleage out of Paule the ſame meaning, that the doers of the lawe, not the hearers, are iuſtified,it nothinge helpeth them. I will not eſcape away with the ſolution of Ambroſe, that that that is therfore spoken because ỹ fulfilling of the law is faith in Christ. For I see that it is but a meere starting hole, which nothinge needeth where there is a broad way open. There the Apostle throweth downe the Iewes from fooliſh confidence, which boaſted thē ſelues of the onely knowledge of the lawe, when in the meane time they were the greateſt deſpiſers of it. Therefore that they ſhould not ſtand ſo much in their owne conceite for the bare knowledge of the law he warneth them, that if righteouſneſſe be ſought out of the law, not ỹ knowledge but the obſeruing of it is required. We verily make no doubt of this that the righteouſneſſe of the law ſtandeth in works: nor yet of this alſo, that the righteouſneſſe conſiſteth in the worthineſſe and merites of workes But it is not yet proued, that we are iuſtified by workes, vnleſſe they bring forth ſome man that hath fulfilled the law. And that Paule meant none otherwiſe, the hanging together of the text ſhalbe a ſufficient teſtimony. After that he had generally condemned the Gentiles and the Iewes of vnrighteouſneſſe, then he deſcendeth to the particular ſhewinge of it, and ſaith that they which ſinned without the Law, do periſh without the law: which is ſpoken of the Gentiles: but they which haue ſinned in the law, are iudged by the law: which pertaineth to the Iewes. Nowe becauſe they winkinge at their owne treſpaſſinges proudely gloried of the only law: he adioyneth that which moſt fitly agreed, that the law was not therefore made, that men ſhould be made righteous by only hearing of the voice thereof: but then and not til then when they obeied: as if he ſhould ſay: Seekeſt thou righteouſnes in the law? alleage not ỹ hearing of it, which of it ſelfe is of ſmall importance, but bring workes, by which thou maiſt declare that the law was not ſet for thee in vaine. Of theſe workes becauſe they were all deſtitute, it followed that they were ſpoiled of gloryinge of the law. Therefore we muſt of the meaning of Paule rather frame a contrary argument. The righteouſnes of the law conſiſteth in the perfection of workes. No man can boaſt that he hath by workes ſatiſhed the law. Therefore there is no righteouſnes by the law.

14 Now they alleage alſo theſe places, wherin the faithfull do boldly offer their righteouſnes to the iudgement of God to be examined, and require that ſentence be giuen of them according to it. Of which ſorte are theſe: Iudge me O Lord according to my righteouſneſſe, & according to my innocēce, which are in me. Againe, Heare my righteouſneſſe, O God. Thou haſt proued my heart, and haſt viſited it in the night, & there was no wickednēſſe found in me. Againe, The Lord ſhall render to me according ze to my righteouſnes, and he ſhall Pſa. 7 1. recompence me according to the cleanneſſe of my handes. Becauſe I haue kept the wayes of the Lord, and haue not wickedly departed frō my God. And I ſhalbe vnſpotted and ſhal kepe me from my iniquity.
Pſa.26. Againe, Iudge me, Lord, becauſe I haue walked in mine innocence. I
2. haue not ſit with lying men, I will not entre in with thē that do wicked things. Deſtroy not my ſoule with the vngodly, my life with mē of bloode: in whoſe handes are iniquities: whoſe right hande is filled with giftes. But I haue walked innocently. I haue aboue ſpoken of the affiance which the holy ones do ſeeme ſimply to take to thēſelues of workes. As for theſe teſtimonies ẏ we haue here alleaged, they ſhal not much accombre vs if they be vnderſtanded accordinge to their compaſſe, or (as they cōmonly call it) their circūſtance. Now ẏ ſame is double. For neither would they haue them to be wholly examined that they ſhoulde be either condemned or acquited according to the continuall courſe of their whole life: but they bring into iudgement a ſpeciall cauſe to be debated. Neither do they claime to themſelues righteouſnes in reſpect of the perfection of God, but by cōpariſon of naughty & wicked men. Firſt when the iuſtifying of man is entreated of, it is not only required that he haue a good cauſe in ſome particular matter, but a certaine perpetuall agreement of right eouſneſſe in his whole life. But the holy ones, when they call vpon the iudge-ment of God to approue their innocēcy, do not offer themſelues free from all giltineſſe & in euery behalfe faultleſſe: but verily when they haue faſtned their affiance of ſaluation in his goodnes only, yet tru-ſting that he is the reuenger of the poore afflicted againſt right and equity, they commend to him the cauſe wherin the innocent are op-preſſed. But when they ſette their aduerſaries with them before the iudgement ſeat of God, they boaſt not of ſuch an innocence as ſhall anſwere to ẏ purenes of God if it be ſeuerely ſearched, but becauſe in compariſon of the malice, obſtinacy, ſuttlety and wickednеſſe of their aduerſaries they know that their plainneſſe, righteouſneſſe, ſim-plicity, and cleanneſſe is knowen and pleaſing to God: they feare not to call vpon him to be iudge betwene themſelues & them. So when by himſelfe and reward euery man according to his deſeruinges, but he tooke the Lord to witneſſe, how great his innocency was in com-

12. with this gloryinge that he hath a good witnes of conſcience, that he hath trauailed with ſimplicity & vprightnes in the Church of God, meaneth not that he ſtandeth vpon ſuch gloryinge before God, but being

being compelled with the ſclaunders of the wicked, he defendeth his faithful & honeſt dealing, which he knew to be pleaſing to the merciful kindnes of God, againſt all euill ſpeaking of mē whatſoeuer it be. For we ſee what he ſayth in an other place, that he knoweth no euill by himſelfe, but ẏ he is not thereby iuſtified: namely becauſe he knew that the iudgement of God far ſurmounteth the blearied ſight of mē. 1. Cor. 4.

Howſoeuer therfore the godly do defend their innocence againſt the hypocriſie of the vngodly, by the witneſſing & iudgemēt of God: yet when they haue to do with God alone, they all crie out w̄ one mouth: If thou marke iniquity, Lord, Lord who ſhall abide it: Entre not into iudgement with thy ſeruantes: becauſe euery one that liueth ſhal not be iuſtified in thy ſight: and diſtruſting their owne workes, they gladly ſing, Thy goodneſſe is better than life. Pſa. 130 3. & 142 2. Pſa. 36. 4.

15 There are alſo other places not vnlike to theſe before, in w̄ a man may yet tary. Salomon ſaith, that he which walketh in his vprightnes, is righteous. Againe, That in the path of righteouſneſſe is life, and that in the ſame is not death. After which maner Ezechiel reporteth that he ſhal liue life that doth iudgement and righteouſnes None of theſe do we either deny or darken. But let there come forth one of the ſonnes of Adam with ſuch an vprightnes. If there be none, either they muſt periſh at the ſight of God, or flee to the ſanctuary of mercy. Nither do we in the meane time deny but that to the faithfull their vprightnes, though it be but halfe & vnperfect, is a ſtep toward immortality. But whence commeth that but becauſe whom the Lord hath taken into the couenant of grace, he ſearcheth not their works according to their deſeruings, but kiſſeth thē with fatherly kindenes? Wherby we do not only vnderſtād ẏ which the ſcholemē do teach, ẏ works haue their value of ẏ accepting grace. For they meane, ẏ works which are otherwiſe inſufficiēt to purchaſe righteouſnes by ẏ couenant of ẏ law, are by ẏ accepting of God auaūced to ẏ value of equality. But I ſay ẏ they being defiled both with other treſpaſſings & with their owne ſpottes, are of no other value at all, than inſomuch as the lord tenderly graunteth pardō to both: ẏ is to ſay, giueth free righteouſnes to mā. Ezech. 18. 9 & 33. 15.

Neither are here thoſe prayers of the Apoſtle ſeaſonably thruſt in place, where he wiſheth ſo great perfectiō to the faithful, ẏ they may be faultles & vnblamable in the day of ẏ lord. Theſe words in dede ẏ Celeſtines did in old time turmoile, to affirme a perfectiō of righteouſnes in this life. But, which we thinke to be ſufficient, we anſwere briefly after Auguſtin, that all the godly ought in dede to endeuour toward this marke, ẏ they may one day appeare ſpotles & faultleſſe before ẏ face of God: but becauſe ẏ beſt & moſt excellēt maner of Eph 1. 4 1. Theſ. 3. 13.

this life is nothing but a going forward, we ſhall then and not til then attaine to this marke, when beinge vnclothed of this fleſhe of ſinne we ſhall fully cleaue to the Lord. Yet wil I not ſtiffely ſtriue with him which will giue the title of perfection to the holy ones, ſo that he alſo limit the ſame with the words of Auguſtine himſelfe. When (ſayth he) we will call the vertue of the holy ones, perfect: to the ſame perfection alſo belongeth the acknowledging of imperfectiō both in trueth and in humility.

Libr. 2d Bonif. 3 cap. 7

The xviij. Chapter.

That of the reward, the righteouſneſſe of workes is ill gathered.

NOwe lette vs paſſe ouer to thoſe ſayinges which affirme, that God will render to euery man accordinge to his workes: of which ſort are theſe. Euery man ſhall beare away that which he hath done in the body, either good or euill. Glory and honor to him that worketh good: trouble & diſtreſſe vpō euery ſoule of him that worketh euill. And they which haue done good thinges, ſhall go into the reſurrection of life: they which haue done euill, into the reſurrection of iudgement. Come ye bleſſed of my father: I haue hungred, and ye gaue me meate: I haue thirſted, & ye gaue me drink, &c. And with them let vs alſo ioyne theſe ſayinges, which call eternall life the reward of workes. Of which ſort are theſe. The rendring of the handes of a man ſhalbe reſtored to him. He that feareth the commaundement, ſhalbe rewarded. Be glad and reioyſe, behold, your reward is plentifull in heauen. Euery mā ſhal receiue reward according to his labor. Where it is ſayd that God ſhall render to euery man accordinge to his workes, the ſame is eaſily aſſoiled. For, that maner of ſpeakinge doth rather ſhewe the order of followinge, than the cauſe. But it is out of dout, that the Lord doth accompliſh our ſaluation by theſe degrees of his mercy, when thoſe whom he hath choſen he calleth to him: thoſe whom he hath called, he iuſtifieth: thoſe whom he hath iuſtified, he glorifieth. Although therefore he do by his only mercy receiue thē that be his into life, yet becauſe he bringeth them into the poſſeſſion thereof by the race of good workes, that he may fulfill his worke in them by ſuch order as he hath appointed: it is no maruell if it be ſaid that they be crowned according to their workes, by which without dout they are prepared to receiue the crowne of immortality. Yea and after this maner it is fitly ſayd that they worke their owne ſaluation, when in applying themſelues to good workes, they practiſe themſelues towarde eternall life: namely as in an other place they are cõmaunded to worke the meate which perisheth not, when by beleeuing in Christ they gette to themselues life: and yet it is byandby afterward added: Which the sonne of man shall giue you. Wherby appeareth ý the word of Working is not set as contrary to grace, but is referred to endeuour: & therfore it foloweth not, ý either the faithful are thẽselues authors of their owne saluation, or that the same procedeth from their workes. How then? So soone as they are taken into the felowship of Christ, by the knowledge of the Gospel, & the enlightning of the holy Ghost, eternall life is begonne in thẽ. Nowe the same good worke which God hath begonne in thẽ, must also be made perfect vntil the day of the lord Iesu. And it is made perfect, when resembling the heauenly father in righteousnes & holines, they proue themselues to be his children not swarued out of kinde. John. 6. 27. Phil. 1. 6.

2 There is no cause why we should of the name of rewarde gather an argument that our workes are the cause of saluation. First let this be determined in our heartes, that the kingdom of heauẽ is not a reward of seruants, but an inheritance of children, which they only shal enioy, that are adopted of the lord to be his children: & for no other cause, but for this adoption. For, the sonne of the bond woman shall not be heir, but the sonne of the free womã. And in the very same places, in which the holy Ghost promiseth to workes eternall glory for reward, in expressing the inheritance by name, he sheweth that it cõmeth frõ else where. So Christ rehearseth workes, which he recõpenseth with the rewarding of heauen, when he calleth the elect to the possessiõ therof: but he therwithal adioineth that it must be possessed by right of inheritance. So Paule biddeth seruantes, which do their duety faithfully, to hope for reward of the lord: but he addeth, of inheritance. We see how they do as it were by expresse wordes prouide that we impute not eternal blessednes to workes, but to the adoption of God. Why therfore do they therewithall together make mention of workes? This question shalbe made plaine with one example of Scripture. Before the birth of Isaac, there was promised to Abraham a seede in which all the nations of the earth should be blessed: & a multiplying of his sede, which should match the starres of the skie, & the sandes of the sea, & other like. In many yeares afterward, Abraham, as he was commaunded by the oracle, prepared himselfe to offer vp his sonne in sacrifice. When he had performed this obedience, he receiued a promise. I haue sworne by my self (saith the Lord) because thou hast done this thing, & hast not spared thine owne only begotten sonne, I wil blesse thee & multiply thy seede as the starres of the skie, & the sandes of the sea: thy seede shal possesse the gates of their Eph. 1. 18. Gala. 4. 30. Mat. 25. 34. Colo. 3. 24. Gen. 15. 5 & 17. 1. Gen. 22 3 & 17.

enemies, and all the nations of the earth ſhalbe bleſſed in thy ſeede, becauſe thou haſt obeied my voice. What heare we? Hath Abraham by his obedience deſerued the bleſſinge, the promiſe whereof he had receiued before that the commaundement was giuen? Here verily we haue it without circumſtances ſhewed, ỹ the lord rewardeth the works of the faithful with thoſe benefites which he had already giuen them before that the workes were thought of, hauing, yet no cauſe why he ſhould do good to them but his owne mercy.

3 Yet doth the Lord not deceiue nor mocke vs when he ſaith that he rendreth for reward to works the ſame thing which he had before workes freely giuen. For, becauſe he wil haue vs to be exerciſed with good workes, to thinke vpon the deliuery or enioyinge (as I may ſo call it) of theſe things which he hath promiſed, and to runne through them to the bleſſed hope ſet before vs in heauen, the frute of the promiſes is alſo rightly aſſigned to them, to the ripeneſſe wherof they do not bring vs. The Apoſtle very fitly expreſſed both theſe pointes, whē he ſayd that the Coloſſians apply themſelues to the duetie of charity, for the hope which is laied vp for them in heauen, of which they Colo.1. 4. had before heard by the word of the true ſpeaking Goſpel. For when he ſayth that they knewe by the Goſpell, that there was hope layd vp for them in heauen, he declareth that the ſame is by Chriſt only, not vnderpropped with any workes. Wherwith accordeth that ſaying of 1.Pe.1. 5. Peter, that the godly are kept by the power of God, through faith, vnto the ſaluation which is ready to be manifeſtly ſhewed at the time appointed for it. Whē he ſayth that they labor for it, he ſignifieth that the faithful muſt runne all the time of their life, that they may attaine to it. But leaſt we ſhoulde thinke that the reward which the Lord promiſeth vs, is not reduced to the meaſure of merite, he did put foorth a Mat.12. 1. parable, in which he made himſelf a houſeholder, which ſent all them that he met, to the trimming of his vineyard, ſome at the firſt houre of the day, ſome at ỹ ſecond, ſome at ỹ third, yea & ſome alſo at the 11. At eueninge he payed to euery one egall wages. The expoſition of which parable, that ſame old wryter whatſoeuer he was, whoſe booke is caried abroade vnder the name of Ambroſe of the callinge of the Gentiles, hath briefely and truely ſet out. I will vſe rather his wordes Li.1.ca 3. than mine owne. The Lorde (ſayth he) by the rule of this compariſon hath ſtabliſhed the diuerſity of manifolde calling, belonginge to one grace: where without dout they which being let into the vineyard at the 11. houre, are made egall with them that had wrought the whole day, do repreſent the eſtate of them, whom for the aduancing of the excellency of grace, the tender kindenes of the lord hath rewarded at the waning of the day, and at the endinge of their life: not payinge wages for their labour, but pouring out the richesse of his goodnesse vpon them whom he hath chosen without workes, that euen they also which haue swet in great labour, and haue receiued no more than the last, may vnderstand that they haue receiued a gift of grace, not a reward of workes. Last of all, this also is worthy to be noted in these places, where eternall life is called the reward of workes, that it is not simply taken for the cõmunicating which we haue with God to blessed immortality, when he embraceth vs with fatherly good will in Christ: but for the possessing or enioying (as they call it) of blessednes, as also the very words of Christ do sound, In time to come life everlasting. And in an other place, Come & possesse the kingdom, &c. After this maner Paul calleth adoptiõ, the reuealing of the adoption which shalbe made in the resurrection: and afterward expoundeth it the redemption of our body. Otherwise as estrangınge from God is eternall death, so when man is receiued of God into fauour, that he may enioy the communicatinge of him & be made one with him, he is receiued from death to life: which is done by the beneficial meane of adoptiõ only. And if, as they are wont, they stiffely enforce the reward of works, we may turne against them that sayinge of Peter, that eternall life is the reward of faith.

Mat. 10. 30. Mat. 25 14. Rom. 8. 18. 1. Pe. 1. 9.

4 Therefore let vs not thinke, that the holy Ghost doth with such promise set forth the worthinesse of our workes, as if they deserued such reward, For ỹ Scripture leaueth nothing to vs, whereof we may be aduaunced in the sight of God. But rather it wholly endeuoreth to beate downe our arrogance, to humble vs, to throw vs downe, and altogether to breake vs in peeces. But our weakenes is so succoured, which otherwise would byandby slip & fall downe, vnlesse it did sustaine it selfe with this expectation, and mitigate her tedious grieues with comfort. First how hard it is for a mã to forsake & deny not only all his thinges, but also himselfe, let euery man consider for himselfe. And yet with this introductiõ Christ traineth his schollers, that is, all the godly. Then throughout all their life he so instructeth thẽ vnder the discipline of the crosse, that they may not set their heart either to the desire or cõfidence of present good things. Briefly he so handleth them for the most part, that which way soeuer they turne their eies throughout the whole wideneſse of the worlde, they haue on euery side nothing but desperation present before them: so that Paule sayth, that we are more miserable then all men if our hope be onely in this world. That they shoulde not faint in these so great distresses, the lord is present with them, which putteth them in mind to lift vp

1.Cor. 15.19 their heade hier, to call their eies further, ẏ they finde with him the bleſſednes which they ſee not in ẏ world. This bleſſednes he calleth reward, wages, recompenſe, not weying the merit of workes, but ſignifying that it is a recõpenſing to their troubles, ſufferinges, ſclaunders. &c. Wherfore nothing withſtandeth, but ẏ we may after the example of the Scripture, call eternall life a rewarding, becauſe in it the Lord receiueth his from labors into reſt, frõ afflictiõ into proſperous & happy ſtate, from ſorrow into gladnes, from pouerty into flowinge wealth, frõ ſhame into glory, & changeth al the euils which they haue ſuffred for greater good things. So it ſhal alſo be no inconuenience, if we thinke holines of life to be a way, not which openeth an entry into the glory of the heauenly kingdom, but whereby the elect are led Rom.8. 30. of their God into ẏ diſcloſing of it: foraſmuch as this is his good will, to glorifie them whom he hath ſanctified. Only let vs not imagine a correllatiõ of merit & reward, wherin the Sophiſters do fondly ſtick faſt, becauſe they conſider not this end which we ſet forth. But how vnorderly is it, whẽ the lord calleth vs to one end, for vs to loke to an other? Nothinge is more euident, than that rewarde is promiſed to good workes; to relieue the weakeneſſe of our fleſh with ſome conforte, not to puffe vp our mindes with glory. Whoſoeuer therefore doth therby gather the merit of works, or doth in one balance weye worke with reward, he erreth farre from the right marke of God.

2.Tim.4 8. 5 Wherfore when the Scripture ſaith that God the iuſt iudge wil one day render to his a crowne of righteouſneſſe, I do not only take Aug. ad Valent. de gra. & lib. arbit. exception with Auguſtine, and ſay: To whom ſhould he being a iuſt iudge, render a crowne, if he had not beinge a mercifull father giuen grace? and how ſhould there be righteouſnes, vnleſſe grace went before which iuſtifieth the vnrighteous? How ſhould theſe due thinges be rendered, vnleſſe theſe vndue thinges were firſt giuen? But alſo I adde an other thinge. Howe ſhould he impute righteouſneſſe to our workes, vnleſſe his tender mercifulneſſe did hide the vnrighteouſnes that is in them? How ſhould he iudge them worthy of reward, vnleſſe he did by immeaſurable bountifulneſſe take away that which is worthy of puniſhment? For he is wont to call eternall life, grace: becauſe it is rẽdred to the free gifts of God when it is repaied to works. But the Scripture doth further humble vs, and therwithall raiſe vs vp. For beſide this that it forbiddeth vs to glory in workes, becauſe they are the free giſts of God, it therewithall teacheth that they are alway defiled with ſome dregges, that they can not ſatisfie God, if they be examined by the rule of his iudgement: but leaſt our courage ſhould faint, it teacheth ẏ they pleaſe by only pardõ. But although Auguſtine ſhame, & to him the glory, & taking from himſelfe both the pardon of ſinnes, & the loue of weldoinges, when he is to be deliuered out of this life, he paſſeth into the fellowſhip of Chriſt. Wherefore, but becauſe of faith? Which although it ſaue no man without workes (for it is it, which worketh by loue, not a reprobat faith) yet by it alſo ſinnes truſt in vncertaine richeſſe but in the liuinge God, to do well, to become riche in good workes, to lay vp in ſtore for themſelues a good fundation againſt the time to come, that they may obtaine eternall life. For good works are compared to the richeſſe, which we may enioy in the bleſſedneſſe of eternall life. I anſwere, that we ſhall neuer come to the true vnderſtãding of them, vnleſſe we turne our eies to the marke whervnto the holy Ghoſt directeth his words. If it be true which Chriſt ſaith, that our minde abideth there where our treaſure is, as the childrẽ of ỹ world are wont to be earneſtly bent to the getting of thoſe things which ſerue for the delites of this preſent life: ſo the faithfull muſt looke, ſith they haue learned that this life ſhal byandby vaniſh away like a dreame, that they ſend thoſe thinges which they would enioy, thither where they ſhal haue perfect life. We muſt therfore do as they do which purpoſe to remoue into any place, wher they haue choſen to reſt their whole life. They ſende their goods before, & do not miſcõtentedly want thẽ for a time: becauſe they think themſelues ſo much more happy, how much more goods they haue where they ſhal tary long. If we beleue that heauen is our countrey, it behoueth vs rather to ſende away our richeſſe thither than to keepe thē here where we muſt looſe them with ſudden remouing. But how

2.Cor.9 6. the poore, lendeth for gaine to the Lorde. Againe he that liberally ſoweth, ſhall liberally reape. For thoſe things are deliuered into the hand of the lord to kepe, which are beſtowed vpō our brethrē by the duety of charity. He, as he is a faithful keper of ẏ which is deliuered to him, wil one day reſtore it with plentiful gaine. Are thē our duetifull doings of ſo great value with God, that they be as richeſſe laid vp in ſtore for vs in his hand? Who ſhal feare ſo to ſay, when the Scripture doth ſo of: & plainly witneſſe it? But if any man will leape from the mere goodnes of God to the worthines of works, he ſhalbe nothing holpen by theſe teſtimonies to the ſtabliſhing of his errour. For you can gather nothing rightly therof but the mere inclination of Gods tendernes toward vs: foraſmuch as to encourage vs to well doing although the ſeruices which we do to him are not worthy of ſo much as his only looking vpon thē, yet he ſuffreth none of them to be loſt.

7 But they more enforce the words of the Apoſtle, which when he comforteth the Theſſalonias in troubles, teacheth that the ſame his reſurrectiō from the dead. The reaſon which is adioyned ſeruet h not to proue any worthines, but to confirme ẏ hope of the kingdom of God: as if he had ſaid, As it agreeth with the iuſt iudgemēt of God, to take vengeance of your enemies for the vexations that they haue done to you: ſo agreeth it alſo to giue to you releaſe & reſt from vexations. The other place, which teacheth that it ſo becommeth the righteouſneſſe of God not to forget the obediences of them that be his, that it declareth it to be in a maner vnrighteous if he ſhould forget thē, hath this meaning: God to quicken our ſlouthfulnes, hath giuen vs aſſurance that the labor ſhall not be vaine which we ſhal take for his glory. Let vs alway remēber ẏ this promiſe, as all other ſhould bring vs no profit, vnleſſe the free couenaunt of mercy went before, wherupon the whole aſſurednes of our ſaluation ſhould reſt. But ſtanding vpon that couenant, we ought aſſuredly to truſt, there ſhall alſo not want reward of the liberality of God to our workes howeſoeuer they be vnworthy. The Apoſtle to confirme vs in that expectation, affirmeth ẏ God is not vnrighteous, but will ſtande to his promiſe ones made. Therefore this righteouſnes is rather referred to the trueth of Gods promiſe, thā to his iuſtice of rendring due. According to which meaning there is a notable ſaying of Auguſtin, which as the holy mā ſticketh not to rehearſe oftē as notable, ſo I thinke it not vnworthy that we ſhould continually remēber it. The lord (ſaith he) is faithfull, which hath made himſelfe detter to vs, not by receiuing any thing of vs, but by promiſing all things to vs. In pſal. 32. and 109.

8 There are alſo alleaged theſe ſayings of Paul. If I haue all faith, ſo that I remoue mountaines out of their place, but haue not charity, I am nothing. Againe, Now there remaine hope, faith & charity, but the greateſt among theſe is charity. Againe, Aboue all thinges haue charity, which is the bonde of perfection. By the firſt two places our Phariſes affirme that we are rather iuſtified by charity than by faith, namely by the chiefer vertue as they ſay. But this fonde argument is eaſily wiped away. For we haue in an other place already declared, that thoſe things which are ſpokē in the firſt place pertaine nothing to true faith. The other place we alſo expounde of true faith, than which he ſayth that Charity is greater: not that it is more meritorius, but becauſe it is more frutefull, becauſe it extendeth further, becauſe it ſerueth mo, becauſe it remaineth alway in force, whereas the vſe of faith cōtinueth but for a time. If we haue regard to excellēce, the loue of God ſhould worthily haue ẏ chiefe place, of which Paule here ſpeaketh not. For he enforceth this thing only, ẏ we ſhould with mutuall charity edifie one an other in ẏ Lord, but let vs imagine that 1. Cor. 13. Colo. 3. 14.

charity doth euery way excell faith: yet what man of ſounde iudgement, yea or of ſounde braine, will gather thereof that it doth more iuſtifie? The power of iuſtifying which faith hath, conſiſteth not in the worthineſſe of the worke. Our iuſtification ſtandeth vpon the onely mercy of God & the deſeruing of Chriſt, which iuſtificatiō whē faith taketh holde of, it is ſaid to iuſtifie. Now if you aske our aduerſaries in what ſenſe they aſſigne iuſtification to charity, they wil anſwere that becauſe it is a dueti full doing acceptable to God, therefore by the deſeruing thereof righteouſneſſe is imputed to vs by the acceptation of the goodnes of God. Here you ſee how wel the argument procedeth. We ſay that faith iuſtifieth, not becauſe by the worthines of it ſelfe it deſerueth righteouſnes to vs, but becauſe it is an inſtrument by which we freely obtain ŷ righteouſnes of Chriſt. Theſe mē, omitting ŷ mercy of God, and paſſing ouer Chriſt, (where the ſumme of righteouſneſſe ſtandeth) do affirme that we are iuſtified by the benefit of charity becauſe it excelleth aboue faith: euen as if a man woulde reaſon that a king is fitter to make a ſhooe thā is a ſhooemaker, becauſe he is an infinite way more excellent. This onely argument is a plaine example that all the Sobornicall ſchooles do not ſo much as taſt with the vttermoſt part of their lippes what the iuſtification of faith is. But if any wrangler do yet carpe and aske, why in ſo ſmall diſtance of place we take the name of faith in Paule ſo diuerſly: I haue a weighty cauſe of this expoſition. For ſith thoſe gifts which Paule rehearſeth are after a certaine maner vnder faith & hope, becauſe they pertaine to ŷ knowledge of God, he cōtemneth thē all by way of recaptitulatiō vnder the name of faith & hope: as if he ſhould ſay bothe prophecy, & tōgues, & the grace and knowledge of interpretation tende to this marke to lead vs to the knowledge of God, And we know God in this life none otherwiſe but by hope & faith. Therfore when I name faith & hope, I comprehende all theſe thinges together. And ſo there remaine theſe three, Hope, Faith, Charity: that is to ſay, how great diuerſity of gifts ſoeuer there be, they are all referred to theſe. Among theſe the chief is charity, &c. Out of the thirde place they gather, If Charity be the bonde of perfection, then it is alſo the bonde of righteouſneſſe which is nothinge elſe but perfection. Firſt, to ſpeake nothinge howe Paule there calleth perfection, when the members of the Church well ſet in order do cleaue together, & to graunt that we are by charity made perfect before God: yet what newe thinge bringe they foorth? For I will alway on the contrary ſide take exception and ſay that we neuer come to this perfection vnleſſe we fulfil all the partes of charity, and thereupon I wil gather, that ſith all men are moſt far frō the fulfilling

of charitie, therefore all hope of perfection is cutt of from them.

9 I will not go through all the testimonies which at this day the foolish Sorbonistes rashly snatch out of the scriptures, as they first come to hande, and do throwe them against vs. For, some of them are so worthy to be laughed at, that I my selfe also can not rehearse them, vnlesse I would worthily be compted fond. Therefore I will make an ende, when I shal haue declared the saying of Christ, wherewith they marueilously please themselues. For, to the lawyer which asked him what was necessarie to saluation, he answered: If thou wilt entre into life, kepe the commaundementes. What wold we more (say they) when we are commaunded by the author of grace himselfe to get the kingdom of God by the keping of his commaundementes? As though forsooth it were not certaine, that Christ tẽpered his aunsweres to them with whom he saw that he had to do. Here a doctor of the lawe asketh of the meane to obteine blessednes, and not that onely, but with doing of what thing men may atteine vnto it. Both the person of him that spake and the question it selfe led the Lord so to answer. The lawyer being filled with the persuasion of the righteousnesse of the lawe, was blinde in cõfidence of workes. Againe, he sought nothing els but what were the workes of righteousnesse, by which saluation is gotten. Therefore he is worthily sent to the lawe, in which there is a perfect mirror of righteousnesse. We also do with a loude voice pronounce that the commaundementes must be kept, if life be sought in works. And this doctrine is necessary to be knowen of Christians. For how should they flee to Christ if they did not acknowledge that they are fallen from the way of life into the hedlonge downefall of death? But how should they vnderstand how far they haue strayed from the way of life, vnlesse they first vnderstande what is that way of life? For then they are taught that the sanctuarie to recouer saluation, is in Christ, when they see howe great difference there is betwene their life and the righteousnesse of God which is conteined in the keping of the law. The summe is this, that if saluation be sought in workes, we must kepe the commaundementes by which we are instructed to perfect righteousnesse. But we must not sticke fast here, vnlesse we will faint in our midde course: for none of vs is able to kepe the commaundements. Sith therefore we are excluded from the righteousnes of the lawe, we must of necessity resort to an other helpe, namely to the faith of Christ. Wherefore as here the Lorde calleth backe the doctor of the lawe whom he knew to swell with vaine confidence of workes, to the lawe, whereby he may learne that he is a sinner subiect to the dreadfull iudgement of

eternall death: ſo in other places, without making mẽtion of the law, he comforteth other that are already humbled with ſuch knowledge, Mat.11. 28. with promiſe of grace, as, Come to mee all ye that laboure and are loden, and I will refreſh you, and ye ſhall finde reſt for your ſoules.

10 At the laſt when they are weary with wreſting the Scripture, they fall to ſuttleties and ſophiſticall argumentes. They cauill vpon this that faith is in ſome places called a worke, and thereupon they Iohn. 6. 29. gather that we do wrõgfully ſet faith as cõtrary to workes. As though forſoth faith in that it is an obeying of the will of God, doth with her owne deſeruinge procure vnto vs righteouſneſſe, and not rather bycauſe by embracing the mercie of God, it ſealeth in our heartes the righteouſneſſe of Chriſt offred to vs of it in the preaching of the Goſpell. The readers ſhall pardon me if I do not tarry vpon confuting of ſuch follies, for they themſelues without any aſſault of other, are ſufficiently ouerthrowen with their owne feebleneſſe. But I will by the way cõfute one obiection which ſeemeth to haue ſome ſhew of reaſon, leaſt it ſhould trouble ſome that are not ſo well practiſed. Sith common reaſon teacheth that of contraries is all one rule, and all particular ſinnes are imputed to vs for vnrighteouſneſſe, they ſay it is meete that to all particular good workes be geuen the praiſe of righteouſnes. They do not ſatisfie me which anſwer, that the damnation of men proprely proceedeth from only vnbeleſe, not from particular ſinnes. I do in deede agree to them, that vnbeleſe is the fountaine and roote of all euels. For it is the firſt departinge from God, after which do followe the particular treſpaſſinges againſt the lawe. But wheras they ſeeme to ſet one ſelfe ſame reaſon of good and euell workes in weying of righteouſneſſe or vnrighteouſneſſe, therein I am compelled to diſagree from them. For the righteouſnes of workes is the perfecte obedience of the lawe. Therefore thou canſt not be righteous by workes, vnleſſe thou do followe it as a ſtreight line in the whole continuall courſe of thy life. From it ſo ſone as thou haſt ſwarued, thou arte fallen into vnrighteouſneſſe. Hereby appeareth that righteouſneſſe commeth not of one or a fewe workes, but of an vnſwaruing and vnweried obſeruing of the will of God. But the rule of iudging vnrighteouſneſſe is moſt contrary. For he that hath committed fornication, or hath ſtolen, is by one offence gilty of death, becauſe he hath offended againſt the maieſtie of God. Therefore theſe our ſuttle arguers do ſtumble, for that they marke not this ſaying of Iam. 2. 10. Iames, that he which ſinneth in one, is made gilty of all, becauſe he that hath forbidden to kill, hath alſo forbidden to ſteale, &c. Therefore it ought to ſeeme no abſurditie when we ſay that death is the

iuſte iuſte rewarde of euery ſinne, becauſe they are euery one worthy of the iuſte diſpleaſure and vengeance of God. But thou ſhalt reaſon fooliſhely, if on the contrarie ſide thou gather that by one good worke man may be reconciled to God, which with many ſinnes deſerueth his wrathe.

The xix. Chapter.

Of Chriſtian libertie.

NOwe we muſt entreate of Chriſtian libertie: the declaration whereof he muſt not omitt whoſe purpoſe is to comprehend in an abridgmēt the ſumme of the doctrine of the Goſpell. For it is a thing principally neceſſarie, and without the knowledge whereof conſcience dare in a manner enterpriſe nothing without doubting, they ſtumble and ſtart backe in many things, they alway ſtagger & tremble: but ſpecially it is an appendant of iuſtification, and auaileth not a little to the vnderſtanding of the ſtrength thereof. Yea they that earneſtly feare God, ſhall hereby receiue an incomparable frute of that doctrine which the wicked & Lucianicall men do pleaſantly taunt with their ſcoffes, becauſe in the ſpirituall darkeneſſe wherewith they be taken, euery wanton railing is lawefull for them. Wherefore it ſhall nowe come forth in fit ſeaſon: and it was profitable to differre to this place the plainer diſcorſing of it, (for we haue already in diuers places lightly touched it) becauſe ſo ſone as any mention is brought in of Chriſtian libertie, then either filthy luſtes do boile, or mad motions do ariſe, vnleſſe theſe wanton wittes be timely met withall, which do otherwiſe moſt naughtily corrupte the beſt things. For, ſome men by pretenſe of this libertie, ſhake of all obedience of God, and breake forth into an vnbridled licentiouſneſſe: and ſome men diſdaine it, thinking that by it all moderation, ordre and choiſe of things is taken away. What ſhould we here do, being compaſſed in ſuch narrowe ſtreightes? Shall we bidde Chriſtian libertie farewell, and ſo cutt of all fitt occaſion for ſuch periles? But, as we haue ſaid, vnleſſe that be faſt holden, neither Chriſt, nor the truth of the Goſpell, nor the inward peace of the ſoule is rightly knowen. Rather we muſt endeuour that ſo neceſſarie a part of doctrine be not ſuppreſſed, and yet that in the meane time thoſe fonde obiections may be mette withall which are wont to riſe thereupon.

Lucia, a godles man.

a Chriſtian libertie (as I thinke) conſiſteth in three partes. The firſt, that the conſciences of the faithfull, when the affiance of their iuſtification before God is to be ſought, may raiſe & aduaunce themſelues aboue the lawe, and forget the whole righteouſneſſe of the

lawe. For ſith the lawe (as we haue already in an other place declared) leaueth no man righteous: either we are excluded from all hope of iuſtification, or we muſt be looſed from the lawe, and ſo that there be no regarde at all hadde of workes. For whoſo thinketh that he muſt bring ſomwhat be it neuer ſo little of good workes to obteine righteouſneſſe, he can not apointe any ende or meaſure of them, but maketh him ſelfe detter to the whole lawe. Therfore taking away all mention of the lawe, and laying aſide all thinking vpon workes, we muſt embrace the onely mercie of God, when we entreate of iuſtification: & turning away our ſight from our ſelues, we muſt behold Chriſt alone. For there the queſtion is not howe we be righteous: but howe although we be vnrighteous and vnworthy, we be taken for worthy. Of which thing if conſciences will atteine any certainty, they muſt geue no place to the lawe. Neither can any man hereby gather that the lawe is ſuperfluous to the faithfull, whom it doth not therefore ceaſſe to teach, and exhorte, and pricke forwarde to goodneſſe, although before the iudgement ſeate of God it hath no place in their conſciences. For theſe two things, as they are moſt diuerſe, ſo muſt be well and diligently diſtinguiſhed of vs. The whole life of Chriſtians ought to be a certaine meditation of godlineſſe, bycauſe they are called into ſanctification. Herein ſtandeth the office of the lawe, that by putting them in minde of their duetie, it ſhould ſtir them vp to the endeuor of holineſſe and innocencie. But when conſciences are carefull howe they may haue God mercifull, what they ſhall anſwer, and vpon what affiance they ſhall ſtand if they be called to his iudgement, there is not to be reckened what the lawe requireth, but onely Chriſt muſt be ſet forth for righteouſneſſe, which paſſeth all perfection of the lawe.

Ephe. 1. 4. 1. Theſ. 4. 5.

3 Vpon this point hangeth almoſt all the argumẽt of the Epiſtle to the Galathians. For, that they be fonde expoſiters which teach that Paule there contendeth onely for the libertie of ceremonies, may be proued by the places of the arguments. Of which ſort are theſe. That Chriſt was made a curſe for vs, that he might redeme vs from the curſe of the lawe. Againe, Stand faſt in the libertie wherewith Chriſt hath made you free, and be not againe entangled with the yoke of bondage. Beholde, I Paule ſay, if ye be circumciſed, Chriſt ſhall nothing profit you. And he which is circumciſed is detter of the whole lawe. Chriſt is made idle to you whoſoeuer ye be that are iuſtified by the lawe: ye are fallen away from grace. Wherin truely is cõteined ſome hier thing than the libertie of ceremonies. I graunt in deede that Paule there entreateth of ceremonies, becauſe he contendeth

Gala. 3. 13. and 5. 1.

gendeth with ỹ false Apostles, which went about to bring againe into the Christian Church the old shadowes of law which were abolished by the cõming of Christ. But for the discussing of this question, there were hier places to be disputed, in which the whole controuersie stoode. First because by those Iewish shadowes the brightnesse of the Gospell was darkened, he sheweth that we haue in Christ a full geuing in deede of all those things which were shadowed by the ceremonies of Moses. Secondly, because those deceiuers filled the people with a most noughty opinion, namely that this obedience auailed to deserue the fauor of God: Here he standeth much vpon this point, that the faithfull should not thinke that they can by any works of the law, much lesse by those litle principles, obteine righteousnesse before God. And therewithall he teacheth, that they are by the crosse of Christ free from the damnation of the lawe, which otherwise hangeth ouer all men, that they should with full assurednesse rest in Christ alone. Which place proprely perteineth to this purpose. Last of all he mainteineth to the cõsciences of the faithfull their libertie, that they shoulde not be bound with any religion in things not necessarie. Gala.4. 30.

4 The second part, which hangeth vpon that former part, is that consciences obey the lawe, not as compelled by the necessitie of the lawe: but being free from the yoke of the lawe it selfe, of their owne accord they obey the will of God. For, because they abide in perpetuall terrors, so long as they be vnder the dominion of the lawe, they shall neuer be with cherefull redinesse framed to the obedience of God, vnlesse they first haue this libertie geuen them. By an example we shall both more briefly, and more plainely perceiue what these things meane. The commaundement of the lawe is, that we loue our God with all our heart, with all our soule, with all our strengths. That this may be done, our soule must firste be made voide of all other sense and thought, our heart must be cleansed of all desires, all our strengths must be gathered vp and drawen together to this onely purpose. They which haue gone most far before other in the way of the Lord, are yet very far from this marke. For though they loue God with their minde, and with sincere affection of heart, yet they haue still a great part of their heart and soule possessed with the desires of the flesh, by which they are drawen backe and stayed from going forward with hasty course to God. They do in deede trauaile forward with great endeuor: but the flesh partly febleth their strengths, and partly draweth them to it selfe. What shall they here do, when they fele that they do nothing lesse than performe the lawe? They will, Deu. 6. 5.

they couer, they endeuor, but nothing with ſuch perfection as ought to be. If they loke vpon the lawe, they ſee that whatſoeuer worke they attempt or purpoſe, is accurſed. Neither is there any cauſe why any man ſhould deceiue himſelf with gathering that the worke is therefore not altogether euell, bycauſe it is vnperfect: and therefore that God doth neuertheleſſe accept that good which is in it. For, the lawe requiring perfect loue, cõdemneth all imperfection, vnleſſe the rigor of it be mitigated. Therefore his workes ſhould fall to nought which he would haue to ſeme partly good: and he ſhall finde that it is a tranſgreſſion of the lawe, euen in this becauſe it is vnperfect.

5 Loe, howe all our workes are ſubiect to the curſe of the lawe, if they be meaſured by the rule of the lawe. But howe ſhould then vnhappy ſoules cherefully applie themſelues to worke, for which they might not truſt that they coulde get any thinge but curſe? On the other ſide, if being deliuered from this ſeuere exacting of the lawe, or rather from the whole rigor of the lawe, they heare that they be called of God with fatherly gentleneſſe: they will merily and with great cherefulneſſe aunſwer his calling and followe his guiding. In a ſumme, they which are bound to the yoke of the lawe, are like to bondſeruants, to whom are appointed by their Lordes certain taſkes of worke for euery day. Theſe ſeruants thinke that they haue done nothing, nor dare come into the ſight of their Lordes, vnleſſe they haue performed that full taſke of their workes. But children, which are more liberally and more freemanlike handled of their fathers, ſticke not to preſent to them their begonne & half vnperfect workes, yea and thoſe hauing ſome fault, truſting that they will accept their obedience and willingneſſe of minde, although they haue not exactly done ſo much as their good will was to do. So muſt we be as may haue ſure affiance, that our obediences ſhalbe allowed of our moſt kinde father, howe litle ſoeuer, and howe rude and vnperfect ſoeuer they be. As alſo he aſſureth to vs by the prophet: I will ſpare them (ſaith he) as the father is wont to ſpare his ſonne that ſerueth him. Where this word Spare, is ſet for to beare withall, or gently to winke at faultes, foraſmuch as he alſo maketh mention of ſeruice. And this affiãce is not a litle neceſſarie for vs, without which we ſhal go about all things in vaine. For God accompteth himſelfe to be worſhipped with no worke of ours but ẅ is truly done of vs for the worſhipping of him. But howe can that be done among theſe terrors, where it is douted whether God be offended or worſhipped with our worke?

Mal. 3. 17

6 And that is the cauſe why the author of the Epiſtle to the Hebrues, referreth all the good workes that are red of in the holy fathers, fathers,to faith,& weyeth them onely by faith. Touching this liberty there is a place in the Epistle to the Romaines,where Paule reſoneth that ſome ought not to haue dominion ouer vs, becauſe we are not vnder ỹ law,but vnder grace. For when he had exhorted the faithfull that ſinne ſhould not reigne in their mortall bodie, and that they ſhould not geue their mẽbers to be weapons of wickedneſſe to ſinne, but ſhould dedicate themſelues to God, as they that are aliue from the deade, and their members, weapons of righteouſneſſe to God: and whereas they might on the other ſide obiect that they do yet carry with them the fleſh full of luſtes, and that ſinne dwelleth in them, he adioyneth that comfort by the libertie of the lawe, as if he ſhould ſay. Though they do not yet throughly fele ſinne deſtroyed and that righteouſneſſe yet liueth not in them,yet there is no cauſe why they ſhould feare and be diſcouraged as though they had bene alway diſpleaſed with thẽ for the remnãts of ſinne,foraſmuch as they are by grace made free from the law,that their workes ſhould not be examined by the rule of the law. As for thẽ that gather that we may ſinne becauſe we are not vnder the law,let thẽ know that this liberty perteineth nothing to them,the ende wherof is to encourage to God. Ro.11.a Rom.6. 12.

6 The third part is,that we be bound with no conſcience before God of outward things which are by them ſelues indifferent, but that we may indifferently ſometime vſe them, and ſometime leaue them vnuſed. And the knowledge of this libertie alſo is very neceſſary for vs,for if it ſhalbe abſent,there ſhalbe no quiet to our cõſciences,no ende of ſuperſtitions. Many at this day do thinke vs fonde to moue diſputation about the free eating of fleſh,about the free vſe of dayes, and garmentes and ſuch other ſmale trifles as they in deede thinke them: but there is more weight in them than is commonly thought. For when conſciences haue ones caſt themſelues into the ſnare,they entre into a long and comberſome way,from whence they can afterward finde no eaſy way to get out. If a man beginne to doubt whether he may occupy linnen in ſhetes,ſhertes, hankercheifes,and napkines, neither will he be out of doubt whether he may vſe hẽpe, and at the laſt he wil alſo fall in doubt of mattes,for he will way with himſelf whether he can not ſuppe without napkins,whether he may not be without handkercheifes. If any man thinke deinty meate to be vnlawefull, at length he ſhall not with quietneſſe before the Lorde eate either brounebreade or common meates,when he remembreth that he may yet ſuſteine his body with bacer foode. If he doubte of pleaſaunte wine,afterwarde he will not drinke deade wine with good peace of conſcience, laſt of all he will not be ſo bold to touch ſweter and cleanner water than other. Finally at the length he will come to this point, to thinke it vnlawefull (as the common saying is) to treade vppon a strawe lying a crosse. For here is begonne no lighte strife, but this is in question, whether God will haue vs to vse these or those thinges, whose will ought to guide all our counsells and doinges. Hereby some must needes be carried with desperation into a confuse deuouring pit: some must, despising God, and casting away his feare, make themselues away through destructiō when they haue no redy way. For whosoeuer are entangled with such doubting, which way soeuer they turne themselues, they see euery where present offense of conscience.

Ro. 14. 14. 8 I knowe (saith Paule) that nothing is common (meaning by common, vnholy) but who so thinketh any thing common, to him it is common. In which wordes he maketh all outward things subiect to our libertie, prouided alway that our mindes haue the assurance of the libertie before God. But if any superstitious opinion cast into vs any dout, those things which of their owne nature were cleane, are defiled to vs. Wherefore he addeth: Blessed is he that iudgeth not himselfe in that which he alloweth. But he that iudgeth, if he eate, is condemned, because he eateth not of faith. And that which is not of faith, is sinne. Among such narrowe streightes, who so neuertheless with carelesly venturing on all things shewe themselues boulder, do they not asmuch turne themselues away from God? But they which are throughly pearced with some feare of God, when they themselues also are compelled to do many things against their conscience, are discouraged & do fall downe with feare. All that are such, do receiue none of the giftes of God with thankesgeuing, by which alone yet Paul testifieth that they all are sanctified to our vse. I meane the thankesgeuing that procedeth from a heart that acknowledgeth the liberalitie & goodnesse of God in his giftes. For, many of them in deede do vnderstande that those are the benefites of God which they vse, and they praise God in his workes: but sith they are not persuaded that they are geuen to themselues, howe should they thanke God as the geuer of them? Thus in a summe we see, whereto this liberte tendeth, namely that we should vse the gifts of God to such vse as he hath geuen them vnto vs, without any scruple of conscience, without any trouble of minde: by which confidence our soules may both haue peace with him and acknowledge his liberalitie toward vs. For here are comprehended all ceremonies that are at liberty to be obserued, that our consciences should not be bound with any necessitie to kepe them, but should remember that the vse of them is by Gods benefit subiect to themselues vnto edification.

9 But it is diligently to be noted, that Christian libertie is in al the parties of it a spirituall thing, the whole strength whereof consisteth in appeasing fearfull consciences before God, if either they be inquieted or carefull for the forgeuenesse of sinnes, or if they be pensiue whether our imperfect workes and defiled with the faultes of our flesh do please God, or if they be troubled about the vse of indifferent things. Wherefore they do wrongfully expound it, which either do make it a cloke for their owne desires, that they may abuse the gifts of God to their owne lust, or which do thinke that there is no libertie but that which is vsed before men, and therefore in vsing it haue no regard of the weake brethren. In the first kinde, men do at this day much offend. There is almost no man which may by his ability of wealth be sumptuous, which deliteth not in excessiue gorgeousnesse, in furniture of bankets, in apparell of body, in building of houses, which hath not a will to excell other in all kinde of statelinesse: which doth not marueilously flatter himself in his fineneſſe. And all these things are defended vnder the pretēse of Christian libertie. They say that they are things indifferent: I graunt, so that a man indifferently vse them. But when they are to gredily coueted, when they are proudely bosted, when they are wastefully spent, it is certaine that those things which otherwise were of themselues lawfull, are by these faultes defiled. This saying of Paule doth very well put difference betwene things indifferēt: All things are cleane to the cleane: but to the defiled and vnbeleeuing, nothing is cleane, because their minde and conscience is defiled. For why are accursed the rich men, they which haue their comfort, which are satisfied with meate, which do nowe laugh, which slepe in beds of iuory, which ioyne land to lande, whose banketes haue lute, harp, taber and wine? Verily both iuory, and golde, and richesse, are the good creatures of God, permitted yea & apointed by the prouidence of God for men to vse. Neither is it any where forbidden either to laugh, or to be satisfied with meate, or to ioyne new possessions to their owne olde possessiōs or of their auncesters, or to be delited with musicall melodie, or to drink wine. This is true in deede. But whē they haue plenty of things, to wallowe in delites, to glut themselues, to make their wit and minde dronke with present pleasures & alway to gape for newe, these doings are most farre from the lawfull vse of the giftes of God. Therefore let them take away immeasurable desire, let them take away immeasurable wasting, let them take away vanitie and arrogance, that they may with a pure conscience purely vse the giftes of God. When the minde shalbe framed to this sobrietie, they shall haue a rule of the lawfull vse. On the other side let this moderation be wanting, euen base and common delicates are to much. For this is truely said, that oftentimes in frise and course cloth dwelleth a purple heart, and Phil. 4. sometime vnder silke and purple, lieth simple humilitie: Let euery man in his degree so liue either poorely, or meanely, or plentifully, that they all remember that they are fed of God to liue, not to be riotous: and let them thinke, that this is the lawe of Christian liberty, if they haue learned with Paule to be contented with those things which they presently haue: if they can skill both to be humble and to excell: if they be taught in all places and in all things to be both full and hungry, to haue plentie and to suffre want.

10 Herein also many men do erre, bycause as though their libertie should not be sounde and safe vnlesse it had men witnesses of it, they do vndiscretly and vnwisely vse it. By which vnseasonable vsing they many times offend the weake brethren. You may see at this day some, which thinke that their libertie can not stande, vnlesse they take possession of it by eating of flesh on friday. I blame not that they eate: but this false opinion must be driuen out of their mindes. For they ought to thinke that by their libertie they obteine no newe thing in the sight of menne but before God, and that it standeth as well in absteining as in vsing. If they vnderstande that it maketh no matter before God, whether they eate flesh or egges, whether they weare redde or blacke garments, that is enough. The conscience is nowe free, to which the benefite of such libertie was due. Therefore although they do afterward absteine all their life long from flesh, and weare alway but one colour, yet they are no lesse free. Yea therefore becausse they are free, they do with a free conscience absteine. But they do most hurtfully offend bycause they nothing regard the weakenesse of their brethren, which we ought so to beare with, that we rashly commit nothing with offense of them. But sometime also it behoueth that our libertie be set forth before men. And this I graunt. But there is a measure most heedefully to be kept, that we cast not away the care of the weake of whome the Lorde hath so earnestly geuen vs charge.

11 I will in this place therefore speake somewhat of offenses, in what differēce they are to be taken, which are to be auoided, & which to be neglected: whereupō we may afterward determine what place there is for our libertie among men. I like well that cōmon diuision, which teacheth that there is of offenses one sort geuen, an other taken: for asmuch as it both hath a plaine testimonie of the Scripture,

and doth not vnfitly expresse that which it meaneth. If thou do any thing by vnseasonable lightnesse, or wantonnesse, or rashnesse, not in order, nor in fit place, whereby the ignorant and weake are offended, that same may be called an offense geuē by thee: because it came to passe by thy fault that such offense was stirred vp. And it is alway called an offense geuen in any thing, the fault whereof came from the doer of the thing it selfe. It is called an offense taken, when a thing which is otherwise not euelly done nor out of time is by euell will or by some wrongfull maliciousnesse of minde drawen to occasiō of offense. For in this case was not offense geuen, but these wrongefull construers do without cause take one. With that first kinde of offense none are offended but the weake: but with this in kinde sowre natures & Pharisaicall scornefull heads are offended. Wherefore we shall call the one, the offense of the weake: the other of the Pharisees: and we shall so temper the vse of our libertie, that it ought to geue place to the ignorance of the weake brethren, but in no wise to the rigorousnesse of the Pharisees. For, what is to be yelded to weakenesse, Paule sheweth in very many places. Beare (saith he) the weake in faith. Again, Let vs not hereafter iudge one an other: but this rather, let there not be layed before our brother any offense or occasion of falling: and many other sayings to the same entent, which are more fit to be red in the place it selfe, than to be here rehearsed. The summe is, that we which are strong should beare with the weakenesses of our brethren, and not please our selues, but euery one of vs please his neighbor vnto good for edifying. In an other place, But see that your libertie be not in any wise an offense to them that are weake. Againe, Eate ye al things that are sold in the shambles, asking no question for conscience: of your conscience (I say) not an other mans. Finally be ye such, that ye geue no offense, neither to the Iewes, nor to the Grekes, nor to the Church of God. Also in an other place, Ye are called, brethren, into libertie: onely geue not your libertie to be an occasion to the flesh, but by charitie serue ye one an other. Thus it is. Our libertie is not geuen toward our weake neighbours, whose seruantes charitie maketh vs in all things: but rather, that hauing peace with God in our mindes, we may also liue peaceably among men. As for the offense of the Pharisees, howe much it is to be regarded, we learne by the wordes of the Lorde, whereby he biddeth them to be letalone, because they are blinde, and guides of the blinde. The disciples had warned him, that the Pharisees were offended with his sayings: he answered that they were to be neglected, and the offending of them not to be cared for.

12 But yet ſtill the matter hangeth doutfull, vnles we knowe who are to be taken for weake, and who for Phariſees: which difference beinge taken away, I ſee not amonge offences what vſe at all of liberty remaineth, which might neuer be vſed without great daunger. But it ſeemeth to me that Paul hath moſt plainely declared both by doctrine and by examples, howe far our liberty is either to be tempred or to be defended though with offences. When he toke Timothee into his company, he circumciſed him: but he coulde not be brought to circumciſe Titus. Here were diuerſe doings, & no chaũge of purpoſe or of minde: namely in circumciſing Timothee, when he was free from all men, he made himſelfe a ſeruaunt to all men: and he was made to the Iewes, as a Iewe, that he might win the Iewes: to them that were vnder the lawe, as if he himſelf were vnder the lawe, that he might winne them which were vnder the lawe: all things to all men, that he might ſaue many, as he writeth in an other place. Thus we haue a right moderation of libertie, if it may be indifferẽtly reſtrained with ſome profit. What he had reſpect vnto, when he ſtoutly refuſed to circumciſe Titus, he himſelf teſtifieth, writing thus. But neither was Titus, which was with me, although he was a Grecian, compelled to be circumciſed, becauſe of the falſe brethren which were come in by the way, which had priuily crept in to eſpie our libertie which we haue in Chriſt Ieſus, that they might bring vs into bondage, to whome we gaue not place by ſubiection ſo much as for a time, that the truth of the Goſpell might continue with you. There is alſo a time when we muſt of neceſſitie defend our libertie, if the ſame be in weake cõſciences endaungered by the vniuſt exactings of falſe Apoſtles. We muſt in euery thing ſtudy to preſerue charity, & haue regard to the edifying of our neighbor. All things (ſaith he) are lawfull for me, but not all things are expedient: all things are lawefull for me, but not all thinges do edify. Let no man ſeeke that ẏ is his owne, but ẏ which is an others. There is nothing now plainer by this rule, than that we muſt vſe our libertie, if it may turne to the edifying of our neighbor: but if it be not ſo expediẽt for our neighbor, then we muſt forbeare it. There be ſome which conterfait the wiſdome of Paule in forbearing of libertie, while they do nothing les than apply the ſame to the duties of charitie. For ſo that they may prouide for their owne quietnes, they wiſh all mentiõ of liberty to be buried, whereas it is no les behouefull for our neighbors, ſometime to vſe libertie for their benefit and edification, than in ſtr place to reſtraine it for their commoditie. But it is the part of a godly man to thinke, that free power in outward things is therefore graunted him, him, that he may be the freer to all duties of charitie.

13 But whatsoeuer I haue spoken of auoyding of offences, my meaning is that it be referred to meane and indifferent things. For, those things that are necessary to be done, are not to be left vndone for fear of any offence. For as our libertie is to be submitted to charity, so charity it selfe likewise ought to be vnder the purenes of faith. Verily here also ought to be had regard of charitie, but so far as to the altars, that is, that for our neighbors sake we offēd not God Their intemperance is not to be allowed, which do nothing but with troublesome turmoiling, and which had rather rashly to rend all things, than leisurely to rip them. Neither yet are they to be harkened to, which when they be leaders of men into a thousand sorts of vngodlynes, yet do faine that they must behaue themselues so that they be none offence to their neighbors. As though they do not in ỹ meane time fy the cōsciences of their neighbors to euill, specially wher as they sticke fast in the same mire without any hope of getting out. And the pleasant men forsoth, whether their neighbor be to be instructed with doctrine or example of life. say that he must be fed with milke, whome they fill with most euill & poisonous opinions. Paule reporteth that he fed the Corinthians with drinking of milke: but if Popish Masse had then bene among them, would he haue sacrificed to geue them the drinke of milke. But milke is not poison. Therefore they lie in saying ỹ they feede them whom vnder a shewe of flattering allurementes they cruelly kill. But, graunting that such dissembling is for a time to be allowed, howe long yet will they feede their children with milke? For if they neuer grow bigger, that they may at the least be able to beare some light meate, it is certain that they were neuer brought vp with milke. There are two reasons that moue me why I do not nowe more sharply contend with them: first, because their follies are scarcely worthy to be cōfuted, sith they worthily seeme filthy in the sight of all men that haue their sound wit: secondly, because I haue sufficiently done it in peculiar bookes, I will not nowe do a thing already done. Onely let the readers remember this, that with whatsoeuer offences satan and the world go about to turne vs away from the ordinances of God, or to stay vs from following that which he appointeth, yet we must neuertheless go earnestly forward: and then, that whatsoeuer dangers hang vpon it, yet is it not at our liberty to swarue one heare bredth from the commaundement of the same God, neither is it lawefull by any pretence to attempt any thing but that which he geueth vs leaue. 1 Cor. 3.2.

14 Nowe therefore sith faithfull consciences hauing receiued such prerogatiue of libertie as we haue aboue ſet forth, haue by the benefite of Chriſt obtained this that they be not entangled with any ſnares of obſeruations in thoſe things in which the Lorde willed that they ſhould be at libertie: we conclude that they are exempt from all power of men. For it is vnmeete, that either Chriſt ſhould loſe the thanke of his ſo great liberalitie, or conſciences their profite. Neither ought we to thinke it a ſlight matter, which we ſee to haue coſt Chriſt ſo deere: namely which he valued not with gold or ſiluer, but with his owne bloud: ſo that Paule ſticketh not to ſay, that his death is made voide, if we yeld our ſoules into ſubiection to men. For he trauelleth about nothing els in certaine chapters of the epiſtle to the Galathiãs, but to ſhew that Chriſt is darkned or rather deſtroied to vs, vnleſſe our conſciences ſtand faſt in their libertie, which verily they haue loſt if they may at the will of men be ſnared with the bondes of lawes and ordinances. But as it is a thing moſt worthy to be knowen, ſo it needeth a longer and plainer declaration. For ſo ſoone as any word is ſpoken of the abrogating of the ordinances of men, biandby great troubles are raiſed vp partly by ſeditious men, partly by ſlaunderers, as though the whole obedience of men were at once taken away and ouerthrowen.

1. Pet. 1. 18.
Gal. 5. 1. and 4.

15 Therefore that none of vs may ſtumble at this ſtone, firſt let vs conſider, that there are two ſortes of gouernment in man: the one ſpirituall whereby the conſcience is framed to godlineſſe and to the worſhip of God: ỹ other ciuill, wherby man is trayned to the dutes of humanitie and ciuilitie which are to be kept among men. They are commonly by not vnfit names called the Spirituall and Temporall iuriſdiction, whereby is ſignified, that the firſt of theſe two formes of gouernment pertaineth to the life of the ſoule, and the latter is occupied in the things of this preſent life: not onely in feeding and clothing, but in ſetting forth of lawes whereby a man may ſpend his life among men holily honeſtly, and ſoberly For, that firſt kinde hath place in the inward minde, this latter kinde ordereth onely the outward behauiours. The one we may call the Spirituall kingdome the other, the Ciuil kingdome. But theſe two, as we haue deuided them, muſt be either of them alway ſeuerally cõſidered by themſelues: and when the one is in conſidering, we muſt withdrawe and turne away our mindes from the thinking vpon the other. For there are in man as it were two worlds, which both diuerſe kings & diuerſe lawes may gouerne. By this putting of difference ſhall come to paſſe, that that which the Goſpell teacheth of the ſpirituall libertie, we ſhall not wrongefully drawe to the ciuil order, as though Chriſtians were according
